And an error in directing the jury to compound the interest annually against a guardian from the date of his settlement to the time of the trial of an action for its recovery, is harmless, and not a ground for reversal when in fact the jury gave only about one year's interest. Tillett v. Com. 9 R. Mon. 441 (1849).

And an appeal by an administrator upon the ground that he had been charged compound interest on money not actually reduced to possession will be regarded as frivolous when it fails to show any particular item or charge in which it had been done. Sanderson v. Sanderson, 20 Fla. 232 (1893).

The master in a proceeding to charge a guardian with compound interest on the moneys of his ward should be directed to compute it at the rate of 6 per cent with annual rests under a rule fixing it at a uniform rate of 1 per cent less than the legal rate, when the guardianship terminated before the legal rate was changed from 7 to 6 per cent, though the direction and computation were made afterwards. Micou v. Lamar, 7 Fed. Rep. 180 (1881).

But the rule under which it is presumed that balances of interest in a trustee's hands were first applied to make payments for the estate has the effect of making interest an interest-bearing fund only where it was in fact, or should have been, employed to discharge current demands. Livingston v. Wells, 8 S. C. N. S. 847 (1876).

And where interest is charged against an executor or administrator, in settling his administration account, on balances due at the end of each year, it ought not to be carried to the accounts of the succeeding years so as to convert it into principal and make it bear interest, nor be deducted from the payments made in such succeeding years. Sheppard v. Starke, 3 Munf. 29 (1811); Granberry v. Granberry, 1 Wash. (Va.) 246, 1 Am. Dec. 455 (1793); Cavendish v. Fleming, 3 Munf. 198 (1812).

And in stating an account between a trustee bound by the terms of the trust to make annual payments, with his cestui que trust, simple interest!

make any profit by the use of trust funds. While this is a salutary rule of equity, and must be upheld, it does not warrant the court in transferring to the heirs lands of the executor, or interests therein, under the facts existing in the case at bar. We think this is abundantly shown from the foregoing examination. But that doctrine has been asserted with such confidence, as sufficient to support the decree of the court declaring the trust, that we will briefly examine the question from that particular point of view.

The question, then is, If a trustee use trust funds to the extent of half the purchase price of a tract of land, but afterwards, in the execution of the trust, account for the fund so used, with compound interest at the rate of 7.9 per cent, has the trustee profited by this transaction to the extent of half the value of such tract of land? Suppose a man purchases a tract of land at the price of $10,000, and, not having funds at hand to pay the whole price at the time stipulated, he calls upon another having money on hand, who supplies the purchaser with $5,000, and the transaction thus stands for a time, until such $5,000 is called for, when the purchaser promptly returns the same, with compound interest at the rate of 7.9 per cent per annum. Now, suppose, some years after such payment, the party giving such accommodation, pointing to said tract of land, then of the value of $50,000, and relating the circumstances just narrated, insists that such purchaser is beholden to him to the extent of half said tract of land at its present value, together with half of the issues and profits from said land since its purchase,—in other words, that the purchaser had actually profited by such accommodation to the extent should be allowed upon each annual payment from the time it is due till the date of filing the master's report, and charges paid by the trustee should be first deducted from the interest due up to the date of the charge, and the balance then deducted from the principal. But if the interest is more than the charge, the excess of interest is not to be added to the principal, which is to be left as before and the interest is to be added to the interest subsequently accruing. Merritt v. Jenkins, 17 Fla. 404 (1880).

So the allowance of interest on annual balances on an executor's account is not subject to the objection that interest is thereby compounded against him, where the expenditures for the year amount to more than the interest for that period, or where, if they amount to less, the balance is not added to the principal. Brown v. Vinyard, 1 Ball. Eq. 400 (1831).

And in De Peyster v. Clarkson, 2 Wend. 77 (1828), it was held that charging interest on an accounting by a guardian by carrying it into the current account as so much money in the hands of the guardian immediately applicable to his disbursements and payments for the account of his wards, is not objectionable as a system for compounding the interest against the guardian.

But after the termination of a guardianship the guardian's accounts should be adjusted and stated upon the ordinary principles as between debtor and creditor, and a decree for an aggregate sum embracing interest, as well as the balance of principal due at the close of the guardianship with interest on such aggregate sum, is erroneous, the interest being thereby compounded. Cunningham v. Cunningham, 4 Gratt. 48 (1847).

b. Upon what computed.

While the question as to what compound interest will be computed upon has been seldom raised, the general rule may be drawn from all the decisions, that it will be computed upon all of the trust fund which the executor or other trustee has converted or used, or with reference to which he has otherwise misconducted himself.

This was the rule adopted in Re Hodges' Estate, 66 Vt. 70 (1894), and McCloskey v. Gleason, 56 Vt. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 770 (1883).

But where there is no ground for charging bad faith, however, or any improper motive, and the violation of the trust is simply due to an erroneous view of their powers and duties, great caution should be exercised in ascertaining the sum for which they are chargeable, and care should be taken not to mulct them in a greater amount than the estate could have realized from the proper execution of the trust. Dictum in Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 539 (1878).

Thus, an executor, who, under a bona fide belief that under a true construction of the will he was entitled thereto, sold out stock and retained one third and paid two thirds of the proceeds to his co-executors, is only liable for the one third retained by himself, upon the subsequent decision of the court that the next of kin were entitled to the fund. Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 81 Beav. 349, 6 Jur. X. 8, 37, 81 L. J. Ch. 738, 10 Week. Rep. 640, 5 L. T. N. S. 87 (1886).

And where a partner engages in speculation with the moneys of the firm, making large profits, and it does not appear how much of the moneys used was in excess of the amount he had a right to draw, one half of the amount used may be taken as the sum for which he is to be held accountable to his partner, with interest compounded annually. Pomeroy v. Benton, 77 Mo. 64 (1883).

But where he destroys the book in which he kept an account of the transaction, and pretends upon examination as a witness, that he does not know and cannot ascertain the amount, he is chargeable with compound interest upon the amount of moneys used in excess of the amount which he had a right to draw. Ibid.

A guardian who receives securities, some of which bear annual interest and some simple interest, and collects them all and mingles the proceeds with his own moneys, rendering no account of the amount of interest moneys received, and invests in stocks and real estate with the fund formed by the commixture, receiving more than 6 per cent on his investment, is chargeable, however, with annual interest on the whole trust fund, though it could not be traced directly and wholly into these transactions. Farwell v. Steen, 46 Vt. 678 (1874).

And an administrator to whom stock belonging to the deceased had been transferred, upon which he received the dividends and used and appropriated them as his occasions required, should be charged with interest on the several dividends from the time they were respectively received, and if he has since sold the stock and invested the money elsewhere, it should be followed and whatever dividends or income he has received from reinvestments ought, in like manner, to be accounted for with interest. Garniss v. Gardiner, 1 Edw. Ch. 13 (1835).

And a guardian who charges himself with interest upon balances remaining in his hands is also chargeable therewith on additional sums not included in his account, when in the settlement of his account it is found that such sums ought to of one half the value of said land, and half the issues and profits thereof since purchase,—although the purchaser had long since repaid the loan with interest. This would, we think, strike practical men as an extraordinary proposition. But we have drawn into this illustration material facts, which harmonize with those existing in the case at bar, except that in the illustration it was a voluntary accommodation, and in the present case trust funds were used; but we are simply inquiring, now, as to the measure of profit flowing from one to the other by such use of funds. Then, if the profits of such accommodation were to be taken away from the purchaser, and transferred to the other, applying the theory proceeded upon in this case, it would require the transfer of a half interest in the land, and half the issues and profits since the purchase, less $5,000, dropped from the account of issues and profits, to offset the $5,000 which the purchaser had returned to the lender, making no account, however, of the interest which the purchaser paid for the use of said loan; and, on this theory of accounting for profits, the one whose $5,000 was thus temporarily used would find that he had first received back his $5,000 on demand, with compound interest, and thereafter, although the purchaser had carried the investment in the land as his own burden alone until it is of great value, half of the land, worth $25,000, and also half of the issues and profits, less $5,000, had been handed over, merely to take away the alleged profit of the temporary use of said $5,000. The only difference between the illustration and the accounting pursued in the case at bar is, that in the illustration it was a voluntary accommodation, and, also, in the account have been charged. Blake v. Pegram, 109 Mass. 541 (1872).

c. When allowance should commence.

The period allowed before charging a guardian or trustee with interest upon trust funds coming to his hands depends upon the particular circumstances of each case and should be reasonable. Boynton v. Dyer, 18 Pick. 1 (1836); Shepard v. Patterson, 3 Dem. 188 (1834).

So in Rowland v. Best, 2 McCord, Eq. 317 (1837), it was held that interest should be allowed on the annual balances of an administrator's account after allowing a reasonable time for settlement of the estate, but not so as to allow compound interest.

Thus, in Gilman v. Gilman, 2 Lans. 1 (1870), it was held that when an investment is directed which may be made in public securities which can be obtained at any time in the market, thirty days is a reasonable time to allow for making the investment before the imposition of interest on the trustee for failure to invest.

And in Barney v. Saunders, 57 U. S. 16 How. 635, 14 L. ed. 1047 (1853), one month was allowed after each annual rest in which to reinvest the interest received when the sums received were small and a large part was liable to be called in for the use of the beneficiary.

So in Shepard v. Patterson, supra, three months were held to be a reasonable time to be allowed before charging an executor with compound interest upon the trust fund for failure to obey a direction in the will requiring the income to be deposited in some good savings bank or devoted to some other safe investment.

And in Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 Harr. & G. 11, 18 Am. Dec. 250 (1826), six months was adopted as a reasonable time within which a trustee should invest the trust funds, a failure to do so rendering him thereafter chargeable with interest.

And in Barker v. White, 58 N. Y. 201 (1874), the same period was assumed to be proper in a proper case.

So in Boynton v. Dyer, supra, in which a guardian had failed to invest and had the use of his ward's estate, but had promptly rendered an account at the end of the first year, one year was allowed as a reasonable time within which to invest the estate before charging him with interest thereon.

And in Schoeffeln v. Stewart, 1 Johns. Ch. 620, 7 Am. Dec. 507 (1815), two years, during which all the debts of the estate were paid, with a trifling exception, and during a large part of which the administrator had a balance in hand amply sufficient to close the concerns of the administration, was adopted as a sufficient period within which to settle the estate, so as to render him thereafter chargeable with compound interest in a proper case for failure to do so.
29 L. R. A.

A trustee who denies the trust and claims in hostility thereto, however, cannot invoke the rule allowing a trustee six months for investment of trust funds, but is properly chargeable with interest from the time of receipt of the trust funds. Barker v. White, supra.

And a guardian chargeable with compound interest, who took office before the modification of the Act of 1847, Code, § 2908, is not entitled to exemption therefrom for the first year after his qualification, where the case was one in which time was not required at the beginning of the trust to collect assets and ascertain indebtedness. McCullough v. Johnson, 61 Ga. 554 (1878).

So in Foster v. Stone (Vt.) 81 Atl. Rep. 841 (1896), it was held that an administrator who appropriates the funds of the estate to his own use should be charged with interest upon the sums appropriated from the date of the appropriation, compounded annually.

And in Bond v. Lockwood, 83 Ill. 218 (1864), it was held that a guardian who has used the money of his ward should charge himself with interest from the time he received it.

And executors under a will directing a legacy to be taken from the personal estate before dividing it, and invested for the purpose of paying it when the legatee should attain his majority, who charge themselves in their annual account with cash reserved for the payment of the legacy, are chargeable with interest from the time the legacy was taken from the personal estate, as shown by their account, with annual rests. Elliott v. Sparrell, 114 Mass. 404 (1874).

And in McKim v. Blake, 139 Mass. 598 (1885), it was held that interest should be computed in an action against sureties on the bond of a trustee who has wrongfully sold securities belonging to the trust estate and converted the proceeds to his own use, on the amount converted, from the time it is found to be due up to the time of issuing execution, but without rests, the allowance of compound interest being contrary to the general rule in Massachusetts.

So in Davis v. May, 19 Ves. Jr. 838 (1815), it was held that annual rests will not be directed on an account against a mortgagee in possession from the time when the arrear of interest was discharged by the rents.

d. Rate per cent and length of rests.

The rate of interest to be charged against a trustee upon trust moneys in his hands depends upon with appellant the $5,000 dropped to offset a half interest in the land accrued by way of compound interest, computed at higher rates than the executor had returned, prior to the date of the purchase of said Child & Young tract of land. This does not materially change the application of the illustration. But, aside from the other untenable conditions already observed, the fact just mentioned—that the money upon which this trust is proposed to be declared is not, in reality, for part of the trust money found in said land from the time of purchase, but is a demand for interest accruing on moneys which were never even in said land—would seem, in view of the authorities, to be sufficient to defeat all claim to a resulting or constructive trust in favor of the heirs in the present case. In order to sustain such a trust on the ground that the land was purchased with trust funds which were otherwise to be accounted for, the trust interest in the land must be founded on trust money paid in the purchase thereof, and other demands cannot be offset for an interest in the land. Ducis v. Ford, 188 U. S. 587, 84 L. ed. 1091, and cases cited; Muller v. Buyck, 13 Mont. 354. There is some question made in the authorities whether a trust ought to be declared in such a case, where only a moiety of the purchase price was paid by trust funds, or whether a lien only should be fastened upon the land to secure reimbursement of the trust fund. Mr. Story seems to approve the latter course as the more equitable and reasonable procedure. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1211, 1277g. See also Perry, Tr. § 128; Munro v. Collins, 95 Mo. 88. If it appeared in this instance that the trust money had carried the burden of half the investment in said land from the time of purchase until the trust was declared, it might then be necessary to decide between the particular facts of each case. Dictum in Bobb v. Bobb, 90 Mo. 411 (1886).

In RE RICKER'S ESTATE the court, in refusing to adopt the highest rate at which, according to some testimony, the money could have been loaned, said: "The rate must be fixed with due consideration or the result will be found out of all proportion to what could have been accomplished in the field of practical affairs." Also, that "it would not be possible in practice to make the gain compound along the line of the highest rates attainable, because in practice it would not be possible to reloan the money and the accumulated interest the instant it was due."

There is no fixed rule as to what would be a reasonable rest for compounding interest against an executor or other trustee upon trust funds converted to his own use, that also depending upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case. Clemens v. Caldwell, 7 B. Mon. 171 (1846); Johnson v. Beauchamp, 5 Dana, 70 (1837); Maupin v. Dulany, 5 Dana, 599, 30 Am. Dec. 699 (1837); Clark v. Anderson, 10 Bush, 99 (1873). See also the main case, RE RICKER'S ESTATE, in which less than the highest legal rate was required.

The leading principle seems to be to charge such a rate and with such rests as to approximate as nearly as possible to the actual or presumed profits of the fund. Cruce v. Cruce, 81 Mo. 676 (1864).

Or what the trust would have produced if properly managed. King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76 (1860).

See also supra, II., heading, Principle of the allowance.

It has not been the practice in the United States, as it has been in England, to charge the guardian with different rates of interest, corresponding to different degrees of negligence or misconduct. Dictum in Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508 (1886).

A trustee, who uses the trust fund in his private business, is prima facie liable, at least for the legal rate of interest for the use of money. Cruce v. Cruce, supra.

And has been frequently held to be chargeable with the highest legal rate with annual rests. See supra II., c. and d. headings, Use and admixture of trust fund, and, Failure or refusal to account.

And it is to be observed that annual rests have been more frequently employed than any other period, which is probably due to the fact that the income upon investments is frequently realized annually.

Though a direction of annual rests in computing interest is not of course, but under special circumstances only, and never for a broken period. Davis v. May, 19 Ves. Jr. 888 (1815).

29 L. R. A.

Thus, in Cruce v. Cruce, supra, the court allowed simple interest at the rate of 10 per cent against a trustee who had appropriated the trust moneys to his own use, upon an accounting running through fifteen years, on evidence that the moneys could have been invested at that rate of interest, but refused to compound it upon the ground that the result would exceed what could be expected from any prudent and careful administration of the estate under ordinary circumstances.

And in King v. Talbot, supra, in which the executors purchased railroad and bank stock with the trust fund when they were directed by the will creating the trust to apply the interest to the use of minors so far as necessary, and pay over the fund with accumulations upon their attaining their majority, they were held liable to the cestui que trust for the amount of the fund with interest at 6 per cent computed with annual rests, that being deemed to be approximately what the trust would have produced if properly executed.

And in Micon v. Lamar, 7 Fed. Rep. 180 (1881), it was held that, when wards reject improper investments made by their guardian and demand the equivalent in money, he should be charged during the period of the guardianship with such a rate of interest as a proper and safe investment would have realized, compounded annually, which rate may be less than the legal rate.

So a decree allowing 8 per cent interest with annual rests against an administrator who mixed the trust funds with his own and used them for the purposes of speculation for his own profit will not be disturbed on appeal when the assets with which he was chargeable consisted almost exclusively of notes due the intestate bearing 10 per cent interest. Hook v. Payne, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 252, 20 L. ed. 887 (1871).

And an administrator, upon failure to report to the court the proceeds of a note bearing 10 per cent interest coming to his hands, and the appropriation thereof to his own use, is properly chargeable thereon with interest at the rate of 10 per cent compounded annually. Williams v. Petticrew, 63 Mo. 460 (1876).

So in Re Davis's Estate, 67 Mo. 450 (1876), an executor who kept the estate open and the money in his hands for three years after all the debts were paid, using the money in the meantime for his own purposes, was held to be properly chargeable with 8 per cent interest computed with annual rests, and the court on appeal said that a charge of 16 per cent would have been warranted.

And in Frost v. Winston, 32 Mo. 499 (1863), it was held that a guardian who had moneys of his ward the distinctions just mentioned. But such is not the case here. The claim or money upon which the trust in the land is declared in favor of the heirs in this case arises for compound interest at a higher rate than the trustee returned. And, when the date of the purchase from Child & Young is reached, in casting the interest account, $5,000 of the claim thus accruing for interest prior to that date is dropped to offset the amount constituting half the purchase price. On the other hand, if it is proposed to claim an interest in said land for interest on the fund which was put into the land, the difficulties of the problem are still further augmented. By that theory compound interest would be required from the trustee for the use of the money put into the land, and the cestui would be allowed, on this very demand for compound interest (which is supposed to constitute the profit derived from the use of the trust money), to go back and take the land also, with its issues and profits from the time of purchase, in payment of the interest. This would be recompensing the cestui for the use of his trust money—First, by way of compound interest; and, secondly, by way of transferring to him the land, and the rents, issues, and profits of the land, besides compound interest.

Counsel for respondent urge, to support the judgment, that "the beneficiaries are permitted to make their election as to whether they will take the actual profits, or interest in lieu thereof." It plainly appears that the court below allowed them to elect, and take both ways. We have no doubt that with a closer investigation of these conditions, and more mature consideration of the authorities, the learned judge of the trial court below would have denied the claims put forth that a resulting trust could arise in favor of the which he had lent or could have lent at the highest legal rate of interest, is properly charged with that rate of interest with annual rests, when called upon to account.

And in Lommen v. Tobiasson, 88 Iowa, 665 (1879), an administrator who had been guilty of gross maladministration, and who had dealt with the moneys collected by him and furnished no data for reaching an accurate result, was held to be chargeable with the highest customary rate of interest at the time of the death of the decedent on notes belonging to the estate, the rate borne by which is not shown by his inventory, until they come to his hands, after which it should be computed at the legal rate with yearly rests.

And in Hough v. Harvey, 71 Ill. 73 (1873), an allowance of 10 per cent was refused and one of 6 per cent with annual rests made against an executor who had failed to obey a direction to accumulate, but did not appear to have had any use of the fund.

And in Wilmerding v. McKesson, 108 N. Y. 329 (1886), compound interest was refused, and simple interest at 5 per cent allowed, against a trustee who had been negligent but without wrongful intent, where his cotrustees appropriated the trust fund to their own use and failed.

So in Morgan v. Morgan, 4 Dem. 363 (1886), in which the trustee had allowed the trust fund to remain from time to time with a trust company, he was charged 5 per cent interest thereon with annual rests, and allowed to retain sums allowed by the trust company during the same period by way of interest.

But in Re Final Settlement of Tyler v. Cartwright, 40 Mo. App. 373 (1890), it was held that the highest rate of interest compounded at annual rests should not be allowed against a guardian for the income of his ward's property, where the ward was the child of the guardian, who was a widow, and both occupied the home place owned by them in common, without proceeding for a partition or making annual settlements.

And the master in a proceeding to charge a guardian with compound interest on the moneys of his ward should be directed to compute it at the rate of 6 per cent with annual rests, under a rule fixing it at a uniform rate of 1 per cent less than the legal rate, where the guardianship terminated before the legal rate was changed from 7 to 6 per cent, though the direction and computation were made afterwards. Milou v. Lamar, 7 Fed. Rep. 180 (1881).

The general rule for accounting by administrators under the Florida statute is that interest at the 29 L. R. A.

rate of 8 per cent is to be charged, the interest upon the balance found at the beginning of the year to be carried into the balance struck at its close, computing interest for the next year upon the whole, no interest being computed upon sums when received. Sanderson v. Sanderson, 17 Fla. 320 (1880).

And in Peelle v. Hipes, 118 Ind. 512 (1886), in considering the question of the allowance of compound interest against a guardian for failure to account, the court said that it inclined to the opinion that the penalty of 10 per centum prescribed by statute is an exclusive one, but it did not so decide.

So three years is a proper term for rests in computing interest against a guardian where he might, and therefore should, have loaned accruing interest at the end of every three years. Mainpin v. Dulany, 5 Dana, 589, 30 Am. Dec. 609 (1837).

And a trustee having the trust funds in his hands as a loan at the time of the creation of the trust, who continues it in his business and is thereby enabled to keep certain railroad shares from which he receives the income semiannually, will only be charged with interest on the fund in his hands, with annual rests, where the half yearly interest received by him is too small for investment. McKnight v. Walsh, 23 N. J. Eq. 136 (1872).

And in Final Accounting in Black's Estate, Tucker, 147 (1869), it was held that administrators are chargeable with compound interest upon moneys of the estate used by them for their own benefit, and a computation with annual rests is reasonable when all the next of kin are minors except one, who has only just attained his majority.

So in Montjoy v. Lashbrook, 3 B. Mon. 261 (1846), it was held that a trustee who uses the trust fund for his own benefit should be charged with 6 per cent interest thereon annually, and if he fails to pay the interest it should be added to and made part of the principal annually.

And in Page v. Holman, 82 Ky. 573 (1865), it was held that trustees who have used the moneys of the cestui que trust in their own business, and mixed the trust funds with their own, will be treated as having loaned it to themselves, and interest may be compounded against them with biennial rests.

And in Feltham v. Turner, 23 L. T. N. S. 345 (1870), it was held that trustees expressly directed to accumulate the trust fund, who fail to do so, are liable to account upon the footing of yearly or half yearly rests.

And executors who grossly neglect or refuse to make annual returns to the court of the condition of the estates in their hands were held liable for any balance found to be due to legatees, with interest heirs, under the conditions shown in this case; for it cannot be sustained by the application of appropriate principles of equity, or by reason or precedent.

2. As to the executor's commission: And herein the question to be determined is, whether or not an executor or administrator, where the conditions require the continuance of the administration over a period of years, can lawfully be allowed, at the close of each year, on the annual account, the commission provided by statute for the executor or administrator on moneys of the estate actually disbursed during the preceding year, by way of compensation for the care and management of the estate. That the executor in this case, in rendering his annual account at the close of each year, charged the estate with the commission allowed by law on funds of the estate actually disbursed during the preceding year, is not disputed; and this was approved, from time to time, by the probate court. In the present accounting the court below caused these commissions to be taken away from the executor, and, not only so, but required him to pay interest on the amount of commission from the date of each allowance. The interest amounts to considerable more than all the commissions, and altogether, through that ruling, the executor is adjudged indebted to the estate in the sum of $5,806.86. To support the ruling of the court below the case of Re Dewar's Estate, 10 Mont. 426, is cited. That case is far from supporting the ruling here under consideration. It seems remarkable that the court below, having before it such a clear and painstaking elucidation of the subject of commissions, and the construction of the statute providing therefor, as found in that case, should have so shaped a ruling as we find it in the case at bar in this particular. In this from the time it fell due, compounded at the end of every six years. Kenan v. Hall, 8 Ga. 417 (1850); Fall v. Simmons, 6 Ga. 255 (1849).

And the same rule of rests every six years was applied in case of a guardian. Royston v. Royston, 20 Ga. 52 (1859).

So in Scott v. Crews, 72 Mo. 261 (1890), an administrator who sold property of the estate on credit, taking notes of insolvent firms bearing 10 per cent interest, a part of which was paid, and the makers of the others remained solvent for a number of years, during which they might have been collected and the estate closed, was charged on a forced accounting and settlement had fifteen years afterward with the amount remaining uncollected with interest at 10 per cent per annum, with three rests.

And in Greening v. Fox, 12 B. Mon. 187 (1851), in which a fund was placed in the hands of two trustees, who undertook jointly and severally to use it for the payment of the debts and to support the grantor and divide the remainder six months after his death between his children, but who divided the fund between themselves when they received it, each was charged with the amount received by him with interest computed with two year rests, when disbursements with interest from the time of payment were deducted, and a joint decree rendered against both for the entire sum due.

So in Johnson v. Beauchamp, 5 Dana, 70 (1837), annual rests for the computation of interest against an executor who failed to render a satisfactory account of interest received was deemed too short, when it was the custom to make annual reservations of interest and the currency was deranged and depreciated.

And in Smith v. Lampton, 8 Dana, 69 (1839), interest was computed against an executor directed to make a residuary bequest productive, who failed to account, with biennial rests for the same reason.

Six months' rests in computing interest against a trustee, however, have been made only where the amounts received were large and such as could be easily and at all times invested. Dictum in Barney v. Saunders, 57 U. S. 16 How. 535, 14 L. ed. 1047 (1853).

And trustees directed to invest, who grossly and wilfully neglected to do so, were held not to be chargeable with interest compounded every six months, and a charge of interest compounded annually allowing a month after each rest to make the investment was held proper, where the sums received by the trustees were small, and three fourths of the annual income was liable to be called for by the guardian of a beneficiary. Ibid.

29 L. R. A.

So in Walker v. Beal, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 743, 19 L. ed. 814 (1869), a trustee who acted in utter disregard of his trust and treated the trust moneys as his own, and neither kept nor rendered any account thereof, was held chargeable with interest to be compounded annually. But the court was evenly divided upon the question whether or not semi-annual rests should have been directed.

But in Say v. Barnes, 4 Serg. & R. 112, 8 Am. Dec. 679 (1818), it was said to be a reasonable rule to compute interest against a guardian who fails to invest upon balances in his hands at the end of every six months.

And in Voorhees v. Stoothoff, 11 N. J. Eq. 171 (1829), six months was allowed for receipt and investment before charging compound interest against an executor who had failed to obey a direction to accumulate and rendered no account of the disposition of the fund.

A reversal on appeal will not be made for error in charging a guardian, who has retained the funds of his ward in his own hands but committed no breach of trust with relation thereto, with compound interest, where semiannual instead of annual rests were made for the purpose of deducting sums allowed for the maintenance of the ward and the difference between the amount thus computed and that computed by the proper method is only a little more than $10 and the guardian had presented an erroneous overcharge against the estate for expenses, evincing an entire disregard of the rights of the ward. Re Guardianship of Thurston, 57 Wis. 104 (1893).

In England, however, different rates of interest have been adopted corresponding to the different degrees of negligence or misconduct. See Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508 (1885).

Thus, in Jones v. Foxall, 21 L. J. Ch. 725, 15 Beav. 388 (1832), the rule is laid down that if an executor has retained balances in his hands which he ought to have invested, the court will charge him with simple interest at 4 per cent on these balances; if, in addition to such retention, he has committed a direct breach of trust, or if the fund has been taken by him from a proper state of investment in which it was producing 5 per cent, he will be charged with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum; and if in addition to this he has employed the money so obtained by him in trade or speculation for his own benefit and advantage he will be charged either with the profits actually so obtained by him from the use of the money or with interest at 5 per cent per annum, and also with yearly rents.

So in Crickett v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & W. 585 (1820), it was said that in case of mere neglect to invest moneys of the estate, an executor should be charged case the executor, at the close of the year, charged commission for disbursements of the past year. He was thus charging for services passed and finally completed. In the Devar Case it is said: "It is the law that appellant's claim for fees being unsettled, unallowed, and inchoate, and the creature of the statute, it fell with the law creating it." Here, in the case at bar, the commissions taken away from the executor were settled, allowed, and approved by the court, for past services, whereas, in the Devar Case the administrator sought to charge commissions at the commencement, under the law as then existing, for all the period of the administration, ignoring all changes in the law, by act of the legislature, during said period. In the Devar Case the court further observed: "Appellant does not separate his services as to these two periods, and claim compensation upon services rendered in the three and a half months' period under the old law, and upon those rendered in the nineteen months' period under the amendment. If he did so, and claimed a higher percentage upon services fully performed and passed during the three and a half months' period, the argument of vested right would address itself to us with some force. People v. Pyper, 6 Utah, 160." It appears that, in the course of the executor's administration in the present case, the legislature reduced the rate of commissions, and the executor's commission was conformed to the change, as shown by indorsement on the fourth annual report of the executor by Judge Hedges. Thereby the learned judge applied the construction of the law as approved several years later, in the case of Devar's Estate, supra. The ruling of the district court in this particular cannot be sustained.

8. What rate of interest should be required from the executor on funds to the credit of the ordinary rate of interest, which is 4 per cent, but in a direct breach of trust, it has been usual to charge 5 per cent.

And in Knott v. Cottee, 16 Beav. 77, 16 Jur. 752 (1852), it was held that an executor directed to accumulate, who retains the trust fund but is not guilty of such misconduct as to make him answerable at 5 per cent, should be charged 4 per cent with annual rests.

So a trustee directed by the will to lend the trust fund at the best interest that could be obtained, who with the consent of his cotrustees himself took it at 4 per cent, was ordered to pay 5 per cent, the decision being placed upon the ground that a trustee cannot bargain for himself so as to gain an advantage. Forbes v. Ross, 2 Bro. Ch. 480, 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 113 (1788).

And an executor is chargeable with 5 per cent where he appears to have made it from the use of the assets, or where by the non-application of the assets he has done damage to the estate to that amount; but where he has merely retained the assets for his own purpose he is chargeable with 4 per cent only. Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 124 (1784).

And an executor and trustee under a will directed thereby to invest funds of the estate in government stock, or upon real-estate security, and accumulate the surplus after maintaining infants, who invests the estate in foreign funds but retains no benefit to himself, is chargeable with interest at 4 per cent with annual rests. Knott v. Cottee, supra.

So assignees or other trustees keeping a fund eight years without distribution, both of whom lent their shares of the fund, are chargeable with such rate of interest as they appear to have made, and if none appears to have been made, with 4 per cent. Hankey v. Garret, 1 Ves. Jr. 226, 8 Bro. Ch. 457 (1790).

And interest must be calculated against a trustee upon parts of the trust fund invested in authorized securities at the rate actually yielded, and parts of the fund improperly invested or not kept separate from the trustee's own money, will be treated as remaining in the trustee's hands uninvested, and interest will be charged at 4 per cent only. Re Emmet's Estate, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 142, 60 L. J. Ch. 341, 44 L. T. N. S. 172, 29 Week. Rep. 464 (1881).

And in Newman v. Auling, 3 Atk. 579 (1747), the Lord Chancellor decreed an account for an annuity which was given by way of maintenance, with interest at 4 per cent, to be computed at the end of each half year, though the annuity was by bare grant without any power of entering.

29 L. R. A.

e. Termination of allowance.

The unquestioned rule with reference to executors, administrators, and trustees would seem to be that the period of the allowance of compound interest against them would terminate only upon the recovery of the trust fund or its return to proper channels. With reference to guardians, however, the rule is different.

Thus, an allowance of compound interest against a guardian should cease upon the arrival of the ward at full age, as the relation of guardian and ward then ceases, and current interest only should be thereafter allowed. Clay v. Clay, 3 Met. 548 (1861); Tanner v. Skinner, 11 Bush, 120 (1774); Gilbert v. Guptill, 84 Ill. 141 (1884); State v. Richardson, 29 Mo. App. 506 (1898); Armstrong v. Walkup, 12 Gratt. 608 (1855); Micou v. Lamar, 7 Fed. Rep. 180 (1881).

So in Kattelman v. Guthrie's Estate, 142 Ill. 357 (1892), affirming 48 Ill. App. 188, it was held that the fact that a guardian retained his ward's money in his hands after she came of age and invested it in his own name did not render him liable for compound interest thereon, when she made no objection to his retaining and using the money, and voluntarily kept it in his hands after he had made a final settlement as guardian.

And in Moore v. Moore (Tex.) 31 S. W. Rep. 532 (1895), wards, who for many years after attaining their majority make no demand of the guardian for money received by him and not paid over, were held entitled to only ordinary legal interest after the time they became of age.

So the death of a guardian terminates the guardianship, and after that time he is chargeable with simple interest only on balances of the trust estate in his hands. Armstrong v. Walkup, supra; McKay v. McKay, 33 W. Va. 724 (1890).

And interest is not to be compounded on accounting in favor of a ward against executors of his deceased guardian after the death of the guardian; simple interest only can be allowed unless compound interest is shown to have been received. Ryan v. Blount, 1 Dev. Eq. 382 (1830).

And interest should be allowed in Missouri in an action upon the bond of a guardian brought after his death to recover for money appropriated to his own use, at the rate of 10 per cent, compounded annually to the time of the death of the guardian, and at 6 per cent simple interest thereafter, with no allowance for commissions. State v. Gilmore, 50 Mo. App. 353 (1892).

So the marriage of a female ward also terminates the guardianship, and after that time compound interest should not be charged against the guard-the estate, not deposited in bank at interest, in view of the facts involved in this case? And, further, as to the question of compound interest in accounting with trustees. As we proceed in the consideration of these questions, we shall also digress sufficiently to consider an exception on behalf of petitioner to the ruling of the court in refusing to charge the executor the full amount of a certain debt, and interest, owing said estate, where the executor had accepted, by way of compromise, and reported to the court, a less amount in settlement. It appears that, of the funds of said estate on hand at the death of the testator, some $6,000 was on deposit in the People's National Bank, then a banking institution in the city of Helena; that in 1878 said deposit amounted to $6,500; that said bank became insolvent, and went into the hands of a receiver, about July or August of that year, and, on winding up its affairs, claimants against said bank received only 55 per cent of their demands; that, about February or March prior to said failure, the executor, having come into possession of information concerning said bank which led him to doubt the safety of the estate funds therein, sought to draw such funds out, but the officers in charge of said bank refused to cash the certificate of deposit, claiming that it was a time deposit, and the sum was not demandable until maturity of the certificate at a later date; that the executor, however, insisted on drawing out such funds, and being at the time personally indebted to said bank for loans obtained therefrom in the sum of about $6,500, for which the bank held his individual note, the executor, in order to get the funds of the estate out of said bank, for the reason aforesaid, offset said certificate of deposit

ian. Armstrong v. Walkup, supra; Finnell v. O'Neal, 13 Bush, 176 (1877).

But a guardian may be charged with compound interest after his guardianship has ceased and another guardian has been appointed, where he exercised a control and influence over the new guardian so as to prevent the latter from calling him to account, and the new guardian is insolvent. Spack v. Long, 1 Ired. Eq. 426 (1841).

VIII. What sufficient to release from accountability.

Executors, trustees, etc., who have rendered themselves accountable for compound or other interest upon the trust fund in their hands, will not be excused therefrom, unless they show such equitable circumstances as ought in conscience to acquit them.

This was held with relation to a guardian, in Branch v. Arrington, 2 N. C. Law Reps. 52 (1815).

And in Johnson v. Miller, 38 Miss. 553 (1857), it was held that a guardian who charges himself with compound interest on his ward's money in his annual accounts, admits that he is chargeable with interest, and that he has used the money for his own benefit, and should not be relieved from the charge and held accountable for simple interest only, in the absence of a sufficient reason appearing on the record.

So the liability of an executor or trustee, who uses the trust fund for his own benefit, for compound interest, is not relieved or affected by the fact that he was at all times able to respond for the trust funds, or that they had at all times been protected against loss by reason of the misappropriation. Clark's Estate, 53 Cal. 355 (1879); Re Stott's Estate, 52 Cal. 408 (1877); Morgan v. Morgan, 4 Dem. 353 (1886).

And an executor will not be excused from the payment of interest on annual balances in his hands, unless it appears, not only that there are debts due by the estate, but also that he retained the funds for the purpose of meeting them. Brown v. Vinyard, 1 Ball. Eq. 460 (1831).

Nor is an executor who loans the assets of the estate to a firm of which he is a member relieved from liability for compound interest thereon as for an appropriation to his own use, upon the ground that it was a mere deposit with the firm as with a bank, when the firm used the money in its business. Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 558 (1885).

So an executor who has so dealt with the estate as to be chargeable with compound interest is not excused for its payment by the fact that the legatees were infants, having no guardian to whom he could pay the moneys of the estate, where he claimed the moneys as his own and concealed the fact that he had moneys of the estate in his hands, as it was his duty to bring it into court. Turney v. Williams, 7 Yerg. 173 (1834).

Nor is he excused therefrom during the pendency and continuance by consent of a proceeding brought by the distributees for an account, when in his answer he erroneously insists that the estate is indebted to him. Ibid.

And an administrator who has received moneys of the estate which he has not reinvested is not relieved from liability for interest thereon, under the Florida statute requiring interest on moneys retained by an administrator to be added to the principal annually, by the commencement of a litigation against him, unless he then relieves himself from liability by paying the money into court. Sherrell v. Shepard, 19 Fla. 300 (1883).

So a guardian who has so dealt with the estate of his ward as to render himself liable for compound interest upon the funds in his hands is not relieved therefrom by the approval of a person interested in the ward's estate, or an account by the guardian in which he had not charged himself with interest, where no discussion or controversy was had on the subject. Boynton v. Dyer, 18 Pick. 1 (1835).

Or by the settlement of two annual accounts in the probate court in which he had not charged himself with interest when no adjudication was had with reference thereto, as omissions and errors in a former account may be corrected in a subsequent one. Ibid.

And a settlement of accounts made by a residuary legatee with the acting trustee on attaining the age of twenty-five, by which only simple interest at 4 per cent was charged on the residuary estate, does not bind him with respect to a legacy to which he is entitled, held by the trustee under an express trust for accumulation at compound interest. Wilson v. Peake, 3 Jur. N. S. 155 (1856).

That some of the parties interested objected to investments in United States bonds as directed in one of the alternatives of the will, and that it was difficult to invest in bond and mortgage as required by the other alternative, and that the executors kept the fund in such a condition that it could be paid over to the persons entitled thereto at any time, is not a sufficient excuse for disobeying the directions of the testator to invest and accumulate. Gilman v. Gilman, 2 Lans. 1 (1870).

And one of several trustees neglecting to call in and invest a trust fund for accumulation, whereby it is lost, is not exonerated from liability therefor by the fact that during the time he was abroad with his regiment. Byrne v. Norcott, 13 Beav. 33 (1851).

So the fact that the question arises as against assignees after the bankruptcy of an executor does for the credit of the amount thereof on his note of individual indebtedness to said bank, and assumed the indebtedness of said bank to the estate for the amount of said certificate of deposit, namely, $6,500. This transaction substituted the executor, as debtor to said estate in the sum of $6,500, in place of his indebtedness to said bank for money theretofore borrowed and used in his affairs. From this time on, during said administration, it appears there were moneys to the credit of said estate not deposited at interest in bank, as provided by the order of court, but interest was returned thereon, as above shown. The executor testified that he returned interest every year on all moneys to the credit of the estate not deposited in bank at interest at rates as high as the banks paid on deposits, and at no time less than 8 per cent, even after the banks reduced the rate below 8 per cent.

This testimony is not inconsistent with the other facts shown, for, from the testimony of the bankers called in the hearing, it appears that the rate of interest paid by the banks on time deposits was reduced below 8 per cent about the year 1888, and so continued thenceforward. This may account for the fact that, on the whole, the interest returned on the estate funds falls a fraction below 8 per cent. The rate of interest paid by the banks during said administration appears to have varied from 12 per cent on a descending scale, to 6 per cent. The rate of 12 per cent prevailed for only a brief period after said estate came into the hands of the executor, when it was reduced to 10 per cent, which rate was allowed until about the year 1890, when 8 per cent was fixed upon, and prevailed until 1883; in 1883 and 1884, 7 per cent was allowed, and thereafter 6 per cent.

not affect the right to charge his estate with compound interest for failure to obey a direction in the testator's will to accumulate. Dornford v. Dornford, 12 Ves. Jr. 127 (1806).

But the fact that interest was not paid at the time it was made payable by a will creating a trust for the investment of legacies and the application and payment of the interest thereon, will not justify compounding the interest against the trustee. Ackerman v. Emott, 4 Barb. 626 (1848).

And an administratrix acting in good faith will not be charged with compound interest where the next of kin have acquiesced in her acts for more than fifteen years. Re Kennedy, 30 N. Y. S. R. 215 (1890).

The main case, Re RICKER'S ESTATE, also seems to regard the executor as relieved from further liability by his annual accountings, which were acquiesced in.

IX. Effect of allowances on compensation.

While there is a decided conflict of authority on the effect of the allowance of compound interest against executors, trustees, etc., on their right to compensation, and many phases of the question seem to be totally unsettled, it is thought to be the general rule that they should be denied compensation where the grounds for the imposition of the charge amount to a total failure in the performance of their duty, though there are cases which are inconsistent even with this proposition.

This rule was laid down in State v. Richardson, 29 Mo. App. 595 (1888), in which commissions were refused a guardian who had been subjected to a charge of compound interest upon moneys of his ward found due him.

And in Walker v. Beal, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 743, 19 L. ed. 314 (1869), it was held that a trustee who does nothing in the execution of his trust but treats the trust moneys as his own and uses them for his own benefit, thus rendering himself answerable to a charge of compound interest thereon, should not be allowed compensation for his services.

So in Cook v. Lowry, 36 N. Y. 103 (1884), reversing 29 Hun, 20 (1883), it was held that such gross neglect and unfaithfulness as will render an executor and trustee under a will chargeable with compound interest on the funds in his hands is a proper ground for the disallowance of commissions.

And that an administrator is entitled to no commission when he has neglected to invest funds remaining in his hands or has converted them to his own use, was held in Frey v. Demarest, 17 N. J. Eq. 71 (1864).

So in Re Hodges' Estate, 66 Vt. 70 (1894), and McCleary v. Gleason, 66 Vt. 254, 48 Am. Rep. 770 (1883), 20 L. R. A.

it was held that an administrator who mingles the trust moneys with his own is chargeable with the highest legal rate of interest, and can be allowed nothing for his services in caring for them.

And in Lathrop v. Smalley, 23 N. J. Eq. 192 (1872), a trustee who failed to invest the trust fund as directed by the will creating the trust was denied compensation. But there was nothing in the three cases last set forth to show whether or not compound interest was allowed.

So a trustee having the trust fund in his hands, as a loan, at the time of the creation of the trust, who fails to invest it, but continues it in his business, is not entitled to an allowance of his commissions out of the compound interest charged against him for such use of the fund. McKnight v. Walsh, 24 N. J. Eq. 498 (1875), 23 N. J. Eq. 126 (1872).

And an executor will not be allowed commissions on compound or other interest with which he is charged. Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 553 (1885); Diffenderfer v. Winder, 3 Gill & J. 311 (1831).

And a guardian, who charges himself with interest on annual balances in his hands, will be allowed no commissions on the income of his ward's estate received by him, when he refuses to disclose what use he has made of it. Blake v. Pegram, 109 Mass. 541 (1872).

In Winder v. Diffenderfer, 2 Bland, Ch. 166 (1829), however, it was held that commissions allowed to a trustee for the execution of his trust are not to be lessened or withheld because of conduct in respect to which he has been charged with interest, simple or compound.

And in Tucker v. McDermott, 2 Redf. 312 (1876), it was held that full commissions will not be denied a trustee on an accounting merely because without an order of court or requirement of statute, rests have been made for the purpose of charging the trustee with interest.

And in Vanderheyden v. Vanderheyden, 2 Paige, 237 (1830), and Morgan v. Hannas, 13 Abb. Fr. N. S. 361 (1872), it was held that where the court makes annual rests in stating the accounts of an executor or guardian, for the purpose of charging him with interest on the annual balances remaining in his hands, his commissions on the amounts received and disbursed during each year may be deducted at each rest.

So in Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 553 (1885), an executor was allowed half commissions where he had loaned trust funds to a firm of which he was a member, but had duly accounted and acted in good faith.

And in Frost v. Winston, 32 Mo. 439 (1862), it was held that a guardian who was charged with the

In addition to the substitution of the executor as debtor to the estate in place of the People's National Bank for said \$6,500, he charged himself with \$1,500 in favor of the estate, under the following circumstances: It appears a debt was owing the estate in the sum of \$1,950, by Guthrie & Norris, bearing interest at 2 per cent per month, and another debt owing by the same Guthrie, in the sum of \$3,000, bearing interest at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per month, through transactions had between the decedent and said debtors; that, after the estate came into the charge of the executor, said debtors were unable to make payment, and their property affairs were not in such condition that payment could be enforced. The executor says in his testimony that, under the circumstances, he thought it best to "nurse the matter along," and try to get payments from time to time, which it appears he did, and succeeded, in the course of time, in getting payments of principal and interest, altogether amounting to \$5,225.98, on said \$3,000 note, and payments of principal and interest on the \$1,950 note, amounting to \$3,137.12. It appears the debtors, for a time, conducted a butcher business, and considerable of said collection was obtained by the executor taking supplies from them for his household, and also for Mrs. Ricker and her family, and crediting the amount due for such supplies on said notes. But, as the time approached when the eldest child arrived at the age of majority, and required her distributive share of the estate, as provided in the will, there was more than \$1,500 of principal and interest together due on said debts; and, in the meantime, Norris, as the evidence shows, had failed altogether financially. This balance the executor agreed to compromise with Guthrie—the only one of the debtors from whom there was any prospect of obtaining payment—at \$1,500 if he would then raise and pay that amount, so that the executor could ascertain what amount of such collection could be counted on for such distribution. Guthrie testified in this hearing that he endeavored to raise said sum agreed upon as a compromise of said debt, but could not; that he then arranged with the executor to assume said sum as paid, and credit the estate therewith, promising to pay said sum shortly thereafter; that the executor made such credit accordingly, and thereby put to the credit of said estate \$1,500, which he had not actually collected, and of which, according to the evidence, the executor never received more than \$700 from said debtors, yet the executor accounted for said \$1,500 as collected, with interest thereon, along with the other funds, as heretofore shown. The petitioner, in his appeal, insists, notwithstanding these facts, that the executor should be charged with the amount he rebated from said claim by way of compromise. This demand is based upon the showing, from the public records of Lewis and Clarke county, that in March, 1890, there was conveyed to said Guthrie and John H. Ming, jointly, for a consideration of \$2,400, stated in the deed, "the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 29, T. 10 N., R. 3 W., less four acres;" that the title to said property so remained until April, 1893, when, it appears from the record, Guthrie executed a mort-rate of interest at which he might have loaned the moneys of his ward, with annual rests, should be allowed a reasonable commission as a guarantor of payment.

So in King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76 (1869), it was said that even in cases of misconduct or gross negligence it is doubtful whether the settled rule in this state would not require the allowance of commissions to an executor or trustee.

And in Diffenderfer v. Winder, 3 Gill & J. 341 (1831), commissions at half rate were allowed a trustee who had kept a full and fair account of his receipts and expenditures, though he had employed the trust funds in trade and speculation for his own benefit and made inconsistent claims as to their ownership, and resisted and eluded all efforts to require him to account and disclose the use made by him of the funds, for which he was charged with compound interest thereon.

And Morgan v. Morgan, 4 Dem. 338 (1886), holds that the trustees, who had negligently failed to invest the trust fund, did not thereby forfeit their right to commissions, distinguishing Cook v. Lowry, 85 N. Y. 103 (1884), reversing 29 Hun, 20 (1883), upon the ground that that was a case in which the trustees had been guilty of the grossest dereliction of duty.

The appropriation by an administrator of the funds of the estate during the latter part of the administration thereof is not a ground for the disallowance of compensation for moneys and attorney's fees and expense paid by him in the earlier part of the administration, during which his services were faithful. Foster v. Stone (Vt.) 81 Atl. Rep. 841 (1895).

And where the account of a receiver or other trustee is made up without a direction from the 29 L. R. A.

court to make periodical rests, his commission for receiving and paying must be computed on the aggregate amount of his receipts and expenditures for the whole time of accounting. Re Bank of Niagara, 6 Paige, 213 (1836).

X. Effect of allowance on costs.

The rule has been laid down that where interest is given against a trustee as remedy for a breach of trust, costs against him must follow as of course. Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. Jr. 204 (1791); Frey v. Demarest, 17 N. J. Eq. 71 (1864).

So in Pocock v. Reddington, 5 Ves. Jr. 794 (1801), it was held that where executors and trustees have violated their trust the beneficiaries are entitled to recover the cost occasioned by their misconduct.

And in Franklin v. Frith, 3 Bro. Ch. 424 (1792), and Plety v. Stace, 4 Ves. Jr. 620 (1799), it was held that an executor who keeps the funds of the estate in his hands, using them for his own benefit, is chargeable with interest and costs.

So in Jones v. Foxall, 15 Beav. 388, 21 L. J. Ch. 728 (1853), costs were charged against a trustee, who had been charged with increased interest for disobeying a positive direction to call in and invest the trust fund.

And in Byrne v. Norcott, 13 Beav. 336 (1851), the costs of accounting were charged against a trustee who was required to make good an accumulation, where he had neglected to call in the fund and invest it, and became insolvent.

And in Treves v. Townshend, 1 Bro. Ch. 385, 1 Cox. Ch. Cas. 50 (1784), the costs of the proceeding for an accounting were charged against an assignee in bankruptcy, who kept money of the assigned estate in his hands for several years, making no dividends.

gage of his interest to said Ming to secure the sum of $6,000; and that in December, 1883, as shown by such record, Guthrie divested himself of the legal title to one half interest in said land, by absolute conveyance, for a stated consideration of $5,500.

From this showing of the record, the petitioner contends that it appears said claim could have been enforced in full from Guthrie by seizure of said land, and therefore the executor should be charged the full amount of said claim, and interest, for failing to make such seizure. The executor testifies that, during all the time said indebtedness of Guthrie & Norris was owing to the estate, said debtors were insolvent, according to the information gained by the executor on diligent inquiry; that he did not bring suit against them, for the reason that he thought it more prudent to proceed as aforesaid in trying to collect said debts; that, in his view, to attempt to enforce payment by suit might have driven the debtors into such a condition that they could pay nothing, while, by the course the executor pursued, he was obtaining some payments. The executor also answered, in his testimony, that he could not say positively whether he searched the records to find whether the debtors had real estate, or interests therein, subject to attachment. The testimony of Mr. Herzhfeld, a banker, is also to the effect that, during all the time in question, claims against said debtors were not considered good; that their paper was not negotiable, and they were not regarded as financially responsible. We think the court, under the circumstances shown, justly refused to charge the executor any more than he had returned on account of said demands against Guthrie & Norris. The mere fact that the legal title to a piece of land comes into the name of an individual is not conclusive evidence that such property is subject to execution against such individual. Vaughn v. Schmalele, 10 Mont. 186, 10 L. R. A. 411. Nor is the record of such transaction, in relation to a piece of real estate, evidence that the amount set down in the conveyances represents the value thereof. Such proof alone, without showing the real value of the land, scarcely rises to any showing inconsistent with the testimony of the other witnesses, to the effect that said debts were not enforceable because of the insolvency of the debtors. Guthrie says in his testimony that he does not think a judgment could have been enforced against him, and he appears to have been the most responsible, as well as the most active, of the two debtors, in trying to pay said debts. It is our opinion that the court below, not only was justified in refusing to charge the executor with any more than he had returned on account of said claims against Guthrie & Norris, but the court should have also refused to require the executor to pay further interest on said $1,500, inasmuch as it was clearly shown that in giving credit therefor, before the actual collection of that amount, the executor involved himself in a personal loss of $800, besides having returned interest on said $1,500 from the time it was so credited to the estate, as above shown.

Regarding the rate of interest which ought

And in Moosely v. Ward, 11 Ves. Jr. 561 (1805), costs were charged against an executor in trust for infants, who was charged 5 per cent interest for unnecessarily calling in the trust fund, which was invested at that rate.

So in Raphael v. Boehm, 13 Ves. Jr. 590 (1807), executors, who were charged with compound interest at 5 per cent with half-yearly rests, for not having attempted to execute a trust to accumulate, in which no loss happened, and which if executed would not have produced as much, were allowed costs arising principally from a necessary investigation as to the rule by which they ought to be charged, and as to those parts of the proceeding which were consequential upon those upon which they had costs by the former decree, but as to the inquiries and accounts relating to the breach of trust, no costs were allowed.

And in Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 290 (1806), the costs of a suit for the construction of a will and to compel an executor to account for moneys which he had failed to invest for accumulation as directed by the will were charged to the executor so far as they were made necessary by the proceeding to compel the accounting, but not the costs of appeal and those of the proceeding for construction of the will.

And in Elliott v. Sparrell, 114 Mass. 404 (1874), executors directed to take a legacy from the personal estate before dividing it and invest it for the benefit of the legatee, who charged themselves with the amount of the legacy, were held not entitled to any allowance for taxes paid.

In Moualey v. Carr, 4 Beav. 42, 10 L. J. Ch. N. S. 260 (1841), however, costs against a life tenant and trustee were denied, where he was charged with ordinary interest only, for neglect to make a proper investment.

29 L. R. A.

And in Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. Jr. 402 (1807), costs were allowed against executors upon an accounting for a balance in their hands, but the allowance was made upon the circumstances of the case, the court refusing to accede to the holding, in Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. Jr. 294 (1791), that when interest is given against executors for breach of trust, costs should follow of course.

And Tebbs v. Carpenter, supra, disapproved Seers v. Hind, supra, so far as it holds that executors who are charged with interest should pay costs of course.

So, in Sammes v. Rickman, 3 Ves. Jr. 36 (1792), it was held that trustees will not be charged with costs for slight misconduct, with respect to which they are charged with interest.

And in Duncomb v. Duncomb, 1 Johns. Ch. 506, 7 Am. Dec. 504 (1815), the general rule that executors required to pay interest must pay costs was held not to apply when the devisee or cestui que trust demands more than he is entitled to receive and the executor properly submits to the direction of the court.

The practical importance of the question as to the liability of an executor or other fiduciary to be charged with compound interest on his accounting has probably never before appeared so great as it does in the case of Re RICKER'S ESTATE, where the amount of compound interest allowed by the lower court was more than $50,000, in addition to the interest compounded at a lower rate, which had already been actually paid by the executor. The case presents no new principles of law on the subject, but the court clearly accepts the doctrine that an executor should be dealt with on equitable principles in accordance with the particular facts of each case.

F. H. B.

to be imposed on the executor, the court below so ordered the accounting that he should be required to pay compound interest on all funds to the credit of the estate, not deposited at interest in bank, at the rates of 18, 15, and 12 per cent per annum compound, during stated periods of the administration. The sum so accruing by those rates was compounded by annual rests to carry the interest over as principal. The rates required are, according to the evidence, near the maximum rates shown to have been obtainable on loans by banks during the periods stated, there being no restriction by law on the rate of interest which might be agreed upon between borrower and lender. The legal rate provided by statute, enforceable on demands, in the absence of an agreed rate, during the same period, was, and still is, 10 per cent per annum. The statute in force since 1872 on this subject reads as follows: "Creditors shall be allowed to collect and receive interest, when there is no agreement as to the rate thereof, at the rate of ten per cent per annum for all moneys after they become due, on any bond, bill, promissory note, or any other instrument of writing, and on any judgment rendered before any court or magistrate authorized to enter up the same, within the territory, from the day of entering up such judgment, until satisfaction of the same be made; likewise on money lent, or money due on the settling of accounts, from the day of such settlement of accounts, between the parties, and ascertaining the balance due; on money received to the use of another, and retained without the owner's knowledge, and on money withheld by an unreasonable and vexatious delay." Comp. Stat. div. 5, § 1287. We have been unable to find authority to support the proposition that a court has jurisdiction to impose arbitrary rates of interest, above the statutory rate, in an equitable accounting with a trustee, although courts of equity frequently require a lower rate in such accountings, as an equitable rate. In England there appears to have been a rule of equity requiring what is called an "equitable" rate of interest, in accounting with trustees; and this rate is uniformly lower than the legal rate. The legal rate there being 5 per cent, equity usually required 4 per cent in such accountings, under the name of "equitable interest in mitigation of legal rates." Fonblanque, Eq. 443, note. Mr. Spence, the standard English authority on Equity Jurisprudence, says: "Where it appears that the trustee or executor has improperly or unnecessarily kept balances or any considerable portion of trust moneys in his hands, he will be charged with interest on what he has so retained, generally at 4 per cent, but, under special circumstances, at 5 per cent." 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 920. From a passage in the opinion delivered by Lord Chancellor Brougham in 1834, in Docker v. Somes, 2 Myl. & K. 666, it appears conclusively that English courts of chancery did not feel at liberty to impose arbitrary rates of interest upon trustees, in such accountings, exceeding the legal rate. As to the rule in the United States, Mr. Perry, in his examination of the subject, says: "In the United States there is no law by which different rates of interest can be applied to different degrees of negligence or misconduct; and the only question here is, whether simple or compound interest shall be imposed." Further along, in summing up his examination, he says: "The rate established by law as the legal rate, in the absence of special arrangements," governs courts of equity in accounting with trustees in this country. 1 Perry, Tr. § 468. Mr. Story expresses the same view, saying: "And the trustee, by mixing trust money with his own, at his banker's or otherwise, will become responsible for the replacing of the money, and lawful interest during the intervening period. . . . So, too, when the trustee makes an improper investment of trust funds, he becomes responsible for the same, with interest." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1277g. The same conclusion is reached by Mr. Page in his recent research on Executors and Administrators, found in 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 426-429, with copious citations. In Schieffelin v. Stewart, 1 Johns. Ch. 620, 7 Am. Dec. 507, although one of the severest cases in this country in its exaction from the trustee, there appears to have been no thought of imposing rates higher than the legal rate of 7 per cent. See also Clarkson v. De Peyster, Hopk. Ch. 426. In California we find it held that the legal rate of interest should not be exceeded in such accountings. Clark's Estate, 53 Cal. 355; Merrifield v. Longmire, 66 Cal. 180; Re Bachrich's Estate, 85 Cal. 98. There is a passage in Cruce v. Cruce, 81 Mo. 676, relied on by respondent to sanction the requirement of interest above the rates fixed by statute; and, while it may be so construed, we do not think such was intended to be held, for in that case only the legal rate of 10 per cent was allowed; and under the passage relied on is cited Proet v. Winston, 33 Mo. 489, where it appears the rate charged was that prescribed by law. In the examination of a great many cases on this subject, and especially all of those cited by respondent, we fail to find any authority contradicting the text of Mr. Perry,—that the legal rate is not exceeded, unless a lawful contract provides for a higher rate.

We now pass to a brief examination of the question of compounding interest in accounting with trustees. Near the close of the last century the remedy of compounding interest in such cases appears to have come into vogue in the courts of equity of England and the United States, as a convenient and potent remedy to draw from delinquent trustees the actual or presumed profits derived from the use of trust funds, although prior to that time it appears to be acknowledged that the law was administered with great laxity in that regard. In 1805 we find Lord Eldon, in his examination of the question of compounding interest in such accountings (Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. Jr. 92), so much in doubt as to the proper practice that he postponed the consideration to give time to make special inquiry on the subject, observing that it was a matter of great importance. And for his information, it appears, he went, not to reports or treatises, but caused inquiry to be made of the masters in chancery as to their understanding of the correct practice. See also, an examination of this subject, from an historical, as well as legal, point of view, by Lord Chancellor Brougham in Docker v. Somes, supra; by Chancellor Kent in Schiefelin v. Stewart, supra; by Chancellor Sanford in Clarkson v. De Peyster, supra; by Mr. Justice Grier in Barney v. Saunders, 57 U. S. 16 How. 548, 14 L. ed. 1051; Perry, Tr. and cases cited under section 468; Cruce v. Cruce, supra; the monograph by Mr. Page, of the Pennsylvania Bar, on Executors and Administrators, 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 425 et seq.; and the elaborate note to Walls v. Walker, 99 Am. Dec. 298. There is no doubt the doctrine has been applied during the present century, where circumstances appeared to warrant, as shown by an examination of the cases; but as to the special conditions to which it ought to be applied, and as to the rate of compound interest considered equitable, there seems to be much diversity of opinion. Sometimes the rule has been exerted with extreme rigor against a trustee guilty of fraud in respect to the trust funds, whereby he sought to enrich himself therefrom, as was done by Lord Chancellor Loughborough, in 1798, in Raphael v. Boehm, supra. Of this case, Lord Chancellor Brougham says (see Docker v. Somes, supra) it was the strongest instance of compounding interest against a trustee in England; but it was a case where "a gross breach of trust had been committed; for the large sum of £30,000 was expressly directed to be laid out for accumulation; and the executor having thought proper to employ it in his own trade, the court ordered him to be charged with interest at 5 per cent from the time of the executor's death, with half-yearly rests, and interest for the intermediate times. All the judges who have mentioned this decree have considered it severe." And he adds that, in this "most remarkable case, which indeed is always cited to be doubted, if not disapproved, the compound interest was given with a view to the culpability of the trustee's conduct, and not upon any estimate of the profits he had made by it." As has been mentioned, the case of Schiefelin v. Stewart, supra, before Chancellor Kent in 1815, is considered one that applied the rule with great severity. Therein it appears that the executor had retained in his hands constantly, for some ten years, $33,000 of trust funds, "without producing any benefit or advantage to the estate;" and the chancellor approved the report of the master charging the executor the legal rate of 7 per cent interest, with annual rests for compounding the same. One of the cases relied on by Chancellor Kent in support of that judgment was Raphael v. Boehm, supra, but, of course, without knowledge of the estimate in which it was held by the English bench, as appeared by later comments and the case of Schiefelin v. Stewart, notwithstanding the great weight of authority it carried by reason of the acknowledged learning and judicial ability of the chancellor who delivered the opinion, in its turn, seems to have been shaken by subsequent adjudications in New York, at least as to the rigor with which it applied the rule 29 L. R. A.

of compounding interest. Clarkson v. De Peyster, supra; De Peyster v. Clarkson, 2 Wend. 78. Mr. Perry states, as his deduction from the authorities, that "it is difficult to lay down any general rule that is equitable and applicable to all cases, as to the interest that trustees shall pay upon trust funds in their hands. In England, if trustees suffer money to remain in their own hands, or in the hands of third persons, or in bank for an unreasonable time, in addition to their liability for its loss during such delay, they will be charged with interest at the rate of 4 per cent; but if the trustees are grossly negligent or corrupt, or improperly call in the money from a proper investment, and suffer it to lie idle, or if they use it in trade or speculation, or invest it in improper places, the court will charge them with interest at the rate of 5 per cent; and, in certain special cases of misconduct, the court will order annual or semiannual rests, for the purpose of charging them with compound interest. In the United States there is no law by which different rates of interest can be applied to different degrees of negligence or misconduct; and the only question here is, whether simple or compound interest shall be imposed. The general rules, so far as they can be drawn from all the cases, are as follows: (1) If a trustee retains balances in his hands which he ought to have invested, or delays for an unreasonable time to invest, or if he mingles the money with his own, or uses it in his private business, or deposits it in bank in his own name, or in the name of the firm of which he was a member, or neglects to settle his account for a long time, or to distribute or pay over the money when he ought to do so, he will be liable to pay simple interest at the rate established by law as the legal rate, in the absence of special agreements. This rule is subject to the qualification that trustees cannot make any advantage to themselves out of the trust fund; and if they make more than legal interest, they shall pay more, as, if they make usurious loans, they shall be charged with all their gains from the use of the money. If the trustee cannot show what amount of interest he has received, he shall be charged with legal interest from the time when the regular investment ought to have been made. There may be an exception to the rule that a deposit of the trust money in bank in the name of the trustee, or a mixing of the trust fund with his own, will impose a liability of legal interest. There must be some element of a breach of trust in the transaction, or a breach of duty." 1 Perry, Tr. § 468.

There are cases of comparatively recent date, however, in which compound interest has been held proper by the supreme court of one state, and refused by that of another, where the cases appear to be surrounded by quite similar circumstances. This will be seen by a comparison of Clark's Estate, Merrifield's Estate, and Re Eschrich's Estate, supra, with the case of Cruce v. Cruce, supra, where, apparently under very similar facts, the California court allowed 7 per cent, compounded by annual rests, while the supreme court of Missouri allowed only simple interest at the legal rate of 10 per cent. But in the treatment of the latter case, after referring to the fact that "the rule of exacting interest from delinquent trustees has nowhere been enforced more rigorously" than in Missouri, it was said that if the interest had been compounded by annual rests, "at the low rate of 6 per cent," it would have been allowed to pass. "But, as every case must be determined according to the facts and circumstances peculiar to it, I am satisfied," says the author of that opinion, "that it would be inequitable to order interest compounded at the high rate of 10 per cent per annum against the respondent. My reasons for this conclusion are as follows: First, the account extends through fifteen years. The result of the computation, like all such arithmetical results, would be surprising and excessive. It would, in my judgment, exceed what could be expected from any prudent and careful administration of the estate under ordinary circumstances. I think it would be a marvelous achievement for any trustee of ordinary skill and prudence to keep a fund of $5,000 or $6,000 so constantly and securely invested for a period of fifteen years as to produce the net result of compound interest at 10 per cent per annum. In the ordinary course of events, there would necessarily be intervals of irregular length between investments, not to say anything of possible loss and depreciation of security. The ability of investing the interest annually, as soon as collected, may well be doubted when we consider its moderate volume, and the frequency with which it would have to be put out. The exaction of compound interest at such a high rate for so long a period of time would, in my judgment, be a departure from the leading principle, which requires the chancellor to approximate, as near as possible, the actual or presumed gains and profits of the fund." Cruce v. Cruce, supra.

The theory upon which the court exacted such extraordinary rates of compound interest from the executor in the case at bar was that, according to the testimony of the bankers, money could have been loaned, at the time in question, at such rates. Nowhere in the record is there shown any proof as to the net result of loaning money during a given period, even by such experienced financiers as bankers, after deducting expenses and losses, in order to ascertain the net profits which could be derived from the use of money by way of interest. Without any such inquiry, the rates of 18, 15, and 12 per cent were designated by the court for stated periods of the administration, and the referee was directed to compute at those rates, during such periods, compounding by annual rests. Would it not be somewhat analogous if, in a given case, it was found a bailee of another's carriage horse had kept and used it for the period of, say, five years, and, in order to charge the bailee with the profit of such use, the court should take proof of the price for a livery animal, of like quality, for one day, and without further inquiry as to expense of feeding or care, or as to the time such animal would ordinarily lie idle, the court should order the case to a referee to cast the aggregate for the whole period at the price stated for a day, and enter judgment accordingly? If liverymen could so reckon profit, their prosperity would no doubt be far different than practical experience demonstrates. So, if loans of money were always promptly returned at maturity with the stipulated interest, and the gross rate was never diminished by loss or delay through deterioration of securities, death, disaster, or fraud, or by the expense of constant attention to such affairs, the employment of professional services, of litigation, and so forth, even then it would not be possible, in practice, to make the gain compound along the line of the highest rates attainable, because, in practice, it would not be possible to reloan the money and the accumulated interest the instant it was due. If the debtor, through stubborn neglect or misfortune, is delinquent in payment, the law must be resorted to, and for such delay it will not require from the delinquent debtor compound interest; so that in demanding return of compound interest, at the loaning rate, in such instances (which are not infrequent in experience), the law would demand on the one hand, of the trustee, what it would not allow him to collect on the other. The problem of compound interest, when set in motion, moves on for its allotted period with the certainty of time and mathematics. All other conditions are assumed. It considers no delay, no failure, no expense; its assumed creditors, forever, with the regularity of perpetual motion, obey an assumed demand; and the gain in turn is presumed to be reloaned the instant of its payment. The problem contemplates constant accretion by a composite process, but no diminution; it omits no farthing, nor allows any to escape when gathered—not even so much as the expense of postage, or the wear of shoe leather, to make a demand. The thriftiest management and most fortunate consummation in practice cannot hope to reach the quotient gathered by the problem in the long run, unless odds are given, in fixing the rate to be compounded, to offset the expenses, delays, and failures met with in practical experience. But with allowance for such contingencies, in fixing such rate, no doubt common experience will admit that it is practical to gain compound interest; and it has been, no doubt justly, held equitable, in accounting with trustees, where they have in their hands money for accumulation, or which was made to accumulate, or has been used for the trustee's profit, to require compound interest. But the rate must be fixed with due consideration, or the result will be found out of all proportion to what could have been accomplished in the field of practical affairs. We are suggesting here nothing new, for these conditions have undoubtedly been considered, if not mentioned in detail, by courts of equity, as shown in the fact that they have, in general, gauged their requirements accordingly. But sometimes, as might have been expected in the application of an abstract mathematical rule, the exact relation of which to practical results is not easily detected, some hardship may have been worked.

There is evidence in the record to the effect that, from time to time during the period in question, banking institutions contracted to pay, for the use of funds left with them for a stated time, a certain rate of interest per annum. That is the only evidence in the record which approaches a safe criterion from which there might have been found the measure of net profits, or, in other words, the net earnings which could be counted on for the use of money by way of interest. While this testimony did not take that form of inquiry exactly, it is evidence of what money could have earned, placed in such institutions; they insuring the safety thereof, so far as their own responsibility went, and bearing the expense and loss incident to its use. The tendency of this evidence, more than any other in the record, is to show what such financial institutions could afford to pay for the use of money, and insure its safety, and bear the expense and loss incurred in handling. Who are more likely to get greater profit from the use of money, under fairly safe and conservative conditions of handling, than bankers? If there are other financiers or business men who can do better, is it not likely bankers would learn the way and adopt it? But, if we measure this executor's returns by that criterion, a balance is found in his favor; for, when the rate in the banks went below 8 per cent, the evidence is that he kept on returning, at that rate, on moneys to the credit of the estate not in bank. If we look to the precedents in the books, we find, too, that the returns of this executor, made without delinquency or any suspicion of fraud, rise above the exactions from trustees, by way of compound interest, in cases where their accounts were delinquent and conduct culpable. Shall a judgment of greater severity be pronounced in this case than in such? It appears from numerous precedents from all sections of the country that this case would, in those courts, be dismissed, because the executor has voluntarily and promptly made returns of income double what could have been obtained by the course contemplated by the testator's will, and more than the banks would have allowed during a considerable portion of the time, and more than the courts have found equitable to exact in accountings with trustees whose conduct was found grossly detrimental to the interests of the estate. This must be admitted. And, even granting the worst that has been asserted against the executor in the case at bar,—the temporary use of certain of the trust funds in private affairs, which is made the occasion for exacting compound interest in several cases, as we have seen,—still it appears, and is not disputed, that this executor has seen to it that the estate in no way suffered detriment therefrom, and gained considerably thereby. If a man's foot slip, or if he stumbles, and then, regathering himself, walks uprightly, and delivers his burden in advance of all others, without one whit missing, shall he be turned upon, and scourged with a severity exceeding that laid upon one who refuses to proceed with the discharge of his duty altogether? It may be answered that, if one who wavers is allowed to go without punishment, others will walk unsteadily. This answer does not meet the situation. If he was found delinquent it would be time to consider of his punishment, but if, not finding him delinquent in any respect, more is exacted than for entire neglect, absolute default would be encouraged by such unjust judgment.

But, laying aside all figures of speech, as not much to be indulged in judicial investigations, and viewing all phases of this case in the plainest fashion, it appears that, if heavier judgment is laid on such a case as this, the court will thereby designate the plane of its exactions much higher than any court has attempted to maintain, so far as we have been able to discover. With the carefullest investigation of the law and facts, our deliberate judgment is drawn to a negative conclusion on every vital point in this case. There is no hardship in this, for the executor must have managed the affairs of the estate with solicitude for the welfare of the heirs, and that his management has been largely fruitful of benefits to them is frankly admitted. Such results do not come from indifference or neglect. In rendering the extraordinary judgment in this case, we think the learned judge of the court below must, without the deliberation usually manifested, have adopted views urged by the forceful eloquence of petitioner's counsel; but things only assumed, in whatsoever eloquent phrase, or forms only painted, however real they seem at first impression, cannot support the judgment of a court.

An order will therefore be entered, reversing the judgment in this proceeding, and remanding the case, with directions to enter judgment in the court below dismissing this proceeding, at the cost of petitioner.

Pemberton, Ch. J., and De Witt, J., concur.

A rehearing was subsequently granted, after which, on March 12, 1894, the following opinion was handed down:

Per Curiam:

Since the determination of this appeal, motion for rehearing has been presented and given careful consideration, besides allowing counsel the unusual privilege of argument to more fully expound the grounds on which rehearing is demanded. Nevertheless, there has been no exposition of points wherein the court overlooked or erroneously applied any pertinent or controlling authorities or material facts in the original determination. On the contrary, this retrospection of the case, in the light of motion for rehearing, tends to confirm the views of the court heretofore expressed, as fully in accord with the authorities and facts, and that a just and proper determination was reached. The same will therefore be allowed to stand as originally announced.

This motion for rehearing, however, raises anew point in the case, which hitherto was neither presented in the brief nor in the argument on appeal; nor does it appear that consideration thereof was had in the trial court,—namely, that in certain years the probate court of Lewis and Clarke county, then having jurisdiction of said estate, allowed the executor a higher rate of commission by 1 per cent than the statute then provided; in other words, it is asserted that, at certain times when 5 per cent commission was allowed the executor, the statute prescribed only 4 per cent. It is obvious, this being a court of review, and not of original inquiry in these matters, it should not enter upon an investigation, or make any order, touching this question, for the reason already mentioned,—that no inquiry or determination on that feature of the case appears to have been made by the trial court. Therefore, there is no order or determination of the trial court to review on that point. The trial court denied the executor all commissions, on grounds which did not touch the question of his having been allowed by the probate court a rate exceeding that provided by statute. That particular question seems not to have been adjudicated. But whatever inquiry or order concerning the readjustment of said commission on the ground alleged may be pertinent, it should, in the first instance, be proceeded with in the trial court.

The motion for rehearing will therefore be denied.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

J. F. FERCHEN, Respt.,

v.

Samuel ARNDT.

E. W. BLISS COMPANY, Intervener, Appt.

(26 Or. 121.)

Consignors cannot impress funds of the consignees in the hands of a receiver with a trust lien for the proceeds of goods sold, if the consignees dissipated such proceeds in paying current expenses of their business, although the claims against the funds in the receiver's hands were thereby diminished.

(July 5, 1894.)

APPEAL by intervener, the E. W. Bliss Company, from a decree of the Circuit Court for Clatsop County denying its claim to a preferred lien upon the assets of the partnership of Arndt & Ferchen to settle the affairs of which the suit was brought. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Snow & McCamant, for appellant:

The court erred in holding that the equitable lien of a principal, whose funds have been misappropriated, is enforceable only against the specific property into which the agent has converted it.

An agent or trustee, who mingles the property of his principal with his individual property, does not thereby constitute the relation of creditor and debtor between himself and his principal, but makes the trust fund a charge on all the assets of his estate.

Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 696, 36 Moak, Eng. Rep. 779, and cases there cited; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 698; Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Gillespie, 187 U. S. 411, 84 L. ed. 724; San Diego County v. California Nat. Bank, 52 Fed. Rep. 59; Thompson

v. Gloucester City Sav. Inst. (N. J.) 6 Cent. Rep. 328; Smith v. Combs, 49 N. J. Eq. 420; McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Francis v. Evans, 69 Wis. 115; Bowers v. Evans, 71 Wis. 138; Independent Dist. v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 722; Harrison v. Smith, 83 Mo. 217, 53 Am. Rep. 571; Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 520; Myers v. Board of Education, 51 Kan. 87; Peak v. Ellicott, 80 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90; Ingraham v. Ellicott, 80 Kan. 163; First Nat. Bank v. Hummel, 14 Colo. 259, 8 L. R. A. 788; Continental Nat. Bank v. Weems, 69 Tex. 489; Brochus v. Morgan (Tenn.) 5 Cent. L. J. 53; 2 Lewin, Tr. 394 et seq.; Mechem, Agency, 586.

Messrs. Fulton Brothers, for respondent:

The facts stated in the petition do not entitle appellant to a lien upon any property in the hands of the receiver or to priority in the order of payment.

It is incumbent upon the party asserting the lien to trace the funds he seeks to have impressed with a trust character into the receiver's possession, either in their original form or some specific property or fund, and the burden of identification is upon him.

Perry, Tr. 8d ed. § 128; Re Carin's Petition v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256; Northern Dakota Elec. Co. v. Clark, 8 N. Dak. 26; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 39 Fed. Rep. 684; Ellison v. Moses, 95 Ala. 221; Thompson's App. 22 Pa. 16; Story, Eq. Jur. 1257, 1259; Hopkins' App. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 860; Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 208; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1051-1058; Union Nat. Bank v. Goets, 138 Ill. 127; Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78; Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd, 38 Fed. Rep. 173, 2 L. R. A. 480; Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 28, 39 Am. Dec. 141; Goldthwaite v. Ellison, 99 Ala. 497; School Trustees v. Kirwin, 25 Ill. 78.

Lord, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to establish a preference and a lien upon the assets of the partnership of Arndt & Ferchen, in the hands of B. W. Robinson as receiver, for certain moneys alleged to have been received in trust by said firm. The facts are substantially these: The NOTE.—In connection with the present case on the subject of tracing a trust into the proceeds of trust property, see the case next following, Muhlenberg v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. post. 687; also notes to First Nat. Bank v. Hummel (Colo.), 8 L. R. A. 788; Little v. Chadwick (Mass.) 7 L. R. A. 570, and Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 2 L. R. A. 480.

29 L. R. A.

plaintiff and defendant were partners engaged in the foundry business under the firm name of Arndt & Ferchen, and, not being able to agree in regard to the management of the business, the plaintiff instituted a suit praying for an accounting, and for a dissolution of the partnership, and that in the interim the property of the partnership be turned over to a receiver, who should manage the same subject to the orders of the court. The receiver, having been appointed, took charge of the property and business of the firm, and, after managing it several months, he was directed by the court to sell the property of the partnership in his hands, and turn into court the proceeds of such sale, together with such collections as he might make of partnership accounts. Under this order about $3,000 was paid into court for distribution among the creditors of the firm. In the meantime the E. W. Bliss Company was permitted by the court to intervene in the suit, whereupon it filed its petition, praying for the allowance of a claim against the partnership for the sum of $2,114, together with interest thereon from July 15, 1892; that it be decreed to have a preferred lien on all assets of the partnership for said sum, and that the receiver be directed to pay the same to the petitioner. The facts upon which the intervenor bases its claim are, substantially, that the firm of Arndt & Ferchen had represented the Bliss Company as its agents in the sale of its goods on commission; that accounts were rendered from time to time to said company, but that, without its knowledge, it had been the custom of the firm to mingle the sums received from sales made for such company with other moneys of the firm; that the moneys so received were deposited in the bank to the credit of such partnership, and that the firm "checked against it to pay the running expenses of the partnership, to purchase new machinery, to purchase merchandise afterwards sold by the partnership, to pay the salaries and wages of employes, . . . and that the moneys of your petitioner so received by said Arndt & Ferchen have been so mingled with the funds of said Arndt & Ferchen that it is impossible to follow them into any specific property." The petition was attacked by demurrer, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit, which demurrer was overruled, the court holding that the intervenor was entitled to have any specific property or fund of the partnership into which it could trace its money impressed with a lien in its favor. The court then referred the case to O. E. Runyon, Esq., for the purpose of ascertaining whether the firm had received any money from the sale of the goods or wares of the company as its factor, and, if so, what disposition was made of it. Thereafter the receiver filed an answer denying that the firm of Arndt & Ferchen, since the year 1884, or at any time, has been employed by the petitioner as its factor, or sold any goods or wares for or on its account, etc. This answer was deemed insufficient to constitute a defense, and, no other answer being interposed, and the intervenor having failed to avail itself of the opportunity afforded by the court to show by evidence that its money was in the partnership fund, the court proceeded to pass upon the question raised by the petition, and held that the amount claimed therein should be allowed, but denied the preference sought by the petitioner. From this decree the company has brought this appeal.

The facts show that, if the claim of the Bliss Company is preferred, it will absorb the entire assets of the firm, leaving nothing for its other creditors. The case is rendered important by the nature of the question involved and the number of other cases dependent upon its decision. Upon the admitted facts there is no pretense that the money derived from the sale of the intervenor's goods forms any part of the fund now awaiting distribution at the hands of the court. It is conceded that the money so collected has been appropriated to the payment of debts, the purchase of stock, and the payment of the running expenses of the partnership while the firm was conducting its business. But it is claimed that, where an agent or trustee has wrongfully used or appropriated the property or funds of another, it creates an equitable charge upon his whole estate, or a preferred lien upon his assets. This is put on the ground that such estate is thereby increased, or that his assets would have been less but for the wrongful use or appropriation of the trust fund, and consequently that it cannot be supposed that such fund is wholly lost, but that it exists in a substituted form as a part of such estate or assets, although it cannot be pointed out, or directly traced. That there may be cases to which such argument is applicable may be conceded,—as, where the trust fund has gone into and remains in the assets which are sought to be charged,—but its force is not perceived where such fund is dissipated, or used in the payment of debts or the expenses of business. The equitable right to follow and retake from the possession of a trustee property wrongfully appropriated by him, or from those in privity with him, who are not bona fide purchasers for value, so long as it can be traced, whether it remains in its original or in a substituted form, upon the ground that such property, in whatever form, is subject to the trust in favor of the owner, is well established. "Formerly," Mr. Justice Bradley says, "the equitable right of following misapplied money or other property into the hands of the parties receiving it depended upon the ability of identifying it; the equity attaching only to the very property misapplied. This right was first extended to the proceeds of the property, namely, to that which was procured in place of it by exchange, purchase, or sale. But if it became confused with other property of the same kind, so as not to be distinguishable, without any fault on the part of the possessor, the equity was lost. Finally, however, it has been held as the better doctrine that confusion does not destroy the equity entirely, but converts it into a charge upon the entire mass, giving to the party injured by the unlawful diversion a priority of right over the other creditors of the possessor. This is as far as the rule has been carried." Freeling- deposit with the bank in the sense that they stood on the books of the concern, to the credit of the plaintiff and his assignors. This seems to us manifest when it is remembered that the complaint alleges, and the answer admits, that the bank placed the moneys of plaintiff "in its treasury, for use in connection with its banking business, and that, having been so placed in the treasury aforesaid, they were paid out in the course of its business affairs as a banking institution; that thereupon the defendant wholly destroyed the identity of plaintiff's said remittance, and the identity of the moneys of the other parties, paid over to it in trust as aforesaid;" and "that, by reason of the wrongful mingling of the moneys of plaintiff and the other parties aforesaid, it is impossible to follow the moneys so paid to the defendant company, and that the same are wholly incapable of identification." The complaint seems to have been drawn and the case was tried on the theory that plaintiff could not trace his money, or the proceeds thereof, into the hands of the receiver. This position is, in our opinion, fully warranted by the record. No allusion is made by appellant in his brief to the alleged admissions of the answer, nor was his contention in this court that he was entitled to a lien because his money, or the proceeds thereof, were actually in the possession of the receiver, but on the doctrine that (quoting from the brief) "where funds come into the hands of a trustee, impressed with a trust in favor of the principal, and are wrongfully mingled by the trustee with his own funds, so as to be incapable of identification, the cestui que trust has an equitable lien on all the assets of the defaulting trustee to the amount of the fund so misappropriated." In our opinion, therefore, there is nothing in the record in this case to exempt it from the rule announced in Ferchen v. Arndt and applied in the Sharpe Case, the facts of which appellant states in his brief are "substantially identical" with those in the case under consideration.

The petition for rehearing is therefore denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

James W. COLE

v.

George TUCKER et al.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A statute requiring the use of an official ballot may properly be deemed necessary by the legislature in order to secure to the voters a full and fair election and an accurate and honest count, and does not impair the constitutional rights of the voters.
2. A statute making an official ballot compulsory in the election of city officers, but optional in the election of town officers, is not void as partial and unequal in its operation upon the rights of voters.

(October 12, 1896.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to a ruling of the Superior Court for Hampshire County directing a verdict for defendants in an action brought to recover damages for defendants' refusal to accept a ballot offered at a recent election at which defendants were election officers. Overruled.

The material portions of the statute under which defendants acted were as follows:

Acts of 1893, chap. 417, § 129: "All ballots for use in elections of city officers in a city shall be prepared and furnished by the city clerk of such city."

SEC. 130: "On the back and outside, when folded, of each ballot, shall be printed the words 'Official Ballot for,' followed by the designation of the voting precinct or town for which the ballot is prepared, the date of the election, and a fac-simile of the signature of ... the city clerk ... , who has caused the ballot to be prepared."

SEC. 168: "No ballot without the official indorsement ... shall be allowed to be deposited in the ballot box."

SEC. 178: "No ballot shall be counted in any election for which ballots are by law provided at the expense of the commonwealth or of the city or town, unless they have been provided in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Charles G. Delano, for plaintiff:

The plaintiff had qualifications prescribed by the constitution and had the right to bring in his own ballot in accordance with the ancient law and custom.

Colo. Act 1647; Pub. Stat. chap. 7; Ashby v. White, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th. ed. 484; Lincoln v. Hapgood, 11 Mass. 350.

By the provision of an official ballot the state has taken away the general ballot of nomination from the assembly where it properly resides, and by certifying the nomination of the dominant party only compels all others to act without a candidate.

The law is unequal, giving a great advantage to the party whose ballot is printed over the written ballot of its opponent.

1 Adams' Works, 474; Gov. Message, Acts 1895.

The law is an unnecessary restraint and destructive of liberty.

1 Bl. Com. 126.

The compulsory use of the ballot and confinement of the person is duress of imprisonment, and should avoid the vote as it does a bond.

1 Bl. Com. 136.

The tranquillity of the New England election has never required this supervision.

1 Kent, Com. 232.

If a partisan ballot should be printed at the public expense elections are not free. There is undue influence.

NOTE.—On the question, how far the right to vote is absolute, see note to State v. Blake (N. J.) 25 L. R. A. 480.
29 L. R. A.

1 Bl. Com. 178.

The right to cast a private ballot in municipal affairs was early conferred upon the citizens of towns as freemen and members of a corporation, and is a franchise of which they cannot be deprived.

Ashby v. White, supra; Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.

Mr. Albert E. Addis, for defendants:

The right of suffrage is not a natural right, nor is it an absolute, unqualified personal right. It is a right derived in this country from constitutions and statutes.

McCrary, Elections, § 11; State v. Dillon, 32 Fla. 545, 22 L. R. A. 124; Kinneen v. Wells, 144 Mass. 497, 59 Am. Rep. 105; Copen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 28 Am. Dec. 632.

It is within the just and constitutional limits of the legislative power to require the use of an official ballot in this election.

Copen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 489, 28 Am. Dec. 632.

The power to declare a legislative enactment void is one which the judge, conscious of the fallibility of human judgment, will shrink from exercising in any case where he can, conscientiously and with due regard to duty and official oath, decline the responsibility.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 159.

In passing upon the validity of this act we are to be guided by the rule that a deliberate act of the legislature must be upheld if it can be done without doing violence to the fundamental law. Its reasonableness or justice, so long as it does not contravene some portion of the organic law, is a matter for legislative consideration, and not subject to our control.

State v. Dillon, supra.

The statute is an important one, general in its application, and passed by the legislature as the guardian of the public interests, and is to be upheld unless it clearly exceeds its powers.

Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 277.

Field, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is necessary in this case to determine the constitutionality of Stat. 1898, chap. 417. This question was discussed in Minor v. Okin, 159 Mass. 487, but the court there expressed no opinion upon it. The defendants in the present case were election officers at an annual election for city officers in the city of Northampton, and refused to allow the ballot offered by the plaintiff to be deposited in the ballot box; and the ballot was not deposited, and was not counted in the election. It was a printed ballot, designated in print at the head of it as the "Regular Prohibition Ticket." The official ballot provided for use at the election had on it the names of the candidates of the Republican and the Democratic parties for office, but no other names, and the plaintiff wished to vote for the candidates of the Prohibition party. The plaintiff was a duly qualified voter, whose name was upon the check list.

The qualifications of voters for town and city officers are not prescribed by the constitution, but by statute; but we do not think 29 L. R. A.

it necessary to consider whether, so far as the question in this case is concerned, a distinction can be made between the powers of the general court to prescribe the manner of casting ballots at elections for city and town officers, and at elections for state officers or for state representatives or senators. Article 9 of the Declaration of Rights of the Constitution is as follows: "All elections ought to be free; and all the inhabitants of this commonwealth having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers, and to be elected, for public employments." This, in terms, relates to inhabitants having such qualifications as are established by the frame of government, but we assume that the same principles apply to electors whose qualifications are established by statute. In regard to the right of voting for state officers, where the qualifications are prescribed by the constitution, the court, in Copen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 28 Am. Dec. 632, says: "And this court is of opinion that in all cases where the constitution has conferred a political right or privilege, and where the constitution has not particularly designated the manner in which the right is to be exercised, it is clearly within the just and constitutional limits of the legislative power to adopt any reasonable and uniform regulations, in regard to the time and mode of exercising that right, which are designed to secure and facilitate the exercise of such right in a prompt, orderly, and convenient manner. Such a construction would afford no warrant for such an exercise of legislative power as, under the pretense and color of regulating, should subvert or injuriously restrain the right itself." See Kinneen v. Wells, 144 Mass. 497, 59 Am. Rep. 105.

The principal question, then, is whether Stat. 1898, chap. 417, is a reasonable regulation of the manner in which the right to vote shall be exercised, or whether it subverts or injuriously restrains the exercise of this right. The provisions of the statute requiring the use of an official ballot do not touch the qualifications of the voters, but they relate to the manner in which the election shall be held. In general, it may be said that the so-called "Australian Ballot Acts," in the various forms in which they have been enacted in many of the states of this country, have been sustained by the courts, provided the acts permit the voter to vote for such persons as he please, by leaving blank spaces on the official ballot, in which he may write, or insert in any other proper manner, the names of such persons, and by giving him the means, and a reasonable opportunity, to write in or insert such names. Stoge v. McMillan, 108 Mo. 153; Detroit v. Rush, 83 Mich. 532, 10 L. R. A. 171; Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 325; De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 529, 15 L. R. A. 771; State v. Black, 54 N. J. L. 446, 16 L. R. A. 769; State v. Dillon, 32 Fla. 545, 22 L. R. A. 124; Slaymaker v. Phillips (Wyo.) 40 Pac. Rep. 971; People v. Waplinger's Falls, 144 N. Y. 616; Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 22 L. R. A. 468; Taylor v. Bleakley (Kan.) 28 L. R. A. 683; Curran

v. Clayton, 86 Me. 42; Whitlam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 16 L. R. A. 754.

Without reciting in detail the provisions of Stat. 1898, chap. 417, the material portions of which, relevant to the present case, are referred to in the opinion in Miner v. Olin, supra, we are of opinion that, for the reasons given in the cases cited above, the provisions of the statute requiring the use of an official ballot cannot be declared unconstitutional. The provisions are such as may properly be deemed necessary by the legislature, in order to secure to the voters a full and fair election, and an accurate and honest count of the ballots; and they do not impair the rights of the voters to such an extent as to warrant a court in holding them to be void on the ground that they are beyond the constitutional power of the general court.

The remaining contention of the plaintiff is that the use of the official ballot is made compulsory in the election of city officers, and optional in the election of town officers, and that, therefore, the statute is void, as partial and unequal in its operation upon the rights of voters. See Stat. 1898, chap. 417, §§ 129, 143, 173. There is nothing in the constitution which requires that the laws regulating elections for city and town officers shall be uniform throughout the commonwealth, and in some respects the laws regulating elections in cities for city officers have always been different from those regulating elections in towns for town officers. See Pub. Stat. chap. 7. As the provisions of the statute we are considering do not affect the qualifications of the voters, but merely regulate the form of voting by ballot, it may well be that in small towns it is not always desirable or necessary that all the precautions be taken against mistake, force, fraud, or intimidation in elections which ought to be taken in cities and large towns, where there are many voters. There are many provisions of the statutes concerning elections which require cities to do certain things which towns are not required to do; and some provisions concerning cities and towns are made to take effect only upon a vote of the city council, or of the inhabitants, adopting the provisions. One or two illustrations are sufficient: By article 2 of the Amendments of the Constitution, the general court is empowered to constitute city governments, and "to prescribe the manner of calling and holding public meetings of the inhabitants in wards or otherwise, for the election of officers under the constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given at such meetings." Rev. Stat. chap. 4, § 12, contains the general provisions in force at the time these statutes took effect, concerning the manner of conducting elections, but section 13 of the chapter is as follows: "In the city of Boston the several elections provided for in this chapter shall be conducted according to the provisions of the act establishing the city of Boston, and of the several acts in addition thereto." Rev. Stat. chap. 15, § 84, is as follows: "The election of town clerks, selectmen, assessors, school committees, and town treasurer, and also of the moderator of the meetings held for the choice of town officers, shall be by written ballots, and the election of all other town officers shall be in such mode as the meeting shall determine." See Pub. Stat. chap. 27, § 80. In matters which concern the form of holding elections, in the absence of anything in the constitution prescribing the manner in which the elections shall be held, we are of opinion that the provisions need not be the same for all the cities and towns of the commonwealth.

Judgment for the defendants.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

William H. MOYER, Appt.,

Aaron T. VAN DE VANTER, Respt.

(..... Wash.)

1. A general exception "to these findings of fact and conclusions of law and to each of them" is not sufficient to raise any question for review by the supreme court.

2. Ballots will not be vitiated, in the absence of fraud, by the fact that the official stamp required by statute to be placed on them was not so placed until they were returned by the electors to be placed in the box, having gone into the possession of the electors unstamped?

3. A law forbidding the counting of ballots upon which the election officers have not placed their initials cannot be sustained where the constitution provides that persons possessing certain qualifications "shall be entitled to vote at all elections."

NOTE.—As to constitutional right to vote, see State v. Blake (N. J.) 26 L. R. A. 480, and note; also Cole v. Tucker (Mass.) ante, 668.

29 L. R. A.

See also 32 L. R. A. 656.

4. Failure of election officers to provide booths which comply with the law is a mere irregularity which will not render void the votes cast in that precinct.

(July 23, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of defendant in an action brought to contest the title of defendant to the office of sheriff of King County. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Winsor, Bush & Morris, John B. Hart, and White & Munday, for appellant:

The court below erred in its first conclusion of law, that the ballots having no initials of election officers thereon were legal votes, and that the provision of law requiring such indorsement, and declaring that unless so indorsed they should be void, and no officer should count them, was directory merely.

Cook v. State, 90 Tenn. 407, 13 L. R. A. 163; Ackers v. Howard, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 740:

Pearce v. Morris, 2 Ad. & El. 96; Contested Election of Owen Ousick, 186 Pa. 459; De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 529, 15 L. R. A. 771; People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L. R. A. 624; People v. Dutchess County Supra, 185 N. Y. 522; Parvin v. Wimberg, 180 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775; Bechtel v. Albin, 184 Ind. 198; Sego v. Stoddard, 186 Ind. 297, 22 L. R. A. 468; State v. Gay (Minn.) 60 N. W. Rep. 677; Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 588, 25 L. R. A. 325; Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 58; State v. Hagen (Iowa) 60 N. W. Rep. 110; Spurgin v. Thompson, 37 Neb. 89.

The elector takes his right to vote under such regulations for secrecy and purity as the legislature may make, not inconsistent with the fundamental law.

State v. Connor, 86 Tex. 183; Atty-Gen. v. May, supra; Londoner v. People, 15 Colo. 557; Parvin v. Wimberg, supra; Woodward v. Sarsons, L. R. 10 C. P. 747; Phillips v. Goff, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 812; Ackers v. Howard, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 758; Kearns v. Edwards (N. J.) 28 Atl. Rep. 725; Talcott v. Philbrick, 59 Conn. 472, 10 L. R. A. 150.

The mandatory provisions of the law in regard to securing the purity and secrecy of elections are not to be disregarded by election officers, nor by the courts in an election contest.

Atty-Gen. v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439; State v. Connor, supra; Jones v. Glidewell, 58 Ark. 161, 7 L. R. A. 881; State v. Taylor, 108 N. C. 196, 12 L. R. A. 202; State v. McElroy, 44 La. Ann. 796, 16 L. R. A. 278; Gaston v. Lamkin, 115 Mo. 20; State v. Seibert, 116 Mo. 416; State v. Stein, 35 Neb. 848; State v. Gay, Woodward v. Sarsons, and Phillips v. Goff, supra; Haves v. Miller, 58 Iowa, 395; Kearns v. Edwards, supra.

Even where the statute uses the word "may" in prescribing the duties of officers, if the doing of the thing is for the sake of justice, or for the public good, the word "may" is to be construed as "shall."

Rea and Reg. v. Barlow, 2 Salk. 609; Reg. v. Tithe Commrs. 14 Q. B. 459; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 461.

Messrs. Donworth & Howe, in addition to the other counsel for appellant, in support of petition for rehearing:

Holding section 391, 1 Hill's Code, in conflict with the constitution in effect wipes out the possibility of enforcing the Australian ballot system in the state of Washington; and is in conflict with the construction given to like statutes under like constitutional provisions by the court of last resort in every state in this Union, which had handed down an opinion upon the question.

People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L. R. A. 624; People v. Person, 64 Hun. 327, affirmed 135 N. Y. 618; State v. Gay (Minn.) 60 N. W. Rep. 677; State v. Russell, 84 Neb. 116, 15 L. R. A. 740; State v. Stein, 35 Neb. 878; Parvin v. Wimberg, 180 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775; Tabbe v. Smith (Cal.) post, 678; Slaymaker v. Phillips (Wyo.) 40 Pac. Rep. 971.

Messrs. Brady, Gay & McBride, Andrew F. Burleigh, and Struve, Allen, Hughes & McMicken, for respondent:

The statutes respecting the exercise of the elective franchise by the individual voter should be strictly construed and the same held to be mandatory.

Brown v. McCollum, 76 Iowa, 479; Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57; Curran v. Clayton, 86 Me. 42; Kearns v. Edwards (N. J.) 28 Atl. Rep. 723; Parvin v. Wimberg, 180 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775; Ellis v. Glaser, 102 Mich. 896.

The rule of construction of statutes governing the conduct of election officers in absence of fraud is always liberal.

Ellis v. Glaser, supra; Pennington v. Hare (Minn.) 62 N. W. Rep. 118; State v. Gay (Minn.) 60 N. W. Rep. 676; People v. Avery, 102 Mich. 572; Boyd v. Mills, 58 Kan. 594, 25 L. R. A. 486; Lindstrom v. Manistee County Canvassers, 94 Mich. 467, 19 L. R. A. 171; Blankinship v. Israel, 182 Ill. 514; Stinson v. Sweeney, 17 Nev. 309; Miller v. Pennoyer, 23 Or. 364; Wilds v. State Board of Canvassers, 50 Kan. 144.

Scott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The parties hereto were rival candidates at the last general election for the office of sheriff of King county. The county canvassing board found that respondent was entitled to the office, and declared him elected thereto, whereupon a certificate of election was issued to him. Within a few days thereafter, appellant filed a statement of contest, alleging matters to show that he had received the greatest number of legal votes and was entitled to the office. Issue was taken by the respondent upon certain of the material matters alleged, and a trial was had, which resulted in favor of the respondent, and this appeal was taken therefrom. A number of findings of fact were made by the lower court, which, with certain conclusions of law based thereon, were duly reduced to writing and made a part of the case. Whereupon appellant excepted as follows: "To these findings of fact and conclusions of law, and to each of them, the contestant excepts." An objection was made by the respondent to a consideration of any of the evidence introduced, or errors alleged with reference thereto, on the ground that no sufficient exception was taken to any fact found by the lower court; and, under repeated holdings of this court heretofore, this objection must be sustained. As a consequence thereof, the case presented upon appeal is much abbreviated; many of the questions sought to be raised by the appellant are eliminated; and the only question left for our consideration is whether the facts so found by the lower court are antagonistic to the conclusions of law and judgment. Appellant's main contention in this respect is based upon the seventh finding, which is as follows: "I find that in Franklin precinct there were 194 votes cast and counted for Aaron T. Van de Vanter, the defendant and contestee, and seventeen votes for William H. Moyer, the plaintiff and contestant, for said office of sheriff, which said votes entered into and formed a part of the total legal votes hereinbefore found by me to be cast for each of the said contestant and contestee, to wit: on the part of Van de Vanter, entered into and made a part of the 4,880 votes so counted; on the part of Moyer, entered into and became a part of the 4,878 so counted for him. I further find that the election officers of Franklin precinct failed to place upon any of said ballots the initials of the inspector or any judge thereof before the said ballot was deposited in the ballot box. And I further find that a blank ballot was given to each and every elector, without either the official stamp or the initials of an election officer thereon; and said elector took said ballot, and the same was marked by said elector and returned by him to the election officers, when, in the presence of the elector, the inspector of said election placed upon said ballot the official stamp, furnished for that purpose by the county auditor, in pursuance of law, after which the said ballot was folded and placed within the ballot box, wherein it was kept until, at the time of the counting by the election officers, and at the close of the polls, all of the ballots of said precinct were counted, and returned, in a sealed box, by a special messenger, to the county auditor, in the manner directed by law. I further find, from the evidence and stipulations in this case, that the ballots voted by the electors, in each and every instance, were placed in the said box, and that the said ballots had been safely kept, and were produced into this court as an original exhibit, as evidence of the said recount. I further find that the election officers of Franklin precinct were in close and watchful attendance at the polls and of the ballot box and ballots during the entire election; that no ballots were used except those received from the election judges, or taken under their direction; that the election was held in an orderly manner; that the votes were counted and returned to the county auditor as required by law; and that the votes so returned were the votes actually cast at Franklin precinct at said election." The important question to be determined is, whether the vote cast in this precinct could be counted, the initials of no one of the election officers having been written on any of the ballots. The law provides that there shall be printed on the back of the ballots, with the rubber or other stamp provided for that purpose, the designation "official ballot," the name or number of the election precinct, the name of the county, the date of the election, the name and official designation of the clerk who furnishes the tickets to the judges of election, and that the inspector or one of the judges shall also write his initials thereon. Gen. Stat. §§ 832, 834. The ballots bore the proper stamp, and the fact that it was not placed thereon before they were delivered to the electors, but was done when they were returned to be deposited in the ballot box, was but an irregularity which could not vitiate them in the absence of any fraud. Section 891 is as follows: "In the canvass of the votes, any ballot which is not indorsed, as provided in this chapter, by the official stamp and initials, shall be void, and shall not be counted, and any ballot or parts of a ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice shall be void, and shall not be counted; provided that when a ballot is sufficiently plain to gather therefrom a part of the voter's intention, it shall be the duty of the judges of election to count such part." If the language of this section can be given its full force, all the ballots cast in this precinct were rendered void by the failure of the election officers to comply therewith, in not having one of their number write his initials thereon; and the effect of it would be to disfranchise all voters in that precinct for that election. The Constitution (sec. 1, art. 6) provides that all male persons of the age of twenty-one years or over, possessing certain qualifications specified, "shall be entitled to vote at all elections;" and section 6 reads as follows: "All elections shall be by ballot. The legislature shall provide for such method of voting as will secure to every elector absolute secrecy in preparing and depositing his ballot." Can the legislature enact a law whereby election officers can practically disfranchise all the electors of a precinct, where the electors themselves are not at fault? If so, the constitutional guaranty is of small consequence. Legislation going to promote the honesty of elections is most beneficial in character, and as a means of securing this end the general policy of the law is that the ballot shall be a secret one, that it may not be known for which candidate any particular voter voted, in order that bribery may be prevented. Provision is also made as to the duties of election officers, to the end that a fraudulent canvass of the votes cast may be prevented. There is good ground for recognizing a distinction between the obligations placed upon the individual voter and those matters which relate to the duties of election officers. Great care should be taken to distinguish between those requirements designed to prevent fraud, and which are necessary to the purity of elections, and those which, while designed for the same purpose, are not essential thereto, or we may overreach the salutary effect sought to be obtained from provisions of the character first mentioned, by going so far, in construing as valid and mandatory provisions of the second class, as to open the very door to fraud that was sought to be closed thereby. The individual voter may well be called upon to see that the requirements of the law applying to himself are complied with before casting his ballot; and, if he should wilfully or carelessly violate the same, there would be no hardship or injustice in depriving him of his vote; but if, on the other hand, he should in good faith comply with the law, upon his part, it would be a great hardship were he deprived of his ballot through some fault or mistake of an election officer in failing to comply with a provision of the law over which the voter had no control. It is also a question in which the public has a direct and important interest; for the loss of such vote may have a controlling effect upon a public matter. The constitutional provision aforesaid guarantees the right to vote, and this, of necessity, carries with it the right to have the vote counted. Of course, the manner of voting and canvassing votes must be subject to all reasonable legislative requirements. Many cases have been cited by counsel as supporting the positions taken by them, respectively, and many of these involve a consideration of various phases of the law commonly known as the "Australian Ballot Law," in force here, but which is a comparatively new thing in this country. These cases cannot all be harmonized, but the general trend thereof has been to recognize a clear distinction between those things required of the individual voter and those imposed upon election officers. There is a disposition to hold the former valid and mandatory; but, where there has been a substantial compliance with the law on the part of the individual voter, and it is made to appear that there has been in fact an honest expression of the popular will, there is a well-defined tendency to sustain the same, although there may have been a failure to comply with some of the specific provisions of the law upon the part of the election officers, or some of them. Language may have been employed in some of the cases in conflict with this position; but, when such cases are examined with reference to the specific facts decided, it will appear that this distinction has been adhered to, and it may truly be said to be the one great underlying principle of all the cases. In case of a violation of the law on the part of an election officer, punishment may be provided therefor, and in this way the law can be rendered effectual without going to the extent of depriving the voter of his right to have his vote counted, in consequence of such violation. In this connection, it may be well to note that, while there is a punishment provided for depositing an unstamped ballot in the ballot box by an election officer, there is none provided for failing to write his initials thereon. Section 289, Gen. Stat., is as follows: "No inspector or judge of election shall deposit in any ballot box any ballot upon which the official stamp as hereinbefore provided for does not appear. Every person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." He can deposit a ballot properly stamped, but without the initials, without incurring any penal liability. This may be an omission due to inadvertence upon the part of the lawmakers; but it is the law, nevertheless; and, if a ballot so deposited cannot be counted, a door is open whereby great frauds may be committed with impunity, the voters of an entire precinct, as in this case, practically disfranchised, and the popular will nullified. It appears, from the facts found, that the vote of this precinct was honestly and fairly cast and counted, and that there was nothing upon the face of the ballots to indicate how any particular voter voted, and that the objections raised thereto apply to all the ballots cast for each of the candidates. The failure to comply with the law appears to have been due to ignorance of its provisions on the part of the election officers. That the prohibition aforesaid against the counting of these votes, under the above circumstances, is an unreasonable one, and in conflict with the right guaranteed by the constitution, seems to us a clear proposition. Were we authorized to hold otherwise, such a holding would be subversive of the best interests of society, and might result in great peril to our governmental structure. Such a holding is not necessary to preserve the purity of elections; for provision can be made for an investigation of charges of actual fraud upon the part of electors and election officers. It would be an interminable task to refer to each of the cases cited in detail, and we content ourselves with giving our conclusions drawn from all of them. No decision cited has gone to the extent that we are asked to go by the appellant in this case; and, to accord with the general holdings of the courts, as we understand them, in the light of what has actually been decided in the cases, we are compelled to hold that the provision aforesaid against counting ballots where no initials are placed thereon cannot be sustained, and the decision of that question sets this controversy at rest. The finding in question by the lower court supports the conclusions of law based thereon, and the judgment rendered. The fact that the election officers failed to have booths erected which complied with the law, found in the eighth finding, was also but an irregularity which would not vitiate the election. None of the other questions raised by appellant, in the present aspect of the case, are material to this controversy, as they relate to defects in particular votes cast in the various precincts and included in the other findings; and, in case any of these votes were improperly counted, the court in each instance found a greater number were counted for the appellant than for the respondent, and the findings must be accepted as a whole. It follows that the judgment must be affirmed.

Hoyt, Ch. J., and Anders, Dunbar, and Gordon, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

George A. TEBBE, Reprt.,

v.

Clarence S. SMITH, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The burden of proof to show that, notwithstanding a substantial compliance with the California statutes as to the care of ballots, they have been tampered with, or that they have been exposed under such circumstances that a violation of them might have taken place, resting upon and cases cited in footnotes thereto; also Ellis v. May (Mich.) 25; L. R. A. 326; Taylor v. Bleakley (Kan.) 23 L. R. A. 662.

NOTE.—For distinguishing marks on ballots, see Butledge v. Crawford (Cal.) 12 L. R. A. 761, and note; also Sego v. Stoddard (Ind.) 23 L. R. A. 468, 29 L. R. A.

one objecting to their admission as evidence, is not discharged by the simple showing that it was possible for a person to have molested them.

2. A cross in the marginal space at the right of the name of a candidate and outside of the square is not a distinguishing mark, within Pol. Code, § 1215, as the code does not expressly require the mark to be placed within such square, although it requires the clerk in printing the ticket to place upon it the words, "To vote for a person, stamp a cross (X) in the square at the right of the name."
3. An initial in a space left in a ballot for the insertion of the name of a candidate, although made with the intention of writing a name, which was abandoned, is a distinguishing mark making the ballot void.
4. The opening of the polls three hours later than the time prescribed by statute, and the removal of the ballot box from the polls in violation of Pol. Code, §§ 1160, 1162, invalidate the election in the precinct, although the misconduct is prompted merely by ignorance and lack of appreciation by the election officers of the responsibility of their positions.
5. The ballots cast at a precinct will be excluded from the count where all of them bear in the same writing the name of a person followed by the name of a party, and there was but one person in the precinct lawfully assisted in the marking of his ballot, as provided by Pol. Code, § 1208, where it does not appear who did the writing or whether it was upon the tickets when they were put into the voters' hands, under Pol. Code, § 1211, providing that any ballot which is not made as provided in the act shall be void, and shall not be counted.

(July 12, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Siskiyou County in favor of plaintiff in an action to contest defendant's election to the office of county superintendent of schools. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Warren & Taylor and L. F. Coburn, for appellant:

It was incumbent upon contestant to show by positive proof, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the ballots were the identical ballots cast; that they had been safely kept by their proper custodian; that they had not been exposed to the public, nor within the reach of unauthorized persons, and that there had been no opportunity given for tampering with them, before the ballots can be received as evidence.

McCrary, Elections, 291-298; Coglan v. Beard, 67 Cal. 308; Ex parte Brown, 97 Cal. 69; Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141; Fenton v. Scott, 17 Or. 189; Hartman v. Young, 17 Or. 150, 2 L. R. A. 596; Albert v. Twohig, 85 Neb. 563; Powell v. Holman, 50 Ark. 85.

The provisions as to marking are mandatory, and ballots are void unless the X mark is in the margin.

Bechtel v. Albin, 184 Ind. 198; Kirk v. Rhonda, 46 Cal. 398; Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 61; Re East Coventry Election, 8 Pa. Dist. Rep. 877; Loucks' Case, Id. 127; Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 22 L. R. A. 468.

The manner in which the elector must express his intention is prescribed in the act, and 29 L. R. A.

to depart from the prescriptions of the act would be to repeal it.

Kearns v. Edwards (N. J.) 28 Atl. Rep. 723; Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661.

The ballots were marked in violation of law. State v. Walsh, 63 Conn. 200, 17 L. R. A. 864; Kearns v. Edwards (N. J.) 28 Atl. Rep. 723; Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 61; Spurgin v. Thompson, 87 Neb. 39.

Section 1162, Pol. Code, provides that the ballot box must not be removed from the polling place or presence of the bystanders until all the ballots are counted.

These provisions of the statute are mandatory.

People v. Seale, 52 Cal. 71; Russell v. McDowell, 88 Cal. 70.

The court erred in denying contestant's motion to reject all the ballots of Cecilville precinct.

State v. Walsh, supra; Atty-Gen. v. May, 96 Mich. 588, 25 L. R. A. 325; Atty-Gen. v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439; People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L. R. A. 334. Messrs. Gillis & Tapscott and James F. Farragher, for respondent:

Provisions of the statute for the safe keeping of ballots are treated by the courts as directory, and when it is shown that the ballots have been securely kept and preserved inviolate, they will not be excluded as evidence on account of some omission to comply with their directions.

Hartman v. Young, 17 Or. 150, 2 L. R. A. 596; People v. Livingston, 79 N. Y. 266; O'Gorman v. Richter, 31 Minn. 26; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 435; People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 183; Dorey v. Lynn, 31 Kan. 758; Copias v. Beard, 67 Cal. 306; Blankinship v. Israel, 182 Ill. 514; McCrary, Elections, 291-298; People v. Burden, 45 Cal. 241.

The court did not err in counting for contestant the nine ballots on which the cross (X) was stamped on the right-hand side of his name, about one inch inside the dotted line of the margin and between said line and contestant's name.

Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 16 L. R. A. 754; Re Vote Marks, 17 R. I. 812; Re Sharon Hill Election, 3 Lack. Jur. 286; Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661; Spurgin v. Thompson, 87 Neb. 39; State v. Russell, 84 Neb. 116, 15 L. R. A. 740; Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 22 L. R. A. 468; Parvin v. Wimberg, 180 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775; Inglis v. Shepherd, 67 Cal. 469; Bechtel v. Albin, 184 Ind. 198.

The letter "J" in the blank space for jurist of the peace, in the absence of all suspicious circumstances, did not constitute a distinguishing mark.

Rutledge v. Crawford, 91 Cal. 536, 13 L. R. A. 761; Coffey v. Lyman, 92 Cal. 137; Coffey v. Edmonds, 58 Cal. 521; Wyman v. Lemon, 51 Cal. 278; People v. Dutchess County Supra, 135 N. Y. 522; Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141; State v. Saxon, 30 Fla. 668, 18 L. R. A. 721; Bowers v. Smith, supra.

The slight irregularity on the part of the election officers in Lake election precinct is no ground for disfranchising the voter of that precinct.

Sprague v. Norway, 81 Cal. 174; Minor v. Kidder, 43 Cal. 287; Preston v. Culbertson, 88

Cal. 209; Coffey v. Edmonds, Id. 531; People v. Seals, 53 Cal. 71; Russell v. McDowell, 83 Cal. 70; People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 468; Oleand v. Porter, 74 Ill. 76, 24 Am. Rep. 278; Platt v. People, 29 Ill. 54; Du Page County Suprs. v. People, 65 Ill. 860; My v. Booth, 19 Ohio St. 25; Soper v. Sibley County, 46 Minn. 274; Farrington v. Turner, 58 Mich. 27, 51 Am. Rep. 88; Whitpley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 360; DeBerry v. Nicholson, 102 N. C. 465; McCrory, Elections, § 138; Finlay v. Walls, 4 Cong. Elect. Cas. 378.

The Oedlville ballots were regular and should have been counted.

Bragdon v. Navarre, 102 Mich. 259; Lindstrom v. Manistee County Canvassers, 94 Mich. 467, 19 L. R. A. 171; Allen v. Glynn, 17 Colo. 538, 15 L. R. A. 748; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 16 L. R. A. 754; Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 325; Atty-Gen. v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 489; People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L. R. A. 624.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from the judgment, taken within sixty days after its rendition. The evidence is brought up for review by bill of exceptions. By the official canvass of the supervisors, Smith was declared elected over Tebbe to the office of county superintendent of schools of Stiklyou county at the last general election, by a plurality of one vote. Tebbe then instituted this contest. The result of the judicial count was to increase contestant's total vote by three, no change being made in the number of votes accredited to contestee, and accordingly the judgment of the court declared contestant to be duly elected.

1. The first point urged is that the court erred in overruling contestee's objection to receiving the ballots in evidence. The evidence showed that the ballots and returns reached the county clerk through the proper channels. The sealing wax on some of the packages was broken when they were received from the express office. Other seals were broken in handling. The packages were placed on top of a large case in the clerk's office, and there remained, in the condition in which they had arrived, until the completion of the canvass by the supervisors, when they were put into three gunny sacks, each sack securely bound and sealed, and placed under the clerk's desk, where they remained until produced in court. Upon being opened, they were found to be in the same condition as when they were sealed by the clerk. There had been no opportunity for any one to tamper with the ballots, and in fact they had not been disturbed. They were left alone only when the office was closed and locked. During office hours they were never left alone, excepting upon one occasion, when the deputy stepped out for "a minute and a half," leaving one Robertson in the office. At that time the ballots were in the gunny sacks, and neither the sacks nor the ballots had been disturbed. Tebbe, the contestant, was a deputy clerk during this time; but he was never left alone in the office, and was given no key to it. We cannot see anything suspicious in this last circumstance. Upon the contrary, it reflects credit upon the prudence of the clerk, and the fair dealing of all concerned. Knowing of the impending contest, they took all reasonable precautions to avoid exposing either the ballots, or contestant's connection with them, to any suspicion. The principles of law and the rules of evidence governing cases such as this have been so often declared that a review of the many authorities is unnecessary. Those curious or interested in pursuing the subject will find in the reporter's notes, preceding, many instructive cases collated by the industry of counsel. Suffice it here to say that while the ballots are the best evidence of the manner in which the electors have voted, being silent witnesses, which can neither err nor lie, they are the best evidence only when their integrity can be satisfactorily established. One who relies, therefore, upon overcoming the prima facie correctness of the official canvass by a resort to the ballots, must first show that the ballots, as presented to the court, are intact and genuine. Where a mode of preservation is enjoined by the statute, proof must be made of a substantial compliance with the requirements of that mode. But such requirements are construed as directory, merely, the object looked to being the preservation inviolate of the ballots. If this is established, it would be manifestly unjust to reject them merely because the precise mode of reaching it had not been followed. So, too, when a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute has been shown, the burden of proof shifts to the contestee, of establishing that, notwithstanding this compliance, the ballots have in fact been tampered with, or that they have been exposed under such circumstances that a violation of them might have taken place. But this proof is not made by a naked showing that it was possible for one to have molested them. The law cannot guard against a mere possibility, and no judgment of any of its courts is ever rendered upon one. When all this has been said, it remains to be added that the question is one of fact, to be determined in the first instance by the jury or trial judge; and, while the ballots should be admitted only after clear and satisfactory evidence of their integrity, yet, when they have been admitted this court will not disturb the ruling unless we, in turn, are as well satisfied that the evidence does not warrant it. In this case we do not think the ruling was erroneous.

2. Nine ballots were received and counted by the court for contestant, which were marked with a cross, not in the square at the right of his name, but in the marginal space to the right, thus:

120	George A. Tebbe....X....Democrat
-----	----------------------------------

It is urged against the ruling that the ballots were not marked as required by statute, and that the marks so placed served as distinguishing marks, and rendered the ballot void. Pol. Code, §§ 1211, 1215. The provisions as to the marking of ballots are, in their nature, mandatory. Atty-Gen. v. Mc-

Quads, 94 Mich. 439; People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L. R. A. 624; Taylor v. Bleakley (Kan.) 28 L. R. A. 688; Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 825; Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661; Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57. But as is said in Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 16 L. R. A. 754, "all statutes tending to limit the citizen in his exercise of the right of suffrage should be liberally construed in his favor." If we should find a provision in our statutes requiring the voter to mark the cross in the square to the right of the candidate's name, we would feel constrained to adopt the rule and reasoning of the supreme court of Indiana, where such a provision exists, construing which, the court said: "If we hold this statute to be directory only, and not mandatory, we are left without a fixed rule by which the officers of election are to be guided in counting the ballots." Parvin v. Winberg, 130 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775. But our statutes contain no such mandatory provision. So far as they are pertinent to this discussion, the provisions are that "there shall be a margin on the right hand side of the names, at least one half of an inch wide, so that the voter may clearly indicate, in the way hereafter to be pointed out, the candidate and candidates for whom he wishes to cast his ballot." The clerk is, in printing the ticket, to place upon it the following: "To vote for a person, stamp a cross (X) in the square at the right of the name." Pol. Code, § 1197. The mandatory provisions as to voters are found in sections 1205 and 1215 of the same Code: "He shall prepare his ballot by marking a cross after the name of the person or persons for whom he intends to vote . . . and, in case of a constitutional amendment or other question submitted to the vote of the people, by marking in the appropriate margin a cross (X) against the answer he desires to give." Pol. Code, § 1205. "No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be afterwards identified as the one voted by him." Id. § 1215. It will be noted that these sections make no mention of the square, and that there is not even an express direction to the clerk to place a square opposite the names of the candidates. The voter is only commanded to place the cross in the marginal space to the right of the candidate's name, and when he has done this he has complied with the mandatory provisions of the law. True, the statute contemplates, at least inferentially, the making of a square, and that the square is the proper place for the marking of the cross; but it has not made the doing of this a prerequisite to the casting of a legal ballot. The intention of the voter is as plainly indicated by the one marking as by the other, and, as was said by the supreme court of Rhode Island in construing a similar law: "Our opinion is that a cross placed in the margin of the ballot on the right of the names of the candidates, opposite a candidate's name, should be counted as a vote for the candidate opposite whose name it is placed, whether the margin have any square in it, or not, and, if there be a square in it, even though the cross is without, or partly without, the square. All that chapter 731 [Laws 1839] requires, to make the cross effective as a vote, is that it shall be inscribed in the right-hand margin, opposite the name of the person intended to be voted for." Re Vote Marks, 17 R. I. 812. As to the last contention upon this point, that the marks served to distinguish the ballots, it need but be suggested that it would not require much ingenuity or intelligence to place the cross, even within the square, in such a manner as would enable the ballot to be distinguished. When a legal mark is placed upon the ballot in a legal place, the ballot cannot be rejected because the mark, as placed, may serve some ulterior purpose. Section 1215 of the Political Code, in forbidding marks, does not include the cross legally placed. The ballots were, therefore, properly received.

3. The ballot from Sawyer's Bar precinct (Exhibit F) should have been rejected. It bore upon it the letter "J," written in pencil in the blank space left for the insertion of the name for justice of the peace. Doubtless, it may have been the intention of the voter to write a name, and he may have abandoned his intent after setting down the initial letter; but doubtless, also, the mark could serve as a distinguishing mark, and, being one having no lawful right upon the ballot, it renders it void. The case differs from Ruledge v. Crawford, 91 Cal. 526, 13 L. R. A. 761, where this court held that the impression (of printer's ink) upon the back of the ballot was as attributable to accident as design. Here the writing of the letter was an affirmative act of the voter. He had his remedy, having improperly marked his ballot, by calling for the issuance to him of a fresh ticket. Pol. Code, § 1207.

4. The account of the election at Lake precinct is a breeze from Arcady. The polls should have opened at 6:31 A. M. Smith received thirteen votes in this precinct; Tebbe, twenty. William Otey, called for contestant, testified: "On November 6th, last, I was at the polls of Lake election precinct, on the Fairchild ranch. . . . I got there between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning. Served on the election board in my father's place. When I got there, Fairchild, Henry Seale, and the hands working on the ranch were there. I do not remember any one else. The polls were opened, I should judge, some time near 10 o'clock. We took an adjournment when we went to dinner. Took the ballot box with us. Fairchild, the old gentleman, carried it. He was one of the election officers. . . . The other materials—ballots and everything—we left in the poll room when we went to dinner. We left the ballot box on the table while eating dinner,—on same table. That ballot box did not pass into the hands of other persons. I think there were bystanders around the polls at the time we went to dinner. . . . The house is about 100 yards from the polling place. Between the house and schoolhouse there were some men. Some had voted, and some were working on the ranch. I think some other people took dinner with the board. When we were through, Fairchild carried the box back. No person was deprived of voting because the polls were not opened earlier. I know that no one came there without voting that was entitled to vote." The law provides that the polls must open at sunrise, and be kept open until 5 P. M., and that the ballot box must not be removed from the polling place, or presence of the bystanders. Pol. Code, §§ 1160, 1162. It is the rule that mandatory provisions for the holding of an election must be followed, or the failure will vitiate it, while a departure from the terms of a directory provision will not render it void in the absence of a further showing that the result of the election has been changed, or the rights of the voters injuriously affected, thereby. Code Civ. Proc. § 1112; Russell v. McDowell, 88 Cal. 70. But the rule as to directory provisions applies only to minor and unsubstantial departures therefrom. There may be such radical omissions and failures to comply with the essential terms of a directory provision as will lead to the conclusive presumption that the injury must have followed. A substantial compliance with the terms of directory provisions is, after all, required. And such a substantial compliance is not had by strictly following some provisions, while essentially failing to observe others. There must be a reasonable observance of all the prescribed conditions. It is the duty of the courts so far to adhere to the substantial requirements of the law in regard to elections as to preserve them from abuses subversive of the rights of the electors. And, under this view, the question becomes a broader one than can be disposed of by answering that in the individual case no harm resulted. Thus, in Knowles v. Yeates, 81 Cal. 82, the contention of appellants was that, admitting that there was no fraud, and that the votes were cast by qualified electors, still the fact that in certain precincts the polls were opened, without reason, at long distances from the appointed places, was enough in itself to call for the rejection of the votes; and this court so held. Likewise, in the case of People v. Seale, 52 Cal. 71, where no question of fraud or injury was involved, but where, at an election called for voting a school tax, the polls were opened at 1 o'clock P. M., and closed at 6, instead of being opened at one hour after sunrise and kept open until sunset, as the law then required, this court, without hesitation, declared the election invalid. In this case we are quite willing to believe that the misconduct of the officers of Lake precinct was prompted by nothing worse than ignorance, and lack of appreciation of the responsibilities of their positions, and we may say, further,—for such is the evidence,—that no harm is shown to have resulted from their conduct; but, looking to the purity of elections and integrity of the ballot box, we are constrained to hold that conduct like this amounts, in itself, to such a failure to observe the substantial requirements of the law as must invalidate the election. And, while reluctant so to hold in this instance, we are confirmed in the opinion by consideration of the fact that any other interpretation would add grave perils to the safe conduct of our elections, which are already harassed by dangers enough. The votes of Lake precinct should, therefore, have been rejected.

5. Upon all the ballots cast in Cecilville precinct there appeared the following, written in the blank space under the office of justice of the peace: "G. G. Brown—Republican." The evidence discloses that this writing was all done by the same person, and, further, that there was but one person in the precinct lawfully assisted in the marking of his ballot, under the provisions of the code. Pol. Code, § 1208. The record, unfortunately, does not disclose who did the writing, nor whether it was upon the tickets when they were put into the voters' hands. Left, then, to the presumption of the performance of duty by public officers, it must be held that the officers put legal tickets into the hands of the electors, and that the writing was afterwards put upon them. But an elector unable to write can, under our present laws, have a name inscribed upon his ballot in only one legal way, and that is by pursuing the method prescribed by section 1208 of the Political Code. This requirement is clearly mandatory, since it is further declared that "any ballot which is not made as provided in this act shall be void, and shall not be counted." Pol. Code, § 1211. In Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 325, the supreme court of Michigan, construing a similar statute, held that inspectors of election had no right to assist in the marking of ballots, except in the manner provided by law, and that ballots marked in any other than the prescribed manner were void. In the present state of the evidence, only the ballot of the voter lawfully assisted should be counted. It must be held, therefore, that the other ballots of Cecilville precinct should not have been counted. What is here said is addressed to the evidence as it appears in the record. It may be that, upon a new trial, additional evidence will remove the objections now found.

The other points do not require consideration. They are either covered by what has been said, or do not involve error. But for the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: Temple, J.; Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

McFarland, J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment, and also in the opinion of Mr. Justice Henshaw, except as to the Cecilville precinct. It will be observed that there is no evidence tending to show when "G. G. Brown—Republican," was written on the ballots. If there be a distinguishing mark on a ballot when it is voted, the ballot should not be counted; but, if the mark be placed on the ballot after it had been properly voted, then, at the trial of a contest, it should be counted. Now, upon the trial in court of an election contest, if a marked ballot be found, and there is no evidence as to the time of the marking, must the court presume that it was marked before it was voted? Such a rule would afford an evil-disposed person, who could get temporary access to the ballots after they had been counted, an easy and safe method of changing the result in a close contest by simply marking—and thus invalidating—a few ballots in which the votes were for the prevailing party. Of course, fraud should be carefully guarded against; but it seems to me that the rule contended for would be much like closing a wicket and leaving open a barn door. I do not see that there are any presumptions upon which the problem can be solved. If we presume that the ticket was not marked when the election officers gave it to the voter, we must also presume that it was not marked when those officers counted it; and, if we are also to presume that the ballots were afterwards so securely kept that no one could get access to them, it is evident that all the presumptions, taken together, afford no aid in the solution of the question. In the case at bar it is not contended that there was any actual fraud committed, even in the matter of voting for justice of the peace; and, before throwing out votes honestly cast for superintendent of schools, I am inclined to think that there should have been some evidence tending to show that the marking of the votes for justice of the peace was done before the ballots were voted. And it is quite probable that such evidence could readily have been obtained. The returns should show whether or not the said ballots were counted for Brown, and the election officers ought to be able to throw some light upon the question whether the ballots were marked when they were examined during the process of counting.

I concur: Garoutte, J.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

William FULTON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Rebecca FULTON.

(31 Ohio St. —.)

"Where" a divorce a vinculo has been granted to a husband on account of the aggression of the wife, and the minor children of the parties assigned to the custody of the divorced wife, without an order respecting their maintenance, and while so in her custody she has furnished to them necessaries, she cannot recover against her former husband, their father, for her expenditures in this behalf, in the absence of proof of a promise by him to pay for such necessaries, or of a request that they should be furnished to the children.

(February 5, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cuyahoga County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover compensation for the support of defendant's children. Reversed.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

The plaintiff and defendant were at one time husband and wife, but had been divorced on the application of the husband on account of the extreme cruelty of the wife. In these proceedings the wife was allowed $1,500 alimony, and awarded the custody of two small children, the fruit of the marriage, for the maintenance of whom the decree made no provision; the two children continued to reside with their mother, and were maintained by her, from the time the divorce was granted until the commencement of this action in the court of common pleas, a period of about eighteen months. By this action she sought to recover against the father the sum of $390, for boarding the two children seventy-eight weeks, at the rate of $2.50 per child per week, and the sum of $56.20 for clothing and medical attendance, etc., furnished to them by her and for which she had paid. The father answered that he had been at all times willing, able, and ready to support the children himself at home, in his own family, but was denied the right by the order of the court in the proceedings for a divorce made necessary by the aggression of the defendant in error; and denies that she cared for and supported the children at his request, but, instead, avers that she did so against objection and protest. She recovered, in the court of common pleas, a judgment for the value that the jury set upon the support she had given to the children, which judgment was affirmed by the circuit court. Whereupon proceedings were begun in this court to reverse both judgments.

Headnote by the Court.

NOTE.—For the general doctrine as to the obligation of a parent to support a child, see Porter v. Powell (Iowa) 7 L. R. A. 175, and note. 39 L. R. A.

Mr. W. A. Babcock, with Mr. W. B. Higby, for plaintiff in error:

It is only when a man abandons his child and casts it upon the public that he becomes liable for its support.

Fitler v. Fitler, 83 Pa. 57.

After divorce the relations of the husband and wife are as that of third persons, or rather of single persons.

Burritt v. Burritt, 29 Barb. 124; Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 460; Stanton v. Willson, 8 Day, 87, 8 Am. Dec. 255.

The father being ready, willing, and able to support his minor children, and there being no decree of any court of competent jurisdiction deciding that he was an improper person to sustain such relation, and having by the consent of the mother the custody of the children in his own home, and they being removed against his protest, he is no longer liable for their maintenance and support, even though furnished by the mother or his former wife.

Finch v. Finch, 22 Conn. 411; Johnson v. Orsted, 74 Mich. 457; Husband v. Husband, 67

Ind. 533, 33 Am. Rep. 107; Burritt v. Burritt, supra; Harris v. Harris, 5 Kan. 46; Hancock v. Merrick, 10 Cuah. 41; Fidler v. Fidler, 33 Pa. 50; Baldwin v. Foster, 188 Mass. 449; Brow v. Brightman, 136 Mass. 187.

If the amount paid and awarded by the court was, in the estimation of said court, sufficient for the care of the children, then this plaintiff in error was absolved from all future obligation.

Harris v. Harris, 5 Kan. 47; Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 401, 552, 556.

Mr. L. A. Willson, for defendant in error:

While the parties were divorced for the aggressions of the defendant in error, it is not true that the minor children were separated from the plaintiff and given to the defendant on account of defendant's aggressions.

Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 452.

The father can never be divorced from his children.

Upon the establishment of new relations, a promise may be implied, on the part of the father, to pay the mother, as well as a third person, who has supplied the necessary wants of his infant child.

Stanton v. Willson, 3 Day, 87, 3 Am. Dec. 255; Finch v. Finch, 23 Conn. 421.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error was divorced from the plaintiff in error in a suit brought by him for her aggression. She was awarded $1,500 for alimony, and two small children, the fruit of the marriage, were, by the decree, placed in her custody, but no order was made respecting their maintenance.

She, living apart from the defendant in error, supported the two children, and the question to be determined is, whether she can maintain an action against him for board, clothing, etc., which she has furnished to them, in the absence of any proof of a request by him that the support should be provided or of a promise to pay for it when provided. Upon this subject the court of common pleas charged the jury as follows:

"It is conceded that at the September term, 1888, the defendant obtained a decree of divorce from the plaintiff for cruelty to him; that the court gave her alimony in the sum of $1,500 and the custody of the children till its further order, and that she has ever since had the children and boarded and clothed them. This casts upon the defendant the legal obligation to pay her what that board and clothing is reasonably worth.

"It makes no difference whether it was done with the defendant's consent or not, or at his instance and request. Plaintiff's right to recover is not founded in the defendant's promise to pay, either expressed or implied, but upon his legal duty to provide for his children; and the order of the court, giving her the custody of the children and the caring for them thereafter by the plaintiff, makes the defendant liable to pay the plaintiff what that board and clothing is fairly and reasonably worth."

To this portion of the charge the defendant excepted, and the question in issue between the parties was thus brought into the record. 29 L. R. A.

The defendant in error contends that this question is settled in her favor by the case of Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 452. In that case this court held that "the obligation of the father to provide reasonably for the support of a minor child, until the latter is in a condition to provide for his own support, is not impaired by a decree which divorces the wife a vinculo, on account of the husband's misconduct, gives to her the custody, care, and nurture of the child, and allows her a sum of money as alimony, but with no provision for the child's support." In that case, as in the one under consideration, no question arose respecting the rights of the child to reasonable support. In both instances the necessities had already been furnished by the divorced mother, and she was seeking reimbursement from the father. The contention, therefore, related solely to the relative duties of the father and mother of minor children where the parents are living separate in consequence of a divorce a vinculo had between them, and the children had been awarded to the custody of the mother.

Where separation and divorce result from the misconduct of the husband, the Pretzinger Case, supra, asserts the primary liability of the father, in a contest between him and the mother, and in such case the right of the mother to recover against the father for such reasonable necessities as she has furnished, is established. That case is grounded in the principle that as the primary liability rests upon the father he cannot, by his own misconduct, shift it to the mother. Dickman, J., saying, in reference to the natural duty resting on parents to support their children, that "this natural duty is not to be evaded by the husband's so conducting himself as to render it necessary to dissolve the bonds of matrimony. . . . It is not the policy of the law to deprive children of their rights on account of the dissensions of their parents, . . . or to enable the father to convert his own misconduct into a shield against parental liability." Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 458. Again, "there is evidently no satisfactory reason for changing the rule of liability, when, through ill-treatment, or other breach of marital obligation, the husband renders it necessary for a court of justice to divorce the wife, and commit to her the custody of her minor children." Id. 459.

In the case before the court, however, the wife was the aggressor, and it is this feature by which it is to be distinguished from the Pretzinger Case, supra, for, in that case the husband was in fault. It does not necessarily follow that, because a father cannot by his own misconduct shift from himself to the mother his primary liability to support his minor children, the mother cannot, by her misconduct, produce that result, at least to the extent of denying to her a right to recover against him for expenses she has incurred for necessities for their support, in the absence of a request or promise by him in the premises.

The contest is between the parents. By the law of nature, the responsibility of each for the birth of children is equal; the moral obligation of nurture, protection, and reasonable support bears upon each according to his or her capacity to afford it. Schouler, in referring to this obligation, says: "This is said to rest upon a principle of common law; but perhaps it may be more reasonably referred to the implied obligations which parents assume in entering into wedlock and bringing children into the world." Schouler, Dom. Rel. § —.

The common law, in an earlier stage of its development, stripped the wife of her personal property, transferred to the husband the income of her real estate, vested in him the right to her earnings, denied to her the power of contracting, and merged her legal entity into his; and to compensate her for these disabilities, it absolved her from nearly every legal obligation and duty, including that of maintaining her children. Nor had she any legal control over them or right to their services. Even her widowhood did not restore this control or right, and this harsh doctrine was at one time recognized and applied by courts of deservedly high authority in this country. Thus, as late as 1812, it was held in Com. v. Murray, 4 Binn. 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412, in respect of a widowed mother, that "an infant owes reverence and respect to his mother, but she has no legal authority over him, nor any legal right to his services."

Within the last half century, however, the harsh rules of the common law respecting the property and domestic rights of married women have gradually yielded to more enlightened and humane notions, and consequently they have been greatly modified and ameliorated. The modifications and ameliorations which affect her property rights are chiefly the result of legislation, but those affecting her domestic relations are as much due to those enlightened views, which led to a more humane application of the rules of common law to that relation, as to direct legislative action, and in many instances legislative action enlarging her property and personal rights has gradually led to the imposition of correlative duties, by the application of recognized principles of the common law.

The husband and father, while living with his family as its head, is entitled to the services of his minor children, and is liable for their reasonable support. Rev. Stat. §§ 3108-3110, 3118; Sharp v. Oropsey, 11 Barb. 224.

Where, however, the husband is dead, the modern and better rule is that the mother is the head of the family and entitled to the earnings and obedience of her minor children. Harford County Comrs. v. Hamilton, 60 Md. 340, 45 Am. Rep. 789; State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 24 Md. 84, 87 Am. Dec. 600; Kennedy v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 85 Hun, 186; Natchez, J. & O. R. Co. v. Cook, 63 Miss. 38; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 18 Ind. 366, 74 Am. Dec. 259; Furman v. Van Sise, 56 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441; Matthewson v. Perry, 37 Conn. 435, 9 Am. Rep. 339; Hammond v. Corbett, 50 N. H. 501, 9 Am. Rep. 288; Gray v. Durland, 50 Barb. 100.

And whenever the mother is entitled to the obedience and services of her minor children, it would seem to follow, necessarily, that she should maintain them. Harsh and anomalous, indeed, a rule of law must be that would give the earnings and custody of a minor child to a parent who was under no reciprocal obligation of maintenance. The duty of maintenance by the mother is asserted by Schouler on Domestic Relations, § 293; Mowbry v. Mowbry, 64 Ill. 383. In Dedham v. Natick, 16 Mass. 140, the court says: "The mother, after the death of the father, remains the head of the family. She has the like control over the minor children, as he had when living. She is bound to support them, if of sufficient ability; and they cannot, by law, be separated from her."

The cases, indeed, are rare, where a mother, having the ability, has declined to administer to the wants of her minor child. The law of nature is usually strong enough to secure this, and an appeal to municipal law is therefore seldom necessary. But, if a widowed mother with ample possessions should decline to administer to the necessities of her destitute minor child, a rule of law that would allow this, and suffer her to abandon it to private or public charity, would be a reproach to any system of jurisprudence.

If she is not bound to maintain her child, then she should not be permitted to keep it in subjection to her authority, or receive the wages of its labor. The right to keep her minor children together under her roof, and to control their persons, implies the obligation to feed and clothe them; and the great weight of modern authority, as well as of reason, clothes her with those rights. It may be that the authorities do not speak with equal emphasis upon the question of her duty of support, as they do in reference to her right to the custody and services of her children, but this should be attributed to the want of an occasion, and not to the existence of any rule of law by which she can be vested with the control without the duty of maintaining her minor children.

Where a divorce a vinculo is decreed, the bonds of matrimony are dissolved, and the former husband and wife become as strangers to each other, and the former wife is relieved from all the disabilities and duties incident to coverture. If children were born of the marriage, the paternal relation remains, and the duties pertaining to it continue. The primary obligation of maintaining the children was on the husband and father, the foundation of this superior obligation rests upon the general fact that he is most capable of discharging it. His right, however, is to maintain his children in his own way and at his own fireside, where he can have the comfort of their society and the aid of their services. If, by his own misconduct the family relation is destroyed, and the welfare of the children renders it necessary that they should be placed in the custody of the mother, he has no just ground to complain if he is compelled to maintain them in her home. However, even under these circumstances, if the mother has an ample fortune, and the resources of the father are comparatively limited, justice might require a modification of a rule founded upon the assumption of conditions which, in the particular case, did not exist.

And although the separation and divorce were caused by the misconduct of the mother, it may nevertheless be true that the obligation of the father to reasonably provide for his children will follow them into the custody of the delinquent mother, when circumstances require them to be placed in her custody. If, however, under such circumstances it does so follow them, the reason and limit of this obligation of the father should be found in the necessities of the children. As to them, the natural obligation of protection, nurture, and maintenance, press with equal force upon the parents. By the divorce a vinculo the mother is as completely absolved from the marital relation as she would be by death, and if, in the course of the proceedings which end in an absolute divorce, the minor children are put under her control, by her procurement or in response to her wishes, her direct obligation towards them, so long as she retains them, would seem to be founded upon as substantial considerations as if she were a widow. Their daily wants must be satisfied. Constant supervision may be necessary. Can their divorced mother, who has received them into her custody, abandon them in the one case and not in the other? We think not. By receiving them into her custody she should be held, as to them, to assume the obligations incident to that custody. If under these circumstances, where her own misconduct has destroyed the family relation, and deprived the father of the custody and society of his children, she has in fact maintained her children, she has no claim, legal or moral, to demand reimbursement from the father. She has simply discharged a duty cast upon her by the plainest principles of natural justice, for the reason that the necessity for it arose from her own misconduct.

Judgment reversed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Re ASSIGNED ESTATE OF EDWARDS & WIGGINTON.

GODDARD-PECK GROCERY CO., Respt.,

v.

John J. McCUNE, Appt.

(123 Mo. 436.)

1. The giving of firm paper for individual debts of the partners for money borrowed and contributed by them individually to the firm capital cannot be declared fraudulent merely because the firm was at the time insolvent, or was made so by the act of making the notes.

2. Individual debts of partners may, in the absence of fraud, be converted into firm debts which will share equally with other firm debts in case of dissolution, by an agreement between the partners to that effect and the execution of firm paper for them.

(June 4, 1894.)

NOTE.—Assumption by a partnership of the individual debts of the partners.

- I. The general rule.
- II. The question of insolvency.
- III. The question of fraud.
- IV. Assumption held sufficient.
- V. Insufficient assumption.
- VI. By mortgage of firm property.
- VII. By new firm of debts of old firm.
- VIII. Assumption of debt originally incurred for firm benefit.

The subject of this note is confined to the consideration of the assumption by a firm of the individual debts of one of its members considered purely in the abstract, and does not include that class of cases which determine the question how far, independent of any assumption, a firm is bound by the act or debt of a partner incurred by him individually, either for the firm benefit or not, or debts for which he may have given the firm's note or otherwise attempted to bind the firm, and in which the question of the authority of such partner and of the ratification of his act, as well as the question of notice, form essential elements.

Neither does the note cover that class of cases wherein a surviving or continuing partner has paid or preferred his own individual indebtedness to that of the firm, out of firm assets, inasmuch as such cases cannot strictly be said to come within the doctrine of assumption.

The question as to the rights of partners to deal with the individual debts of a partner, whether such debt was incurred for the firm benefit or not, 29 L. R. A.

In an assignment by the firm for the benefit of its creditors, will also form the subject of a separate note.

I. The general rule.

The general doctrine with respect to the assumption by a partnership of the individual debts of a partner, deductible from the decisions, would seem to be that, although a firm is not liable for the private debts of one of its members, nor is there any liability resting upon the other members in respect to such debts, yet a partnership, so long as it remains in a solvent position and its assets are under its control, and before it is brought within the jurisdiction of the court, may, with the assent of all the partners, rightfully assume the payment of the individual debts of one of its members, and, may either sell, assign, or mortgage such property for that purpose, even though such assumption decreases the firm assets and is a detriment to the firm creditors, if the debts are bona fide, the transaction free from fraud and not made with the intent to defraud, hinder, or delay creditors, is supported by a sufficient consideration, and is for the benefit of the partnership beyond all controversy, since the creditors of the firm have no lien except such as they can work out through the partners, so that if such equity or lien is extinguished their rights are extinguished also, the partner's rights over the partnership property or assets existing as between themselves alone.

The following cases in order of states declare this doctrine: Pierce v. Pass, 1 Port. (Ala.) 232 (1834); Reynolds v. Johnson, 54 Ark. 449 (1891); Embry v. Lewis (Ark.) 18 S. W. Rep. 373 (1892); Sick-

CASE certified by the St. Louis Court of Appeals for the opinion of the Supreme Court in an appeal by claimant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County disallowing a claim filed against the assets of the insolvent firm of Edwards & Wigginton, in the hands of an assignee for creditors. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fagg & Ball, for appellant:

The execution of the note to McCune, and also the note to Calvin Wigginton, on the first of July, 1889, was in each case a "novation," and in the absence of any fraudulent intent stands upon the same footing exactly as if these two debts had been actually paid with money or property belonging to the firm.

Sexton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 878.

Messrs. J. D. Hostetter, E. W. Majes, and Eben Richards, for respondents:

Creditors of an insolvent partnership have an equitable right to, or a quasi lien upon, the assets of the firm as against creditors of the individual partners.

Dunnica v. Olinkecales, 78 Mo. 500; Sexton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 878; Phelps v. McNelly, 66 Mo. 554, 27 Am. Rep. 378; Hundley v. Farrie, 103 Mo. 78, 13 L. R. A. 254.

The making of these firm notes amounted to withdrawing firm property from firm creditors to the use of members of the firm, which can only be done when ample property is left to satisfy firm liabilities.

Goodbar v. Cary, 4 Woods, C. C. 663; Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587; Menagh v.

man v. Abernathy, 14 Colo. 174 (1890); Veal v. The Keely Co., 86 Ga. 180 (1890); Ellison v. Lucas, 87 Ga. 223 (1891); Ladd v. Griswold, 9 Ill. 25, 48 Am. Dec. 446 (1847); Hapgood v. Cornwell, 43 Ill. 64, 95 Am. Dec. 516 (1868); Keith v. Fink, 43 Ill. 273, 276 (1868); Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176 (1892); Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 170, 4 L. R. A. 685 (1889); Dunham v. Hanna, 18 Ind. 270 (1862); Case v. Ellis, 4 Ind. App. 224 (1892); Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 317, 1 L. R. A. 179 (1888); Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514, 517 (1887); Goudy v. Werbe, 117 Ind. 154, 155, 3 L. R. A. 114 (1889); Kietner v. Sindlinger, 83 Ind. 114, 117 (1870); Schaeffer v. Fithian, 17 Ind. 463, 468 (1861); Holland v. Fuller, 13 Ind. 195 (1859); Weyer v. Thornburgh, 15 Ind. 124 (1860); McDonald v. Beach, 2 Blackf. 55, 58 (1827); Frank v. Peters, 9 Ind. 343 (1857); Jewett v. Meech, 101 Ind. 289 (1885); Maquoketa v. Willey, 35 Iowa, 383, 389 (1873); George v. Wamsley, 64 Iowa, 175 (1884); Smith v. Smith, 87 Iowa, 95 (1893); Poole v. Seney, 66 Iowa, 602 (1895); Woodmanle v. Holcomb, 34 Kan. 35, 37 (1895); Jones v. Luak, 2 Met. (Ky.) 366, 361 (1859); Hamilton v. Hodges, 30 La. Ann. 1290 (1878); Coakley v. Well, 47 Md. 277 (1877); Sanderson v. Stockdale, 11 Md. 572, 573 (1857); Heineman v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64 (1884); Hanover Nat. Bank v. Klein, 64 Miss. 141 (1886); Schmidlapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 600, 30 Am. Rep. 530 (1878); Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 378, 374, 375 (1891); Tilford v. Ramsey, 37 Mo. 563, 565 (1866); Noble v. Miley, 20 Mo. App. 380 (1886); Sexton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 878, 361 (1891); National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 30 N. J. Bq. 13, 30 (1890); Menagh v. Whitwell, 53 N. Y. 146, 153, 11 Am. Rep. 653 (1873); Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 46, 49 Am. Dec. 160 (1848); Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587 (1890); Heye v. Bolles, 33 How. Pr. 263, 2 Daly, 231 (1867); Bernheimer v. Rindskopf, 116 N. Y. 423, 438 (1899); Ransom v. Van Deventer, 41 Barb. 307 (1863); Smith v. Howard, 20 How. Pr. 121 (1859); Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571, 573 (1848); O'Neil v. Salmon, 25 How. Pr. 246, 251 (1863); Nordlinger v. Anderson, 123 N. Y. 544, 548 (1890); Van Rossum v. Walker, 11 Barb. 287 (1851); Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 3 Ohio St. 511, 514 (1858); Miller v. Estill, 5 Ohio St. 503, 67 Am. Dec. 305 (1856); Wilcox v. Kellogg, 11 Ohio St. 394 (1842); Siegel v. Ohlsey, 28 Pa. 279, 285, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1857); Donnelly v. Ryan, 41 Pa. 303, 310 (1862); Todd v. Lorah, 75 Pa. 155 (1874); Brooke v. Evans, 5 Watts, 200 (1886); Noble v. McClintock, 3 Watts & S. 132 (1841); Purdy v. Powers, 6 Pa. 491 (1847); Graeff v. Hitchman, 5 Watts, 454 (1886); Galagher v. First Nat. Bank (Pa.), 5 Cent. Rep. 725, 728 (1890); Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417 (1845); Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. L. 55 (1890); Jones' Case, 1 Overt. 455 (1800); Carver Gin & Mach. Co. v. Brannon, 35 Tenn. 712 (1887); Tompkins v. Woodyard, 5 W. Va. 216, 229 (1872); Haben v. Harshaw, 49 Wis. 379 (1890); Re Kahley, 2 Biss. 333, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 373, 379 (1870); Goodbar v. Cary, 16 Fed. Rep. 316, 4 Woods, C. C. 29 L. R. A.

663 (1882); Coffin v. Day, 34 Fed. Rep. 637 (1888); Hulkamp v. Moline Wagon Co., 121 U. S. 310, 30 L. ed. 971 (1887); Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 124, 25 L. ed. 371 (1879); Re Lane, 2 Low. Dec. 533, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 135 (1874); Re Caton, 26 U. C. C. P. 301, 311 (1876); Ez parte Peela, 6 Ves. Jr. 601 (1802).

It would appear that the decisions have gone even further, and although not unanimous, the weight of authority would seem to be that mere insolvency, where no actual fraud intervenes, will not deprive the partners of their legal control over the property and their right to dispose of the same as they may choose, and that, where the separate creditors purchase from the firm in good faith, and the individual indebtedness is a fair price for the property purchased, such purchase cannot of itself be held fraudulent as against the general creditors of the firm. Ellison v. Lucas, 87 Ga. 223 (1891); Woodmanle v. Holcomb, 34 Kan. 35 (1895). And see Bernheimer v. Rindskopf, 116 N. Y. 423, 438 (1899), infra.

The power of partners to dispose of the firm property is unlimited, except as controlled by the statutes against voluntary conveyances in fraud of creditors and the bankrupt laws. Wiggins v. Blackshear (Tex.), 24 S. W. Rep. 918 (1890).

So that such a creditor will take the property discharged of any claim or equity of the partnership creditors. Hapgood v. Cornwell, 43 Ill. 64, 95 Am. Dec. 516 (1868).

This has been held to be so even though the firm may be unable to pay all the partnership debts. Ellison v. Lucas, 87 Ga. 223 (1891); Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 400 (1859).

And though the firm is insolvent at the time it enters into the contract. Bernheimer v. Rindskopf, 116 N. Y. 423, 438 (1899).

If such contract is legal and there is no actual fraud, it is enforceable against the firm, and it cannot therefore be fraudulent if firm property is applied in its payment. Ibid.

But before a firm can be held responsible for the individual debts of a partner there must be proof of the authority, or of the adoption or ratification of such indebtedness. Tompkins v. Woodyard, 5 W. Va. 216, 229 (1872).

There must be assent upon the part of the other partners. Edwards v. Entwisle, 2 Mackey, 43, 6 (1832); Carter v. Beaman, 6 Jones, L. 44 (1858).

Knowledge alone, however, will not be sufficient to bind the other member or members of the firm, especially where the individual creditor is being regularly charged on the books of the firm and there is no assumption thereof upon the books by the individual partner. Todd v. Lorah, 75 Pa. 155 (1874).

The power of disposition over their property inherent in every partnership is as unlimited as that of an individual, and the jus disponendi in the firm

Whitwell, 53 N. Y. 146, 11 Am. Rep. 688; Keith v. Fink, 47 Ill. 272; Fritchett v. Pollock, 62 Ala. 169.

Burgess, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was certified to this court from the St. Louis court of appeals for the reason that one of the judges of that court was of the opinion that the decision filed in that court was in conflict with the decision in the case of Sexton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 878.

The opinion of the court of appeals is reported in 47 Mo. App. 307. The statement of Thompson, J., of said court, is as follows:

"John McCune presented, for allowance against the assigned estate of the partnership firm of Edwards & Wigginton, a promissory note made by said firm on the first day of July, 1889, for $3,000, payable one day after date to his order, and bearing interest from date at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. Calvin Wigginton also presented a note of the same date and tenor, for the sum of $1,926. The assignee allowed both of these notes, and certain other creditors of the firm appealed to the circuit court. The circuit court disallowed the notes, and from its judgment disallowing the note in favor of McCune this appeal is prosecuted. The case was by consent of parties submitted to the court without a jury, and no declarations of law were asked or given.

It appeared in evidence that the partner-all the members co-operating, can only be controlled by the same considerations that impose a liability upon the acts of an individual owner, namely, that it shall not be used for fraudulent purposes. Schmidlapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 600, 30 Am. Rep. 530 (1878).

The honesty of the transaction must be strictly proved; the valuable consideration and the benefit to the partnership must be shown. Keith v. Fink, 47 Ill. 272 (1888).

The individual indebtedness is a sufficient consideration to support the payment, and the creditor becomes vested with the money or property so appropriated to him. Coffin v. Day, 34 Fed. Rep. 687 (1888).

The fact that a creditor surrendered a demand note which he might have enforced at any time, and took in its place, with the consent of all the parties, the note of the firm not due until the end of the year, would, in the absence of a finding that the firm was, at the time of giving the new note, insolvent, or that the change was made for a fraudulent purpose, constitute a good consideration for the note of the firm. Nordlinger v. Anderson, 123 N. Y. 544, 548 (1890); National Bank v. Place, 86 N. Y. 444 (1881).

Money loaned to the partners individually, and by them put in the business as part of the capital, constitutes a valid consideration to support a judgment confessed by them, and therefore a sufficient assumption of the debt, the bona fides of the transaction being a question of fact for the jury. Ross v. Keystone Shoe Co. 18 W. N. C. 565, 568 (1898).

The assumption of the payment of the debt of a partner who had a peculiar experience in the business and who desired to retire upon consideration of his continuing in the firm, is upon a sufficient consideration. George v. Wamsley, 64 Iowa, 175 (1884).

In Turner v. Jaycox, 40 N. Y. 470 (1860), the firm, prior to its assignment, had, upon good consideration, agreed and assumed liability of the debt which originally was not a firm liability, and the court therefore distinguished it from the case of Schiele v. Healy, 10 Daly, 92 (1881), as in the latter case there was no assumption outside of the preference given by the firm assignment.

A bill given by the firm constitutes such a promise, and is an express undertaking on the part of the firm upon sufficient consideration to pay out of the partnership assets, and from such time the debt becomes a partnership one. Siegel v. Oldsey, 23 Pa. 279, 285, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1837).

In the above case, however, the court did not consider the case as one of the application of partnership effects to the private debt of one partner of the firm, but as the honest and fair assumption by the firm of a debt created for its benefit. See this case, infra, head II.

But in Goodenow v. Jones, 75 Ill. 48 (1874), no action lay by the creditors of such partner against the firm, upon an agreement made by the partners inter se, to assume a contract made by one of them prior to the partnership, such creditor not being a party to the agreement, and for the further reason that before such creditor can sue thereon he must show a new consideration and a release of the original debtor.

So the burden is upon the creditor to prove that the firm assumed the responsibility or liability of the partner's debts. Farwell v. St. Paul Trust Co. 45 Minn. 495 (1891); Mauldin v. Branch Bank, 3 Ala. 502 (1841).

The promise of a firm to pay the debt may, however, be proved by parol evidence. Hamilton v. Hodges, 80 La. Ann. 1290 (1878).

Yet, upon an action to subject a firm to the individual debts of a partner, upon the ground that they had been assumed by the firm under written articles of partnership, it is not permissible for a surviving partner to testify to an alleged oral understanding between himself and his deceased partner that the firm's assumption of such debt was limited to a particular demand, the same being plainly in violation of the general principle of law that a written instrument cannot be varied by parol evidence, although the rule does not apply between the parties to the instrument and a stranger, such exception being so only when the latter asserts a right independent of, and not growing out of, the instrument, or when the right asserted does not originate in the relations established by the instrument. Spingarn v. Rosenfeld, 4 Misc. 523 (1893).

The rule that the separate debt of a partner cannot be paid out of the partnership estate until all the debts of the firm are discharged, does not apply until the partners cease to have a legal right to dispose of their property as they please, and is applicable only when the principles of equity are brought to interfere in the distribution of the partnership property among the creditors, such principles operating, not only on the property remaining in the possession of the partners, but embracing all that has been fraudulently disposed of, not extending, however, to such as have been previously transferred in good faith. McDonald v. Beach, 2 Blackf. 55, 58 (1837); Schaeffer v. Fithian, 17 Ind. 463, 468 (1861); Holland v. Fuller, 18 Ind. 195 (1859); Weyer v. Thornburgh, 15 Ind. 124 (1860); Frank v. Peters, 9 Ind. 848 (1837).

As the equity of the firm creditors is a derivative one arising out of the principles of subrogation, entitling them to enforce the equities subsisting between the partners so long only as the right of any of the partners has not been waived. Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 170, 4 L. R. A. 836 (1889).

So the members of a firm may estop themselves, by their conduct, from claiming that an indebtedness to the firm has not been satisfied by payment ship firm of Edwards & Wigginton was founded in March, 1889, and made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors in July, 1890. The business was a retail grocery store. The basis of the business was a stock in trade owned by the appellant, McCune, which McCune sold to Edwards, in 1887, for $2,600. When Edwards took Wigginton in as a partner, in March, 1889, the stock was invoiced at between $3,300 and $3,400. They were to be equal partners, and the arrangement was such that Wigginton purchased a half interest in the stock in trade and business for $1,626, and then each partner put into the business in cash the sum of $300. The indebtedness of Edwards to McCune was originally evidenced by three unsecured promissory notes, maturing respectively in six, twelve, and eighteen months from date. Edwards had borrowed other money of McCune, and had made such payments that, on the first of July, 1889, the indebtedness of Edwards to McCune stood at $2,000. The $1,926 that Wigginton put into the firm, as above stated, was entirely borrowed from his father, Calvin Wigginton. Of this, $900 was in a note, due one day after date and bearing interest at the rate of 1 per cent per annum; $500 was in a like note, and the rest not evidenced by any note. Thus it was that the interest of each partner consisted entirely of borrowed capital; that Edwards still owed this claimant, McCune, $3,000 for his interest in the partnership capital and business, and that Wigginton for his interest therein owed his father $1,926. We of a debt due from one of the members. Noble v. Milley, 20 Mo. App. 360 (1886).

A subsequent expression by a partner that the money ought to be paid, and a suggestion as to the ways and means of raising the money for that purpose, are evidence that the debt of one partner has been assumed by the firm. Nichols v. English, 8 Brewst. (Pa.) 260 (1860).

The assumption of such debts may form the subject of a valid set-off against the firm claim, for, however foreign to the concerns of the partnership the subject of the account may be, if it is established that, by the consent of a partner, it is agreed to be paid out of the effects of the firm, or that the goods in the account sued upon were delivered by the assent of the partner, either express or implied, in either event such an account would be the subject of a set-off. Pierce v. Pass, 1 Port. (Ala.) 222 (1834).

Demands against individual members of a firm may be set off against demands of the firm, if the course of dealing of the firm in receiving such demands in payment is uniform, and so notorious that individuals dealing with them must be supposed to have had reference to it in their transactions with the firm. Everingham v. Ensworth, 7 Wend. 326 (1831).

And if the agreement to set off a debt due to the firm against a debt due from one of the copartners is executed, an action cannot be maintained in the name of the firm for the debt, even if it has been fraudulently discharged by one of the copartners. Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. L. 55 (1890); Williams v. Brimhall, 18 Gray, 462 (1859); Homer v. Wood, 11 Cush. 62 (1853).

It has, however, been held that the individual debt of a partner ought not to be paid out of the property of the firm by the process of set-off. Pierce v. Pass, supra. See also, as to set-off, Churchill v. Bowman, 39 Vt. 518 (1899), infra, head IV.

That the disposition results in the payment of one bona fide debt to the exclusion of another creditor, whose demand is equally meritorious, is of no consequence. Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 317, 327, 1 L. R. A. 179 (1889).

No legal or equitable right of the joint creditors is violated thereby. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511, 518 (1858).

Unless it appears that there is not enough partnership property to satisfy both the firm and individual creditors, copartnership creditors will not be heard to complain of the application of firm assets to the payment of the individual debts of the members of the concern. De Causey v. Bailly, 57 Tex. 665, 669 (1882); Rogers v. Nichols, 20 Tex. 726 (1858); Washburn v. Bank of Belknap Falls, 19 Vt. 278 (1847); Hubbard v. Curtis, 8 Iowa, 1, 74 Am. Dec. 29 L. R. A.

223 (1859); Stout v. Fortner, 7 Iowa, 183 (1858); Griffith v. Buck, 13 Md. 102 (1859).

The power of a firm to so dispose of the property has been held not limited to cases wherein it is shown that their assets for the time being are insufficient to discharge their liabilities. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, supra.

For the reason that the question is merely one of power in the partners to dispose of and appropriate their joint assets. Ibid.

So a note given with the express assent of all the partners, and with the understanding that the loan, although an individual one, is made on the credit of the firm, becomes a partnership debt as effectually as if the money were applied to the purposes of the firm. Tilford v. Ramey, 37 Mo. 563, 565 (1866).

And a note given in renewal thereof will bind the firm, the giving of the new note being but another mode of payment, the time gained thereby being to the advantage of the firm rather than to the private use and benefit of the individual partner. Ibid.

So the exchange by the separate creditor of one partner of some of such partner's notes for notes of the firm more than four months before the firm's bankruptcy will bind the firm creditors when not made in contemplation of bankruptcy. Re Lane, 2 Low. Dec. 333, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 135 (1874).

In Hamilton v. Hodges, 30 La. Ann. 1290 (1873), the note purported to be signed by the firm, and also by one of the members. The executor of the deceased partner contended that the note was signed by the deceased's brother without his knowledge or consent, for an old indebtedness, accruing partly before and partly after the partnership, not inuring to the benefit of the partnership, the contracting of the indebtedness being unauthorized. The court held that ordinarily a partnership could not be held responsible for the individual debts of a partner merely by reason of an agreement between the partner and his creditor, where there was no authority shown, or the agreement was not ratified by the partner, or the partnership was not benefited by the transaction.

The books of the firm containing entries of such a transaction of the partners are evidence against the firm. Perry v. Butt, 14 Ga. 699, 708 (1854).

By such assumption the individual liability of a partner for the firm debts is not increased. BogerEAU v. Gueringer, 14 La. Ann. 433 (1859).

Yet the courts have intimated a dissent from a doctrine which would prove that, when partnership assets are diverted to the payment of the separate debts of an individual partner by a concurrent act of all the partners, the partnership creditors are without remedy in law or in equity, although such doctrine has derived much support from the language of text-writers and in some proceed on the view that what each partner had thus severally borrowed to purchase his interest in the business was an individual, and not a partnership, debt.

"The firm seems to have lost money almost from the start, and McCune, becoming uneasy, requested Edwards to take up the individual notes of Edwards, held by McCune with the note of the firm. At the same time Wigginton, Sr., thought that, if McCune was going to have firm paper for the individual note of Edwards, he, Wigginton, Sr., ought to have firm paper for what was due him from his son, as already stated. It was accordingly arranged between the partners and these individual creditors respectively, that the two creditors should have firm paper; and on the first day of July, 1889, the firm executed its note to McCune in settlement of the individual notes of Edwards, and also its note to Wigginton, Sr., in settlement of the individual debt of Wigginton, Jr., to him.

"The testimony leaves no room to doubt that this was done in contemplation of a possible suspension, and the avowed purpose of it was to put these individual creditors, in the event of a suspension, on an even footing with firm creditors. Edwards testified: 'It was this way: I had a great deal of sickness and had lost on grain I had bought, and McCune insisted on some plan of securing him. He was willing to aid us, tide over our difficulties, if in any way to make himself safe—to take joint note for the firm's note. I spoke to Wigginton, my partner, cases of judges, but is in principle inconsistent with numerous cases. Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sandf. 233, 303, 307 (1850).

The firm must be solvent and have sufficient property remaining to pay partnership debts. Clements v. Jessup, 35 N. J. Eq. 593, 573 (1883). But see Ellison v. Lucas, 37 Ga. 223 (1891).

And a proposition made by a partner trying to collect a firm debt, in the form of an agreement made by his copartner for payment of his individual debt, will not amount to an assumption of such debt or a ratification of such partner's act, unless accepted. Hurt v. Clarke, 55 Ala. 19, 23 Am. Rep. 751 (1876).

If a member of a firm borrows money on his own account and credit is given to him, the fact that the money is afterwards applied to the purposes of the firm will not render the firm liable, neither will a subsequent admission by one of the members, after dissolution, bind the others. National Bank of Commerce v. Meader, 40 Minn. 325 (1889).

Under the Pennsylvania Statute of March 21, 1886 (Pamphlet Laws, 143), 'in the case of a limited partnership, it is unlawful for a general partner to assume the debt created by a special partner for money which he pays into the firm as his contribution, such transaction being without consideration, against public policy, and contrary to the provisions of the statute. Coffin's App. 106 Pa. 280, 286 (1884).

And therefore in such cases judgments and executions issued upon notes so given by the partners will be void. Ibid.

When a firm claim is bona fide settled by payment of the individual debt of one of the partners, it operates as an accord and satisfaction of the claim of the firm, and is in substance the same as though the debtor paid his debt to the firm in money which the individual partner, with the consent of his partners, then drew out on his own account and applied to the payment of his own debt. Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. I. 55 (1890).

The question, whether or not a copartner has given his consent or authority to the application of partnership funds to the payment of the private debts of a partner, is for the jury. Johnson v. Crichton, 55 Md. 108, 118 (1881).

And the contract and the extent of it are a matter exclusively for the consideration of the jury. Noble v. McClinton, 3 Watts & S. 153 (1841).

The fact that other transactions of the same kind have been approved of by the objecting partner, that he knew of the contract and made no objection; that he indicated his approbation by words or actions and failed, within a reasonable time, to make known to the persons interested that the firm were not responsible,—are proper questions to go to the jury on the question of the assent on the part of the partner. Ferguson v. Shepherd, 1 Sneed, 254 (1853). 29 L. R. A.

II. The question of insolvency.

The validity of the transaction depends upon the question of the solvency or insolvency of the firm at the time of the assumption of such debt, no matter whether it be in the ordinary manner by agreement, by provision in a deed of assignment executed by the firm, or by any other means.

As a general rule, if the firm is insolvent the partnership property cannot be taken for the payment of the individual debt of a partner, to the exclusion of the firm creditors. Roop v. Herron, 15 Neb. 73 (1883); Caldwell v. Bloomington Mfg. Co. 17 Neb. 489 (1885); Walsh v. Kelly, 42 Barb. 93, 27 How. Pr. 359 (1854).

Such an appropriation will not relieve the property, while in the hands of the partners themselves, from the equitable priority of the liens of the joint creditors. Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571, 583, 591 (1848); Fuller Electrical Co. v. Lewis, 101 N. Y. 674 (1886).

The rule is that it is a fraud upon the firm creditors for an insolvent firm to apply firm property to the payment of the debts of any individual partner. Bernheimer v. Rindskopf, 116 N. Y. 423, 438 (1889); Goodbar v. Cary, 16 Fed. Rep. 816, 4 Woods, C. C. 668 (1883); Knanth v. Bassett, 34 Barb. 81, 85 (1861); Nordlinger v. Anderson, 123 N. Y. 544, 548 (1890); Saunders v. Reilly, 105 N. Y. 12, 13, 59 Am. Rep. 472 (1887); Ransom v. Van Deventer, 41 Barb. 307 (1863); Hurlbert v. Dean, 2 Keyes, 97 (1885); Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 48, 49 Am. Dec. 160 (1843); Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587 (1880); Schiele v. Healy, 10 Daly, 32, 61 How. Pr. 73 (1881); O'Neil v. Salmon, 25 How. Pr. 245, 253 (1853).

And will avoid the transaction. Re Sauthoff & Olson, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 181, 184 (1877).

A transfer of partnership property by a firm to an individual creditor in payment of an antecedent debt with a knowledge of such design will not enable such creditor to hold the property discharged from the equitable lien of the partnership creditors. Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571, 583, 591 (1848).

For insolvent partners must be considered as holding their joint property for the payment of their joint creditors, and a misappropriation thereof is deemed in fraud of the implied trust. Ibid.

It is in effect a gift from the firm to the partner, a reservation for the benefit of such partner or his creditors to the direct injury of the firm creditors. Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587 (1880).

An insolvent copartner, who is unable to pay the debts which the firm owes, is guilty of a fraud upon the joint creditors, if he authorizes his share of the property of the firm to be applied to the payment of a debt for which neither he nor his property is liable, at law or in equity. Ibid.; Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 48, 49 Am. Dec. 160 (1843); Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. 165, 47 Am. Dec. 305 (1847).

about it. He at the same time owed his father a like amount or very near it. He insisted that he would want to secure his father as well as John McCune; so we mutually agreed to give them the firm's note for the amount of each claim. Both of these notes were given at the same time.' Further on Edwards testified: 'We gave a firm note so that, in case of death or failure, they should share and fare like other creditors.' On the same point the other partner, Wigginton, testifies: 'We saw the business was losing money—saw no prospect of times getting better, owing to competition on each side of us, and we did not care to favor one person and not others. We wanted to treat everybody alike.' When the firm failed some six months later, its liabilities, including these notes, footed up to about $5,600; its assets were inventoried at $3,149.95; but the assignee realized only the sum of $770 from the sale of the entire stock of goods under order of the court at public auction, and had succeeded in collecting only $70 of the $626 due the firm from its customers. Of these liabilities about $1,500 were due to merchants from whom it had bought goods."

1. No principle of law is better settled than that, in the administration of an insolvent partnership estate, the assets of the firm must be applied to the satisfaction of the firm creditors to the exclusion of the creditors of the individual partners. Hundley v. Farris, 108 Mo. 73, 12 L. R. A. 254; First Nat. Bank v. Brenneisen, 97 Mo. 148, and cases cited in each.

It makes no difference whether the sale of the whole of the effects of an insolvent copartnership upon credit, or the application of the partnership effects to the payment of the individual debts of a partner, is accomplished by the creation of a trust or by a direct sale to the purchaser, the effect in both cases being the same, namely to hinder and delay the creditors, that which would be fraudulent in the one form being equally so in the other. Buhl v. Phillips, 2 Daly, 45, 46 (1868).

As a partnership has no greater right to use its property to secure debts not its own, when it is insolvent or when such payment or giving such security will leave it insolvent, or hinder or delay existing creditors, than an individual has of his own separate property. Wiggins v. Blackbear (Tex.) 24 S. W. Rep. 818 (1893); Wilson v. Robertson, supra; Menagh v. Whitwell, 68 N. Y. 148, 11 Am. Rep. 668 (1873).

The equity of the firm creditors cannot be defeated by an attempted conversion of the assets of the firm into the individual assets of one of the partners through a transfer by one partner of his interest therein to the other; in either case they will remain as much the firm creditors' assets, which can be followed and taken in execution by firm creditors until they fall into the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Bulger v. Rosa, 119 N. Y. 459, 465 (1890), affirming 68 Hun, 239 (1890).

But where the debts are fully due by the partners individually, the mere preference of individual debts over partnership debts is not such a fraud upon the latter as equity will relieve against, where the firm is not insolvent, or the act is not done in contemplation of insolvency in order to give an improper preference. National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 12, 30 (1890).

In Snyder v. Lunsford, 9 W. Va. 223, 228 (1876), it was said to be doubtful whether, the partnership being insolvent at the time of the disposition, and each of the partners members of the firm, and such fact being known to the creditor of the individual partner, the disposition of such property made with the consent of all the partners in satisfaction of a debt of one of the partners would be held valid against the partnership creditors.

The purchase by a creditor of the firm and of one individual partner, with the consent of the other partners, bona fide and at a fair price, of property to the amount of such joint and separate indebtedness, is not per se fraudulent as against the firm creditors, even though such purchaser has knowledge of the insolvency of the firm, in the popular sense of the term. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511, 516 (1858).

It has been held, however, that mere insolvency as commonly understood, no fraud in fact intervening, will not deprive the partners of their legal control over the property and their right to sell and dispose of it as to them shall seem just and proper. Ibid.

And this is so long as they have a reasonable expectation of extricating themselves. McKinney v. Rosenband, 23 Fed. Rep. 738 (1886).

And where the separate creditors purchase from the firm in good faith, and the individual indebtedness is a fair price for the property purchased, such purchase cannot, of itself, be held fraudulent as against the general creditors of the firm. Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. L. 55 (1890); Woodmanse v. Holcomb, 34 Kan. 35, 37 (1888).

If it only appears that a partnership is embarrassed, that fact alone will not be sufficient to avoid a conveyance of partnership property made by such firm to secure a particular indebtedness. Day v. Wetherby, 29 Wis. 383 (1873).

Simple insolvency without stoppage of payment, without an assignment or any judicial process, does not work a dissolution of the partnership nor divest the partners of their dominion over the partnership property; and although they may not make a fraudulent disposition of it, they may confess judgments to a bona fide creditor, even though it may have the effect of giving him a preference over other creditors. Siegel v. Chidsey, 23 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124, 127 (1837), in which case the debt assumed was originally that of one partner.

A rule which would hold that the power of the partners over their joint property is to cease whenever it can be shown that the assets for the time being are insufficient to discharge their liabilities, would be productive of inconvenience, injustice, and uncertainty. The true rule is that the power of partners to make such disposition should cease upon the issuing of a commission of insolvency, but not from the mere inability at the time to pay their debts, the simple fact that a man may be insolvent in the particular sense of the word not depriving him of the power of selling his property by a bona fide sale. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511, 516 (1858).

Therefore when an act of bankruptcy has been committed or a commission of insolvency has issued against the firm, the partners by force of the statute are divested of all power in and control over the joint assets, and cannot then make any valid sale or appropriation of the joint property, which must thereafter be marshaled on the ordinary rules in equity, and in such a case an appropriation of the property in payment of the private debts of a partner will be void. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511, 516 (1858).

After an act of bankruptcy partners cannot pledge their effects to the payment of a debt of one of their members. So stated in Siegel v. Chidsey, 23 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1837), although the point was not made in that case.

If an individual creditor of one of the members

The principle we think equally well settled by the more recent decisions of this court, as well as by the weight of judicial authority in other jurisdictions, that the assets of an insolvent firm, before dissolution, may, with the consent of all the partners, be applied to the satisfaction of all the individual debts of the members of the firm, when done in good faith. Seaton v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 880; Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 865, and cases cited in each; Seger's Sons v. Thomas Bros. 107 Mo. 635.

As Phelps v. McNeely, 66 Mo. 555, 37 Am. Rep. 878, is in conflict with the cases last cited, and the great weight of authority, it should not be followed and is overruled. Jones v. Luak, 2 Met. (Ky.) 856; George v.

Wamsley, 64 Iowa, 175; Schaffner v. Fithian, 17 Ind. 463; Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 8 Barb. Ch. 46, 49 Am. Dec. 160; Kennedy v. National Union Bank, 23 Hun, 494; Re Kahley, 2 Biss. 383; Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 593; Trentman v. Swartzell, 85 Ind. 443; Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370; Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 4 L. R. A. 535; Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. I. 55; Anderson v. Norton, 15 Lea, 14, 54 Am. Rep. 400; Huiskamp v. Molins Wagon Co. 121 U. S. 810, 30 L. ed. 971; Coffin v. Day, 34 Fed. Rep. 687.

In the case at bar the firm notes were given in satisfaction of individual debts long prior to the dissolution of the partnership, and that transaction cannot be declared fraudulent at of an insolvent firm, knowing of the insolvency, takes a transfer of firm property in payment of his individual debt, his act is not merely a violation of an equitable right of the firm creditors, but it constitutes a fraud under the statute of Elizabeth, the law regarding it as a voluntary transfer made to hinder, delay, defeat, and defraud firm creditors, and therefore void. Bulger v. Rosa, 119 N. Y. 459, 465 (1890), affirming 58 Hun, 239 (1889); Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587 (1880); Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 144, 11 Am. Rep. 683 (1873), and Ex parte Mayou, 4 DeG. J. & S. 664 (1865).

The right to the priority in such cases as it should be, for the benefit of the partnership creditors, and cannot be impaired by any consideration having reference to the interest of the partners or their individual creditors. Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571, 590, 591 (1848).

The purchase from a partnership firm insolvent at the time, partly paid for by canceling an individual debt of one of the partners, diverts the firm property to the payment of the personal debt of such partner, and is an actual fraud upon the creditors of the firm who have the legal right to demand the appropriations of all the firm property to the payment of the firm debts. Patterson v. Seaton, 70 Iowa, 689, 692 (1893).

So in Cron v. Cron's Estate, 56 Mich. 8 (1885), a mortgage by partners to secure individual debts, the partners becoming insolvent directly afterwards, was held not to make the mortgagee a secured creditor over the partnership creditors.

In Cribb v. Morse, 77 Wis. 322 (1890), money was loaned to a partner, a note being taken as security therefor, and also for other moneys previously owing by the firm, a mortgage on the firm property being also taken as further security, the notes and mortgage being signed by the partners individually. The court held that the mortgagee, knowing of the insolvency of the firm at the time, the money being loaned to the one partner for payment of his individual debt, had no claim as against the firm creditors for the money loaned to such partner for his individual purposes.

In Phillips v. Ames, 5 Allen, 188 (1862), the notes upon which the plaintiffs sought to prove against the joint estate of the partnership were originally the private debt of two of the members of the firm, and were not indorsed in the firm name until after it had become insolvent, its condition being known to the plaintiff and to all the copartners, no debt existing from the firm to the plaintiff as a consideration for such indorsement, and there was no condition except a previous agreement with the plaintiff and by one of the members of the firm that the payment of the notes should be guaranteed by the copartnership. The court held that under these circumstances it was not competent for the members of the firm to bind their assets to the payment of the separate debts of the copartners, the 29 L. R. A., contract of the firm having been made when they were insolvent and when the state of affairs was fully known to the partners, the presumption being that it was made in contemplation of insolvency and of a proceeding by which the assets of the firm passed into the hands of the assignees.

In Ex parte Snowball, Re Douglas, L. R. 7 Ch. 584, 41 L. J. Bankr. 49, 35 L. T. N. S. 864, 20 Week. Rep. 736 (1872), a partner gave a power of attorney authorizing the sale of property including a portion of the partnership property. A mortgage deed was executed later, which, after reciting that the partners were indebted to the mortgagee, conveyed nearly the whole of the partnership assets to him as security for the moneys owing, a bill of sale being given at the same time by one partner, assumedly with the concurrence of the other, over the portion of the partnership property so previously assigned by the one partner subject to incumbrances, the deeds being signed by one partner and by the attorney for the other. Upon the bankruptcy of the partnership, the court held that the mortgage was wholly void as against a trustee in bankruptcy, as the partner knew that the firm was insolvent and attempted to make the partnership property a security for the separate debts of the partners, which was a fraud on the part of the creditors of the partnership, and an act of bankruptcy.

III. The question of fraud.

Whether or not the assumption of an individual debt of a partner, either by way of assignment or otherwise, by the firm is a fraud upon the partnership creditors, would not seem to be unanimously settled. It has been held, however, that whether the transaction is or is not fraudulent is a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each particular case. Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514, 517 (1897).

In some jurisdictions the appropriation of firm property to such a purpose has been held fraudulent, as, for instance, in New York.

The appropriation, by way of assignment, of firm property to pay the individual debts of the partners, is regarded as fraudulent against the firm creditors, inasmuch as the firm does not owe the individual debts. Becker v. Leonard, 49 Hun, 221, 224 (1890); Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587 (1880).

Yet it has been stated in that state that fraud cannot be presumed but must be proven, and if there is room left for the inference of an honest intention, the proof of fraud is wanting. Bernheimer v. Rindskopf, 116 N. Y. 423, 428 (1890).

In Ferson v. Monroe, 21 N. H. 403 (1850), it was held that the sale of a stock in trade by partners for the purpose of paying the separate debt of one partner was void as against the creditors of the firm, even though such debt were contracted by such partner for firm purposes.

law on the ground simply that the firm was at the time insolvent or was made so by the act of making these notes.

2. If the partners composing the firm of Edwards & Wigginton had by agreement, in good faith, mortgaged or assigned all the assets of the firm, for the purpose of securing or paying the debts owing by them individually to McCune and Wigginton, respectively, though with the intention of giving them a preference over the firm creditors, the transaction could not be impeached. If, on the other hand, they had given these individual creditors a mortgage on the firm property and to secure their individual debts, with the understanding that they should continue in possession of the property and sell and dispose of it in the usual course of business, the mortgage would have been fraudulent and void as to the other creditors.

The object in giving these notes in the name of the firm to McCune and Wigginton was, not to give them a preference over the partnership creditors, but was to put them all on an equal footing so that they might share alike in the distribution of the firm's assets in case of the firm's assignment. So long as a firm exists it has the same right to dispose of the firm assets that an individual has of his own property, providing always that such disposition is bona fide; but if no lien has been created by it on its firm assets, and the firm assigns, as in the case at bar, then the firm creditors must be first paid. That the debts of McCune and Wigginton, when first created, were the individual debts

The burden of showing that an assignment made by a firm for the benefit of firm creditors, which contains a preference for the debt of an individual creditor of one of the partners, is fraudulent either in fact or in law, is upon the plaintiff. Nordlinger v. Anderson, 123 N. Y. 544, 548 (1890).

It has been held that it may be shown in rebuttal of an inference of fraudulent intention arising from provisions for the payment of individual debts, that there were in fact no such debts or individual assets to be affected by such provision. Crook v. Rindskopf, 105 N. Y. 476, 483 (1897); Turner v. Jaycox, 40 N. Y. 470 (1893); Bogert v. Haight, 9 Paige, 297 (1841).

In Weed v. Richardson, 2 Dev. & B. L. 535 (1837), it was held that the security of the firm taken for the payment of a separate debt of a partner was void, where it was not shown that the other partners assented, the same being prima facie fraudulent. Cotton v. Evans, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 284 (1835), followed.

On the other hand, it has been held that the mere application of partnership property to the payment of the individual debts of the several partners is not of itself a fraud upon the rights of the firm creditors. Jones v. Lusk, 2 Met (Ky.) 354, 351 (1859).

And if the assumption of a private debt by a firm is not a fraud on the firm, it is not a fraud against the creditors of the firm. Siegel v. Childsey, 23 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1857).

But a fraudulent collusion, either by partners or individuals, with others for the purpose of cheating or hindering creditors in the collection of their debts, will give the creditors a right to the aid of a court of equity. Jones v. Lusk, supra.

IV. Assumption held sufficient.

In the following cases the acts of the firm have been held sufficient to amount to a legal assumption of the individual debts of a partner binding upon the firm:

A memorandum signed by a partner to the effect that money borrowed by a partner, and therefore his individual debt, was in fact borrowed for the firm and used by it, is competent evidence to charge the firm in an action upon a note given by such partner therefor. Anderson v. Norton, 15 Lea, 14, 64 Am. Rep. 400 (1885).

Although the item may not be a proper credit against the firm, being the individual liability of one partner, yet the firm may assume it by entering a credit for it in their account, and will be barred from afterwards denying it as a fair credit. Dishon v. Schorr, 19 Ill. 59, 63 (1857).

In Day v. Wetherby, 29 Wis. 308 (1872), upon the dissolution of a firm and the formation of a new partnership, a conveyance of the real estate to secure the debts of the old firm, made bona fide 29 L. R. A.

and comprising chiefly property owned by the old firm, was held valid as against the new firm's creditors.

A sufficient assumption may exist where a partner with the consent of his copartner makes a valid arrangement with his individual creditor that a debt due to such creditor by the partner shall be paid by deducting it as a payment from a debt owing by such partner to him. Bates v. Halliday, 3 Ind. 159, 163 (1851).

In Whitney v. Dean, 5 N. H. 249 (1830), assumpsit was brought on a note signed by the principals in their partnership name, the evidence showing that one of the partners, with the consent of the others, delivered goods to be applied in payment of such note without any fraudulent intention, and for the purpose of securing the debt of an individual partner. It was held, upon the subsequent failure of the firm, that the holder of such goods could not be held a trustee for the firm, and that the transaction was not void.

So in Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. 400 (1859), a partner borrowed the money to be placed by him in the firm, giving his own note as security, the other partner also borrowing but giving the firm note for the amount, with the consent of the other partner. It was held upon their failure, there being an understanding between them that both notes should be paid out of partnership funds, the assets being conveyed to secure all debts, that the agreement was valid as against partnership creditors.

And in a case in which a firm was charged with the private indebtedness of one of the partners, the partners being informed of such charge and making no dissent therefrom, the partner so indebted subsequently delivered firm property to the creditor in payment, with the knowledge of the partners. The court held in an action brought by the firm against the creditor to recover such property, that the creditor was entitled to an allowance for the charges made by him against the firm. Miller v. Dow, 17 Vt. 285 (1845).

In Re Kahley, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 373, 379 (1874), the creditors insisted that the mortgage was void as against partnership creditors because the notes or the debts which it was given to secure were individual debts of the respective partners, and not properly a partnership demand. The court held the mortgage good as against the partnership property, relying on Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb Ch. 44, 49 Am. Dec. 160 (1848).

So where the debt was originally incurred by the partner for the use of the firm, the court did not look upon the debt as a private one, but as the fair assumption by the firm of a debt created for their benefit which in equity they were bound to pay. Siegel v. Childsey, 23 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1857).

And where the defendant in business on his own

of the members of the firm of McCune and Wigginton seems clear. "Where there is a separate loan of money to one of several joint adventurers for the purpose of founding a partnership or joint adventure, the firm, when formed, will not be liable for the advance, for the case is not distinguishable from one where several persons are to contribute their separate proportions of money towards a common fund for joint purposes, and each is to borrow, and does borrow, his own share upon his own separate account and credit. In short, in all cases of this sort, in order to bind the firm, the intended partner must either have had an original authority to purchase goods, or borrow money upon the joint account, and have exercised that authority by a purchase or loan on their account, and not on his own exclusive credit, or the transaction must have been subsequently ratified and adopted by the firm, as one for which they were originally liable, or for which they now elect to give their joint security. "Story, Partn. 7th ed. § 148. See also Donnelly v. Ryan, 41 Pa. 306; Wild v. Brath, 27 La. Ann. 171.

The doctrine that firm assets must be first applied to the payment of the firm's debts is a principle of administration adopted by the courts when, from any cause, they are called upon to wind up the firm business, and find that the members have made no disposition or charge upon its assets. This is accomplished by marshaling the assets,—by applying the partnership property to the partnership debts. The right of the firm creditors "is worked out through the partners," the meaning of which is that they may demand account took in a partner, and assigned the business assets to the firm, which assumed and agreed to pay certain specified debts, the court held that the promise of the firm to pay such claims was to be deemed as made for its benefit, the partnership having assumed and taken possession of the assets. Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 119 (1870).

In the above case the assignment was not looked upon as made to exonerate the original debtor from payment of his debts, nor as being primarily or directly for his benefit, as his property was to be taken to pay the debts, and he still remained liable as one of the principals.

Again, where each partner contributed to the capital of the firm at the time of its formation the stock of goods he then had, on which amounts were owing, and the goods were so transferred, the firm assuming and agreeing to pay the balance, the agreement of the firm was held for the benefit of the creditors holding such claim, who could maintain an action against the firm thereon. Hannigan v. Allen, 127 N. Y. 639, 642 (1891).

Where one member of a firm purchases goods or borrows money for the firm on his own credit, giving surety for the payment of the money or for the goods, and such money or goods go into, and are used by, the firm, and the surety has to pay as such, the firm may convey the goods of the firm to such surety in satisfaction of the money thus paid, so that an existing creditor of the firm cannot set aside such conveyance merely because he was such at the time. Gwin v. Selby, 5 Ohio St. 93, 101 (1855).

In Ex parte Jackson, 1 Ves. Jr. 131 (1790), a person in trade, indebted upon a bond, took into partnership a nominal partner, and two years afterwards the partnership failed and the separate debt of the partner was permitted to be proved upon joint estate, there being nothing to show that it had been assumed by the firm. The court stated that if the firm had in any way considered the debt as a joint debt, it would so assume it to be, and that if a man having debts took another into partnership with him, very little matter respecting those debts would make them both liable.

So in Bremen Sav. Bank v. Branch-Crookes Saw Co., 104 Mo. 435 (1891), in a suit brought upon a note signed by the defendants as makers and by their president as indorser, the defense was that it was used by the president for his own accommodation in payment for an individual debt, and was without consideration so far as the corporation was concerned, of which facts the plaintiff had knowledge. The court held that if the defendants' conduct induced the plaintiff to believe bona fide that the company had assumed to pay the debt, the defendants were liable even though no such assumption existed.

In Haben v. Harshaw, 40 Wis. 379 (1860), the facts showed that a husband and wife, together with the latter's father, carried on business together, the father furnishing part of the capital, but doing no business personally, merely living, with his wife, with his daughter and son-in-law, paying no board, no accounts being kept between them; the daughter, the wife of the son-in-law, owning separate estate consisting of the store over which they lived and where the goods were kept and sold, all receiving joint support out of the business. The debt in question was incurred for store and family expenses and for the use of the general business. The court held the chattel mortgage of the firm for the debts incurred in such store and for family expenses was a firm indebtedness.

Where a firm at its commencement assumed as partnership debts certain individual liabilities of the partners, and the assets exceeded the indebtedness assumed, and no losses occurred up to the time of one partner's decease, but the surviving partner having possession of the property continued the business until his death at a loss, his executors afterwards having control, it was held that the whole estate put into the firm constituted firm assets, and that the individual creditors of the partner first deceased, payment of whose debts had been assumed by the partnership, had preference over those of the surviving partner or his estate. Killefer v. McLain, 70 Mich. 508 (1893).

In Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176 (1902), a loan was made, as the lender supposed, to a solvent firm, a note signed in the firm name being received as security, but the money was used by the partner for his own private purposes and not for the benefit of the firm; subsequently a new note of the firm was given, and later a judgment note was executed. The evidence showed that the lender knew nothing about the use of the money by such partner, and regarded the partners as his debtors, and that the other partner at no time objected to the assumption of the debt by the firm, although spoken to about it at the time of the renewal of the note. The court held the firm liable, as it had power to part with the right to have the firm property applied to the payment of partnership liabilities.

In Embry v. Lewis (Ark.) 18 S. W. Rep. 373 (1893), suit was brought in equity to enforce a mortgage lien on partnership property, the facts showing a purchase of property subsequently converted into partnership estate, but not paid for, although the purchaser promised to pay for it out of his share of the partnership effects, such promise being subsequently made known to the firm, who charged the debt upon the partnership books as a partnership liability, and included it in an account of the firm liabilities. The court held the debt was assumed by the partnership, and was further corroborated by a statement made by the partners be-the primary application of the firm assets to the payment of their debts. Schmidlapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 30 Am. Rep. 530. As the right of the firm "is worked out through the partners," it necessarily follows that whatever the firm, with the consent of all its members, does in good faith with the partnership property, is binding upon them. If, then, the firm had the right to assume, by and with the consent of both of fore the giving of a mortgage to the creditor, that neither of the partners could use any of the receipts of the partnership in payment of his individual debts, because the receipts were to be paid on that particular debt until it was satisfied.

Where the note given by one partner in the name of the firm, indorsed for accommodation to the plaintiff by the payee, was drawn and given in renewal of another like note executed by the plaintiff and signed in the name of the firm by the other partner, for money received by the first partner for his own individual use, unconnected with the partnership business, plaintiff's agent refusing to lend directly to the individual partner and requiring the partnership note, the partners understanding that the money was borrowed for the benefit of the individual partner, it was held that in such a case the loan was to be considered as made to the firm, and not to the individual partner, the fact that the money was allowed to go to the individual partner's own private use being a matter solely between the partners. Tilford v. Ramsey, 37 Mo. 563, 565 (1866).

In Veal v. Keely Co., 86 Ga. 180 (1890), a partner borrowed money to put in as part of his share of the capital stock. The other partner having drawn from the assets an amount in excess of his share, upon the first partner proposing to draw out sufficient money to repay the money so borrowed it was agreed to allow the money to remain in the business, the firm executing a mortgage and giving notes to secure its payment. It was held that such act was valid, especially when it appeared that the individual debt had been made, by agreement between the partners, a partnership one, the rule preferring partnership property for the payment of partnership debts being for the benefit of the partners who had a right to waive it.

In Weaver v. White, 46 N. Y. S. R. 467 (1892), the plaintiff, a father, indorsed a note for the purpose of establishing his son in business, and also other notes in connection therewith. The son subsequently took in a partner, no cash, strictly speaking, being contributed by either, but the articles provided that the parties should take all the accounts, debts, and liabilities remaining unsettled and contracted by the party, carrying on such business and incurred for the benefit thereof. The firm later executed a note for partnership purposes, also indorsed by plaintiff, and all the notes were subsequently renewed. The firm, becoming embarrassed, executed a bill of sale to plaintiff to secure all moneys advanced. The court held that the notes given by the firm, or in renewal thereof, or assumed by it, were valid obligations against the partnership, and that, the merchandise in hand at the time of the partnership being liable for the firm debts, there was nothing inequitable, as against subsequent firm creditors, in making such debts obligations of a new firm which took over the merchandise for the purchase of which the debts were contracted, the assumption of the two notes and the execution of the other being for the purpose of procuring firm property with which to transact business, the consideration being ample.

Where, in answer to an action on a promissory note payable to a partnership firm, the defense was, that prior to and at the time of the giving of the note the defendant did work for one of the partners, and from time to time took up goods at their store, under an agreement that the work he did for such partner, as well as that which he did for the firm, should be charged on the store books to the defendant, and that he at the same time was to charge the partners for the work he did for them, but was ultimately, when the account was settled, to be entitled to set off the work that he did, whether for such partner or for the firm, against the amount he owed the firm,—the court held that such an agreement, if made, was binding upon the partners, and that parol evidence was admissible in proof thereof, it being clearly competent for a payee while holding the note to make a binding and operative agreement that it should be satisfied by the work done for one of the partners, and that, if such an agreement were made by one partner and assented to by the other, it became operative as the agreement of both partners. Camp v. Page, 43 Vt. 739 (1870).

So in a somewhat peculiar case in which the facts did not disclose a case in which the partners themselves could be said to have any lien upon the partnership funds for the payment of the partnership debts in priority to the individual debts, the transaction not being a partnership, but rather a universal hotchpot of all present and prospective property, both real and personal effects, except furniture and apparel, being thrown into the common stock with the liabilities of the partners, no provision being made as to future acquisitions or future liabilities,—the court held that the fact that each had divested himself of all present possessions and become bound to apply himself faithfully and diligently to the management of the partnership concern, left little ground to suppose that the parties could have expected any such thing as individual liabilities or property, and that the parties themselves, contemplating a community of goods and of all other interests, became, strictly speaking, tenants in common with respect to present and future possessions, and that it would be unjust to give joint creditors any preference over separate creditors in such a community of goods, the partners keeping no accounts, each purchasing for his individual benefit and paying his individual debts with the common property with the acquiescence of the other. Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 473, 50 Am. Dec. 54 (1848).

And where, in answer to an action for goods sold and delivered, defendants admitted the sale, but alleged as special matter of defense that at the time of the sale and delivery to the defendants one of the plaintiffs was indebted to defendants in the sum then claimed, in respect of articles manufactured by the defendants for such plaintiff, and that the plaintiffs before action agreed to deduct such sum from the amount due the plaintiffs for the goods sold, and that they received of defendants a certain sum in full payment of the goods, which was the balance due, deducting the claim against such one plaintiff; the special defense further alleging that the defendants at the time of payment agreed to pay the plaintiffs the sum so deducted in case they, the plaintiffs, or the one indebted to the defendants, should bring an order from a third party to the defendants directing them to charge the said articles to such third party, otherwise the settlement was complete and final; and further averred that neither the plaintiffs nor the one of them so indebted presented to defendants any such order,—the court held plaintiff not entitled to recover, and that it was competent for the plaintiffs to accept the sum so owing from such one of them to defendants in part payment of their claim. Churchill v. Bowman, 39 Vt. 518 (1897).

In another case the plaintiff had done work for the defendant, and had taken payment in goods its members, the individual debts due by them respectively to McCune and Wigginton, when this was done and they gave the firm notes and thereby assumed their payment, they became firm debts and should share pro rata in the distribution of the proceeds arising from the sale of the partnership assets with the other firm creditors. This is said to be the conversion of debts, so that if they were separate debts of the respective partners from his store, and afterwards plaintiff took in a partner, and it was mutually agreed that they should continue to do work for the defendant and be paid in the same way, and that the amounts so paid should be charged to the plaintiff's account when the settlement was made. The charge for the work done was entered upon plaintiff's books against the defendant and an account was rendered to him upon a certain date, at which time his bill against the plaintiff was larger than plaintiff's bill against him, the balance being paid by plaintiff in cash, and there was nothing to show whether the firm was at that time solvent or insolvent; no credit was entered on the books of the firm and at the time of the assignment the charge against the defendant appeared as an open account. The action was brought by the assignee of the firm, who claimed the right to a judgment against the defendant, notwithstanding the agreement and settlement, upon the ground that defendant could not apply the debt of an individual partner to the payment of a firm debt. The court held there was no ground of recovery, and that if the parties had a right to settle and did settle their respective claims as stated, the omission of the firm to enter the credit upon its books neither altered the fact nor affected the rights of the parties, and that the settlement so made barred the right of action on the account. Pepper v. Peck, 17 R. L. 55 (1890).

So where the debt, really incurred in the first instance for the use and benefit of the original firm on the credit of one partner, who gave his own note with a third party as surety, was assumed by a new firm under a stipulation that the new firm should assume all the debts and liabilities of the old one, including the note in question, which was entered upon the firm books as payable by them,—the court held it was competent for the persons composing the several successive partnerships to determine what debts they ought to and would undertake to pay, and that there was no presumption, when the payment of such note was made a condition and consideration upon the retirement of certain persons and the coming in of others, that such stipulation was avoided by mistake or fraud, inasmuch as the agreement was made between those constituting the outgoing and incoming members, and that therefore such agreement was founded upon a sufficient consideration out of which arose an assumption and the promise to pay the note in question. Case v. Ellis, 4 Ind. App. 224 (1892).

In Filley v. Phelps, 18 Conn. 294 (1847), parties entering into partnership gave their joint and several promissory notes for property purchased for the conducting of such business. One partner died and the business was continued by the survivors with the partnership capital without any adjustment of the partnership affairs until a later period, during which time two of the notes so given were paid from the partnership effects. The partnership, solvent at the time of the death of the partner, subsequently became insolvent. One of the partners administering to the estate of the deceased partner, under order of the court, sold one undivided third of the property to a third party for his own use and benefit, assuming at the same time the payment of that portion of the note which belonged to the deceased partner to pay, the administration accounts against the deceased partner's estate being subsequently settled. The partner purchasing the share of such deceased partner subsequently mortgaged his interest to certain other creditors to secure his individual debts, he being entirely insolvent, the other partner having no estate except his interest in the partnership property. It was held, upon a bill filed by the heirs of the deceased partner and the attaching creditors and mortgagees of the partner, that the facts given constituted a partnership debt which was dissolved by the death of the partner, and that the property having been purchased by the partner subject to the incumbrance of the notes, it was still liable for the payment thereof.

So a finding that the assignees were inequity trustees of the creditors of the firm, as to a certain portion of the joint assets purchased by them of the firm and paid for by the individual liability of one of the partners of the firm to such creditors, the facts of the case showing that the whole transaction was made with the knowledge and consent of all the partners without actual fraud, the object being only to secure the liabilities in question, the assignee, although apprehensive, having no knowledge that the firm was insolvent desiring a security, was not upheld, the assignees not being mere volunteers but sureties for the firm, the object being to secure themselves. Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511, 514 (1858).

In Flagg v. Upham, 10 Pick. 147 (1830), assumption was brought on the written promise of the defendant to guarantee the payment of a note purporting to be made by the firm of which the defendant was a partner, the note being originally given in the firm name without the knowledge of the defendant for the board of the maker's wife. The court held that, the defendant having knowledge of the consideration of the note at the time he guaranteed it, and supposing that he was liable upon it, his acknowledgments of his own liability and the express obligation to guarantee the payment created a waiver of any objection he might have to the note, and that therefore his guaranty was upon a good consideration and bound him.

In Assignment of Stewart & Alman, 62 Iowa, 614 (1888), where the assignee's report was objected to on the ground that a portion of a claim paid by him was the individual indebtedness of one of the partners, and the evidence showed that the assignors borrowed the money, securing it by chattel mortgage at the time, giving notes signed by them individually and indorsed by a third person, and other notes signed by the firm, a portion of the money being applied in payment of the individual debt of a partner, with the other's assent, such partner being charged on the firm books, and it was shown that the mortgagees knew the purposes for which the money was to be used, but there was no evidence of the firm's insolvency, and subsequently the notes first given, including the individual notes of the partners, were taken up and firm notes given with like security, the court held that the firm became bound for the amount, the notes executed with the consent of both partners being based upon a sufficient consideration, and there being no fraud, the knowledge possessed by the bank (the mortgagee) of the purposes for which the money was to be applied, in the absence of notice of the firm's insolvency, not affecting their rights.

V. Insufficient assumption.

The mere fact of a firm taking notes made by one partner and indorsed by a third person for his accommodation, and selling such notes to a bank without indorsing them, or guaranteeing the same, or becoming a party thereto, or agreeing to pay them, will not render the firm liable thereon nor constitute the debt a firm debt; and the mere fact that such notes were entered in the firm books as they become by the consent of the members of the firm the joint debts of all the partners, and will thereafter be treated as such. Story, Partn. 7th ed. §§ 868, 869; Ex parte Peels, 6 Ves. Jr. 601; Ex parte Jackson, 1 Ves. Jr. 181; Stiegel v. Chissey, 28 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124.

That the firm had the right to assume the individual debts of its members and thereby convert them into debts of the firm, in the absence of fraud, and that the individual indebtedness was sufficient consideration for such promise by the firm, the authorities

"Bills payable" will not show an assumption thereof. Willis v. Bremner, 60 Wis. 622, 628 (1884).

In Woodward v. Horst, 10 Iowa, 120 (1859), the action was upon an account brought by the assignee under a general assignment of the partnership firm, part of the account being contracted prior to the assignment and part afterward, the defendant claiming that the goods sued for were sold and delivered to him by virtue of an agreement, under which the owner agreed to let him have the goods to the extent of the indebtedness to him of one partner of the firm, the firm undertaking to look to such partner for payment, the jury in the court below finding for the defendant as charged. The court held that, as to so much of the goods as had been supplied prior to the assignment, the verdict was right, but that with respect to the claim for goods subsequently delivered the agreement could not be set up in defense, the assignee not being bound by the agreement without proof that he concurred therein or sanctioned it.

So where the notes were given by each partner to represent the cash which each advanced as the capital of the partnership, it was held that they were individual debts, neither being responsible for the notes of the other in the absence of an express agreement, and that the fact that interest on such notes was paid by the firm, and charged to the maker of the note, did not make the notes the debts of the firm, neither did the payment of the notes out of the interest of each partner in the partnership have such an effect. Wild v. Erath, 27 La. Ann. 171, 172 (1875).

Again, in Forney v. Adams, 74 Mo. 138 (1881), where the evidence showed a custom on the part of the several members of the firm to deal as individuals with the customers of the firm, and that under such custom, "when a member was indebted his account would be taken in and charged against him on the books of the firm," the court held that, conceding such evidence to be admissible, yet it was not broad enough to cover the transaction then in question, it not appearing that the transaction itself was had by the parties in reliance upon any such custom, and therefore it did not authorize a disposition by one of the partners of the firm's goods in payment of his private debt.

In Kendal v. Wood, L. R. 6 Exch. 248 (1871), the firm had dealings with the defendant, one partner being indebted to the defendant on his own account. At the request of the latter partner the defendant applied a certain portion of the partnership money paid to him, to the liquidation of such private debt, without plaintiff's knowledge or authority, there being no conduct on the part of the plaintiff other than a belief of such authorization, which made it reasonable for the defendant to believe that he had authorized it. Upon a dissolution, the accounts showed that the firm owed defendant a considerable sum and plaintiff accepted bills therefor. Before the bills matured, plaintiff discovered the application by the defendant of the money to the private debt of the partner, but met the bills under protest in order to save the credit of one whose name was on the bills as drawer. The court held that the defendant was not entitled to retain the money as against such private debt, plaintiff never having authorized its appropriation nor conducted himself so as to give reasonable grounds for believing that he had, and that the plaintiff having been ignorant of the real facts of the case when the bills were drawn had not precluded himself from recovering by meeting them at maturity when he had discovered the facts, and his so doing could not be regarded as a voluntary act. See also Dunnica v. Clinkscales, 73 Mo. 500 (1881), infra, VII., by new firm of debts of old firm.

VI. By mortgage of firm property.

The doctrine with reference to the power of a firm to assume the payment of the individual debt of a partner by a mortgage of the partnership property has been expressed as follows:

While the firm is in existence and in full possession of its property, free from any lien, with the right to dispose of the same with the consent of the partners for value, and without any intentional fraud, they may execute a note or mortgage for the assumption of the individual debt of a partner, and thereby waive their right to have the mortgaged property first applied to the satisfaction of the debts of the partnership, if the security is received in good faith and for value, and, the rights being waived, they cannot be invoked on behalf of the creditors of the firm; and therefore such a mortgage will be good as against a subsequent attaching creditor of the firm, even though the firm may be insolvent at the time of the giving of the mortgage. Smith v. Smith, 37 Iowa, 98 (1868).

Where the debts are fairly owing by every partner individually, the mere preference of individual over partnership creditors by the execution of a chattel mortgage in the firm name, or by authority of the partners, upon the property of the firm, is not of itself such a fraud upon the partnership creditors as will authorize the setting aside of the chattel mortgage at the suit of the creditor. Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 170, 4 L. R. A. 885 (1895); Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514 (1887).

So it has been held that a mortgage given by the partners to secure the individual debts fairly due was not rendered void by the mere fact that it operated to give individual debts a preference over demands against the firm, and that such a mortgage would not be set aside for that reason in equity, unless created in contemplation of insolvency to give an improper preference, and that the mortgage in question not being found to have been fraudulently made was not invalid, though the partnership was at the time of the conveyance insolvent. Reynolds v. Johnson, 54 Ark. 449 (1891).

If a sale or mortgage is made in good faith to secure a bona fide debt or debts, the transaction cannot be assailed on the ground that the creditors preferred are the individual creditors of the partners. Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514, 517 (1887).

In the absence of fraud and collusion no lien exists in favor of partnership creditors over a mortgage by a firm for the private debt of a partner. Anderson v. Norton, 15 Lea, 14, 54 Am. Rep. 40 (1855).

In Re Kahley, 3 Biss. 388 (1870), a mortgage given by a partnership firm in payment of notes given by one partner for his individual debts was held binding as against the firm creditors.

In Whitney v. Dean, 5 N. H. 299 (1830), the partners, with the consent of their copartner, assigned partnership property to secure the separate debt of one by way of pledge without any fraudulent intent, and upon the failure of the firm the court held the transfer good and the transferee's sale thereunder valid as against the firm.

In Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 170, 4 L. R.

abundantly show. Siegel v. Chidsey, supra; Case v. Ellis, 4 Ind. App. 224.

From these considerations we are of the opinion the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be reversed and the cause remanded to that court with directions to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court and remand the cause for a new trial in conformity with the opinion of this court. It is so ordered.

All concur.

A. 535 (1889), a chattel mortgage upon the firm property executed by insolvent partners for the purpose of securing the individual debt of a partner, made bona fide and without intention to defraud partnership creditors, was held valid, the partnership assets remaining under the control of the partners. See also Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 317, 1 L. R. A. 179 (1889).

A mortgage upon partnership real estate, signed by the members of the firm, gives the mortgagee (the individual creditor of one member of the firm) a lien upon such real estate prior and superior to any claim of partnership creditors against the same property as partnership assets. Carver Gin & Mach. Co. v. Bannon, 35 Tenn. 712 (1887); Anderson v. Norton, 15 Lea, 32, 54 Am. Rep. 400 (1885).

For the reason that if the partners have a right to make absolute sale of partnership assets, they have the same right to pledge or mortgage such assets. Carver Gin & Mach. Co. v. Bannon, supra.

Where, in a suit to set aside a decree of foreclosure and sale of a mortgage made to secure a debt of individual stockholders of the company, the facts showed certain mortgages made in the name of certain persons apparently in their individual characters, binding their interests in the corporate property, but the evidence proved that the money borrowed went to the corporate purposes, was applied in the payment of its debts, and also that the corporate authorities recognized it as a corporate debt, and that it was so understood at the time of the loan, and was afterwards so recognized by the company; that the mortgage was made in consideration of a further advance and of such indebtedness, and that there was no fraud or guilty knowledge, the court held the mortgage valid, the company having received full value, the recognition of the debts as those of the company by the stockholders and corporate authorities in the absence of fraud being prima facie sufficient to rebut fraud arising from the original transaction, the money going into the firm and being disposed of by the firm for its members. Head v. Horn, 18 Cal. 311, 313, 217 (1861).

Where the property in question, mortgaged by one partner individually, originally belonged to the firm but was taken by such partner upon the dissolution of the firm as his share, the notes and accounts being taken by the other partner along with the merchandise, such partner assuming to pay the firm debts, the firm being insolvent at the time of the dissolution, although such fact was not known to the partners,—in an action by a judgment creditor against the firm to set aside the mortgages as fraudulent per se, the court held that each partner had a right to waive the rule to have the partnership property applied to the payment of the partnership debts, and, having done so, the creditors had no right of complaint, and that therefore the mortgage to secure the individual indebtedness of such partner was valid as against the firm creditors. Poole v. Beney, 65 Iowa, 503 (1885).

The question as to the validity of a mortgage executed by a firm was raised in replevin brought by the mortgagee, a creditor who had attached the firm property, the mortgage being made in trust to secure the mortgagee's debt as well as other firm debts and the individual debt of a partner, the money obtained upon such last-mentioned debt going into the firm as such partner's share of the capital stock. The court held, the mortgagee having knowledge of the facts but no fraudulent intent being shown, that, as to such individual debt, the deed was void as a fraud in law rather than in fact, the mortgagors being insolvent. Walker v. White, 60 Mich. 437, 430 (1886).

The fact that the mortgages were not intended to have the effect of overreaching creditors may be manifested by the conduct of the parties in withholding the instrument from record and taking no steps to foreclose, although the mortgagee is informed that the firm was becoming more and more involved. Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 374, 375 (1891).

Where the claim secured by the plaintiff's mortgage was the private and individual debt of one partner, even though created to furnish his part of the partnership stock, it was held not the debt of the partners, and not entitled to preference for payment out of partnership funds, and therefore the assignment by an ostensible partner of his separate portion of the stock to a dormant partner for the purpose of paying an individual debt is void as to partnership creditors. Elliott v. Stevens, 33 N. H. 311 (1859).

So, a chattel mortgage given to secure the antecedent individual debt of one partner without consideration is fraudulent, the firm being insolvent at the time, and will therefore be set aside in favor of firm creditors. Heinemann v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64 (1884).

A mortgage given to secure the individual debt of a partner, even if effectual as to the firm by reason of the concurrence of all the partners giving it, is a fraudulent misapplication of the partnership property and void as to firm creditors, unless the firm was solvent at the time. Menagh v. Whitwell, 33 N. Y. 145, 153, 11 Am. Rep. 633 (1873).

The capital of the business was made up of the money borrowed by the partners from their father and from others, for which the father gave his note as security or as a collateral for the same, a further sum being loaned to one of the partners, for which he gave the firm note, the firm subsequently becoming involved and selling their entire stock in trade to the father, giving a bill of sale which showed that the sum was taken in discharge of the money owing, the assignee agreeing to collect the outstanding accounts and apply the same in discharge of the obligations due. The court held that, while it was lawful for the members of the firm to apply partnership property to the payment of their individual debts, if done in good faith and without a fraudulent design, yet the bill of sale in that case was invalid as to the firm creditors under section 5170 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri relating to fraudulent conveyances, which declares void the sale of property, "made or contrived with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors of their lawful actions," the bill in question hindering and delaying creditors, there being a surplus in that case after the payment of all the claims of the assignee which the creditors of the firm had an undoubted right to, and which surplus, instead of being handed over to the members of the firm, the assignee gave his note for, the sale of the surplus on credit delaying the creditors and putting it in the power of the members of the firm to dispose of the note, which was negotiable to an innocent purchaser, thereby effectually depriving the creditors of the surplus. Seger's Sons v. Thomas Bros. 107 Mo. 636 (1891).

And see the cases, Cron v. Cron's Estate, 55 Mich. 8 (1885); Cribb v. Morse, 77 Wis. 323 (1890), and Ex parte Snowball, Re Douglas, L. R. 7 Ch. 334, 41 L. J. Bankr. 42, 26 L. T. N. S. 894, 20 Week. Rep. 793 (1872).

Barclay, J., concurring:

Edwards' original debt to McCune was on account of the purchase price of property which went into the firm assets and constituted the greater part of the capital of the firm of Edwards & Wigginton at the outset under head, The question of insolvency, supra. and also Re Kahley, 4 Nat Bankr. Reg. 373, 379 (1870); Embry v. Lewis (Ark.) 18 S. W. Rep. 373 (1892); and Veal v. The Keeley Co. 86 Ga. 120 (1890), under head, Assumption held sufficient.

VII. By new firm of debts of old firm.

In not a few cases the question has arisen as to whether a firm, in taking in a new partner and constituting itself a new firm, has assumed the debts of such partner or of the firm business previously carried on by him.

In order to charge a partner with a debt contracted by his fellow partner before the partnership, it must be shown that there was a subsequent assumption by the firm of; the debt, even though the subject-matter was that the consideration of the debt should be carried into the partnership as stock. Donnelly v. Ryan, 41 Pa. 303, 310 (1862); Brooke v. Evans, 5 Watts, 200 (1836); Graeff v. Hitchman, 5 Watts, 454 (1836).

Under a partnership agreement providing for the payment of an existing individual debt of one of the partners by the firm, either of the partners may execute the firm note for the purpose of securing such indebtedness. Randall v. Hunter, 76 Cal. 255 (1888), affirming 66 Cal. 512 (1855).

Thus, facts showing that the debt was owing by a copartner when he entered into the partnership and contributed his stock of merchandise, which included the goods for the price of which the action was brought, the articles of partnership providing that the sum then owing for such merchandise should be paid by the partnership, part of such claim being paid on account before the death of such partner, are sufficient to uphold a judgment of the court below in favor of the plaintiff, the indebtedness of such partner for the merchandise contributed by him to the stock of the firm furnishing ample evidence of a duty owing from the promisee to the persons seeking to avail themselves of the firm's promise, the case not being materially distinguished from that of Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 117 (1876); Spingarn v. Rosenfeld, 4 Misc. 523 (1893).

But in Dunnica v. Clinkscales, 73 Mo. 500 (1881), where an appeal was taken from the action of the assignee to whom the partnership property was assigned for the benefit of all creditors, upon the ground that such assignee allowed a claim against the partnership which was not a partnership debt, the facts showed that the agreement between the partners was, that the notes were given in settlement of a partnership business which had previously to that time been conducted in another state, and of which the plaintiff and the assignors were members, but which had ceased to exist, the agreement being that the assignors were to execute their joint notes to the plaintiff in consideration of which they were to get the assets of the firm. The evidence, however, did not show that the assets were carried into the new business, or that they were purchased for such purposes, and therefore the court held that such notes were the individual indebtedness of each partner, and not a firm debt.

See also Day v. Wetherby, 29 Wis. 368 (1872); Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 119 (1876); Hannigan v. Allen, 127 N. Y. 639, 642 (1891); Ex parte Jackson, 1 Ves. Jr. 131 (1790); Killefer v. McLain, 70 Mich. 508 (1888); Weaver v. White, 46 N. Y. S. R. 467 (1892); Case v. Ellis, 4 Ind. App. 224 (1892), head IV., supra.

There is a class of cases wherein the question of the assumption by a new firm of the debts of the old one has arisen in the preference given or the provision made therefor in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, made by the firm. These will be included in a separate note.

VIII. Assumption of debt originally incurred for firm benefit.

In a case where money was borrowed by a partner in his own name, and the amount was subsequently put into the business of the firm, it was held that it was not a partnership debt, and that the firm was not liable for it, and that therefore an assignment made by it to secure such debt was void as against attaching creditors, the firm being insolvent at the time of the assignment. Pritchett v. Pollock, 32 Ala. 169 (1856).

Where one partner borrows money in his individual name, but in reality for the use of the firm, and it actually goes into the firm, the firm may assume the liability and confess judgment therefor, the consideration of such assumption being the moral liability, and the general creditor can have no ground of complaint, for the reason that the assets of the firm are increased to the precise extent of the money borrowed. Coffin's App. 106 Pa. 230, 236 (1884).

The fact that the money they obtained on the personal credit of one partner went into the partnership as, and was used for the exclusive benefit of, the firm, although not of itself sufficient to make the firm liable to the lender, is a consideration to support the firm's subsequent promise to pay. Siegel v. Chidsey, 28 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124 (1857); Graeff v. Hitchman, 5 Watts, 454 (1836); Clay v. Cottrell, 18 Pa. 412 (1852).

A bill, subsequently given by a firm for money obtained by one partner on his personal credit which went into the partnership funds and was used exclusively for the partnership benefit, is a sufficient promise by the partnership to pay such sum, and an express undertaking on the part of the firm on a sufficient consideration to pay the debt out of the partnership assets, it becoming a partnership debt to all intents and purposes. Siegel v. Chidsey, supra.

And a judgment confessed by the firm under such circumstances and on such assumption would not be fraudulent. Walker v. Marine Nat. Bank, 96 Pa. 574, 579 (1882), citing and approving Siegel v. Chidsey, supra.

So it has been held that where one member of a firm purchases goods or borrows money for the firm on his own credit, giving surety for the payment thereof, and such money or goods go into and are used by the firm, and the surety has to pay as such, the firm may convey its goods to such surety in satisfaction of the money paid, and such conveyance will be valid as against a firm creditor. Gwin v. Selby, 5 Ohio St. 96, 101 (1855).

But if there was no debt due from the firm at the time of the giving of a note, if they had never received any consideration they have no right, when insolvent, to create a debt by voluntarily assuming the debt of one of the members so as to be good as against other creditors. Walker v. Marine Nat. Bank, supra.

In Roe v. Hume, 72 Hun. 1 (1893), the court held that, although the money, which was lent to the partner individually and partly secured by his individual mortgage, went for the firm benefit, yet this fact did not make it a firm obligation, for the reason that it might have formed part of his share of capital, or might have been paid in discharge of a debt due by him to the firm.

In addition to the above, see Rose v. Keystone Shoe Co. 18 W. N. C. 535, 538 (1886); Tilford v. Ramsey, 37 Mo. 535 (1860); National Bank of Commerce v. Meader, 40 Minn. 335 (1889), under head I., supra.

R. W.

of its business. The assumption of that debt by the firm, in the circumstances already stated, was supported in equity by a valuable and meritorious consideration, as explained in Segel v. Chidsey, 28 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 121 (1857), and the firm's note, given for that debt, certainly created a legal obligation on the part of the firm to discharge it. Under the ruling of this court in Section v. Anderson, 95 Mo. 373 (1888), and in the absence of any evidence of actual fraud towards any of the partnership creditors, it seems to me that the firm note to McCune must be held a just charge against the firm assets. Hence my concurrence in the judgment of the court in banc.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

B. P. REYNOLDS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
GREAT NORTHERN R. CO.

(99 Fed. Rep. 806.)

1. A person driving along a highway 10 or 12 feet distant from, and parallel to, a railroad track, with a buffalo coat collar turned up against his ears, while the wind is blowing so that he does not hear a train coming behind him, but who does not look behind him to see the train, or drive with tight reins so as to prevent his horse, which is gentle, from drawing him against the train as it passes, is guilty of such negligence as will prevent recovery for injuries thereby received.
2. The term "any other road," in Comp. Stat. 1887, § 3016, providing for railroad signals at crossings of other roads, refers only to public highways, and not to a private crossing.
3. The duty to give warning signals of the approach of a train at a crossing, imposed by Comp. Stat. 1887, § 3016, does not extend to a person driving along a highway parallel to the railroad, who has not lately used, and does not intend to use, any crossing, although he expects a signal to be given at a private crossing near by.
4. The fact that a railroad is not fenced, in the absence of a statutory requirement, does not make the railroad company liable for injuries to a person who is driving along a highway parallel to the track.
5. A witness may be properly asked, on cross-examination, how a private crossing came to be put in over a railroad, where he has testified in chief that he knew who put it in and when it was put in.

(August 19, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of North Dakota to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Caldwell, Sanborn, and Thayer, Circuit Judges.

NOTE.—On the question as to what crossings are meant by statutes providing for signals by trains at crossings, see note to Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 119.
29 L. R. A.

Messrs. Taylor Crum and A. G. Hanson, for plaintiff in error:

Independently of any statutory requirement, a jury might find, upon the facts of a case, that it was the duty of a railroad company to fence its track.

Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 7 L. R. A. 527.

The Compiled Laws of North Dakota, section 3016, provides for the ringing of a bell or blowing of a whistle "at least 80 rods from the place where the said railroad shall cross any other road or street," etc.

No exception is made as to public or private crossings, and the provision of section 3014, where certain requirements are made with reference to a "public highway," negatives the inference that the provision of section 3016 can be construed in any other sense than its plain language indicates, namely, "any road," public or private.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 255.

The court erred in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

In Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 16 L. R. A. 199, the court says: "We know of no rule of law requiring a party to constantly look even one way, and especially none requiring him to constantly look both ways."

The courts cannot fix any exact point as the point where a traveler is bound to look and listen.

Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Harrington, 131 Ind. 426; Glushing v. Sharp, 96 N. Y. 676.

The question was pertinent, whether those in charge of the train did, or could, by reasonable diligence, have discovered the danger of plaintiff, traveling within 10 or 12 feet of the track, with his back toward the approaching train, in time to prevent it by sounding the whistle or ringing the bell to apprise him of the danger, and ought to have been submitted to the jury.

Cahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 92 Ky. 245; Olumpit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. O. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 71; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 939; Thomas v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 729.

A statute providing for signals at a railroad crossing is for the benefit of all persons at or near the crossing, as well as for those actually crossing or about to cross, and omission to give statutory signals is prima facie negligence.

Loneragan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 87 Iowa, 755, 759, 17 L. R. A. 254, 257; Ransom v.

Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 718; Harty v. Central R. Co. 42 N. Y. 468; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Loomis, 18 Ill. 548, 56 Am. Dec. 471; Wakefield v. Connecticut & P. R. Co. 87 Vt. 880, 86 Am. Dec. 711; Osgrove v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 88, 41 Am. Rep. 855; Voak v. Northern R. Co. 75 N. Y. 320; Saidana v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 862; Pike v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 89 Fed. Rep. 754; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Martin, 82 Ind. 476; Western & A. R. Co. v. Jones, 65 Ga. 681; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 162; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Rosenberger, 9 Can. Sup. Ct. Rep. 811.

A railroad company is bound to take notice that the public is using a crossing put in by the company, although not on a regularly laid out public highway. The statutory requirements as to signals apply to any crossing of "any road or street," put in by the company and used by the public. Continued use without objection amounts to a license.

N. Dak. Comp. Laws, § 8016; Lilletrom v. Northern P. R. Co. 58 Minn. 464, 20 L. R. A. 587; Barry v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877; Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667; Hooker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Wis. 542; Peares v. Humphreys, 84 Fed. Rep. 282.

A person crossing or at or near a railroad crossing has a right to rely upon the giving of signals required by statute, and failure to anticipate that the company will not obey the statutory requirements as to signals, and failure to use other diligence than listening and looking, is not negligence, as a matter of law, when such signals are not given.

Correll v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 120, 18 Am. Rep. 22; Taber v. Missouri Valley R. Co. 46 Mo. 358, 9 Am. Rep. 517; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 120 Ill. 587; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co. 35 N. Y. 87, 90 Am. Dec. 761; Brown v. New York O. Railroad, 83 N. Y. 597, 88 Am. Dec. 858; Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Mich. 525; Com. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Allen, 189; Northern P. R. Co. v. Austin, 64 Fed. Rep. 311; Kelly v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 1.

Under the facts, as disclosed by the undisputed evidence in the case, the issues present a question of fact for the jury.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Nickels, 50 Fed. Rep. 718, 4 U. S. App. 885; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 665, 21 L. ed. 749; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 289, 28 L. ed. 415.

Mr. W. E. Dodge, for defendant in error: Statutes of the character of section 8016 of the Compiled Laws of North Dakota, requiring certain signals to be given by bell or whistle at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where the railroad crosses any other road or street, are enacted for the purpose of averting danger to those approaching such crossings upon such road or street, and to give such persons warning while the approaching train is yet at a comparatively safe distance, in order that they may be placed upon their guard; and not for the protection of persons not on such other road or street, and who are not intending to use the crossing, but who may be traveling in another highway parallel with the railroad, and whose danger from approaching trains is therefore as great at any other distance as within 80 rods from such crossing.

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 108; Rosenberger v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 8 Ont. App. Rep. 483; Gorris v. Scott, L. R. 9 Exch. 125; O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211; Holmes v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 598; Elwood v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 4 Hun, 808; Harty v. Central R. Co. 43 N. Y. 468; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Spearen, 47 Pa. 800, 86 Am. Dec. 544; Fletcher v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 64 Mo. 494; Cordell v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 535; Byrne v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 12; Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 623; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 29 Kan. 166; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, 160; Flint v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 110 Mass. 222; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 452, and authorities cited.

A person like the plaintiff, driving within a few feet of a railroad track, and therefore in a place of comparative danger, owes to himself a duty to look and listen for the approach of trains the noise of which at so short a distance may frighten his team and therefore enhance his danger.

Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, supra.

The statute does not refer to private ways or farm crossings, and if so construed would necessitate that the locomotive bell, or whistle, be constantly sounded from one state line to the other.

Sather v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 91; Greeley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 53 Minn. 187; Brooks v. New York & E. R. Co. 18 Barb. 597; Cook v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 36 Wis. 45; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Long, 27 Kan. 684; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Willey, 46 Mich. 88.

The verdict for the defendant was therefore properly directed.

Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224; Schulzkill & D. Imp. & R. Co. v. Munson, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 442, 20 L. ed. 867; Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 819, 24 L. ed. 958; Griggs v. Houston, 104 U. S. 558, 26 L. ed. 840; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Between 6 and 7 o'clock on a clear night in February, 1894, B. P. Reynolds, the plaintiff in error, was driving along a public road which runs over a level territory parallel with and 12 feet distant from the railroad of the Great Northern Railway Company, the defendant in error, when his horse and sleigh went against a train, which was coming along the railroad from his rear, and he was injured, his sleigh was broken, and his horse was killed. He sued the defendant in error for negligence. The company denied negligence on its own part, and alleged that the carelessness of the plaintiff in error caused the injury. At the close of the evidence for the plaintiff the court directed a verdict for the company, and this writ of error challenges the judgment upon that verdict.

The facts are undisputed, and they are these: The railroad of the defendant in error runs northwesterly from Fargo, in North Dakota. About half a mile northwest of Fargo, on this railroad, is the Standard Oil station. A little more than a mile northwesterly of the oil station, and on the east side of the track, stands the private slaughterhouse of one Moulton. In the summer of 1893, Moulton requested the defendant in error to put a crossing opposite his slaughterhouse, so that he could reach the public highway on the west side of the track, and it consented. Thereupon he graded the crossing, and the section men of the company planked it. This crossing was not on any traveled road. It extended only from the public road on the west side of the track to the doors of the slaughterhouse of Mr. Moulton, and it had never been opened, or laid out, or worked, or maintained by public authority. It was, however, on a section line, and people who had occasion to cross the railroad at that place had sometimes driven over it. The statutes of North Dakota required the railroad company to ring its bell or sound its whistle at a distance of at least 80 rods from its crossing of "any other road or street." And the plaintiff claimed that the company was negligent because it gave no such signal of the approach of its train to Moulton's crossing. The defendant never had rung its bell or sounded its whistle for this crossing, and it did not do so on the night of the accident. The public road from the oil station to this crossing ran along the west side of the railroad, parallel to, and about 10 or 12 feet distant from, it. The plaintiff in error had lived on a farm about 7 miles northwest from Fargo, and on the west side of the railroad, for three years, and had frequently passed over this road, and was familiar with its location and character. He was driving home from Fargo, along this road, and was about 10 rods southeasterly of Moulton's crossing when the accident occurred. He did not intend to cross the railroad, or to use the crossing in any way. The night was clear and cold. The mercury stood at zero. The ground was covered with snow. The two roads extended from the oil station to Moulton's crossing over a prairie without an obstruction to the view, and the plaintiff could have seen the coming engine, with its bright headlight, the distance of a mile from the place of the accident, if he had looked. He knew that a train passed up the railroad northwesterly every evening, but did not know at exactly what time it passed. He looked back towards Fargo, to see if it was coming, when he was about 40 rods northwesterly from the oil station, but he never looked again until he was struck by the train. He was driving on a gentle trot a manageable horse that was liable to be a little frightened by a moving train, and he testified that he was listening for the company to sound its whistle or ring its bell for Moulton's crossing, so as to be prepared for the train. The wind came from the north. He wore a buffalo coat. Its collar was turned up about his ears, and he never heard the roar of the approaching train until it struck him.

Was the charge of the court below to return a verdict for the defendant in error upon this state of facts erroneous? The rules of law by which this question must be answered are: (1) In order to maintain an action for negligence, where the injury was not wantonly, maliciously, or intentionally inflicted, it must appear that the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury, and it must not appear that the negligence of the plaintiff contributed to that injury. (2) Where a diligent use of the senses by the plaintiff would have avoided a known or apprehended danger, a failure to use them is, under ordinary circumstances, contributory negligence, and should be so declared by the court. (3) It is the duty of the trial court at the close of the evidence to direct a verdict for the party who is clearly entitled to recover, where it would be its duty to set aside a verdict in favor of his opponent if one were rendered. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224; Aerkfets v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 418, 420, 36 L. ed. 758, 759; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Davis, 8 C. C. A. 429, 53 Fed. Rep. 61, 10 U. S. App. 422; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moseley, 6 C. C. A. 641, 57 Fed. Rep. 921; Donaldson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 298; Brown v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23 Minn. 165; Smith v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 26 Minn. 419; Leniz v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 86; Powell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 80; Gowen v. Harley, 6 C. C. A. 190, 56 Fed. Rep. 978, 980, and cases cited.

Conceding for the moment, but not deciding, that it was the duty of the defendant to give the statutory signal for Moulton's crossing, do not the facts of this case conclusively show that the plaintiff was himself guilty of contributory negligence? The question here is not whether the negligence of the defendant or that of the plaintiff was the more proximate cause of the injury, but whether or not the plaintiff's negligence contributed to it. In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 702, 24 L. ed. 542, 543, Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the supreme court in a case in which a woman had been killed while crossing a railroad, said: "The failure of the engineer to sound the whistle or ring the bell, if such were the fact, did not relieve the deceased from the necessity of taking ordinary precautions for her safety. Negligence of the company's employes in these particulars was no excuse for negligence on her part. She was bound to listen and to look before attempting to cross the railroad track, in order to avoid an approaching train, and not to walk carelessly into the place of possible danger." Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224; McGrath v. New York Cent. & H. R.

R. Co. 59 N. Y. 469, 17 Am. Rep. 359; Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 526.

The danger to the plaintiff from the coming train was from his possible failure to manage his frightened horse and keep him in the road, not from the possibility that the train would cross the road upon which he was traveling. He testified that his horse was gentle and manageable in the presence of moving trains, but that he might be a little frightened by one, and that for this reason he listened to hear the bell or whistle, that he might be prepared for the coming of the train he expected, and thus control his horse. In other words, he knew he was in a dangerous place, and the company did not, and he relied upon the bell or whistle of the company to make him careful to manage his horse and keep him in the public road, where he belonged. There were, however, two methods perfectly open to him that would have protected him against this danger, regardless of the statutory signals. One was to drive his horse with tight reins, and manage him as carefully as if the train was constantly passing, as long as he continued to drive along within 12 feet of the railroad track. The other was to use his eyes to look back often enough to see the bright headlight of a train before it could overtake him. The view from the place of the accident southwesterly was unobstructed for more than a mile, and to look was to see the coming train. The facts that the temperature was at zero, that he had turned the collar of his buffalo coat up against his ears, that he was sitting in a sleigh, that the wind came from the north, and that he never heard the roar of the approaching train until it struck him, show that he had made his sense of hearing practically useless. This made the duty of the diligent and frequent use of his eyes more imperative. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moseley, 6 C. O. A. 641, 645, 57 Fed. Rep. 921; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 59 Mich. 257. It certainly is not a diligent use of the senses, when danger is apprehended from a train coming from the rear, to cover the ears with a buffalo coat, and steadily look in a direction opposite to that from which the train is expected, while a horse goes three quarters of a mile on a gentle trot. The ordinary use of his eyes would have informed the plaintiff of the coming of this train, and would have enabled him to avoid the danger. Moreover, after he had closed his ears to the roar of the train coming from the rear by the collar of his buffalo coat, and had concluded not to look back while he was traveling three quarters of a mile, it was certainly not the exercise of ordinary care to drive so carelessly that a horse that was gentle and manageable in the presence of moving trains would draw him onto the railroad or against the train as it passed. If he would not look for, and so dressed himself that he could not hear, the train he expected to come from his rear, ordinary prudence required him to drive his gentle horse so carefully that he would be prepared for its coming at any time. The evidence of contributory negligence was conclusive.

29 L. R. A.

There is another reason why the judgment of the court below should not be reversed. This record does not tend to prove any negligence on the part of the railroad company. The fact that it failed to give the statutory signal for Moulton's crossing is the only evidence of its negligence in this record. It owed no duty to ring its bell or sound its whistle because the plaintiff was driving along the public road, unless that duty was imposed upon it by this statute. In the absence of the statute, it had as much right to use its railroad for its trains without notice to the plaintiff as the plaintiff had to use the public road without notice to it. If there was any difference between them, the heavier burden of care was upon the plaintiff, for he knew that he was there, and in danger, and the company had no such knowledge. Hence the company violated no duty to the plaintiff which the statutes did not impose. Did the statutes require the whistle to be sounded or the bell to be rung for Moulton's crossing? Section 3014 of the Compiled Laws of Dakota of 1887 provides that every railroad corporation operating a line of road within that state shall erect suitable signs of caution at each crossing of its road with a public highway. Section 3016 of these statutes requires that a bell shall be rung or a whistle sounded at the distance of 80 rods from the place where any railroad shall cross any other road or street. Section 3017 provides that when any person owns land on both sides of any railroad the corporation owning such railroad shall, when required, make and keep in repair one causeway or other safe and adequate means of crossing the same. The question is, Was Moulton's crossing, at the place where this railroad passed it, "any other road or street," within the meaning of section 3016, supra? Article 2, chap. 12, of the Political Code of North Dakota, which treats of public highways and roads, provides that all public roads and highways that have been open and in use as such, and included in a road district in the town in which they are situated, for twenty years preceding March 9, 1883, shall be public roads or highways (Dak. Comp. Laws 1887, § 1261); that every road laid out by order of proper authorities, as provided in this article, from which no appeal has been taken, shall be a public highway (Id. § 1262); and that the congressional section lines shall be considered public roads, to be opened to the width of 2 rods on each side of said section lines upon order of the board of supervisors. Section 1264 provides that the supervisors in the several towns shall "have the care and superintendence of the roads and bridges therein." Section 1266 provides that the overseers of highways in each town "shall repair and keep in order the roads within their respective districts." Section 1271 provides for a road tax. Section 1272 provides that the supervisors shall assess a road tax on all real estate and personal property. In section 1277 the overseers of highways are called "road overseers." Now, it is certain that Moulton's crossing was not a public highway. It had not been used twenty years. It had not been laid out by the proper authorities. It had not been opened on the section line by order of the board of supervisors of the township. It was a mere private crossing, put in at the request of Moulton, to enable him to reach his slaughterhouse from the public road, which was on the opposite side of the railroad. In the instances to which we have referred the legislature of Dakota has repeatedly used the word "road" as synonymous with the term "public highway." The presumption is that they used it in the same sense in section 8016. This presumption is strengthened by the fact that it borders upon absurdity to suppose that the legislature intended to require the railroad companies to give this statutory signal 80 rods on either side of every farm crossing or way from a private dwelling or business house across their roads. If such were the rule, there would be few places on the line of this railroad in the eastern part of North Dakota where the bell or whistle would not be required to be sounding. We do not think this was the intention of the legislature, and, as Moulton's crossing was not a public highway, the railroad company was, in our opinion, guilty of no negligence in its failure to give the statutory signal at that crossing.

Our conclusion is that the term "other road," in section 8016 of the Compiled Statutes of Dakota, 1887, refers to a public highway as defined by the statutes of that state, and that it has no reference to farm ways and private wagon roads that cross the railroad. Sather v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 91; Greeley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 137; Brooks v. New York & E. R. Co. 18 Barb. 597; Cook v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 36 Wis. 45; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Long, 27 Kan. 684; Plint & P. M. R. Co. v. Willey, 47 Mich. 88.

Moreover, even if Moulton's crossing had been upon a road or street the failure of the company to give the statutory warning for it would not have charged it with the neglect of any duty it owed to the plaintiff. Failure to discharge a duty to the plaintiff, and resulting injury to him, are indispensable elements of actionable negligence. Where there has been no such failure, there has been no wrong, and therefore there is no remedy. In the absence of a statute which requires warning of a coming train at a crossing, the railway company owes to a workman in an adjacent field, to a domestic in a neighboring house, or to a traveler on a parallel road, who has not crossed, and does not intend to cross or enter upon, the railroad no duty to signal the approach of its trains. The measure of the reciprocal rights and duties of these parties and the railroad is not changed or affected by the enactment of such a statute. The evil it is intended to remedy did not threaten them. The warning it requires was not provided for their benefit. The object of such a statute is to warn persons in the vicinity of the crossing, who have just crossed, who are in the act of crossing, and who intend to cross, the railroad upon it, of the approach of the train, to the end that collisions and the danger of fright and injury from the use of the crossing may be avoided.

29 L. R. A.

Accordingly such a statute imposes upon the railroad companies a duty to warn such persons, but it imposes upon them no duty to warn others. Consequently, a failure to give the warning becomes a neglect of statutory duty, and, if injury results, raises a cause of action in favor of the former, but not in favor of the latter. This is a just and reasonable rule, because the crossing was a menace of danger to the former, but not to the latter. Its existence and use by the company neither increases nor diminishes the danger of the traveler on a parallel road, who has not used, is not using, and does not intend to use it; and hence he does not fall within the class of those for whom such a statute imposes upon railroad companies the duty of giving a warning of the approach of their trains to the crossing. Our conclusion is that a statute which requires railroad companies to give a warning signal of the approach of trains to their crossing of a road or street imposes no duty to give such warning to those who have not lately used, who are not using, and who do not intend to use the crossing, and such parties cannot recover of the railroad companies for a failure to give the warning. The purpose of such a statute is to warn those who have lately used, those who are using, and those who are about to use the crossing. It imposes a duty upon the railroad company to give to these persons the statutory warning, and a failure to give it is a neglect of duty to them, for which they alone may recover if injury results. These views are supported by the great weight of authority. Pike v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 754; Bell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 72 Mo. 50, 58; Boans v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 49, 57, 58; Rohback v. Pacific Railroad, 48 Mo. 187; Blwood v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 4 Hun. 808; O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211, 216; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 108, 105; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 29 Kan. 168, opinion by Judge Horton, concurred in by Mr. Justice Brewer; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Pierce, 33 Kan. 61, 64; Clark v. Missouri P. R. Co. 35 Kan. 350; Gorris v. Scott, L. R. 9 Exch. 125.

It is assigned as error that the court below refused to permit the plaintiff to testify whether or not there was any fence along the track of the railroad company at the place of the accident. It is not claimed that there is any statute in the state of North Dakota requiring a railway company to fence its track, and we are unable to perceive how the fact that it was or was not fenced could affect the right of the plaintiff to recover under the undisputed facts of this case.

It is assigned as error that the court permitted the witness Moulton to testify, upon cross-examination, "how the crossing opposite his slaughterhouse came to be put in." There was no error in this ruling. He had testified in chief that he knew who put the crossing in, and when it was put in, and it was certainly fair cross-examination to ask him how it came to be put in.

The judgment below must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE MANUFACTURING CO.

v.

ALREMARLE & RALEIGH R. CO.,

App't.

(.....N. C.)

1. A private action for a public nuisance may be maintained by one who is not the sole or even a peculiar sufferer, if his grievance is not common to the whole public, but is a common misfortune of a number or even a class of persons.
2. The owner of a boat, whether licensed or not, and whether other individuals own boats similarly engaged in navigating a river or not, may have a private action for an obstruction to a navigable river, where his boat is engaged in transporting material for manufacturing purposes from a point below the obstruction to a point above it.
3. The fact that a boat was doing business as a common carrier, as well as for the manufacturers who owned it, does not preclude a private right of action by the owner for obstruction of navigation.
4. Damages for detention of a boat by obstruction of navigation, where other means of transportation were not provided, will not include the cost of loading and unloading and of damage to the cargo by exposure after unloading.

(October 12, 1884.)

APPREAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Edgecombe County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for obstructing a navigable stream to the injury of plaintiff. Reversed.

Plaintiff was engaged in manufacturing cotton-seed oil at a plant erected on the Tar river, and in connection with its business it ran a boat to carry products to and from the mill. Defendant, in constructing a railroad, built a bridge across the river in such a way as to prevent the plaintiff's boat from passing it.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. John L. Bridgers, for appellant:

The maintenance of a public nuisance is indictable at common law.

7 Bacon, Abr. 223; 4 Bl. Com. 167.

And, following the common law, our legislature has also made this nuisance indictable. Code, vol. 2, § 3711.

No citizen can maintain an action in his own behalf for an indictable offense.

3 Bl. Com. 219.

To create a public nuisance, the act must affect the public.

State v. Jones, 81 N. C. 88.

Whether a nuisance is public or private, is determined solely by its effect.

State v. Wolf, 112 N. C. 894; Dunn v. Stone, 2 Taylor Repos. 241.

NOTE.—As to private remedy for public nuisance, see also South Carolina S. B. Co. v. South Carolina R. Co. (S. C.) 4 L. R. A. 209, and note; also Wylie v. Elwood (Ill.) 9 L. R. A. 726; and Kuehn v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 552.

29 L. R. A.

Where a private person suffers some extraordinary damage, beyond the rest of the king's subjects, he shall have private satisfaction by action.

3 Bl. Com. 219; Story, Eq. Jur. § 924; 1 High, Inj. § 762; Innis v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 165, 2 L. R. A. 232; Billard v. Erhart, 35 Kan. 611; Dunn v. Stone and State v. Wolf, supra; Hathaway v. Hinton, 46 N. C. 246; Boyd v. Achenbach, 79 N. C. 548.

The peculiar injury must be distinctly shown.

Bigelow v. Hartford Bridge Co. 14 Conn. 565, 36 Am. Dec. 506; Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117, 50 Am. Dec. 275; Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265, 6 Am. Rep. 535.

The test is, Was the obstruction in the highway, in its effect, common to the public, and not peculiar and special to this plaintiff? The degree of the damage does not affect the question.

The plaintiff's alleged damage is not extraordinary, particular, and special to the plaintiff's boat, but is common to that and all other boats; and, the plaintiff failing to allege and show extraordinary, particular, and special damage to its boat, the action should be dismissed.

Georgetown v. Alexandria Canal Co. 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 98, 9 L. ed. 1015; South Carolina S. B. Co. v. South Carolina R. Co. 30 S. C. 539, 4 L. R. A. 209; Dunn v. Stone, 2 Taylor Repos. 241; Clark v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 70 Wis. 593.

The plaintiff, in constituting itself a common carrier, and entering into public transportation, without authority of law, violated the charter from which it derived its existence. It is a case in which the doctrine of ultra vires applies.

State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 965; Luttrell v. Martin, 112 N. C. 606; Wiswall v. Greenville & R. Ft. Road Co. 56 N. C. 183; North Carolina R. Co. v. Leach, 49 N. C. 847.

A cotton-seed oil company has no more right to go into the business of a common carrier and establish a line of transportation than a plank-road company has to establish a stage line.

Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 76 Ala. 572, 52 Am. Rep. 858; Beatty v. Knowler, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 168, 7 L. ed. 819; Casey v. Casaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 587, 10 L. ed. 807.

The public had no weal from the plaintiff's navigation, but did derive much use and convenience from the defendant's road passing over said bridge, and therefore there was no right to recover.

State v. Glen, 52 N. C. 333; Gwaltney v. Scottish Carolina Timber & L. Co. 111 N. C. 555; Burke County Comra. v. Catawba Lumber Co. 115 N. C. 599.

The capability of use by the public for the purposes of transportation and commerce affords the true criterion of the navigability of a river, rather than the extent and manner of that use.

State v. Glen, supra; Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio

St. 523, 18 Am. Rep. 255; Benson v. Morrow, 61 Mo. 345; Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Lyons, 80 Wis. 61.

To become a public highway a river must be navigable when in its natural condition. If artificially made navigable it does not thereby become a public highway; it must have been navigable in its natural condition before.

Morgan v. King, 85 N. Y. 454; Wadsworth v. Smith, 11 Me. 278, 26 Am. Dec. 525; Veasie v. Dvinel, 50 Me. 479.

These seed, unloaded, were damaged, and the jury were directed to allow damage for this and the expense of unloading one cargo, and loading another. It is clear that the bridge had nothing to do with all this. The bridge only did, and could only, stop the passage of the boat. This was a secondary consequence for which the plaintiff cannot recover.

Sledge v. Reid, 78 N. C. 442; Boyle v. Reeder, 23 N. C. 615; White v. Griffin, 49 N. C. 140; Gualtney v. Scottish Carolina Timber & L. Co. supra; Asha v. DeRossett, 50 N. C. 801, 73 Am. Dec. 553; Mace v. Ramsey, 74 N. C. 14; Spencer v. Hamilton, 118 N. C. 50; Sturgis v. Kountz, 165 Pa. 358, 37 L. R. A. 890; Daniels v. Barentine, 28 Ohio St. 582, 13 Am. Rep. 264; Wood's Mayne, Damages, pp. 71-73; Meredith v. Oranberry Coal & I. Co. 99 N. C. 576.

Mr. H. G. Connor for appellee.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The most interesting question presented by this appeal is, whether the plaintiff, in any aspect of the evidence, has shown such special damage as would entitle him to redress by civil action for a public nuisance. The law provides an adequate remedy for the wrong to the public, and thereby prevents a multiplicity of vexatious private actions. But, in order to the maintenance of a civil action by an individual, in addition to the indictment by the state, it is not made incumbent on him to show an injury from which he is the sole, or even a peculiar, sufferer. The damage recoverable in a civil action founded upon the obstruction of a public highway must, however, be such as is not common to every one who actually does pass or may travel over the highway. It must be unusual or extraordinary, but not necessarily singular. While the wrong must be special, as contradistinguished from a grievance common to the whole public, who have the right to use the highway, it may nevertheless be the common misfortune of a number, or even a class of persons, and give to each a right of redress. The amounts of damage recoverable by them may vary according to the extent of the loss shown in each case, but every one of them may maintain his status in court by alleging and proving precisely the same sort of wrong caused by the same obstruction. For instance, in the familiar case of the plaintiff who was injured by falling into a ditch dug by another across the public highway, referred to by the elementary writers and the courts to illustrate the principle upon which civil actions are maintainable in such cases, it would not have impaired the right of the first man who suffered from falling into it if a dozen of his neighbors had tumbled into it afterwards on the same day, and had received more serious injury than he. So in Downs v. High Point, 115 N. C. 182, where the municipality created a public nuisance by negligence in allowing a sewerage ditch to discharge its contents in a place where the nauseous smell annoyed the whole public, but gave to the plaintiff a right of action because of his sickness and that of members of his family, due solely to the disagreeable odors, it would have been none the less competent for him to claim the right to show special damage, or such as was not common to the whole public because it appeared that other families in the vicinity and on all sides of the defective ditch had suffered in a similar way, and claimed like redress in the courts. Bishop, in his work on Non-Contract Law (sec. 424), by way of illustrating the principle we are discussing, says: "So, likewise, it is a public nuisance to obstruct a navigable stream, thereupon, if one is by such an obstruction prevented from fulfilling his contract, he can maintain a civil suit against the obstructer." The first authority cited to sustain the author's view was Dudley v. Kennedy, 68 Me. 465, where the facts were that the plaintiff, who had engaged to transport rocks and gravel in boats on the Kennebec river, which is a navigable stream, was prevented from carrying out his contract by a boom placed across the river between the point at which the rock and gravel were procured and the point of delivery, and the court held that the defendant was liable in a civil action for special damage. Though few of them are so directly in point as the case just cited, there is no dearth of authorities in which the general principle, as we have formulated it, is so fully sustained as to make its application to the case at bar obvious and the deduction inevitable. Greasley v. Cobling, 2 Bing. 268; Chichester v. Lethbridge, Willes, 70, 74; Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binn. 463, 2 Am. Dec. 459, 462; Ross v. Miles, 4 Maule & S. 101; Burrows v. Pixley, 1 Root, 362, 1 Am. Dec. 56.

It is not material whether this particular boat was licensed or whether other individuals owned boats that were engaged in navigating the river. If the plaintiff suffered damage common to a class whose business required the transportation of material for manufacturing purposes from a point below the obstruction to a point located above it, but not common to the whole public, his right is not impaired by the fact that the boat was doing business as a common carrier as well as for the manufacturers who owned it. The case of Dunn v. Stone, 1 Taylor Rep. 241, falls far short of sustaining the defendant's contention. There the plaintiff claimed special damage because a dam placed by the defendant across the stream below the plaintiff's riparian possessions obstructed the passage of fish, and prevented the plaintiff from catching and using them. The court seem to have rested the decision entirely upon the ground that the fish were not the property of the plaintiff, but were subject to become the property of any person living on the stream upon reclaiming them. Chief Justice Taylor, delivering the opinion, said: "But what property could plaintiff have in the fish in their wild state, before they ascended to the water flowing over his land? In animals feræ naturæ a man may have a qualified property which continues only while they are in his possession or under his control; and so long they are under the protection of the law. But the defendant has the same extent of ownership in them, in virtue of which he might have caught them in his own waters, and thus have done an equal injury to the plaintiff's fishery." The cotton seed which the plaintiff was transporting up the river was its property, and was in a boat, which was private property, and was entitled, under the protection of the law, to pass over the highway without obstruction and damage growing out of detention. We understand the court to broadly intimate that, had the injury complained of in Dunn v. Stone, supra, grown out of the detention of property instead of fish by the obstruction, a different principle would have applied. Though any and every person had the right to transport goods and chattels along the river, just as the whole public might have enjoyed the use of the highway which was traversed by the ditch, a right of action accrued only to those who attempted to avail themselves of this privilege, and suffered by the detention of goods in the one case and from injury, to their persons or property in the other. Rose v. Miles, supra.

"Navigable waters include all those which afford a channel for useful commerce. Such waters are public highways of common right." 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 286. "It is not necessary that such waters be fit for navigation at all times, but their capacity therefor must recur with regularity." Id. 243, note 1; Burke County Comrs. v. Catawba Lumber Co. 116 N. C. 786.

Upon the testimony, which was not controverted, the defendant clearly had no cause to complain of the instruction which left the question of navigability to the jury under the foregoing rule. We are of opinion, however, that the court erred in allowing the jury to consider the cost of loading and unloading the cotton, and of damage to the cotton seed by exposure after they were unloaded. The damage to the cotton seed was caused directly by leaving them exposed, not by the obstruction. If they had been kept in the boat, or stored in a well-constructed warehouse, they would have remained uninjured after being detained with the boat for want of a draw in the bridge. The plaintiff was clearly entitled, as damages, to the reasonable worth of the boat for such time as it was detained by the obstruction; and in determining what the boat was worth it was competent to consider wages, if reasonable paid to the hands, as the value of its services were to some extent dependent upon the cost of the crew. Greasley v. Codling, supra. If the plaintiff during the period of detention had provided other means of transporting the cotton seed around the bridge to the mill above, the rule would have been the same as that applicable to detained passengers (Hansley v. Jamesville & W. R. Co. 115 N. C. at page 609, and authorities there cited), and the reasonable cost of carrying them by another route might have become an element of the damage assessed. In the case of Rose v. Miles, supra, Lord Ellenborough said: "He [the plaintiff] has been impeded in his progress by the defendants wrongfully moving their barge across, and has been compelled to unload and to carry his goods over land, by which he has incurred expense, and that expense caused by the act of the defendants. If a man's time or his money are of any value, it seems to me that this plaintiff has shown a particular damage." Bayley, J., said that the plaintiff had placed the defendant in a situation that he unavoidably must incur expense in order to carry his goods another way, while Dampier, J., said: "The expense was incurred by the immediate act of the defendants, for the plaintiff was forced to unload his goods, and carry them over land. If this be not a particular damage, I scarcely know what is." Chichester v. Leithbridge, supra. But the plaintiff, instead of procuring another conveyance for the cotton seed, left them exposed, so that they were injured. The measure of damage, therefore, was the reasonable cost of the boat, which was in the employment of the plaintiff during the period of detention. It is true that, upon a familiar principle, the defendant might have claimed a deduction from the aggregate value of its services during such time, of any sum which the boat and crew actually earned, but no evidence of that nature was introduced. Hassard-Short v. Hardison, 114 N. C. at page 487. A different case might have been presented if the plaintiff had been transporting a cargo to a market above, and had lost the advantage of the market (Dudley v. Kennedy, supra), but the gravamen of the complaint here is the cost incurred by detaining the boat. See Greasley v. Codling, supra. We conclude, therefore, that there was error in the instruction given as to the proper measure of damage, while there was no error in the other rulings complained of, and a new trial will be awarded only upon the question of the amount of damage which the plaintiff is entitled to recover. Tillett v. Lynchburg & D. R. Co. 115 N. C. 666.

New trial as to damage.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

George H. KIRKPATRICK, Appt.,

G. T. BROWNFIELD.

(.....Ky.....)

A certificate of qualification from a judge, obtained after election as county court clerk, but before the term of office begins, is sufficient for qualification in this respect, under Const., § 100, providing that no person shall be "eligible to the office" unless he has procured such certificate, while it expressly makes the eligibility for certain offices, so far as age and residence are concerned, depend on the time of the election.

(May 23, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Rue County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to contest defendant's right to the office of clerk of the county court, on the ground that he was ineligible to the office at the time he was elected to it. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hobson & O'Meara, for appellant:

Appellant got, a day or two after the election, the proper certificate, and had this certificate when he received notice of his election and before the contest by appellee was begun. This was a full compliance with the constitutional requirement.

Those who claim that any citizen, selected by his fellow citizens to fill any office, is disqualified to do so, should be able to point to some provision of the organic law that creates the disqualification in express terms.

Speed v. Detroit, 98 Mich. 360, 23 L. R. A. 842; State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489; Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301; Demaree v. Scates, 50 Kan. 275, 20 L. R. A. 97; Brown v. Goben, 122 Ind. 118; State v. Trumpf, 50 Wis. 103; Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294; Fed. Const. art. 1, § 100.

The first clause of the section requires certain facts to exist at the time of the election; the last clause relates, not to a fact, but an evidence of a fact.

When the makers of the constitution omitted in this clause the words "at the time of the election," contained in the first clause, it must be presumed they changed their phraseology because the meaning was not the same.

All words in an instrument of the dignity of a constitution must receive some meaning. The construction is best which gives to every word, and every section, and every clause, some meaning; this meaning, when given must be uniform.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 67.

NOTE.—As to the time at which eligibility of an officer is to be determined, see also, in support of the above case, State v. Van Beek (Iowa) 19 L. R. A. 622; Demaree v. Scates (Kan.) 20 L. R. A. 97; and opposed to these, the case of State v. Sullivan (Minn.) 11 L. R. A. 372.

29 L. R. A.

"Legally qualified" is the meaning that should be given to the word "eligible."

Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294; Brown v. Goben, 122 Ind. 118; State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497; State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489; Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301; Demaree v. Scates, 50 Kan. 275, 20 L. R. A. 97; Vogel v. State, 107 Ind. 374; People v. Hamilton, 24 Ill. App. 609.

The votes cast for an ineligible candidate are not void but must be counted.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 781.

If the votes must be counted and appellant was "eligible to the office" when notified of his election, why should the choice of the people be defeated?

Privett v. Bickford, supra.

Messrs. I. W. Twyman and D. H. Smith for appellee.

Haselrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant and appellee were rival candidates for the office of county court clerk of La Rue county at the November election, 1894. Appellant received a majority of the votes cast, and was awarded a certificate of election by the canvassing board. Appellee contested his election upon the ground that he had not, at the time of his election, procured from the proper officer a certificate of his qualification as required by law. It was agreed that the appellant, on the 8th day of September, 1894, had obtained from the clerk of the La Rue circuit court a certificate showing his qualification, and that on the 10th day of November, 1894, he had procured from his circuit judge a certificate stating that he had been examined by the clerk of the Metcalfe circuit court under the supervision of the judge, and that the applicant was qualified for the office of county court clerk, the first certificate being issued before and the second after the election. The contesting board held the appellant to have been ineligible at the time of his election, and hence not qualified to hold the office, which was therefore declared vacant. On appeal to the circuit court, that finding was approved, and from that judgment Kirkpatrick prosecutes this appeal.

It is not contended that the certificate of September, 1894, has any efficacy, but it is insisted by the appellant that the requirements of the constitution were met upon the procurement of the certificate of the circuit judge after the election and before the term began for which he was elected. The controlling provision of the constitution reads as follows: "No person shall be eligible to the offices mentioned in sections ninety-seven and ninety-nine, who is not at the time of his election twenty-four years of age (except clerks of county and circuit courts, who shall be twenty-one years of age), a citizen of Kentucky, and who has not resided in the state two years, and one year next preceding his election in the county and district in which he is a candidate. No person shall be eligible to the office of commonwealth's attorney unless he shall have been a licensed practicing lawyer four years. No person shall be eligible to the office of clerk unless he shall have procured from a judge of the court of appeals, or a judge of a circuit court, a certificate that he has been examined by the clerk of his court under his supervision, and that he is qualified for the office for which he is a candidate." Section 100. For the appellant, it is said that so much of this section as refers to the age and residence of the candidate relates to the time of the election, because it is so expressed; but that the rest of the section relates, not to the time of the election, but to the time of holding the office; that the words "eligible for the office," and "eligible to election," or "eligible when elected," are purposely used to convey different meanings. On the other hand, the appellee contends that the word "eligible" has a well-defined legal signification, and the expression "eligible to the office" is but a brief and concise form of stating, "capable of being legally chosen or elected to the office." Each party appeals to his favorite lexicographer to support his contention in the use of the word "eligible," and it is evident that the construction of the section cannot be made to depend on the definitions given by these learned compilers. The word is variously defined as "proper to be chosen," "legally qualified as eligible to office," and we are thus left to ascertain in some other way the sense to be attached to the words as used in the section. Primarily, the word "eligible," from the Latin "eligere" (to elect), means "capable of being elected," or, if we may temporarily coin a word, "eligible" means "electible." The use of the word is not at all confined to this primary meaning, and, if we attempt to substitute this meaning in the various sections of the constitution where the word is used, we reach quite absurd results; whereas, if we substitute the definition "legally qualified," as insisted on by appellant, we obtain a consistent and natural construction of all the sections. In section 114 we read: "No person shall be eligible to election as judge of the court of appeals," etc. In section 180 we read: "No person shall be eligible as judge of the circuit court who is less than thirty-five years of age when elected," etc. Manifestly, the words do not import in these sections more than that the person shall be "legally qualified," and, because that legal qualification is required to exist at the time of the election, other words were added to so indicate the purpose in view by the framers of the constitution. By section 98 certain officers are made eligible to re-election, and by section 165 a notary public and officers of the militia are declared not ineligible to hold or exercise any office, etc. The framers of the constitution in these sections used the word in the sense of "legally qualified" for office, or "qualified to hold office." Thus, "No person shall be qualified for election as judge of the court of appeals," etc., "or qualified as judge of the circuit court who is less than thirty-five years of age when elected," etc. And so in numerous instances it is apparent that, where eligibility is required as of the date of the election, words are used to make the meaning indisputable. So, in no less numerous instances, we find the words "eligible to the office" without additional words relating to the time of election. We think, therefore, that the words in themselves, as used in the constitution, mean "qualified for the office," not at the time of election, but at the time when the office is to be first assumed. Considering the care with which the constitution was prepared, and the scholarly distinction of many of its framers, we do not suppose that the same meaning is to be attached to the words "eligible to election" and "eligible to office" or "ineligible to re-election" or "ineligible to office." Our conclusion, therefore, is that, under the first part of the section under consideration, the words "eligible to the office" mean "qualified for the office," and, except for the words "at the time of his election," the eligibility required of the candidate would relate to the time when he was about to hold or assume the office, and that the same words, "eligible to the office," used in the latter part of the section, relate to the same time, and are without words fixing the date of the eligibility at the time of the election. This construction, it seems to us, is in accord with a general and manifest purpose on the part of the framers of the constitution. The changes of phraseology found in the various sections were not, we think, the result of mere chance. The words "office of clerk," mentioned in the last sentence of the section, embraced the offices of circuit and of county court clerks; and, as descriptive of the particular office for which the applicant should obtain a certificate of qualification, the words "for the office for which he is a candidate" were used. We think the words were used without an intention to indicate the time when the applicant for the office was to obtain his certificate. At best, the use of these words would raise only a presumption that the certificate was to be procured before the election, and we should not allow such a presumption to override what we conceive to be the general purpose in view by the use of the terms in controversy. To do so "would be to suppose," says Mr. Story, "that the framers weighed only the force of single words, as philologists and critics, and not whole clauses and objects, as statesmen and practical reasoners." While the provisions of the section under consideration are a substantial readoption of section 2, article 6, of the old Constitution, there seems to have been no adjudication by this court affecting the question here involved. In Sevens v. Wyatt, 16 B. Mon. 542, relied on by appellee, Garrett was held ineligible by the lower court, first, because he had no certificate of qualification, and, second, because he had not been a resident of Montgomery county for one year next preceding the election; and this court said, "As the facts respecting Garrett's ineligibility were agreed, no doubt is entertained of the propriety of the action of the board in refusing him a certificate of election." Here was an entire absence of any certificate obtained either before or after the election, and, manifestly, if Garrett had obtained his certificate after the election, or even before, the result would not have been different, as he was ineligible for another and conclusive reason. There was no controversy on Garrett's part, and the opinion makes no reference to the point now involved, nor was the argument of counsel so directed. A few other cases from this court are referred to as touching the question, but throughout them all the question now in issue remained undetermined. Nor does the statute (Gen. Stat. § 1581, subsec. 8) providing for a new election in the event the person returned as elected is found not to have been legally qualified to receive the office at the time of the election affect the question. Many of the tests of eligibility are to be applied under the various statutes as of the time of the election, and if, when the term begins, the person elected cannot qualify, a vacancy necessarily occurs which may be filled as provided by law. The Nevada case of State v. Clarke, 8 Nev. 570, sustains the appellee's contention as to the meaning of the word "eligible," holding it to signify, when used in statutory and constitutional clauses such as we are considering, one "capable of being elected or chosen," and hence the "eligibility" must relate to the time of the election.

To the same effect are the cases of State v. McMillen, 23 Neb. 385, and the Minnesota and California cases, as well as the earlier Indiana cases. But the Indiana court, in Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294, reviewed their former decisions, and adopted a different construction, saying that "legally qualified" is the meaning that should be given to the word "eligible" as used in the section of the constitution under consideration. To the same effect are the cases of State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489; Priest v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301, and Demaree v. Scates (1898), 50 Kan. 275, 20 L. R. A. 97, where the whole question is discussed and authorities reviewed. These cases discuss largely, and in some respects the conclusion is made to depend on, the etymology of the word "eligible," and in this respect we think the contention of the appellant is supported by the better argument. But, what is more important than this, we believe the framers of the constitution had in view a difference in meaning when they provided in one clause for "eligibility for office" and in another "eligibility to election."

The judgment below is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. S. ROBERTS

v.

R. L. MITCHELL.

(94 Tenn. 277.)

The right to set off independent judgments rendered in different suits growing out of different causes of action is subject to attorneys' liens or claims for services.

(January 17, 1906.)

MOTION to set off judgments. Set-off allowed, subject to attorneys' liens.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. J. D. Goodpasture for complainant. Mr. G. B. Murray for defendant.

Beard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this cause, on a former day of the present term, a money decree was rendered in favor of Mitchell against complainant, Roberts. On a still earlier day of the term, in another and independent suit, a decree was pronounced in favor of Roberts against Mitchell; and a motion is now made by Roberts to set off these judgments, one against the other, under section 8635 of the Code (Milliken & Vertrees). This motion is resisted by the solicitors of Mitchell, unless it be granted subject to their lien for services in obtaining the first decree.

While the attorney's lien upon the judgment recovered for his client, as the result of his professional labor, has been recognized and enforced in this state in a variety of cases, yet, so far as we have been able to discover, the exact question here involved has not been determined. Elsewhere, what is the proper rule in a case like the present has been the subject of much difference of opinion; and the result is, the practice of the courts of England, and of many of the states of this Union, has been very inharmonious. In the English courts, the claim of the attorney to have his fees and disbursements in a suit paid out of the judgment he obtained has been long recognized. In the courts of common pleas, however, it was held that this claim or lien was subordinate to the defendant's right of offset. The same rule obtained in the English chancery courts, while the court of king's bench held that the attorney's lien was superior to the defendant's right to such set-off. Hall v. Ody, 2 Bos. & P. 28; Emdin v. Darley, 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 22; Simpson v. Lamb, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 59; Taylor v. Popham, 15 Ves. Jr. 79; Ex parte Rhodes, Id. 541. Afterwards, however, in the courts of common pleas the practice was changed; and the right of the attorney, against set-off, has been secured by the adoption of the rule so long enforced in the court of king's bench. Simpson v. Lamb, 49 Eng. L. & Eq. 59. As before stated, in the American courts the same difference of opinion and practice has obtained. In the supreme court of New York, at an early day, it was held that this lien would prevent one judgment from being set off against another in such a manner as to deprive the attorney of his costs. Cole v.

NOTE.—For right of set-off of judgments as affected by assignment, see note to Benson v. Haywood (Iowa) 23 L. R. A. 335.
29 L. R. A.

Grant, 2 Cal. Cas. 105; Devoy v. Boyer, 8 Johns. 247. In the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Nebraska, Florida, and Kentucky the right of set-off of the defendant is held to be subordinate to the attorney's lien for fees, or costs and disbursements, as may be. Stratton v. Hussey, 62 Me. 288; Currier v. Boston & M. Railroad, 87 N. H. 228; Johnson v. Ballard, 44 Ind. 270; Boyer v. Clark, 8 Neb. 161; Carter v. Davis, 8 Fla. 183. On the contrary, the courts of West Virginia, Vermont, Iowa, and Alabama maintain the right of set-off as superior to the attorney's lien. Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378; McDonald v. Smith, 57 Vt. 502; Tiffany v. Stewart, 60 Iowa, 207; Mossely v. Norman, 74 Ala. 422. We think the better and more equitable rule is the one that subordinates the right of set-off of independent judgments rendered in different suits growing out of different causes of action, to the attorney's lien or claim for services rendered in the particular suit, and we do not hesitate to adopt it as the rule of practice in this state. On this subject, and in elaboration of our views, we quote the language of Chancellor Walworth in Dunkin v. Vandenberg, 1 Paige, 624, 2 L. ed. 776: "The question in all these cases is, What is equitable and just between the parties and the attorney or solicitor? Where different claims arise in the course of the same suit, or in relation to the same matter, it is undoubtedly equitable and just that these equities should be arranged between the parties without reference to the solicitor's or attorney's lien. His lien is only on the clear balance due to his client after all these equities are settled. But where other claims arising out of different transactions, and which could not have been a legal or equitable set-off in that suit, exist between the parties, the court ought not to devote the lien of the attorney or solicitor which has already attached on the amount recovered for the costs of that particular litigation. When the solicitor has been at the labor and expense of prosecuting or defending a suit, it is equitable and just that his costs should be paid out of the result of that litigation." Nor is section 3635 of the Code to be construed so as to militate against this view. By that section it is provided that "judgments of the same court may be set off against each other on motion." But we hold that this section must be read as if it contained the implied condition that this set-off will not be allowed in derogation of the attorney's lien for his services in prosecuting the suit and obtaining the particular judgment. We think this construction gives full force to this provision of the code, and at the same time it preserves the equities of the parties interested. This was the view taken of a statute similar in character by the supreme court of New Hampshire, in Shapley v. Bellows, 4 N. H. 347.

In the case at bar an order will be entered allowing the set-off, but subject to the lien of the solicitors, which will be declared by a proper order.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

R. D. BILLS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

HIBERNIA INSURANCE CO.

(87 Tex. 547.)

A policy of insurance on a building and various articles of personal property therein, separately valued, is not forfeited as to the personal property by virtue of a lack of title to the land, under a provision that the entire policy shall be void if the "subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple," since the building is not alone the subject of insurance.

(February 25, 1896.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the District Court for Navarro County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McKie & Autrey for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Leake, Shepard & Miller and Barry & Etheridge for defendant in error.

NOTE.—As to severability of policies of insurance, see note to Wright v. Fire Ins. Assn. of London (Mont.) 19 L. R. A. 211.

29 L. R. A.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Hibernia Insurance Company issued to R. D. Bills, upon his gin house and machinery, a policy of fire insurance in the sum of $1,480, the gin house being specified in the face of the policy as insured in the sum of $370, and the other items of property, separately valued at different amounts, making the total amount of insurance. The premium for the whole was the sum of $114.40. All the property was situated in and connected with the gin house, so as to be subject to destruction by the same fire. The gin house was situated upon a tract of land leased by Bills. The policy contained the following clause: "This entire policy . . . shall be void . . . if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple." The building and all the personal property were destroyed by fire, and suit was instituted upon the policy. Defendant pleaded the above condition of the policy, and alleged that the building was upon ground not owned by Bills in fee simple, and therefore the policy was void as to the whole. It was admitted that the gin house was on leased ground, and plaintiff's counsel conceded that he could not recover for the gin house, but claimed that the policy was valid as to the other property. Upon trial the plaintiff recovered for all except the gin house, from which judgment the defendant appealed, and the court of civil appeals reversed the judgment of the district court, and remanded the case to the district court, with instructions to enter judgment for the plaintiff, Bills, for $114.40, the amount of premium paid.

The policy of insurance upon which this suit was instituted was evidently prepared by filling in the blanks in a form intended to embrace a house or personal property or both, and contains clauses applicable to the two, also such as are applicable to each class of property separately. The property insured consisted of a gin house valued at $870, and machinery and other things situated in the house, each item valued separately, aggregating the sum of $1,480; the premium being a gross sum of $114.40.

Three assignments of error were presented to the court of civil appeals, all, however, stating in different forms the proposition that the policy sued upon was rendered entirely void by the fact that the gin house was upon land not owned by the assured in fee simple. Fraud in the application for insurance is not presented in these assignments, and therefore will not be considered by this court. The question to be decided arises upon the following language used in the policy: "This entire policy shall be void if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple." We have inserted the language as it would read in its application to this question, omitting intervening words not applicable. It is claimed on the part of the plaintiff that this policy is a divisible contract, and that it may be void as to the building and valid as to the other property insured. On the other hand, the defendant claims that it is an entire contract, and is void in all its parts if void at all. It is unnecessary to enter into a discussion of the rules which govern in determining whether a policy of insurance upon different articles, separately valued, is to be held entire or not. There is much division among the courts upon the question. It would, indeed, be difficult to decide as to which has the greater number of cases in its support, and sound reasons can be given in support of each side of the controversy. The language in this policy, however, is so definite upon the subject that there is no room for construction. The insurance company selected the words in which to express the terms and conditions upon which the forfeiture could be enforced, and must abide by the effect to which they are entitled under the established rules of construction. The plaintiff accepted the policy, and is equally bound by them under the law applicable to his rights. The terms being that the policy shall be entirely void upon a certain state of case, it cannot become void in part in that event. A contract cannot be entirely void, and at the same time partially valid. Entirely void means in toto, in all its parts, and as to all rights claimed under it. We agree with counsel for defendant that the contract is entire, and that, if the facts bring the case within the language of the clause expressing the conditions of forfeiture, it is void as to all the property embraced. Plaintiff has yielded his claim as to the gin house, and we shall not discuss the effect upon that, except in so far as it is involved in the construction of the words used. The language was selected by the defendant to express the terms of forfeiture imposed by it, and the language will be strictly construed against it for that and for the additional reason that forfeitures are not favored, and will not be declared, unless the case comes within the terms prescribed. Goddard v. East Texas F. Ins. Co. 67 Tex. 71; Wood, Fire Ins. § 60, p. 161; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 347, 7 L. R. A. 217. In order for the clause of forfeiture to be given effect, it must clearly embrace the case made by the facts. Boon v. Aetna Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 575; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 285, 16 Am. Rep. 557. In the case last cited the policy provided that the company should not be liable if the loss was occasioned by explosion of certain things mentioned therein. There was an explosion of one of the kinds of explosives mentioned, in a different building, that set the fire, which fire was communicated to the property covered by the policy, and the loss occurred by fire thus caused by an explosion. The court held that this was not within the language of the contract, and the exemption from liability did not exist. In the other case (Boon v. Aetna Ins. Co.) the policy provided that the company should not be liable for any loss or damage "by fire which may happen or take place by means of any invasion, insurrection, riot, or civil commotion, or of any military or usurped power." The property was situated in a town in Missouri, which was occupied by the Federal troops during the late war, and a superior force of Confederate troops attacked the town, when the commander of the United States troops, in order to prevent the stores falling into the hands of the Confederates, set fire to the building in which such stores were, from which the fire spread and consumed the property insured. The court held that this did not exempt the company, because it did not fall within the terms of the policy. If the conditions or warranties be repugnant to the portions of the policy describing the subject of insurance, the condition must yield to that portion which expresses the terms of liability; as if, for instance, the body of the policy grants insurance upon a stock such as is usually carried in a "country store," or such as is usually carried in a "retail store," and in the conditions prescribing that the carrying in the stock certain articles named as extra hazardous will cause a forfeiture of the policy, and it appear from the evidence that the articles expressly named are usually carried in such stocks and embraced in the terms of the policy describing the subject, the clause of forfeiture must yield to the language of the body of the policy, and the forfeiture will not be enforced. Wood, Fire Ins. § 64, p. 169; Pindor v. Kings County F. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 648, 23 Am. Dec. 544; Whitmarsh v. Conway F. Ins. Co. 16 Gray, 559, 77 Am. Dec. 414.

These authorities suffice to illustrate the rule that the terms of the policy must be broad enough to cover, under a strict construction, the facts of the case under consideration, and that every doubt arising upon the terms of the instrument must be resolved against the insurer. With this rule in view, we will examine the case now before the court, upon this point. "The subject of the insurance" in this policy was the property insured. This consisted of a building, and various other articles of personal property, separately valued. In order to sustain the contention of the defendant, we must import into the clause of forfeiture words to give to it the effect as if it read thus: "If the subject of insurance or any part of it be a building," etc., as in the case of Smith v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 526. The court, however, will not imply anything in favor of a forfeiture, but must try the matter by the language used by the parties. "The subject of insurance," as used in the condition of forfeiture, means a definite single subject; that is, a house, one house, and not a house and other property. If we consider all of the insured property (consisting of a house and many pieces of machinery) as constituting the subject, then the subject was not a house, and the facts do not fall within the terms of the contract. If we consider each piece of property as a separate subject of insurance, the house was not the subject, but one of the subjects; and, in either case, the facts proved do not establish the contingency upon the happening of which the policy is to be entirely void.

The court of civil appeals erred in reversing the judgment of the district court and rendering judgment for the defendant, for which error the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is reversed, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Mamie LANE, Rept.,

v.

MINNESOTA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. Held, that the allegations of the complaint, when read in connection with the general laws of the state relating to the defendant, do not show it, the Minnesota State Agricultural Society, to be a public corporation organized for the sole purpose of discharging a governmental function, and therefore exempt from liability to persons injured by its negligence.

2. The complaint alleges that the defendant engaged the plaintiff to ride in a running race for horses, which was promoted and controlled by it; that, knowing a certain horse was dangerous and unsafe to run in any race by reason of a vicious habit of track bolting, of which plaintiff was ignorant, it negligently permitted such horse to run in the race in which she rode, pursuant to her engagement with defendant, without warning her of the unusual danger to which she was thus exposed; that, by reason of such horse bolting the track during such race, she was thrown from her own horse and injured. Held, that the complaint states a cause of action.

(October 2, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Ira B. Mills, for appellant:

All the acts of the legislature in relation to

*Headnotes by STARK, Ch. J.

NOTE.—For nature of incorporated state institutions, see note to State v. Board of Regents of University of Kansas (Kan.), ante, 372, 29 L. R. A.

the defendant are general and public laws. It is not necessary to plead them; the court will take judicial notice of them, and so far as the defendant's liability in this action is governed and controlled by them the question can be raised by demurrer.

Bliss, Code Pl. § 181; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 181, 189.

If defendant is a corporation it must belong to one of the two divisions recognized by law, public or private, or what is known as a quasi corporation.

Private corporations are associations by the voluntary agreement of their members.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 8.

The defendant is not a voluntary association, there is no contractual relation between the members.

It is undoubtedly a public corporation, whether it be held to be only a quasi corporation or what is generally understood as a public corporation, such as exist for the purpose of government and management of public affairs.

People v. Harper, 91 Ill. 357.

Defendant is not liable for the negligence of its officers or agents.

The legislature intended to create a public state institution, as an agency of the state for the improvement of all branches of industry, to stimulate its citizens, develop its agricultural resources, and by annual exhibits of its wealth attract strangers to settle within its limits.

A'Hern v. Iowa State Agr. Soc. (Iowa) 24 L. R. A. 655; Bank v. Brainerd School Dist. 49 Minn. 106; Altman v. Sibley, 30 Minn. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 191; Snider v. St. Paul, 61 Minn. 466, 18 L. R. A. 151.

The holding of an annual fair is one of the duties imposed on defendant by statute; the details of the entertainment are necessarily left with the board of managers; the providing of the running race was one of the many attractions offered, and in the line of defendant's duty to furnish an annual exhibit of the products and resources of the state. If not, the acts were ultra vires and there would be no liability.

A'Hern v. Iowa State Agr. Soc. supra.

It is quite common for states to organize boards possessing corporate powers,—among them to bring actions for penalties or enforce contracts, and to carry out the policy of the state for the benefit of the state; yet no action lies against them for the negligence of their agents or servants.

Walsh v. New York & Brooklyn Bridge Trustees, 96 N. Y. 427.

Where the vicious habit of an animal is directly dangerous, such as kicking, biting, or striking in a horse, hooking in a horned animal, or biting in a dog, the owner, if it is known to him, is bound to notify those dealing with the animal of such habit; but it is otherwise when the habit is not such as will directly inflict injury.

Moake's Underhill, Torts, 297; Keshan v. Gates, 2 Thomp. & C. 288; O'Brien v. Miller, 10 Conn. 214.

Meers. Schoonmaker, Fleming & Hinnermister, for respondent:

The allegation of incorporation is generally one of an ultimate and issuable fact, which, under a familiar rule, stands admitted by a defendant.

Walsh v. New York & Brooklyn Bridge Trustees, 96 N. Y. 427; Morton v. Power, 33 Minn. 21; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 18, 20.

The defendant has always acted as a private corporation, and appeared in this court alleging its corporate existence.

Minnesota State Agr. Soc. v. Swanson, 48 Minn. 231.

In conducting a running race, for witnessing which it charged the public a fee, defendant was not discharging a public governmental duty involuntarily imposed by statute.

Moulton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 308; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324; Villey v. Allegheny City, 118 Pa. 490; Dill, Minn. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 980-985, and notes.

Where an undertaking is voluntarily assumed and carried on under permissive legislative authority, by any legal entity, whatever its precise legal status of that entity, out of which tolls are received from the public or profits are derived, all authorities agree in holding such entity liable for injuries resulting from negligence or omission of duty, the same as an individual.

Dill, Minn. Corp. 4th ed. § 113, note 1, §§ 980-985, and notes; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 44, 23 Am. Rep. 832; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L. R. A. 151; Moulton v. Scarborough, supra; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 3 Mo. 313.

If it appear that any domestic animal has a vicious habit, and is accustomed or is inclined to do the particular hurt or mischief that has been done, and that the owner has notice thereof, then a duty is imposed on the owner to keep the animal secure, and to warn persons lawfully dealing with the animal of such habit, custom, or inclination.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. pp. 403-406, and notes.

Start, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the defendant from the L. R. A.

an order overruling its demurrer to the complaint of the plaintiff, wherein she alleges that she was injured by the negligence of the defendant, September 10, 1891, while riding in a horse-race conducted by the defendant on the State Fair Grounds. Two general propositions are urged by counsel in support of the demurrer: First. That the defendant is a public board or corporation, organized for the sole purpose of discharging a governmental function; and therefore, as such public agent, it is not legally liable for the negligence of its officers, agents, and servants, or any of them. Second. That the facts alleged in the complaint do not constitute negligence on the part of the defendant or its agents. If either proposition is correct, the demurrer is well taken; but we are of the opinion that, tested by the allegations of the complaint which are admitted, neither is correct.

1. The state may and must commit the discharge of its sovereign political functions to agencies selected by it for that purpose. Such agencies, while engaged exclusively in the discharge of such public duties, do not act in any private capacity, but stand in the place of the state, and exercise its political authority. Therefore, when the state creates public corporations solely for governmental purposes, such corporations, while engaged in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them for the sole benefit of the public, and from the performance of which they derive no compensation or benefit in their corporate capacity, are clothed with the immunities and privileges of the state; and no private action, in the absence of an express statute to that effect, can be maintained against them for negligence in the discharge of such duties. The liability of cities and other municipal corporations created by special charters, for negligence in the care of their streets, is an illogical exception to this rule, but the rule itself is too well settled, by the almost unanimous agreement of all of the authorities, to be now questioned or discussed. Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 18 L. R. A. 151. The rule, however, has no application to private corporations,—that is, to those which are organized by the voluntary act and agreement of their members for their own benefit,—although the creation of such corporations directly promotes the public interest and welfare. It is also subject to the qualification that public or quasi public corporations are not exempt from liability to which other corporations are subject for negligence in managing or dealing with property or rights voluntarily held by them for their own profit and advantage, although inuring ultimately to the benefit of the public. 2 Dill, Minn. Corp. §§ 980-984; Oliver v. Worcester, 103 Mass. 489, 8 Am. Rep. 485; Mersey Docks & Harbour Board Trustees v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 687; Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675; Moulton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 308; Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313.

The allegations of the complaint, standing alone, make a prima facie case of a private corporation engaged, for its own benefit, in an undertaking outside of any public duties, viz., promoting, controlling, and conducting a horse-race,—a case not within the rule of immunity applicable to public corporations, institutions, and agencies created solely for governmental purposes. The demurrer admits the corporate existence and acts of the defendant as alleged, but its counsel claims (1) that the court must take judicial knowledge of the general statutes of the state relating to the defendant and its organization, and read them as if they were incorporated in the complaint; and (2) that such statutes show that the defendant is a public or quasi public corporation organized for the sole purpose of discharging governmental functions. We assume, without so deciding, that the first of these claims is correct, but we cannot take judicial notice of the provisions of the defendant's articles of incorporation, adopted and filed pursuant to the statute under which it was organized; nor can we assume that it has no capital or property derived from membership and entrance fees, from fees for admission to its exhibitions, and from the sale of privileges to private parties to conduct, upon the grounds controlled by it, a multitude of independent shows and enterprises. On the contrary, it is a matter of common knowledge that it does derive a large revenue from these sources, over which the state has no control. A consideration of the general laws relating to the defendant does not justify the claim of its counsel that it is not liable for the negligence alleged in this action because it is within the rule of immunity to which we have referred. At the outset of our examination of such laws we are embarrassed by the fact that there is nothing in the record to show when or under what particular law the defendant was incorporated. This necessitates a review of the entire legislation in reference to the defendant.

Pub. Stat. 1849-1858, chap. 17, §§ 384-388, authorized the incorporation of agricultural societies of the character of the defendant, and by implication authorized a division of the property of the corporations upon dissolution. Chapter 17 of the Laws of 1860 made ample provisions for incorporation of county agricultural societies. Section 2 of this Act provided that such corporations should have perpetual succession, with the right to adopt a seal, constitution, and by-laws, to purchase, hold, sell, and convey all real and personal property necessary to promote the objects of the corporation, and to have police and full control of its grounds. Provision was made by section 3 for filing a copy of the constitution and by-laws of such corporations in the office of the register of deeds, and for the making of annual reports of their receipts and disbursements to the governor of the state. Sections 4, 5, and 6 provided for annual meetings of the societies, for the election of officers, and for two delegates from each county society, who, together with its president as delegate ex officio, were to represent their county in the state agricultural society. These delegates were to meet together, at the city of St. Paul or such other place as a majority should determine, on the first Wednesday in February in each year, and at the first meeting after the passage of the act file articles of their incorporation in the office of the secretary of state. Section 8 of this Act declared that the State Agricultural Society (presumably the defendant) "shall possess all of the powers enumerated in section 2," to which we have referred. This chapter 17, Laws 1860, was repealed by Gen. Stat. 1866, chap. 122, but such repeal did not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued or established under the statute before its repeal. Id. chap. 121, § 4. Therefore, if the defendant became incorporated under this Statute of 1860, its repeal did not work a dissolution of the corporation. This would seem to be so without reference to the saving clause of the repealing statute. The Act of 1860 was substantially re-enacted by Laws 1867, chap. 29. In 1868 the corporate existence of the defendant was expressly recognized by the legislature, which appropriated to it $1,000, and $3,000 pro rata to the several county societies, but no part of either appropriation was to be used for the payment of officers' salaries or fees or as a premium for horse racing. Laws 1868, chap. 19. This last act required the defendant to keep an account of the manner in which the state appropriations to it were expended, and transmit the same annually to the governor of the state. In the year 1876 the legislature confirmed and legalized the incorporation of the defendant. Laws 1876, chap. 29. There was no further legislation affecting the legal status of the defendant prior to the year 1883, and it is obvious, without discussion, that prior to this date the defendant was a private corporation, and not within the rule of immunity claimed for it. This proposition is not seriously controverted by counsel, but it is claimed that by the legislation of 1883, 1885, and 1887 the status of the defendant was materially changed, and that thereafter it became, and now is, essentially a public corporation or agency for the sole purpose of discharging a governmental function. A brief analysis of this subsequent legislation will show the unsoundness of the claim. By an act entitled "An act to reorganize the State Agricultural Society and to appropriate money thereto and to other agricultural societies," approved March 5, 1883 (Laws 1883, chap. 142), a change was made in the membership of the defendant and its officers. It was, however, provided that nothing in the act should be construed as annulling any existing life or annual membership of the defendant. The fee for life membership was fixed at $10, and the annual dues at $1 for each member, as a condition to the right of voting at the annual meetings of the defendant. The act also created a board of auditors, consisting of the governor and three other persons, to be appointed by him and confirmed by the senate, to examine all of the transactions of the defendant, and to report to the legislature at each session; and further required the by-laws of the defendant to be submitted to this board for approval. Other than this no attempt was made by the act to reorganize or deprive the defendant of any existing corporate right or power. This act increased the annual appropriation to the defendant, to aid it in paying premiums, to $4,000, and the annual appropriations to county societies for a like purpose to $6,000, and repealed the appropriations of 1868 and all inconsistent acts and parts of acts. Assuming that the defendant accepted the provisions of this act as to the change of membership and for a qualified state control in consideration of the increased appropriation, still there was no essential change in the status of the defendant, for it continued to be a corporation, with all the powers, rights, and privileges which it acquired by virtue of the prior Acts of 1860 and 1867 relating to its organization. By chapter 174, Laws 1885, the county of Ramsey was authorized to convey to the state of Minnesota certain real estate, to be held by it for the public purpose, and for no other, of exhibiting annually thereon, under the management of the State Agricultural Society, or its successor, the agricultural, stock-breeding, horticultural, mining, mechanical, and industrial products and resources of the state. This act further provided that there should be held by the defendant, upon the premises to be conveyed, such exhibit as the society might provide for, and at such times as it might prescribe. It also made an appropriation of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the society for permanent buildings on the premises, the custody and control of which were given to the defendant. By chapter 181, Laws 1887, the membership of the defendant was enlarged, the fee for life membership abolished, the time of holding its annual meeting changed; police powers were conferred upon its board; its secretary was required to make to the governor an annual report, showing in detail the financial condition and proceedings of the society for the current year; the provisions of the Act of 1883 in reference to its board of managers and the board of auditors to examine all the transactions of the society were re-enacted, and the Act of 1883 repealed, except the part thereof relating to the annual appropriations to the defendant and county societies. Chapter 163, Laws 1891, appropriated $20,000 to pay the debts of the defendant. These Acts of 1883, 1885, 1887, and 1891 seem to indicate that the legislature regarded the defendant as a quasi public corporation, but they must be construed with reference to the previous status of the defendant as a private corporation, and the further fact that the changes made by the legislature in the membership and control of the affairs of the defendant were accompanied by substantial benefits to the defendant, which were naturally calculated to induce it to accept such legislation, and, if it did so, it could not thereafter question its validity. State v. Sibley, 25 Minn. 387. It is also to be observed that this legislation does not assume to create a new corporation. It simply deals with an existing one, giving it aid, and in consideration thereof controlling, in a measure, its affairs. But it does not follow, because the state makes annual contributions to assist the defendant in paying premiums, and, to make it certain that its bounty shall not be misapplied, has provided for an examination of the defendant's accounts, and exacts a report of its transactions from it, that it is a public corporation for the sole purpose of discharging a governmental function. Otherwise railway corporations which have received state aid, and must report to the state as to their earnings and other matters, banking corporations, religious corporations, which indirectly receive annually state aid by exemption of their property from taxation, all county agricultural societies which receive state aid, and many other similar corporations must be classified as state agencies, and held not liable in a private action for their negligence whereby individuals are injured. So far as can be gathered from this legislation and the allegations of the complaint, the defendant may be a voluntary corporation. It does not appear that the state has any voice in the selection or control of its officers, or in fixing their compensation, or in the disposition of its property and revenues, except such as it receives from the state, or as to the character and extent of the annual exhibitions it may give, or the fees to be charged for admission thereto. If the defendant refuses to give an annual exhibition of the products and resources of the state, the state may withdraw its appropriations and the use of the fair grounds, but it cannot otherwise coerce the defendant. In short, we are unable, without further information as to the defendant's articles of incorporation, by-laws, business, revenues, and whether or not the latter are impressed with any public trust, than that afforded by the record in this case, to discover anything in the general laws of the state relating to the defendant to rebut the prima facie case made by the allegations of the complaint, to the effect that the defendant was, at the time of committing the act of negligence complained of, a private corporation conducting an exhibition for its own benefit.

39 L. R. A.

2. It is claimed by defendant, in support of its second ground of demurrer, that track bolting is not a dangerous or vicious habit in a horse, "any more than balking, or the habit of running away," and that the defendant was not bound to notify the plaintiff that one of the horses, known as "Isaac B.," which it permitted to run in the race, was a "track bolter." We have no knowledge of the meaning of the term "track bolting," except as we are advised by the allegations of the complaint, which state that track bolting is a vicious and dangerous habit in a horse, rendering him dangerous and unsafe to run in any race, and that "Isaac B." was such a horse. This conclusion is amply supported by the allegations of fact in the complaint as to what this horse actually was and did in the race in which the plaintiff rode pursuant to her contract with the defendant. It is made clear by these allegations that the plaintiff was injured by the horse in question bolting the track, as was his dangerous and vicious habit to do, and that defendant, being advised of this habit and the plaintiff being wholly ignorant of it, knowingly permitted the horse to run in the race in which the plaintiff rode, without informing her of the unusual danger to which she was thus exposed, and of which she was ignorant. If these allegations are true, this was a manifest violation of the defendant's duty to the plaintiff, as its employé, and it was guilty of actionable negligence in the premises.

Order affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE CO. OF ILLINOIS, Appl.,

v.

BRINKLEY STAVE & HEADING CO.

(.....Ark.....)

1. Applications for insurance sent by mail to another state, where they are passed upon and accepted, and in which policies are dated and signed and then mailed to the insured, are governed by the laws of that state so as to be unaffected by statutes at the residence of the insured prohibiting insurance by unauthorized foreign companies.

2. The failure of an insurance company of another state to comply with statutory prerequisites to the right to do business does not prevent such company from enforcing a claim for premiums due for insurance, although the corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a penalty by reason of the insurance.

3. The right to recover unearned premiums on the termination of insurance in a mutual company does not exist until the dues or liabilities which the insured may be liable to pay under the charter and by-laws of the organization can be ascertained and deducted, where the charter provides for withdrawal by notice and "paying all dues and liabilities."

(May 12, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Monroe County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of an assessment upon an insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. A. Parker and J. R. Parker, for appellant:

When an application, bid, or offer is sent through the mail, it becomes a valid and binding contract the minute the acceptance is put in the mail to be sent to the party so offering; and it is governed by the law of the place where it is accepted, and not from which it is sent.

2 Kent, Com. 12th ed. p. 477, note; 8 Minor, Inst. p. 127; 2 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. p. 712; 1 Parsons, Cont. pp. 515, 516, 562; Taylor v. Merchant's F. Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 50 U. S. 9 How. 390, 18 L. ed. 187; McIntyre v. Parks, 3 Met. 207.

When the statute does not impose a forfeiture, the courts will not and cannot, unless the NOTE.—The decision in the above case, sustaining an action by a foreign insurance company for a premium on unauthorized and prohibited policies, is supported by a few of the authorities, but a majority of the decisions on the subject deny any such remedy to the corporation which has violated the statute. See, on this subject, the analysis of the decisions, found in note to Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian Pac. Nav. Co. (Wash.) 24 L. R. A. 314.

29 L. R. A.

legislature failed to declare a punishment. And when the legislature has pronounced two severe punishments, courts cannot impose any more.

Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 1 Fed. Rep. 471; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 665; Toledo Tis & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 566; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 18 Mo. 229; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. McMillen, 24 Ohio St. 67; Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co. 31 Mich. 348; Hartford Lins Stock Ins. Co. v. Matthews, 102 Mass. 221; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 415, and cases cited.

The liability of a stockholder or member of a mutual insurance or benefit association is governed by the laws of the domicile of the corporation, and can be enforced against any member wherever found.

Kerr, Corp. 20; Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 148; 149, and latter part of section 239.

If the contract is not made in Arkansas, foreign corporation acts have no application.

Seruggs v. Scottish Mortg. Co. 54 Ark. 566; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Fire Assn. of Philadelphia, 55 Ark. 163; May, Ins. chap. 25, § 54; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 743, 756, 756, 874, 875.

Defendant cannot join a mutual insurance or benefit company in a sister state, or in his own state, and then object to any irregularities or illegalities in forming or operating the same. 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 743; Potts v. Wallace, 146 U. S. 639, 36 L. ed. 1185.

Mr. C. F. Greenlee, for appellee:

Where an act is prohibited by statute, a contract to do the act is illegal and unenforceable, and where a statute pronounces a penalty for an act, a contract founded on such act is void.

5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2398, and citations; Jones v. Little Rock, 25 Ark. 306; Martin v. Hodge, 47 Ark. 378, 53 Am. Rep. 763.

There can be no doubt of the power of the state to enact such laws as will afford adequate protection to the citizens of this state.

State v. Ackerman, 24 L. R. A. 398, 51 Ohio St. 168; Reliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sawyer, 160 Mass. 418; Hicks v. National L. Ins. Co. 60 Fed. Rep. 690.

If we concede the contract of insurance is an Illinois contract, the courts all hold that appellant cannot recover.

Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 86, 8 Am. Rep. 626; American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 401; Seamans v. Zimmerman (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 290; Ross v. Kimberly & Co. 27 L. R. A. 556, 89 Wis. 545; Seamans v. Temple Co. (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 480.

To permit the companies when they admit that they have disregarded all the requirements, to recover, would be for the courts to disregard the expressed will of the general assembly, and to say what it has said shall be unlawful is and shall be lawful and binding.

Hughes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, appellant, a mutual fire insurance company incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois, sued the defendant, the appellee, for an assessment of $225 for dues, losses, and liabilities incurred as a member of plaintiff company on two policies. The defendant denied the liability; set up that policies were canceled; that plaintiff owed it $125 for unearned premiums; and that plaintiff's contract on policies was void for noncompliance with foreign corporation law; and prayed judgment for $125 on counterclaim.

The court found the facts to be: (1) That the insurance for which the policy was issued was solicited in the state by an agent of the plaintiff during the course of regular business herein, and that the application was made and the policy was accepted in this state. (2) That plaintiff is a foreign corporation, and has wholly failed to comply with any of the laws of this state regulating insurance, and was not entitled to transact insurance business in this state. (3) That the insurance was on the 26th of May, 1891, terminated, and defendant, on its cross-complaint, is entitled to recover from plaintiff $125 unearned premiums.

The court declares the law to be: (1) No foreign corporation shall do any business in this state, except while it maintains therein one or more known places of business, and an authorized agent in the same upon whom process may be served, and they shall exercise no greater powers nor have any greater privileges than are exercised or had by like corporations of this state. (2) Before mutual fire insurance companies are permitted to do business in this state, it is required that they shall give bond to the state of Arkansas for the use of the beneficiaries of the policy holders of such companies, with security to be approved by the secretary of state, in the sum of $20,000, conditioned for the prompt payment of all assessments to the parties or beneficiaries entitled thereto, which bond shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state; and the law requires insurance corporations doing business on the assessment plan to make return to the auditor of state annually, on or before the 1st of March, of a statement of the affairs of the corporation for the year ending on the 31st of December next preceding. (3) Plaintiff was not entitled to do insurance business in this state until it had complied with Act 84 of the Acts of Arkansas for 1887, and received from the auditor of state a certificate to that effect; and if any person transacted any insurance business for plaintiff until it had complied with the requirements of said act, he was guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to a fine in the sum of $500. (4) Plaintiff cannot recover in this action, unless it has complied with section 3832, Mansf. Dig., and paid the taxes therein prescribed. (5) If plaintiff has wholly failed to comply with its duties as prescribed in sections 3833, 3834, Mansf. Dig., and the act of Arkansas above mentioned, and the insurance was obtained from defendant company, and the same was solicited by an agent of plaintiff while in the course of regular business in this state, then plaintiff cannot recover in this action. (6) If defendant company or its agents requested the termination of the insurance, it is entitled to recover from the plaintiff the amount of unearned premium proved by the evidence. (7) Where an act is prohibited by statute, a contract to do the act is illegal and unenforceable, and where a statute pronounces a penalty for an act, a contract founded on such act is void.

The appellee made application to the agent of the appellant at Brinkley, Ark., for two policies of insurance in the appellant company. The applications were forwarded to the company at Chicago, Ill., and there passed upon, accepted, dated, and signed by the proper officers of said company, which was a mutual fire insurance company chartered under the laws of Illinois, with its domicile at the city of Chicago, in said state. The policies were then sent by the company directly to the appellee, at Brinkley, Ark., and the premiums were thereupon forwarded to the appellant company at Chicago. It appears that the agent to solicit insurance for the appellant had no authority to pass upon applications, to bind his company, or to issue policies, nor were the policies when issued sent to him for delivery, nor the premiums paid to him, to be forwarded to his company. These contracts, for the reasons stated, were not Arkansas contracts, but Illinois contracts. When the applications of the appellee had been received, passed upon, and accepted, and the policies of insurance had been dated and signed at Chicago, and then mailed to the appellee, the contracts were then and there complete, and were Illinois contracts, and governed by the laws of that state. 2 Parsons, Cont. 712; 2 Kent, Com. 12th ed. p. 477, and note; Taylor v. Merchants F. Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 50 U. S. 9 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 187; McIntyre v. Parks, 8 Met. 207. Though the appellant company failed to comply with the statute by not doing those things required of foreign corporations before doing business in this state, the contracts in this case were not void on that account, as they were Illinois contracts.

It is also contended these policies are void because the appellant company failed to comply with the statute in regard to "foreign insurance companies and agents therefor," found in Sandf. & H. Dig. §§ 4137-4139, inclusive; and particularly because section 4138 says that "any person or persons or corporation receiving premiums or forwarding applications, or in any other way transacting business for any insurance company or corporation not of this state, without having received authority agreeably to the provisions of this act, shall forfeit and pay to the school fund of the state the sum of five hundred dollars for each month or fraction thereof during which such illegal business was transacted; and any company not of this state, doing business without authority, shall forfeit a like sum for every month or fraction thereof.

and be prohibited from doing business in this state until such fines are fully paid; and every such person or persons or corporation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than five hundred dollars." It will be observed that, though penalties are imposed in this act upon the persons or corporations doing the things therein prohibited without first complying with its requirements, it does not make void the contracts made by the insurance companies without such compliance, either as to the corporations named therein, or the policy holders in such companies. In Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 38 W. Va. 566, it is stated, — correctly as we think, — by the supreme court of appeals of West Virginia, that "a contract made by a foreign corporation before it has complied with the statutory prerequisites to the right to do business in another state will not on that account be held absolutely void, unless the statute expressly so declares; and if the statute imposes a penalty upon the corporation for failing to comply with such prerequisites, such penalty will be deemed exclusive of any others." See cases cited in that opinion. The insurance contracts in this case were not void on account of the failure of the insurance company to comply with the statutory prerequisites to the right of a foreign insurance company to do business in this state. The penalty imposed by the statute was exclusive of any other forfeiture.

There was a provision in these policies of insurance (section 8), that "this insurance may be terminated at any time at the request of the assured, in which case the association shall retain only the customary short rates for the time the policy has been in force." The defendant contends that before the expiration of the first year, for which it had paid premiums, to wit, in May, 1891, and before the commencement of this suit, it requested the cancellation of its policies of insurance, and the return of the unearned premiums, amounting to $125, which amount the defendant claimed was due it, and for which it demanded judgment. It contended that its request for cancellation terminated its liability for any assessments thereafter made, and left the company indebted to it for unearned premiums, and says the company refused to cancel the policies or pay the unearned premiums till the maturity or anniversary of the policies. There was proof tending to support this contention. The company maintains that, before it could ascertain the amount due the appellee for unearned premiums, it would have had to await the expiration of the year, or the anniversary of the policy, that it might be able to determine for what proportion of the expenses and liabilities, in proportion to appellee's insurance, up to the date of the request for cancellation, the appellee would be liable, and it does not appear that there was any offer by appellee to meet these in any way; but it seems that the appellee claimed that it was entitled at once to the unearned premiums, at the date of its request for cancellation of its policies, without provision for, or recognition of, any obligation to bear its legitimate proportion of the liabilities of the association of which the appellant was a full member, according to the charter of the said association. The ninth section of the charter of the appellant company provides that "any member of this company may withdraw therefrom by notice in writing to the secretary and paying all dues and liabilities." If there were dues or liabilities which the appellee was liable to pay to the company, it was entitled to recover the unearned premiums less the amount of its dues and liabilities to the association, but not until these could be ascertained and the balance of the unearned premiums became due and payable according to the charter and by-laws of the association, to which the appellee subscribed when it became a member of the association. It is apparent from what has been stated herein that the circuit court in its first finding of facts erred, and in its third finding stated only what was conceived to be the legal effect of the evidence, and not the evidence itself.

The declarations of law made by the court are inapplicable to this case and erroneous. The court, it seems, tried the case upon a wrong theory. For the errors indicated the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

Rehearing denied.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

STATE of Maine

v.

Charles F. SWETT.

(.....Me.....)

A common carrier who does not know or have good reason to know that barrels received by him for shipment contain short lobsters is not liable for receiving them, under Laws 1890, chap. 202, § 2, making it unlawful to catch or "possess for any purpose" between specified dates any lobster less than 8½ inches long.

NOTE.—For game laws as affecting interstate commerce, see State v. Geer (Conn.) 13 L. R. A. 804, 29 L. R. A.

(January 5, 1895.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Cumberland County made during the trial of an action against defendant for violating a provision of the game laws in having in his possession short lobsters, which resulted in a conviction. Exceptions sustained.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Clarence Hale, for defendant:

General words and phrases, however wide and comprehensive in their literal sense, must be construed as strictly limited to the immediate object of the act, and as not altering the general principles of law.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 118.

The common law is not to be understood as having been displaced by a statute, unless the statute displacing it is in its express terms or necessary effect plain and unequivocal.

Bishop, Stat. Crimes, §§ 75, 129-132.

To constitute crime there must be a joint operation of act and criminal intent, or criminal negligence amounting to intent.

1 Bishop, Crim. L. 4th ed. chap. 17; Deady, Am. Crim. L. § 5 (a), and cases cited; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 130; State v. Gardner, 5 Nev. 377; Bradley v. People, 8 Colo. 599.

If a man honestly believes certain facts to exist, and, though they do not exist, acts as he would be legally justified in acting if what he honestly believes to be were real, he is justified in law the same as he would be in morals.

Bishop, Stat. Crimes, §§ 355, 358; Stern v. State, 58 Ga. 229, 21 Am. Rep. 266; Birney v. State, 8 Ohio, 230; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; Hearne v. Garton, 2 El. & El. 66; Aberdare Local Board of Health v. Hammett, L. R. 10 Q. B. 162; Reg. v. Sleep, 8 Cox, C. C. 472, 12 Am. L. Rev. 469; Hopton v. Thirwall, 9 L. T. N. S. 827.

In the case at bar the statute is a statute not for the protection of public health or morals, and it cannot be construed in derogation of the common-law principle, but should be construed under the light of such principles; and the courts have never gone so far in the construction of such a statute as is necessary to convict in this case.

Bishop, Stat. Crimes, p. 357.

When the alleged short lobsters were seized they were in the possession of the respondent as a common carrier of merchandise from Maine, through Massachusetts, to New York for delivery to the consignee, and they were commerce among the several states, and as such were under the exclusive jurisdiction of congress. This state had no power over them.

State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 581, 83 Me. 160; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; State v. Burns, 32 Me. 558; Bennett v. American Exp. Co. 83 Me. 237, 18 L. R. A. 33; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 195, 6 L. ed. 70; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 631, 29 L. ed. 260; Mobile County v. Kimball, 103 U. S. 691, 36 L. ed. 238; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 828; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Huse, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527.

The police power of a state cannot obstruct foreign commerce or interstate commerce.

Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1016; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 13 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 564, 19 L. ed. 1001; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 577; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 572, 30 L. ed. 249; Ex parte Koehler, 25 Fed. Rep. 76.

20 L. R. A.

Mr. Frank W. Robinson, County Atty., for the State:

If the possession of the lobsters by the respondent was in violation of law, he was none the less guilty because they may have been taken from him wrongfully or illegally.

Guptill v. Richardson, 62 Me. 257; Com. v. Dana, 2 Met. 329.

Whether or not the law under discussion is constitutional as affecting lobsters brought into this state by a common carrier does not arise upon the facts in the present case.

Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123, 26 L. ed. 108; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 562, 35 L. ed. 577; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547.

A state has the authority to regulate the fisheries within its territorial tide waters.

McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; Com. v. Manchester, 9 L. R. A. 286, 152 Mass. 230; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 35 L. ed. 159; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 21, 32 L. ed. 850; Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 71, 15 L. ed. 269; Dunham v. Lamphere, 3 Gray, 268; Moulton v. Libbey, 87 Me. 472, 59 Am. Dec. 57; Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140.

As an incident to the right to regulate its fisheries, a state has the power to adopt enactments to prevent the unreasonable taking of fish, including shell-fish, and to render such legislation effective by suitable penalties.

Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 380; Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 74, 15 L. ed. 270; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 203, 6 L. ed. 71; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 504, 24 L. ed. 1116.

The intent of the statute under consideration is to protect lobsters and prevent their unreasonable destruction.

State v. Orsag, 80 Me. 88.

Legislation of the character mentioned is not in conflict with the interstate commerce provision of the Federal Constitution.

Corfield v. Coryell, supra; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Huse, 95 U. S. 471, 24 L. ed. 530; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 489, 31 L. ed. 708, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 828; Nathan v. Louisiana, 49 U. S. 8 How. 80, 13 L. ed. 995; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 285, 6 L. ed. 79; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 23, 32 L. ed. 851, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 293, 21 L. ed. 167.

Lobsters do not become articles of trade or commerce until lawfully removed under the regulations of the state.

Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371; Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 58, 27 L. ed. 378; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 18, 32 L. ed. 349, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232.

They do not become property in the hands of any person, unless possession is lawfully obtained.

James v. Wood, 8 L. R. A. 448, 83 Me. 177; Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. Cas. 631; American Exp. Co. v. People, 9 L. R. A. 188, 133 Ill. 649.

The state owns the tide waters and the fish in them, so far as they are capable of ownership while running.

McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 891, 24 L. ed. 248; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 189 U. S. 280, 35 L. ed. 165; Martin v. Waddell, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 410, 9 L. ed. 1012; Moulton v. Libbey, 87 Me. 472, 59 Am. Dec. 57; American Exp. Co. v. People, supra.

The carrier may refuse to receive packages offered without his being made acquainted with their contents, if there is good ground for believing that they contain anything of a dangerous character.

Crouch v. London & N. W. R. Co. 14 C. B. 291; Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 83; Robinson v. Baker, 5 Cush. 144, 51 Am. Dec. 54.

The state may prohibit transportation by a common carrier of lobsters illegally taken, and, a fortiori, the possession of such lobsters by a common carrier.

American Exp. Co. v. People, 9 L. R. A. 188, 188 Ill. 649; Bennett v. American Exp. Co. 18 L. R. A. 88, 88 Me. 236; Corsfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 880; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 18, 83 L. ed. 849, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 232; Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 58, 27 L. ed. 878.

It is competent for the legislature to make an act criminal regardless of the knowledge or motive of the doer of such act.

1 Whart. Crim. L. 9th ed. § 88; Halsted v. State, 41 N. J. L. 552, 33 Am. Rep. 247; State v. Hopkins, 56 Vt. 260.

Every man is conclusively presumed to know the law.

Com. v. Boynton, 2 Allen, 160.

Peters, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the proprietors of Swett's Express Company, and a cartman in the employment of the company, were tried on a criminal complaint against them for having in their possession 1,924 lobsters of less than 10½ inches in length.

The complaint was brought upon section 2 of chapter 293 of the Laws of 1889, which section reads as follows:

"It is unlawful to catch, buy, or sell, or expose for sale, or possess for any purposes, between the first day of July and the first day of the following May, any lobster less than 10½ inches in length, alive or dead, cooked or uncooked, measured in manner as follows: Taking the length of the back of the lobster, measured from the bone of the nose to the end of the bone of the middle flipper of the tail, the length to be taken with the lobster extended on the back its natural length; and any lobsters shorter than the prescribed length when caught, shall be liberated alive at the risk and cost of the parties taking them, under a penalty of one dollar for each lobster so caught, bought, sold, exposed for sale, or in possession, not so liberated."

There were twelve barrels of the lobsters, packed in the customary manner for shipment to New York. There was evidence tending to show that the respondents knew that the barrels contained lobsters, but no evidence that they knew, while the same were in their possession, that they were short lobsters. The barrels had been in their possession but a few moments before they were seized and carried away by a game and fish warden.

The counsel for the respondents asked for instructions appropriate to the positions of the defense, which were refused by the learned judge, who gave in their stead the following rulings:

"If these respondents did not know that the barrels intrusted to them contained lobsters of some length,—that is, if they were not aware that the barrels contained lobsters at all, even though they were constructively in their possession,—then they cannot be found guilty. But while a common carrier is obliged to receive all goods offered him for transportation, he is not obliged to receive into his possession such goods as the law forbids him to receive into his possession. He is not obliged to receive short lobsters for transportation, because the law prohibits the possession of them for any purpose. But, gentlemen, I will go a little further, and I instruct you that if a common carrier receives into his possession, for transportation or otherwise, lobsters,—that is, if he receives barrels which he knows contain lobsters,—then he is bound, in law, to know whether those lobsters are longer or shorter than 10½ inches, measured according to the statute; and if any such lobsters, as a matter of fact, are less than 10½ inches in length, then short lobsters are in his possession, within the meaning of the law, and he would be guilty of violating this statute.

"Now you apply these principles of law to the testimony in this case, taking up each one of these respondents. If the respondent Swett knew when he sent his team to Commercial wharf that it was to receive twelve barrels of lobsters, and, as matter of fact, it did receive twelve barrels of lobsters, then he was bound to know whether those lobsters were shorter than prescribed by the statute which I have read; he is bound to know it, in law; and if any of those lobsters were less than 10½ inches in length, measured according to the statute, they were in his possession, and you would be justified in finding a verdict against him. But if you have a reasonable doubt as to any of these facts, he is entitled to the benefit of it, and must be acquitted."

We are of the opinion that the law is not so exacting as these rulings would make it, and we feel clear that, if the respondents neither knew nor had good reason to believe that the barrels contained short lobsters, they should have been acquitted.

There are in our markets long as well as short lobsters,—legal as well as illegal lobsters. And it must be presumed that the legal constitute the vast bulk of those that are the subject of traffic and transportation. Therefore it may properly have been presumed by the respondents that the lobsters in question were of the length required by law, there being nothing indicating the contrary. The presumption is that the conduct of men will be in obedience to the requirements of the law, when a violation of such law constitutes a criminal offense. Legal lobsters and illegal lobsters are two distinct and independent things.

What inconveniences and risks would men be subjected to who are only in an indirect way connected with commerce in lobsters, or commerce in other articles as well, if the rule given in this case in behalf of the government should prevail! All subordinates in railroad corporations and express companies would be as much punishable for handling freight containing illegal lobsters as their principals would be, including such classes as agents, clerks, cartmen, porters, and employes of every grade and kind. There can be no distinction between the liabilities of the different classes of men engaged in exercising a control over the property. In fact, subordinates would be the persons usually to be caught in the net of the law. If a carrier who knows that packages delivered to him contain lobsters, not knowing whether they are long or short lobsters, transports them at his personal peril, his business will be profitless and hazardous as far as that kind of carriage is concerned. In such case the freight must be overhauled and examined, entailing a delay, and consequently an injury to such perishable property. How long would it probably have taken the employees of this express company to measure these 1,924 lobsters, "by taking the length of the back of the lobster, measured from the bone of the nose to the end of the bone of the middle flipper of the tail, the length to be taken with the lobster extended on its back its natural length?"

How much more reasonable would it be to relieve carriers of such extreme impositions, as long as they are not conniving with law-breakers, and to leave the work of discovering such infractions of the laws to fish and game wardens and other official detectives! The judge, in his charge in this case, said: "It is true, as claimed by the attorney for the respondent, that, if a package is offered to a carrier for transportation, he is not compelled by law to break open the package for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it contains contraband goods. A law requiring such strictness of examination would be an interference with the rights of shippers that would not be tolerated." Why do not these remarks apply here exactly? Why is not this a case where the argument of intolerable inconvenience applies as forcibly as in any other? The aim of the law is to attain only reasonable and practical results in all matters where public interests are concerned. If the respondents did not know, or have reason to believe, that the packages contained short lobsters, they were not under any obligation to explore and hunt as a detective would, to see if they might not perchance obtain such knowledge. Their possession was excusable, at least.

An appeal in behalf of the government is made to the doctrine of the courts that for some statutory offenses a person may be held, even though he be ignorant of the facts which constituted his offense. That principle is applied only in minor offenses, upon some ground of public policy, for the protection of society against abuses which cannot be prevented under any more liberal rule. But public policy requires the application of no such rigorous rule here, where an express carrier and his cartman could each be punished, if punished at all, in the sum of $1,924, for having in possession for from five to fifteen minutes a property for the carriage of which the company would have received the sum of only $6. We do not think that the facts of the case present a very meritorious complaint against the respondents, in any view of the law.

The authorities on this question are few, for the reason that hitherto extreme notions on the subject have not prevailed. The case of Bennett v. American Exp. Co., 83 Me. 286, 18 L. R. A. 83, is certainly in the direct line of the doctrine which we adopt in the present case. In the Nitro-Glycerine Case, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 31 L. ed. 206, it was held that no liability rests on a common carrier for injuries caused by dangerous explosives loaded on his ship, neither he nor his agent knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the materials were hazardous merchandise. In the opinion the pending question is quite elaborately discussed on authority and principle. The doctrine of that case was followed in State v. Goss, 59 Vt. 286, 59 Am. Rep. 706, where the agent of an express company was complained of for selling intoxicating liquors, because he received packages of liquors, and delivered them, and received money therefor for the shipper, the sale taking place at the date of such delivery. The court decided that the respondent could not be held unless he knew, or had good reason to believe, that the packages delivered by him contained intoxicating liquors. And the court, in closing its discussion in that case, says: "If, then, in the absence of suspicious appearances and circumstances, an express carrier is neither bound to know nor authorized to find out, as a condition of receiving it, what a package contains that is offered him for carriage, it would be strange to hold him guilty of a criminal offense because of the character of its contents; for in such case he is bound to carry, and is liable if he does not; and the law will not compel a man to act, and then punish him for acting."

Exceptions sustained.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Charles C. JUDSON, Exr., et al., Repts.,
v.

GIANT POWDER CO., Appt.

(107 Cal. 542.)

1. The risk of damages from a negligent explosion in a dynamite factory is not assumed by conveying land for use in that business, and by continuing to carry on business near by after one explosion has occurred.
2. An explosion of nitro-glycerine in process of manufacture into dynamite raises a presumption of negligence, in the absence of any explanation of the real cause of the explosion.

(June 28, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Alameda County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries caused by an explosion in defendant's manufactory. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Galpin & Zeigler and J. F. Cowdery, for appellant, in support of petition for rehearing:

An explosion having occurred which may have been occasioned either by accident or negligence, and there being no proof made by plaintiffs of any facts which tend to show which cause produced the result, have plaintiffs made out affirmative proof of negligence by establishing the existence of the explosion?

Does this presumption of negligence so overcome the contrary presumption of performance of duty and prudence, that plaintiffs can recover on the first mentioned presumption alone?

Will the presumption of negligence be raised in a case where all contrary evidence is impossible?

Will it in such case be raised in favor of one who has consented to take the hazard of an accidental explosion?

The only explosion case in this state in which this question has arisen was decided contrary to the decision of this case.

The Nitro-Glycerine Case, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206.

The opinion in the case at bar also overrules the well-considered cases of Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118; Thomp. Neg. 1227; Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 658; Daniel v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 3 C. P. 216; Campbell v. Bear River & A. Water & M. Co. 85 Cal. 679; Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co.

NOTE—Negligence in the manufacture and storage of gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, and other explosives.

I. General doctrine.

II. The effect of city ordinances.

III. Negligence in the manufacture.

IV. Negligence in the storage.

This note is limited to the question of negligence in the manufacture and storage of explosives in the strict sense of the term, and does not include that class of cases wherein the question of negligence has arisen by means of the insufficient packing of explosive articles for the purpose of transportation, in which the matter is one of liability as between the carrier and consignor and involves the question of notice.

Upon the question of liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas and natural gas, see notes to Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (Ohio) ante, 387 (1893); Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. Leap (Ind.) ante, 342 (1894); and McGahan v. Indianapolis Nat. Gas Co. (Ind.) ante, 355 (1894).

As to the duty of those engaged in blasting, with respect to the safety of others, see note to Blackwell v. Moorman (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 729 (1892).

I. General doctrine.

The general principles deducible from the cases upon this subject would seem to be that, if the manufacture or storage of explosives is such as to amount to a nuisance, either private or public, the party so manufacturing or storing the articles in question will be liable for all damages occasioned by or through an explosion thereof, even though he may not be guilty of negligence.

This doctrine is borne out by the cases of Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 151 Ill. 323, 7 L. R. A. 262 (1890); Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200, 208 (1888); Marine Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 643, 653 (1890); Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 206 (1870), affirmed 85 N. J. L. 374.

29 L. R. A.

But although the keeping of large quantities of explosive material in a building in a populous town or city may be a nuisance for the consequences of which the defendant may be held liable in damages, yet the fact whether it is such or not must depend upon locality, quantity of material stored, and other circumstances. Collins v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (Ala.) 61 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 229 (1894).

Where the facts showed that the defendants kept and used, in a thickly settled and populous neighborhood, a powder-house in which were stored large quantities of gunpowder, and that the house was stricken by lightning, the ignition of the powder causing an explosion which damaged the plaintiff's houses and property, and the question before the court was whether the erection of a powder magazine in a populous part of the city and keeping stored therein large quantities of gunpowder was per se a nuisance such as would render the defendants liable for the damages occasioned by the explosion, the court held that it was such a nuisance, and therefore defendants were liable. Chatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 213, 55 Am. Dec. 734 (1851).

So, it has been held that the fact that the defendant's establishment, in which he manufactured and stored gunpowder and other explosives, was outside of the territorial limits of the city, will not relieve the owner from responsibility, or alter the case, if the dangerous erection was in close contiguity with dwelling houses or buildings which might be injured or destroyed in case of an explosion; the fact that the magazine was liable to such a contingency, which could not be guarded against or averted by the greatest degree of vigilance, evincing its dangerous character, and, in some localities, rendering it a private nuisance; and in such cases the rule exonerating a party engaged in a lawful business when free from negligence has no application. Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 581, 38 Am. Rep. 654, 3 Abb. N. C. 355 (1890), reversing 16 Hun, 257 (1878).

In Lounsbury v. Foss, 30 Hun, 296 (1894), damages were sought to be recovered for the death of plain-98 Cal 268; Tompkins v. Clay Street R. Co. 66 Cal. 163.

The very latest expression of the New York court of appeals is directly at variance with the opinion of this court in the present case.

Booth v. Rome, W. & O. T. R. Co. 140 N. Y. 267, 24 L. R. A. 105.

In actions like the present the burden of proving that the injury complained of was caused by the defendant's negligence lies on the plaintiff.

Holbrook v. Utica & S. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 243, 64 Am. Dec. 502.

There are many cases cited in the opinion where the circumstances connected with the event are such that the event cannot be attributed to any other cause than negligence, and in such case the presumption would arise in great part because of the ease with which the defendant could rebut the presumption by proof that the result was attributable to accident alone.

Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 732; Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 8 Hurlst. & C. 596; Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 580.

The next class of cases cited in the opinion relates to defects in machinery, viz., the bursting of boilers.

tiff's intestate, caused by an explosion at the defendant's dynamite works. The court held that the case came within the principles laid down by that court in Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279 (1849), Tremain v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 163, 51 Am. Dec. 284 (1849), and Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 232, 41 Am. Dec. 744 (1884), and was controlled by the principles laid down in the case of Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 581, 86 Am. Rep. 654 (1890), which latter case decided that the keeping of gunpowder or other explosive materials in a place where or under circumstances whereby they will be liable, in case of an explosion, to injure the dwelling houses or the persons of those residing in close proximity, constitutes a private nuisance for which the person so keeping them is liable to respond in damages in case of injury resulting therefrom, without regard to the question whether he is chargeable with carelessness or negligence or not.

And the person so keeping it will be liable, even though the act causing the explosion is due to other persons and is not chargeable to his personal negligence. McAndrews v. Colliard, 42 N. J. L. 189, 192, 36 Am. Rep. 508 (1890).

The fact that the explosion destroyed plaintiff's buildings shows that the keeping of powder in a magazine, considered with reference to the locality, the quantity, and the surrounding circumstances, constitutes a nuisance per se, which will entitle the plaintiff to recover damages for an explosion injuring his property. Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 121 Ill. 322, 7 L. R. A. 232 (1890).

And the fact that the defendant's powder magazine exploded is sufficient to show that it was dangerous, in order to entitle a plaintiff to recover for damages occasioned to his person or property by reason of such explosion. Ibid.

In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by an explosion of gunpowder, it should be left to the jury to determine whether, from the dangerous character of the business, the proximity to other buildings, and all the facts proved upon the trial, the defendant was chargeable with maintaining a private nuisance such as would render him liable for the damages occasioned by the explosion.

29 L. R. A.

The precautions to be taken to prevent their bursting and the tests to be applied are all so well understood that the bursting of a boiler cannot well be a matter of accident.

The next class of cases referred to is that of sparks escaping from locomotive engines. The same principle might be applied here as to boilers.

Is it the experience of mankind that powder mills seldom explode? On the contrary, do we not read every week in the newspapers of some powder-mill explosion?

But without this judicial knowledge of harmlessness and safety of the manufacture of dynamite, you cannot reach the result that a given explosion is occasioned by carelessness.

Can the court take judicial knowledge of the safety of the process of manufacturing dynamite when the opposite of the judicial knowledge is proved as a fact in the case?

The record contradicts the judicial knowledge of the long-continued harmless manufacture of dynamite in this factory, for this record shows that this factory has exploded two or three times before this, thereby giving to the defendant that notice which, it is admitted, he received. Do not these repeated prior explosions destroy the ground-work of a presumption based on long-continued safe manufacture?

If this presumption is to be raised in favor of the general public, is it to be raised in favor Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579, 581, 86 Am. Rep. 654, 8 Abb. N. C. 355 (1890), reversing 16 Hun, 257 (1878).

And in Lee v. Vacuum Oil Co., 54 Hun, 158, 162 (1890), it is stated that the rule is of uniform application that while a man may prosecute such business as he chooses on his own premises, he has no right to erect and maintain a nuisance to the injury of an adjacent proprietor or of his neighbors, even in pursuit of a lawful trade.

Whether or not the keeping of such materials constitutes a nuisance per se for which damages can be recovered, depends in each case upon the locality, the quantity, and the surrounding circumstances, the question being left to the jury under proper instructions from the court. Lounsbury v. Foss, 80 Hun, 296 (1894); Lee v. Vacuum Oil Co., supra.

The act of keeping a large quantity of gunpowder in a wooden building insufficiently secured and situated near other buildings, thereby endangering the business of persons residing in the vicinity, has been held to amount to a public nuisance; and if an explosion occurs in consequence of the burning of such building, and an individual is wounded or injured thereby, an action will lie for damages against the party maintaining such nuisance, and the latter will be liable, even though the fire was not occasioned by his negligence. Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 232, 41 Am. Dec. 744 (1884).

The principles enunciated by the court in People v. Sunda, 1 Johns. 78, 3 Am. Dec. 298 (1806), and Myers v. Malcolm, supra, were approved of by the court in Bradley v. People, 56 Barb. 72, 73 (1866), in which case the defendants were indicted for erecting and maintaining a powder house and storing therein large quantities of powder near dwelling houses, thereby endangering the lives of persons.

The manufacturing of powder and other explosives, and storing the same on premises near two railroads and the public road, is a public nuisance, and a party injured by an explosion of such powder may recover damages without proof of negligence in the operation of such business. Wilson v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. (W. Va.) 21 S. E. Rep. 1035 (1895).

of every person? Suppose an action brought by the relatives of one of the employes who was killed by this explosion. Could the plaintiff, in such case, recover upon showing merely the existence of the explosion?

It is certain that he could not recover if the explosion occurred from spontaneous combustion, or other uncontrollable accident.

Thomas v. Quartermaine, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 697; Fearn v. West Jersey Ferry Co. 143 Pa. 122, 18 L. R. A. 866; Jacksonville Street R. Co. v. Chappell, 21 Fla. 175; Potts v. Chicago City R. Co. 83 Fed. Rep. 610; Federal Street & P. Valley R. Co. v. Gibson, 96 Pa. 88; Quinlan v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 4 Daly, 488; Central Pass. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 86 Ky. 578; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. MacKinney, 124 Pa. 462, 2 L. R. A. 820; Hayman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 118 Pa. 508; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Napheys, 90 Pa. 185; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 229; Le Barron v. East Boston Ferry Co. 11 Allen, 812, 87 Am. Dec. 717.

These plaintiffs sold the property where the explosion occurred to this powder company for the purpose of having it used for the manufacture of dynamite.

It was not seriously contended, and could not be, that plaintiffs did not voluntarily subject themselves to all the accidents of the business.

Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 89 W. Va.

No amount of care can exempt a party from liability for damages occasioned by the carrying on of a dangerous business, although such business may be in itself lawful, when carried on in a public place so as to become a public nuisance, and in such cases it makes no difference whether the business is carefully or negligently conducted and managed, negligence not being in such cases a material element, as the plaintiff is injured by that which breaks the law made for his protection. Ibid.

The principles enunciated in the above case of Wilson v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co., supra, were approved of by the court in Huntington & K. Land D. Co. v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. (W. Va.) 21 S. E. Rep. 1097 (1896).

It has been held that the keeping of explosives unsecurely guarded, in such quantities as to be dangerous to persons and property, near a frequented street or other public place of business of others, under circumstances that threatens calamity to the person or property of others, the consequence being an explosion causing damage to the person or property of another, will give the latter a right of action to recover from the person keeping the explosives for such damage as would not have happened in the absence of such articles. Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 200, 208 (1888).

In the above case, however, the court was of opinion that the mere fact of keeping the articles in question, of itself, gave no right of action, the question being one of fact whether the damage was the proximate consequence of such keeping, and therefore one for the jury. Ibid.

Negligence in the keeping of gunpowder or other explosive materials, or in the manner of keeping it, is requisite in order to impose a liability to answer in damages for injuries caused by an accidental explosion or fire, which it is incumbent upon the party affirming it to prove. Collins v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (Ala.) 61 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 399 (1894).

So, if the business in question is located in a secluded spot, and is removed from highways, and is in itself a lawful business, it is not a public nuisance. L. R. A.

196, 28 L. R. A. 674; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 111 Ill. 363.

Messrs. Page, Eells & Wheeler for respondents.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Respondents recovered judgment for the sum of $41,164.75, as damages for acts of negligence. This appeal is prosecuted from such judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The damages to respondents' property were occasioned by an explosion of nitro-glycerine in process of manufacture into dynamite, in appellant's powder factory, situated upon the shore of the bay of San Francisco. Appellant's factory buildings were arranged around the slope of a hill facing the bay. Nearest to respondents' property was the nitro-glycerine house; next was the washing house; next were the mixing houses; then came the packing houses; and finally the two magazines used for storing dynamite. These various buildings were situated from 50 to 150 feet apart, and a tramway ran in front of them. The explosion occurred in the morning during working hours, and originated in the nitro-glycerine house. There followed within a few moments of time, in regular order, the explosion of the other buildings, and therefore, before a party can recover for damages to his property caused by the explosion, he must prove negligence on the defendant's part. Wilson v. Phoenix Powder Mfg. Co. supra.

In cases, however, where the manufacture and storage of such articles is a lawful business and does not amount to a nuisance, the plaintiff must prove negligence on the defendant's part before he can recover.

In a case where defendant's business was lawful, it was held that the law does not in its conduct impose the obligation of saving others harmless from the consequences of the occurrence of inevitable accidents, but burdens it simply with the duty of using reasonable care and caution to save others from injury. Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118 (1890).

If, in the exercise of a lawful business, the owner omits that duty and fails to observe the ordinary care incumbent upon him, then he, because of such neglect, becomes legally chargeable with the damages resulting therefrom, but not otherwise. Ibid.

The existence of negligence in such cases is an affirmative fact to be established by the party alleging it as a foundation of his right, and it is incumbent upon him to point out by evidence the defendant's fault, the presumption being, until the contrary appears, that every man has performed his duty. Ibid.

It has been held in such actions that in determining whether the plaintiff has sustained the burden of establishing negligence, it is necessary to inquire whether an inference of the fact of negligence can be drawn from other facts proved; if it can a presumption of the fact of negligence is permissible, and embraces, not only the doing or omitting to do the thing complained of, but also the relation of the parties,—that is, whether, in that which he did or omitted to do, defendant failed to discharge some duty owing to the plaintiff. Ibid.

The fact that the injury sustained may have been the direct result of a fire which originated upon defendant's premises will not of itself render defend-the two magazines coming last; but, though last, they were not least, for their explosion caused the entire downfall and destruction of respondents' factory, residences, and stock on hand. There is no question but what the cause of this series of explosions following the first is directly traceable, by reason of fire or concussion, to the nitro-glycerine explosion. Of the many employes of appellant engaged in and about the nitro-glycerine factory at the time of the disaster, none were left to tell the tale. Hence any positive testimony as to the direct cause of the explosion is not to be had. The witnesses who saw and knew, like all things else around, save the earth itself, were scattered to the four winds.

1. Respondents sold the premises to appellant for the manufacture of dynamite, and it is claimed that the maxim volenti non fit injuria applies, and therefore no recovery can be had. We attach but little importance to this contention. The grant of these premises for the purposes of a dynamite factory in no way carried to appellant the right to conduct its factory as against the grantors in any and every way it might see fit. There is no principle of law sustaining such a proposition. Let it be conceded that respondents, by reason of their grant, could not invoke the aid of a court of equity to prevent the appellant from conducting its business; still that concession proves nothing. This action is not based upon the theory that appellant's business is a nuisance per se, but negligence in the manner in which the business was conducted was alleged in the complaint, and is now insisted upon as having been proved at the trial. In making the grant, respondents had a right to assume that due care would be exercised in the conduct of the business, and certainly they have a right to demand that such care be exercised. It is argued that the explosion of all powder works is a mere matter of time; that such explosions are necessarily contemplated by every one who builds beside such works, or who brings dynamite into his dooryard. It is further contended that appellant gave to respondents actual notice of the dangerous character of its business by a previous explosion which damaged respondents' property, and that respondents, by still continuing in business after such notice, in a degree assumed and ratified the risk, and cannot now be heard to complain. The only element of strength in this line of argument is its originality. The contention that, in the ordinary course of events, all powder factories explode, conceding such to be the fact, presents an element foreign to the case. The doctrine of fatalism is not here involved. In the ordinary course of events the time for this explosion had not ant liable to respond in damages therefor. So held in an action to recover damages sustained by the burning of plaintiff's vessel through the alleged negligence of the defendant, the owner and manager of a petroleum refinery, the plaintiff's vessel lying at a wharf adjoining the same, the evidence showing that the oil in defendant's premises took fire, a quantity of it while burning flowing down a pipe which was connected with the lighter laden with petroleum moored at the wharf, when an explosion occurred, the burning oil and sticks being thrown upon plaintiff's vessel, the court upholding the court below and affirming a nonsuit. Ibid.

The explosion of nitro-glycerine in a gas well on a person's own land, used to increase the natural flow, is not an unlawful interference with the rights of other persons from whose land the gas is thereby drawn. People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 181 Ind. 277, 18 L. R. A. 448 (1902).

And the burden of proof in such cases is on the plaintiff. Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 656 (1897); Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118 (1890).

The plaintiff is bound to show that the explosion was caused solely by the fault of the defendant, as verdicts must stand upon evidence, and not upon mere conjectures, however plausible. Babcock v. Fitchburg R. Co. 140 N. Y. 303, 311 (1896).

Where the only evidence that the jury had was that an explosion occurred which damaged the plaintiff's property, the court held that there was no question to be submitted to them. Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. supra.

In an action to recover damages occasioned by an explosion of gunpowder kept by the defendant upon his premises in large quantities, the plaintiff can only charge actual damages. Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill, 222, 41 Am. Dec. 744 (1854).

In an action to recover compensation for injuries sustained by an explosion of fireworks kept by defendant upon his premises, evidence that other explosions and fires had occurred on premises kept by other persons is inadmissible, where it is in no way connected with the issue, and there is no proof that the conditions were similar. Fillo v. Jones, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 121, 123 (1898).

In Lee v. Vacuum Oil Co., 54 Hun, 154, 162 (1890), damages were claimed for the death of plaintiff's intestate caused by the explosion of defendant's pipes through which was conveyed naphtha to a gas company, the pipes having been damaged by a third party and not repaired by the defendant, the naphtha escaping and causing an explosion. The court held that, as it was no more dangerous to life or property to convey naphtha in a strong and secure pipe through a populous city than it was to distribute manufactured or natural gas by such means, such method of conveyance was not a nuisance per se for which the defendant could be made liable, and that negligence, which was a question for the jury, must be proved.

II. The effect of city ordinances.

If the defendant has carried on the manufacture or storage of such articles upon premises in violation of a city ordinance, his act has been declared a nuisance, for which he will be liable in damages to all parties injured in consequence of his malfeasance.

Thus, the maintenance by defendant of a powder magazine containing a large quantity of powder within the city limits, in violation of the city charter or ordinance, was declared a nuisance, and such defendant was held liable for the injuries resulting to the plaintiff from its explosion. Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, 58 Fed. Rep. 152, 156 (1893).

And this for the reason that in keeping a powder magazine in a town without complying with the conditions named in the ordinance a defendant is guilty of malfeasance. Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 181 Ill. 522, 7 L. R. A. 235 (1890).

The New Jersey Statute (Rev. Stat. pp. 264, 266) prohibits the keeping in store within a quarter of a mile of any town, etc., quantities of nitro-glycerine or of gunpowder in larger quantities than a specified amount, and makes the violation of the prohibition in either case a misdemeanor, and if the nuisance is of a public nature no degree of arrived, and appellant had no legal right to hasten that event by its negligent acts. Neither do we think respondents lost any legal rights by continuing to do business in this locality after being served with notice of the danger that surrounded them. While the notice was in the form of an object lesson which came to them in no uncertain tones, yet appellant was not justified in serving it, nor were respondents negligent in disregarding it. Respondents were not bound to abandon their property, though negligence of appellant in the conduct of its factory was ever a menace and danger to their lives and property. Conceding that respondents, by their grant, thereby assumed certain risks and dangers which may be said to always surround the manufacture of dynamite, still they assumed no risks and waived no action for damages which might arise through appellant's negligence. Both reason and authority support this conclusion.

2. It is contended that respondents offered no evidence tending to show that the explosion of the nitro-glycerine factory was occasioned by the negligence of appellant, and this contention brings us to the consideration of a most important principle of law. In addition to the fact of an explosion being established, the respondents offered expert testimony to the effect that if the factory was properly conducted, and the employees careful during the process of manufacturing, an explosion would not occur. For the present we lay aside the evidence of the experts, and meet squarely and directly the question presented: Does the proof of the explosion draw with it a presumption of negligence sufficient to establish a prima facie case for a recovery? While the cases are not in entire accord in holding that a presumption of negligence arises from the fact of the explosion, still they largely preponderate upon that side, and we think but few well-considered cases can be found looking the other way. All courts agree that, where contractual relations exist between the parties, as in cases of common carriers, proof of the accident carries with it the presumption of negligence, and makes a prima facie case. This proposition is elementary and uncontradicted. Therefore the citation of authority is unnecessary. Yet we know of no sound reason, and have found none stated in the books, why this principle of presumptions should be applicable to cases involving contractual relations, and inapplicable to cases where no contractual relations exist. It is intimated in some Indiana case that the presumption arises upon proof of the accident by reason of the carrier's contract to safely deliver the passenger at his destination, but there is no such contract.

care will relieve from liability to respond for damages arising from it. McAndrews v. Collier, 42 N. J. L. 189, 192, 36 Am. Rep. 508 (1880).

It is no defense to such an action that the magazine was properly constructed and the powder carefully stored, and that the explosion was due to no personal negligence of the defendant or its agent, and such defendant is liable for the injuries resulting from its explosion from any cause, because its location, under the ordinance, made it a nuisance. Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, supra.

So it is no defense to an action to recover damages for an explosion of a powder magazine kept within the city limits in violation of a city ordinance, to prove that the plaintiff knew the danger he incurred in living near the magazine, and was therefore guilty of contributory negligence, the plaintiff not being driven to the alternative of abandoning his house or releasing the defendant from all claim of damages for the injuries he might sustain by reason of the maintenance of such a nuisance. Ibid.

Where the defendant's magazine was located on a lot of a smaller size than that required by the town ordinance, which prohibited the keeping of a powder magazine, or place for storing or keeping gunpowder or other explosive material, except such as were located upon a lot of a certain size and area; and the defendant claimed that the injury to the plaintiff's property was not caused by the violation of such ordinance, which imposed no liability upon the defendant,—the court held that the keeping of the gunpowder in the town was an illegal act, for all consequences of which the defendant was responsible, inasmuch as, if the magazine had not been where it was, the explosion would not have taken place and the injury to plaintiff's property would not have resulted, the ordinance absolutely prohibiting any powder magazine from being kept within the town except as therein specified. Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, supra.

Where the evidence showed that the article (petroleum) which was alleged to have caused the damage complained of came into the defendant's possession and was kept in its building simply for the purposes of transportation, the court held that the question whether or not the city ordinance applied to such a keeping or storing must depend upon its terms and the objects sought to be accomplished. Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 27 Ill. App. 300, 306 (1888).

The first clause of the ordinance in question made it unlawful to store or keep for sale within the city any crude petroleum in larger quantities than specified; the second clause related to the keeping for sale or the storage of any refined carbon oil, etc., except such as would stand a certain test; the third clause to the keeping of such articles in excess of a certain quantity in any part of a building except a cellar, etc.; and the fourth clause to the keeping or storing of crude petroleum, etc., in front of any dwelling or on any street, alley, wharf, lot, or sidewalk, for a longer time than was sufficient to receive it in store, or to deliver the same, such time not to exceed six hours. The court held that the third clause really prohibited the keeping by any person or corporation, except as therein specified, and that no exception was made in favor of a railroad company keeping the articles for purposes of transportation, the oils enumerated being just as dangerous to life and property when in possession of a railroad for the purpose of removing it from the city, as in the hands of a shipper. Ibid.

With reference to the fourth clause of the ordinance referred to in the above case, the court held that the court did not intend in using the words "store" and "storage" to confine the ordinance to the keeping in a store for hire, the design being to guard life and property against the dangers incident to the accumulation of large quantities of such inflammable substances, and that to permit railroad companies to ignore the ordinance would amount to a practical denial of the protection intended, the danger being the same whether the keeping is paid for or not, and whether kept for sale or for hire. Ibid.

In that case, however, the court held that the mere fact of keeping the oils in its building, although prohibited by the city ordinance, gave no

The carrier is not an insurer of his passenger. If he were, this presumption of negligence arising from the accident, aside from the act of God, would be conclusive and irrebuttable; but such is not the fact, for it is only prima facie and always disputable. As was well said by the court in Rose v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 438: "Undoubtedly the presumption has been more frequently applied in cases against carriers of passengers than in any other class, but there is no foundation in authority or in reason for any such limitation of the rule of evidence. The presumption originates from the nature of the act, not from the nature of the relations between the parties." The carrier's contract with his passenger is simply to exercise a certain degree of care in his transportation. It is a duty which the law enjoins upon him; but the law also enjoins the duty upon this appellant and all others, in the conduct of their business, to exercise a certain degree of care towards this respondent and all mankind. The duty which the law enjoins in the two cases only differs in the degree of care to be exercised. The principle of law involved is wholly the same; and, as has been said, the reason of the rule is not found in the relations existing between the party injuring and the party injured. The presumption arises from the inherent nature and character of the act causing the injury. Presumptions arise from the doctrine of probabilities. The future is measured and weighed by the past, and presumptions are created from the experience of the past. What has happened in the past, under the same conditions will probably happen in the future, and ordinary and probable results will be presumed to take place until the contrary is shown. Based upon the foregoing principles, a rule of law has been formulated, bearing upon a certain class of cases, where damages either to person or property form the foundation of the action. This rule is well declared in Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (sec. 60): "When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." Tested by this rule, no question of contractual relation could ever form an element in the case. With the same reason it might as well be said that cases of contract were excluded from the effect of the rule, as that cases of pure tort were excluded; but, upon the contrary, it is plainly evident that both classes of actions right of action, it still being a question of fact whether the damage alleged was a proximate consequence of such keeping, the question still being one for the jury. Ibid.

Where, however, it was not claimed that the keeping and storing of fireworks in contravention of the city ordinance was for that reason alone such an unlawful act as to bring the case within the statute authorizing a recovery for a death caused by an explosion, it was held necessary for plaintiff to show, either that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the mode of keeping and storing or handling such articles, or that such keeping and storing were of themselves an unlawful act at common law, because a common nuisance dangerous to human life. Fillo v. Jones, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 121, 123 (1888).

So where, in an action against a railroad company to recover for damage caused by an explosion, it was not shown that there was any city ordinance against the storing of powder in its depot for the purpose of delivering it to the consignee, and the goods in question arrived the day before the explosion, of which fact the consignee was duly notified on the morning of the day of the explosion; and the evidence showed that the company was careful to preserve the goods against accident in a house built for that purpose and carefully guarded, and that the explosion occurred through the act of an employé, behind in his accounts, who set fire to the building for the purpose of hiding his defaults,—the court held the company was not liable for the damages occasioned by such explosion. Collins v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (Ala.) 61 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 229 (1894).

III. Negligence in the manufacture.

In McKain v. Elkin, 27 Pittsb. L. J. 169, it was held that the manufacturer of an explosive oil, selling it for illuminating purposes, was liable for injuries sustained by a person using the same.

Negligence in the manufacture of an illuminating oil may be inferred from the fact of its flashing and igniting at a temperature lower than that ordinarily used by people in their houses, so as to render the defendant liable in an action for damages occasioned by an explosion. Ibid.

In Nichols v. Brush & D. Mfg. Co., 53 Hun, 187 (1889), damages were sought for causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate by an explosion, while engaged in the employment of the defendant engaged in the manufacture of crude oil. The facts showed that in the process of distillation a large amount of gas was generated, some of which was used for fuel and the remainder escaped into the running-room, which was at all times dangerous if a lighted lamp was brought there when the machinery was in operation. The court held that, if the accident could have been prevented by the exercise of proper care on the defendant's part, it was negligence in the master, the defendant, not to have avoided the danger, and that, if the deceased had the right to assume the performance of such duty, there was no ground on which he could be charged with negligence contributing to the injury.

In Yates v. Southwestern Brush E. L. & P. Co., 40 La. Ann. 467 (1888), damages were claimed for injuries received while in the performance of a duty, the injuries being occasioned by the explosion of a metal pipe through which an electric wire passed, conveying electricity into the building for lighting purposes. The defendants were held liable under the provisions of the Louisiana code, which declare that "every act whatever of man, that occasions damage to another, obliges him through whose fault it happened to repair it," and "every person is responsible for the damage he occasions, not merely by his act, but by his negligence, imprudence, or want of skill," and, "we are responsible, not only for the damage occasioned by our own act, but for that which is caused by . . . the things which we have in our custody."

The proximate cause of the accident in the above case was the insufficiency of the fuse catches, either in number or capacity, to break the circuit and cut off the flow of electricity from an arc wire on the outside of the building. Ibid.

In the following cases no negligence was proved against the defendants:

In Collins v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 18

come equally within its provisions. In speaking on this question, it is said in Cooley on Torts (p. 799): "The rule applied to carriers of passengers is not a special rule, to govern only their conduct, but is a general rule which may be applied wherever the circumstances impose upon one party alone the obligation of special care." The author then cites the case of a householder engaged in repairing his roof. A piece of slate falls therefrom, and injures a traveler upon the street. He then says: "True, the act of God, or some excusable accident may have caused the slate to fall, but the explanation should come from the party charged with the special duty of protection."

The important question here involved, and the want of harmony in the decisions of courts bearing upon it, seem to demand a citation somewhat in detail of the many authorities which hold against appellant's views of the law. In England the authorities are in entire accord. Plaintiff was passing along a highway, under a railroad bridge, when a brick used in the construction of the bridge fell and injured him. Negligence in the railroad was presumed. Kearney v. London, E. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411. A barrel of flour rolled out of the window of a warehouse, injuring a person passing upon the street. Negligence in the warehouseman was presumed. Byrns v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 732. The same rule was declared upon a similar state of facts in Scott v. London & St. R. Docks Co. 8 Hurlst. & C. 596; likewise in Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403. The explosion of a boiler of a steamboat is prima facie evidence of negligence. Posey v. Scooville, 10 Fed. Rep. 140; Rose v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 438; Grimley v. Hankins, 46 Fed. Rep. 400. In the Rose Case it is said: "In the present case the boiler which exploded was in the control of the employes of the defendant. As boilers do not usually explode when they are in a safe condition, and are properly managed, the inference that this boiler was not in a safe condition, or was not properly managed, was justifiable." The same general principle is declared in Cummings v. National Furnace Co. 60 Wis. 603; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24; Kirst v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 46 Wis. 489; Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156; Hovser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154. In the case of Dixon v. Plums, 98 Cal. 385, 20 L. R. A. 695 (a case which in its facts is an exact photograph of one of the New York

Ky. L. Rep. 670 (1892), damages were claimed for the death of plaintiff's intestate, an employe of the railroad company, through the latter's negligence in constructing and maintaining gas works of an imperfect and dangerous character upon its premises. The facts showed that the deceased was killed by an explosion of gas while assisting as in duty bound, in the extinguishment of a fire in the gas house, the negligence charged being that the company used tar roofing instead of metal in the construction of the roofing of the gas house and in the building of the gas reservoirs. The court held that such facts were not sufficient to charge the company with wilful negligence for which alone they could be held liable, the case not being one of a claim for an injury to an employe, but for his death.

So, in Benfield v. Vacuum Oil Co., 75 Hun, 209 (1894), plaintiff sought to recover damages for injuries occasioned while in the defendant's employ engaged in the manufacture of oil, the injuries complained of being occasioned by an explosion of gas in a tank in which paraffine oil was being heated, the facts showing the plaintiff himself caused the accident through bringing a lighted lantern in contact with the substance in the tank when raising the lid. The court held the defendant not liable, no negligence on its part being proved.

IV. Negligence in the storage.

In the following cases the defendants were held liable for negligence in the storage of the articles:

Where the foreman of the defendant company stored explosives, consisting of powder and dynamite, in a shop, without the permission of the plaintiff, in order to preserve the same for the benefit of his master, promising to remove the same before the plaintiff came to work the next morning, and plaintiff was injured in consequence of sparks igniting such powder while in the pursuit of his business without first ascertaining whether the explosives had been removed according to the foreman's promise, the court held the defendant liable, and that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Birmingham Water-Works Co. v. Hubbard, 55 Ala. 179 (1887).
39 L. R. A.

The question for determination in the above case was whether the act of the foreman, which produced the injury, incidentally grew out of the authority conferred upon him by the defendant as his master, and whether such act would fairly and reasonably be implied as an act authorized to be done by the servant in the master's absence and in a given emergency in the furtherance of his business, the court holding that if the act of the foreman was bona fide in the preservation or furtherance of the master's interest the defendant was liable, but if it were done to further the interest of the foreman himself the defendant was not liable. Ibid.

In Denver, S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Conway, 8 Colo. 1, 54 Am. Rep. 587 (1884), damages were claimed by reason of the burning of defendant's building and the explosion of gunpowder therein contained, through the negligence of the defendant, who had notice of a defective flue and that the building was therefore unsafe and liable to take fire, and also that the plaintiff's property was in close proximity, notwithstanding which he carelessly and negligently stored giant powder and explosive caps in the building, thereby occasioning the explosion and injuring the plaintiff. The court held the company liable, inasmuch as artificial persons, like natural ones, are liable in damages for acts of negligence imputable to them whereby injuries result to third parties, a corporation acting through its officers and employes, who, in the exercise of their respective functions and to that extent, represent the corporation, the rules and principles of law applicable to the relation of master and servant applying equally to corporations and their agents, the damages resulting from the negligence of both classes of persons being measured in the same manner.

So in Ladlin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 7 L. R. A. 223 (1890), where the action was brought to recover damages to plaintiff's premises resulting from the explosion of defendant's powder magazine, the plaintiff's buildings and the defendant's magazine being located in close proximity to each other, the latter being situated so as to inflict serious injury upon the plaintiff's person or property in case of an explosion, the court cases hereafter cited), a chisel, used by a workman upon a building, fell upon and injured a girl while passing upon the street below. It was held that a prima facie case of negligence was established, and that the rule as declared in section 60 of Shearman and Redfield on Negligence was sound law and controlling.

While there is some discord existing in the New York authorities as to the true doctrine upon this question, still they are largely in line with the cases we have above cited. Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530, is a leading case upon the question, and, while it has been vigorously assailed at various times during the past twenty years, it still stands as a declaration of law by the courts of that state, not weakened and mutilated by such assaults, but rather strengthened and unscathed. In Cahalin v. Cochran, 1 N. Y. S. R. 593, negligence was inferred from the fact of a chisel falling from a building where workmen were engaged, and striking plaintiff when walking upon the street. A case to the same effect is Goll v. Manhattan R. Co., 25 Jones & S. 74. Mullen v. St. John is expressly approved, and the doctrine for which we are here contending ratified to its full limits, in the very recent case of Volkmar v. Manhattan R. Co., 184 N. Y. 418.

As supporting a contrary doctrine, one of the leading cases is Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232. Yet in the report of that case we find the following language: "At the same time, the fact that there was an explosion, which is not an ordinary incident of the use of a steam boiler, ought to have some weight, inasmuch as it may be out of the power of the aggrieved party in some instances to prove any more. The reasonable rule would seem to be that laid down by Judge Wallace: 'That from the mere fact of an explosion it is competent for the jury to infer, as a proposition of fact, that there was some negligence in the management of the boiler, or some defect in its condition.'" Another case is Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 886, a case which relies for support in part upon Loose v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623. Yet in Mullen v. St. John the Loose Case was expressly held to be not in point by reason of the presence of other evidence. Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co., 122 N. Y. 118, is the latest authority to which our attention has been directed holding these views. It cites the Tennessee and Ohio cases, and also relies, as do others of these cases, upon a general held that such magazine was a private nuisance, and that therefore the defendant was liable whether the powder was carefully kept or not, the question of care or want of care not being involved in an action for injuries resulting from a nuisance; and that if actual injury resulted from the keeping of the gunpowder the person keeping it was liable therefor, even though the explosion was not chargeable to his personal negligence.

Again, where the evidence showed that the explosion of oils was the probable and proximate consequence of the keeping and storing of the same in an inflammable frame building through whose cracks sparks, falling from any passing locomotive, might at any time have started a fire, the court held that the danger might have been foreseen by any person of average intelligence, and that therefore the defendant was liable, and that it was not necessary to prove that the fire itself might have been foreseen, nor that the defendant should have anticipated the loss from any particular source, if the circumstances were such that defendant should reasonably have been aware of the danger caused by the sparks of an engine, the burning of any other building or structure in the vicinity, or the carelessness of any other person; the court in that case not being able to say as a matter of law that the oils had not been kept an unreasonable time. Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 27 Ill. App. 200, 211 (1888).

And again, in Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154 (1884), damages were claimed for injury caused by the negligence of defendant's servant in leaving a dynamite cartridge in a common packing box upon the premises, part of the premises having been leased by defendant to the plaintiff, over which the plaintiff and his firm had a right of way, the cartridge exploding and injuring the plaintiff's child. The court held the defendant liable, even though the box in which the cartridge was found was labeled "powder," neither the plaintiff nor his child being able to read, there being no contributory negligence on their part.

In McAndrews v. Collier, 42 N. J. L. 150, 122, 36 Am. Rep. 508 (1880), a railroad company had legislative authority to construct a tunnel and contracted with the defendant to do the work. The defendant constructed, within the limits of a city, a magazine for the explosive material used in blasting the rock, and, while the magazine was maintained there by such defendant for the purposes of such construction, the materials exploded in the night-time and damaged the surrounding property, among which were houses belonging to plaintiff. The court, in an action for damages, held that the authority vested in the company did not include authority to use materials of a dangerous nature which would jeopardize the person or property of others, although such materials might be necessary for the work, the legislative authority being no protection against a private action for damages arising from a nuisance,—following the doctrine laid down in Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279 (1849); Tremain v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 163, 51 Am. Dec. 284 (1849).

So in Allison v. Western N. C. R. Co., 64 N. C. 383 (1870), where a number of slaves were assigned a room for living purposes in which, unknown to them, there was an open keg of powder under their sleeping bunk, while one of such slaves was in search of his bat with a lighted torch the powder exploded and injured him. It was held the company was liable for negligence as bailee for the injuries caused to the slave by reason of such explosion, though the bailee did not know of the presence of the powder, the same having been placed there by his servant in the course of his employment, and that it made no difference that the servant was not the immediate servant of the bailee, but the servant of contractors who were the agents of the bailee.

Again, in Tissue v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 112 Pa. 91, 56 Am. Rep. 810 (1886), where the dynamite magazine, from the explosion of which plaintiff's intestate lost his life, was placed in the position which it occupied by the direction of the superintendent of the work upon the defendant railroad, the court held that, so far as it concerned subordinate employees, it was the act of the corporation itself, and could not be attributed to any of the fellow servants of the deceased, and that therefore the company was liable, as, although it was true that the master did not warrant the absolute safety of those he employed to do his work, yet he was bound to statement, found in Thompson on Negligence (p. 237), namely: "But it is believed that it is never true, except in contractual relations, that the proof of the mere fact that the accident happened to the plaintiff, without more, will amount to evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant." The case cited by Mr. Thompson in no way supports this text, if the text is to be construed as the Conlitch Case seems to construe it, and the learned author's illustrations, which immediately follow, conclusively indicate that, in making the statement quoted, he never contemplated for it any such construction as the New York court seems to give it. This is doubly apparent when we see that upon the same page he indorses the doctrine of Byrne v. Boadle, supra. Indeed, the author prefaces his whole discussion of the question of res ipsa loquitur by a report in full of the celebrated case of Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co., supra, the doctrine of which he fully indorses, and which in no sense was a case of contractual relation. Beyond all this, the Volkmar Case, already cited, is a later expression emanating from the New York court, and earlier cases coming from the same source, if opposed to the doctrine there declared, must give way.

There is another class of cases in all essentials fully supporting our views upon this question of negligence. These cases arise in the destruction of property caused by fire escaping from locomotive engines, and, while there is some conflict in the authorities as to the true rule, it is said in Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (sec. 676): "The decided weight of authority and of reason is in favor of holding that, the origin of the fire being fixed upon the railroad company, it is presumptively chargeable with negligence, and must assume the burden of proving that it had used all those precautions for confining sparks or cinders (as the case may be), which have been already mentioned as necessary. This is the common law of England, and the same rule has been followed in New York and Maryland," etc., citing many other states. While we have not deemed it necessary to verify the correctness of the statement of the authors as to all the states mentioned, we do say there are numberless cases supporting the text. See Piggot v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 3 C. B. 229; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reese, 85 Ala. 497; Spaulding v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 30 Wis. 110,—citing many cases.

In this state the question has never been take heed that he did not, through his own want of care, expose his servants to unnecessary risks or dangers, either from the character of the tools with which he supplied them, or the place in which he required them to operate.

In that case the court stated that the question whether a superintendent of a railroad company in placing a dynamite magazine where it was placed ought to have known that he was exposing men operating the road to unnecessary danger was one for the jury, and that the fact that such superintendent was ignorant of the peculiar properties of the material which he was intrusted to handle was no excuse for the company, in an action brought to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of an explosion of such dynamite.

And again, where the plaintiff's storehouse was injured through the negligence of the defendant, who kept gasoline stored upon his premises in an unsafe condition, the plaintiff was allowed to recover, there being no contributory negligence, the mere fact that he built in close proximity to the defendant's warehouse not of itself being sufficient to show negligence on his part, as he had a right to expect the defendant to exercise due care in conducting his business. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. King, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 98 (1894).

So also, in Hollins v. Farley, 22 N. Y. Week. Dig. 348, 100 N. Y. 620, mem. (1885), where action was brought to recover damages caused by the explosion of dynamite cartridges used by defendants in blasting, the evidence showing that such cartridges were negligently placed in contact with a hot steam pipe, the question was whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, the court affirming the judgment of the court below in the plaintiff's favor.

In the following cases, however, the courts held that no liability rested upon the defendants in such cases:

In the case of Parrott v. Wells (The Nitro-Glycerine Case), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206 (1873), damages were claimed for injuries occasioned to plaintiff's building by reason of the explosion of a package of nitro-glycerine which defendants had taken upon the premises for the purpose of discovering the cause of a leak therein, but without knowledge of the dangerous character of the contents of the package, or anything to arouse their suspicions as to the same. The court held there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, who handled the package in the same way as other packages of similar outward appearance.

In the above case the defendants leased the premises in question from the plaintiff upon conditions prohibiting the receipt or storage of "gunpowder, alcohol, or any other articles dangerous from their combustibility," and the defendants occupied the building, subject to the terms of the lease, as bankers and expressmen, and for the purposes therein stated.

So, in Russell v. New Jersey S. B. Co., 10 Misc. 593 (1894), wherein damages were claimed, under section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted to prevent the carrying of certain articles therein mentioned on steamboats carrying passengers, for injuries caused by the explosion of a steam cylinder containing compressed gas delivered to the defendant company for transportation, the question being whether the article in question came within the provisions of the statute,—the court held that it did not, as it was proved that such article was not, like those specified in the statute, dangerous in consequence of its inflammability, the danger not arising from the article itself, but from the use to which the article was put, in that case compressing it in a cylinder not strong enough to hold it, the danger being in overcharging the cylinder, and not in the elements of the article itself.

Again, in Murphy v. Smith, 19 C. B. N. S. 361 (1865), where damages were claimed for injuries sustained by plaintiff through an explosion of combustible materials used in the defendant's factory, the plaintiff, a boy of sixteen, was engaged in storing a magazine in a vessel, in the presence of a fellow workman, who, in the absence of the foreman or general manager, assumed the management. The evidence showed that such fellow workman was guilty of negligence in permitting an inexperienced person to perform the work. The court held the defendant was not liable, as, in order to render a master liable for an injury to one in his employ through the negligence of another directly passed upon as to whether or not negligence will be presumed from the fact of sparks escaping from a locomotive engine, and the destruction of grain fields resulting therefrom. In Butcher v. Vaca Valley & C. L. R. Co., 67 Cal. 518, the doctrine is inferentially favored, although in that case the plaintiff placed an expert witness upon the stand, who testified that "a perfect engine, properly equipped and properly run, will not ordinarily throw out sparks sufficient to start a fire." This line of evidence was also held sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence, in Hull v. Sacramento Valley R. Co., 14 Cal. 887, 78 Am. Dec. 656, and Henry v. Southern P. R. Co., 50 Cal. 176. For our purpose it is not necessary to enter into a prolonged investigation to determine why this evidence of the expert strengthened plaintiff's case. But, taking the converse of the proposition, let us assume that defendant's engine was a perfect engine, properly equipped and properly run, and that, notwithstanding such conditions, it would ordinarily when in use throw out sparks of fire, leaving in its wake, as it passed through the country, property destroyed and possibly lives lost. Certainly, this could hardly be tolerated in law. Hence we fail to fully appreciate the importance of this line of evidence. Such conduct upon the part of a railroad company would render it guilty of the commission of a nuisance, and liable in damages for property destroyed. Certainly, it is no answer to such a condition of things to say that the legislative grant to the corporation to do business with the aid of steam locomotives carries with it the right to destroy the property of adjoining owners; but, rather, we must assume that the grant was made only after a prior determination by the same legislative power that a perfect locomotive engine, properly equipped and properly run, will not ordinarily throw out sufficient sparks to destroy adjoining property. It is only upon such a theory that the right to do business by the use of this character of implement was ever granted; and hence we again say that it may be considered doubtful if this class of evidence strengthens the plaintiff's case; for it is but proving, as a fact, something of which the courts and possibly all the world take full notice.

In the case at bar, following the lines marked out by the cases last cited, respondents placed before the court expert evidence to the effect that, if the correct process of manufacturing and handling dynamite was person also in his employ, it must be shown that the latter was placed by the master in such a position of trust and authority as to be fairly considered as a representative in the establishment, it not being shown that the fellow servant filled any other position in relation to the plaintiff than that of a fellow workman.

In the case of Fillo v. Jones, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 121 (1868), action was brought under the statute for damages for the death of the deceased, which resulted from the explosion of fireworks on the premises of defendant, who was a dealer in gunpowder and fireworks, the testimony showing that among the articles so kept by defendant were colored signal lights, the keeping of which an ordinance of the corporation prohibited on account of the danger to life and property. It was not claimed by the plaintiff that the keeping and storing of the fireworks in contravention of the city ordinance was for that reason alone such an unlawful act as to bring the case within the statute authorizing a recovery, and the court therefore held that, before a recovery could be had, it was necessary to show, either that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the mode of keeping and storing or handling of the articles, or that such keeping and storing were of themselves an unlawful act at common law, because a common nuisance dangerous to human life.

Where in railroad construction the contractors, with the consent of the company, subcontracted the rock excavation to a third party, the understanding being that the rock was to be removed by blasting with nitro-glycerine, and negligence was charged in the use of such material on the premises owned by the company, the party injured being an employé of the subcontractor, selected by him to take charge of the nitro-glycerine used in the works, the facts showed that after the subletting of the contract permission was granted by the engineer of the defendant company for the erecting of a magazine for the storage of oil necessary for executing the work; that the contract with the original contractor stipulated that he should not be at liberty to sublet without consent, and that no subcontract should relieve him from liabilities 29 L. R. A.

under the contract; and that competent foremen, workmen, and experienced mechanics were to be employed; but it was not shown that these provisions were incorporated in the contract with the subcontractor; and it was also shown that the magazine, as located when used for the storage of nitro-glycerine, was a public nuisance, and that the engineer of the company was its agent in consenting to such use; that the party employed to superintend such storage was an improper person. The liability of the company was sought to be placed on two grounds: First, that the person so employed was its servant; and, second, that the injury resulted from the nuisance maintained upon the land with the company's consent. The court held that such party was not the servant of the company, and that therefore the company could not be held liable for injuries resulting from his negligence. Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205 (1870).

So, in Weed v. Barney, 45 N. Y. 344, 6 Am. Rep. 96 (1871), where action was brought to recover compensation for merchandise destroyed by the explosion of a package of nitro-glycerine while such package was in the defendants' warehouse, the nitro-glycerine being artfully concealed so that the contents of the package were not known to the defendants, who were warehousemen and general carriers. The goods were shipped C. O. D. and the consignee was notified from time to time of their presence and requested to remove them, which he promised but failed to do, and the court held the defendants not liable, being considered as warehousemen, and not as common carriers.

Again, in Abrahams v. California Powder Works (N. M.) 8 L. R. A. 378 (1890), where compensation was claimed for injuries to plaintiff's building caused by an explosion of powder stored in a powder house erected and maintained by the defendants, it was held that the ownership of gunpowder which had been sent for sale on commission did not render the owners liable for an explosion which occurred while the powder was in the hands of the consignees.

And where an agreement between a railroad company and its contractor for the construction carefully carried out, an explosion would not occur. This evidence is stronger than in the smokestack cases, for here it declares as a certainty what there is only stated to be the probable or ordinary result; but, be that as it may, if this character of evidence was relevant and material in the smokestack cases, it is equally relevant and material here. If it was sufficient there to complete and perfect a prima facie case of negligence, it is ample here to do the same. Again, if appellant had the right, under the laws of the state, to manufacture dynamite (which is conceded), and if, by reason of the existence of such right, courts may assume that, if dynamite is properly handled in the process of manufacture, explosions will not probably occur, then respondents' case is doubly proved, for here we have not only the presumption of the existence of certain conditions, but the evidence of witnesses as to the existence of them.

In concluding this branch of the case, we can only reiterate that the true rule appears to be found in section 60 of Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, which we have already quoted; and, gauging this case by the test there prescribed, a prima facie case of negligence was established by respondents' evidence. This case seems to clearly come within the provisions of the rule there declared. There is nothing to distinguish it in principle from the army of cases that have been held to come directly within its provisions. Appellant was engaged in the manufacture of dynamite. In the ordinary course of things, an explosion does not occur in such manufacture if proper care is exercised. An explosion did occur, ergo, the real cause of the explosion being unexplained, it is probable that it was occasioned by a lack of proper care. The logic is unassailable, and the principle of law of presumptions of fact erected thereon is as sound as the logic upon which it is based.

8. Questions of negligence in the storage of the gunpowder become unnecessary to consider, owing to our views upon the main question discussed. Neither do we find anything in the record, bearing upon the measure or amount of damages declared and decreed by the court, demanding a new trial of the case.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

Rehearing denied.

of a railroad contained a clause for the storage of nitro-glycerine necessary for the operations of blasting in the construction of such works, and the evidence showed that at the time of the accident oil belonging to third parties had been stored upon such premises without the knowledge or consent of the company or of the contractors,—the court held that the company was not liable for injuries sustained by an explosion occasioned in filling an order for the sale of the oil so wrongfully stored upon the premises. Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. supra.

In Slayton v. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co., 40 Neb. 840 (1894), the evidence showed that the company had torpedoes, necessary to the operation of its road, deposited and kept in an untenanted section-house, the doors and windows of which were securely fastened, access to the building and the removal of the torpedoes being effected by children opening the windows, in consequence of which an explosion occurred causing injury. The court held the defendant not liable, and that the court below should have directed a verdict for defendant, there being no evidence to support the action.

Again, in Foley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 48 Mich. 623, 49 Am. Rep. 481 (1883), where the negligence charged against the defendant was the sending of the plaintiff's intestate into the vicinity of a dangerous explosive, nitro-glycerine, received for the purpose of being switched over its track, without informing or cautioning him of the danger, the company was held not liable, inasmuch as it had a right to assume that due care had been exercised in packing the substance in question, the loading of the cars being performed by the manufacturer's own servants, the intestate's only duty being to see that the car in question was properly switched, the switchman exercising no control over the action of the parties, and having a general knowledge of the character of the article.

So, in Walker v. Chicago, E. I. & P. R. Co., 71 Iowa, 668 (1887), where damages to plaintiff's building were caused by the explosion of gunpowder in a box car standing on a side track in the freight yard of the defendant company, and the facts showed that the same had been received for transportation by the company, which had tendered it to another railroad company to be conveyed over its line to its destination, but the latter company refusing to receive it, the defendant company placed it upon its own side track to await orders as to its future disposition, the fire occurring after it had remained on the track for about twenty-four hours, the defendant using all diligence to extinguish the fire,—the court held that the facts disclosed no sufficient ground for action against the company, there being no evidence of negligence in storing the car, the relation between the parties not being such that the law would presume negligence in the defendant by the mere fact that the plaintiff's property was injured.

In Socola v. Chess-Carley Co., 39 La. Ann. 344 (1887), the fire originated in a warehouse adjoining the plaintiff's mill, a barrel of petroleum oil or fluid used for illuminating purposes in the mill being stored in such warehouse. The facts showed that the mill employes were engaged after midnight in drawing oil from the barrel, when the explosion occurred. The plaintiff's contention was that the defendant was responsible for the reason that the order sent to defendant was for a barrel of puroline, a burning fluid which could be used for illuminating purposes with safety, and that instead the defendant shipped a barrel of gasoline, a dangerous fluid, plaintiff alleging fraud of the defendant in causing the barrel to be branded as "puroline," and purposely omitting to mark it "dangerous and explosive," through which deception plaintiff was barred from suing or recovering upon his insurance policy. The court held with respect to the fraudulent imposition or deception that the defendant was not guilty, the difference between the articles being hardly perceptible, the package containing the stamp "explosive and dangerous," as required by the Act of 1877, under the authority of the state itself, and that the plaintiff's fire was occasioned by the negligent act of his servant.

E. W.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

J. C. GOODLOE, Appt.,

v.

MEMPHIS & CHARLESTON R. CO.

(.....Ala.....)

A railroad company is not liable for injuries received by a passenger from an accidental blow by one of its employes while making a playful attempt to strike another employe, as the act is not within the line of his employment.

(June 12, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Colbert County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a servant for whose conduct defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Jackson & Sawtelle and Joseph H. Nathan for appellant.

Messrs. Humes, Sheffey & Speake, for appellee:

The liability of the master for intentional acts which constitute legal wrongs can only arise when that which is done is within the real or apparent scope of the master's business. It does not arise when the servant has stepped aside from his employment to commit a tort which the master neither directed in fact nor could be supposed from the nature of his employment to have authorized or expected his servant to do.

Cooley, Torts, p. 535; Crocker v. New London, W. & P. R. Co. 24 Conn. 249; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 848, 82 Am. Dec. 507; Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Donahue, 70 Pa. 119; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597; Wood, Mast. & S. 580, 581; Evansville & O. R. Co. v. Baum, 26 Ind. 70.

If a servant wholly for a purpose of his own, disregarding the object for which he is employed, and not intending by his act to execute it, does an injury to another within the scope of his employment, the master is not liable.

Cooley, Torts, 537, note.

The master is not liable for the tortious acts of a servant unless done within the scope and range of his employment.

Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 70 Ala. 268; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Seales, 100 Ala. 868.

The question is, "Can the act be fairly and reasonably implied as one authorized to be done by the servant in the master's absence, and in the given emergency, in furtherance of the master's business?"

Birmingham Water Works Co. v. Hubbard, 85 Ala. 179.

Haralson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We examine the single question presented by the defense and alone considered by the appellant,—that the defendant is not guilty for the reason that the injury complained of was not inflicted on plaintiff by the defendant's servants or employes while they were acting within the range, but outside, of the authority conferred by defendant on them. Other errors assigned are not insisted on in the argument filed, and are therefore treated as waived. The question presented has been well considered by this and many other courts. It was recently before us in the case of Lampkin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ala.) 17 So. Rep. 448, in which, as the result of the authorities there cited, it was stated, as the well-settled rule, that the carrier's obligation was to protect its passengers against the violence and insults of its own servants and of strangers and copassengers; that a contract exists between a common carrier and its passengers to use all reasonable exertion to protect them from injury from fellow passengers, and its agents in charge of the train. In an earlier case it was said that "the clearly established doctrine now is, that railroad corporations are liable for all acts of wantonness, rudeness, or force, done or caused to be done by their agents or employes, if done in and about the business or duties assigned to them by the corporation; and the rule of vindictive or punitive damages against such corporations for abuse by their employes of the duties and powers confided to them is the same as that which applies to natural persons, who are guilty of such misconduct. It is confined, however, to abuses perpetrated in the line of duties assigned to them, and does not extend to any tort, wantonness, or wrongful act the employes may commit in matters not connected with the service of the railroad corporation. In the line of their assigned duties, they stand in the place of the corporation; without that line, the corporation is bound by nothing they may do." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 325. The same principle had been differently but very clearly expressed in Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co., 70 Ala. 268,—"that if the employe, while acting within the scope of the authority of the employment, do an act injurious to another, either through negligence, wantonness, or intention, then for such abuse of authority conferred upon him, or implied in his employment, the master or employer is responsible in damages to the person thus injured. But if the agent go beyond the range of his employment or duties, and of his own will do an unlawful act injurious to another, the agent is liable, but the master is not." The principle settled in these and many other similar adjudications is not disputed, but its application to the cases as they occur gives rise to continued disputations. What is meant by the words, "while acting within the range of the authority of the employment of the servant," is made the ground for contention in each case. But that seems, also, to be well settled on authority, and while it is often a matter of nice adjustment to the facts of a case, it has been made clear enough not to be of very difficult application. It is said, on the point under consideration, that the rule of the responsibility of the master for the acts of his servants "does not apply simply from the circumstances that at the time when the injury is inflicted the person inflicting it is in the employment of another; but that, in order to make the master liable, the act inflicting the injury must have been done in pursuance of an express or implied authority to do it. That is, it must be an act which is fairly incident to the employment; in other words, an act which the master has set in motion. . . . And generally, where the injury results from the execution of the employment the master is liable." 2 Wood, Railway Law, § 816. In explanation of the rule, this court long ago held, as the result of the authorities examined and cited, that when the servant is in the performance of his master's orders or authorized acts, and in the doing thereof conducts himself so negligently or unskillfully that injury results to another, then the doctrine of respondent superior applies, and the master will be liable in an action on the case; but that, for the acts of the agent willfully and intentionally done without the command and authorization of the master, the servant, and not the master, is liable; and that the rule has no application when the servant actually wills and intends the injury, or steps aside from the purpose of the agency committed to him, and inflicts an independent wrong. Cox v. Keahoy, 36 Ala. 340, 76 Am. Dec. 825. So, we find it held that where a slave, being a passenger on a steamboat, was wounded by a gun negligently discharged by the second engineer of the boat, the captain, in an action against him for the injury, was held not to be liable, because the discharge of the gun by the engineer was not an act done in the course of his employment, or in the discharge of any duty connected with the service. McClenaghan v. Brock, 5 Rich. L. 17. And where a servant employed to light fires in a house lighted furz and straw in order to clean a chimney that smoked, and the house caught fire therefrom and was destroyed, it was held that the act of cleaning the chimney in the manner stated was one outside the scope of her employment, and the master was not liable. McKenzie v. McLeod, 10 Bing. 385. And still again, in a recent case, where an employé, being behind in his accounts, was suspected of setting fire to the building in which he was employed in order to destroy the evidence of his default, we said that there was no evidence tending to show if the employé did set fire to the building, that it was a negligent act of his done while in the performance of his duty; and that, if he did it at all, it was his own tortious, wicked act done outside the line of his employment, in which the defendant did not participate, or, afterwards, in any manner ratify, and for which it was not in any manner responsible. Collins v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (Ala.) 16 So. Rep. 142.

NOTE—As to liability of carrier for assaults upon passengers, see note to Davis v. Houghtelin (Neb.) 14 L. R. A. 787.

39 L. R. A.

39 L. R. A.

In the case before us the evidence shows that the appellant purchased a ticket at Tusculumbia, from the defendant company, to go as a passenger on its train to his home at Barton, and tarried in the waiting room until the arrival of the train, when he left the waiting room, went on the platform along the side of the train, and proceeded to the point at which he could enter the passenger coach, and, when near the entrance of the coach, as he expressed it, he "was struck against, quartering on his back and shoulder with such force as to knock or push him off the platform on the south side of it, and fell to the ground breaking his left leg," etc. McCormick, a witness for defendant, testified that he was supervisor of the middle division of the defendant's railroad, from Corinth to Decatur, and was going over his division on the train which plaintiff was about to enter when he was hurt; that he had nothing to do with the train as an employé; that he had gotten off on its arrival, and gone to the train despatcher's office to see if he had any message for him, and on his return he found Mr. Porterfield, the roadmaster of defendant, and Mr. Jones, the sleeping-car conductor, in conversation with each other on the platform. Mr. Porterfield asked witness if he had ever met Mr. Jones, to which witness made a playful remark, to the effect that he did not want to know him, at the same time making a lick at him with his hand, when Jones threw up his hand, as if to ward off the blow, and knocked or pushed witness against the plaintiff, which caused him to fall off the platform, and injure himself. Jones, the Pullman conductor, gave substantially the same account of the transaction. There was no evidence that either had ill will towards plaintiff or intended to do him any harm. McCormick knew him well and was friendly with him, and Jones did not know him at all. The evidence also shows that McCormick and Jones were friends, and what occurred between them was in sport. What these parties did to cause plaintiff's injury was not in the line of their respective engagements, or that of either of them, to their employer; it was not fairly incidental to their employment; it was not done in pursuance of an express or implied authority from the master to do it; it was the result of the conduct of these employés, who, in the commission of the injurious act, however innocently done, had stepped aside from the purposes of the agency committed to them, and inflicted an independent wrong on the plaintiff; and they, if anybody, and not the defendant company, are liable for it.

Affirmed.

NEVADA SUPREME COURT.

John H. DENNIS, Appt.,

v.

W. H. CAUGHLIN, Resp.

(.....Nev.....)

1. Only errors of which the appellant complains can be considered on appeal in a contested election case.
2. A slightly blurred spot or erasure on a ballot, made to correct a mistake, and not indicating an intention to identify the ballot, or a slight pencil mark made by mistake, or a tobacco stain, will not avoid the ballot under the Ballot Law, section 20, providing that any ballot on which appear marks written or printed except as provided shall not be counted.
3. A blurred spot plainly made on a ballot, which might have been made for identification, or a cross not opposite the name of any candidate, or a number of crosses in a bunch, or a mark which is not a cross, or the use of a blue lead pencil, is ground for rejecting the ballot under Ballot Law, section 20, providing that the ballot shall be marked with a cross after the names of the persons for whom the elector votes, in black pencil, and that any marks except as provided in the act shall invalidate the ballot.

(September 28, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Washoe County in favor of defendant in an action brought to contest defendant's election to the office of sheriff of Washoe County. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. E. Haydon for appellant.

Messrs. Torreyson & Summerfield for respondent.

Belknap, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a contest brought by John H. Dennis, an elector of Washoe county, against the respondent, to determine whether John Hayes or W. H. Coughlin is legally entitled to the office of sheriff of Washoe county. According to the official returns, respondent received the highest number of votes and was declared elected by the board of canvassers. At the trial it was stipulated that all returns and all ballots of each and every precinct in the county should be examined and considered, and legal ballots counted for whom cast, and under this stipulation the trial was had. Respondent recovered judgment.

One of the first questions to be determined is whether we can review all the rulings of the district court or only such as have been assigned as error by the appellant. It has frequently been decided that a party who has not appealed from a judgment cannot, on an appeal by the opposite party, obtain a review of the rulings of the court against him. In Dougherty v. Henaris, 47 Cal. 9, the plaintiff offered to dismiss the action as to one of the defendants, who objected, and the court thereupon denied the motion to dismiss, the plaintiff excepting. Said the court: "But he cannot avail himself of his exception on this appeal. Having submitted to the judgment, and prosecuted no appeal from it, he cannot, on an appeal by the defendants, review the rulings of the court which he claims are to his prejudice." Ma-her v. Swift, 14 Nev. 324; Moresi v. Swift, 15 Nev. 215; Neabitt v. Osholm, 16 Nev. 40.

Again, in Whittam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57, the supreme court of Iowa said, in an election contest case: "The appellee complains that ballots similar in marking to some of those we hold should have been excluded were offered by the contestant, and counted for him, but, as the incumbent does not appeal, we cannot determine the question he thus presents." Our conclusion is that only such errors as the appellant complains of can be considered upon this appeal.

The errors assigned by the appellant embrace the rulings of the district court upon thirty-two ballots. These rulings involve a construction of the Statute of 1891 generally known as the "Australian Ballot Law." The provisions of the statute relating to the preparation of the ballot by the elector, and its rejection in certain cases, are as follows:

"Sec. 20. On receiving this ballot the voter shall immediately retire alone to one of the places, booths, or compartments. He shall prepare his ballot by marking a cross or X after the name of the persons for whom he intends to vote for each office. In case of a constitutional amendment or other question submitted to the voters, the cross or X shall be placed after the answer which he desires to give. Such marking shall be done only with a black lead pencil. Before leaving the booth or compartment the voter shall fold his ballot in such a manner that the water-mark and the number of the ballot shall appear on the outside, without exposing the marks upon the ballots, and shall keep it so folded until he has voted. Having folded his ballot, the voter shall deliver it to the inspector, who shall announce the name of the voter and the number of his ballot. The clerk having the registry list in his charge, if he finds the number to agree with the number of the ballot delivered to the voter, shall repeat the name and number, and shall mark opposite the name the word 'Voted.' The inspector shall then separate the strip bearing the number from the ballot, and shall deposit the ballot in the ballot box. Said strip and number shall be immediately destroyed."

"Sec. 26. In counting the votes any ballot not bearing the water-mark, as provided in this act, shall not be counted, but such ballot must be preserved and returned with the other ballots. When a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office, or if for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office, his vote for such office shall not be counted. Any ballot upon which appear names, words, or marks written or printed, except as in this act provided, shall not be counted."

NOTE.—For distinguishing marks on ballots, see also Tebbe v. Smith (Cal.) ante, 673, and cases cited in footnote thereto.

Statutes more or less similar in their nature have been adopted in many of our sister states, and a reference to some will aid in the construction to be placed upon our law. In Re Vote Marks, 17 R. I. 812, the supreme court of Rhode Island said: "A cross is the only mark authorized by the statute to be used to designate the person voted for, and it is only by force of the statute that it gets its significance for that purpose. If another mark be used, there is nothing to certify its meaning. It might be conjectured that it was used inadvertently, instead of a cross, but in our opinion such a conjecture would not justify the counting of it. The statute declares: 'No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be afterwards identified as the one voted by him.' If marks other than crosses were counted they might be used both to answer the purpose of crosses and to identify the ballots." In Whitlam v. Zahorik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57, in considering a law of this nature adopted in Iowa, the court said: "It is not practicable to adopt a rule in regard to identifying marks which would be applicable in all cases. It will not do to say that all ballots which bear marks not authorized by law should be rejected. All voters are not alike skillful in marking. Some are not accustomed to using a pen or pencil, and may place some slight mark on the ballot inadvertently, or a cross first made may be clumsily retraced. It is evident that in such cases, and in others where the unauthorized mark is not of a character to be used readily for the purpose of identification, the ballots should be counted, but where the unauthorized marks are made deliberately, and may be used as a means of identifying the ballot, it should be rejected." In Indiana it was provided that the voter should indicate his choice by stamping a certain square opposite the candidate's name, and, if he desired to vote for all candidates of one party, should place the stamp on the square preceding the party designation. The court held that the provision concerning the use of the stamp was mandatory, the stamping of the square being the only method prescribed by which the voter can indicate his choice. The statute was amended at the next session of the legislature so that a stamp placed upon a ballot, which does not touch a square thereon, was declared to be a distinguishing mark, and was not to be counted. The court said: "This amendment was intended, we think, to make certain that which, prior to its passage, was left in some measure to construction, but it only makes certain that which was intended by the legislature when it passed the original section." Parvin v. Wimberg, 180 Ind. 561, 15 L. R. A. 775. In Maine the statute provides that "the voter shall prepare his ballot by marking on the appropriate margin or place a (X) as follows: He may place such mark opposite the name of a party or political designation; or he may place such mark opposite the name of the individual candidates of his choice for each office to be filled." Me. Stat. 1891, chap. 103, § 24. The court said of this provision: "Its distinguishing feature is its careful provision for a secret ballot. The leading purpose of it was to give the elector an opportunity to cast his vote in such a manner that no other person would know for what candidates he voted, and thus to protect him against all improper influences and enable him to enjoy absolute freedom from restraint and entire independence in the expression of his choice."

If it be conceded that the intention of the voter may be correctly inferred from the mark actually made by him in each of these instances, it is still a fatal objection to the ballot that such an irregular and unauthorized mode of marking it might readily be, and probably would be, agreed upon with the voter as a distinguishing mark to identify the ballot cast by him whenever identification was desired. Such a palpable disregard of the plain requirements of the act strikes at the root of the secret-ballot system." Curran v. Clayton, 86 Me. 42.

These decisions show that the only way the voter can indicate his choice is by a cross or X used in the manner required by the statute. The statute of this state is less liberal in its terms than those of the other states, and if its provisions relating to "marks," in the twenty-sixth section of the act, are to be literally enforced, many voters would be disfranchised. This section provides that any names, words, or marks, except as in the act provided, shall invalidate the ballot. Under the terms of the statute, any mark, although innocently or accidentally made, would come within its provisions. The evils against which the statute was directed were bribery and intimidation, and to repress these the secret ballot was adopted. Its aim was that the ballot should not disclose by whom it was cast, and for this reason all of the means by which it may be identified were interdicted. Courts should construe statutes with such liberality, if practicable, as to advance the object and correct the evils which the legislature had in view. A mark satisfactorily appearing to have been inadvertently or accidentally made, and not for an evil purpose, is not within the meaning of the statute, and should not be construed as an identifying or distinguishing mark; and we think the statute should be read as if this qualification were attached to it. Adopting this view, a ballot written by a hand unaccustomed to the use of a pencil, or awkwardness in its use, or carelessness, or an apparent attempt to retrace a clumsily made cross X, or an effort to make it more certain, and in doing so employing more lines than are necessary to properly make a cross, or a slightly blurred spot to correct a mistake, not indicating an intention to identify the ballot, or a slight erasure for the same purpose, or crosses made when the ballot paper was defective, and to avoid the defect, and make the vote more certain, a second cross was made, or a slight pencil mark, clearly made by accident, and not design, or a stain of tobacco,—will not avoid the ballot.

There are fifteen ballots numbered as follows: 45, 49, 50, 78, 63, 73, 74, 53, 27, 72, 59, 75, 40, 36, 66, to which these objections were made, and we think that all of them should be counted for the appellant. But blurred spots, plainly made by a lead pencil, which may have been made for the purpose of canceling a cross, but which might have been made also for identification, or a cross not opposite the name of any candidate, or two or more crosses instead of one, or a number of crosses in a bunch, or a mark not a cross, or the use of a blue lead pencil instead of a black one, or a straight line, thus, —, over the word "No," or writing a word instead of employing a cross,—are grounds for rejecting the ballot. There are seventeen ballots to which these objections apply, and we think the court properly rejected them. These ballots were numbered as follows: 30, 39, 44, 69, 33, 83, 60½, 71, 41, 48, 66½, 87, 53, 35, 54, 57, 77. The district court found that Hayes was entitled to 558 votes, and Coughlin 561. Adding to Hayes' vote the fifteen votes that we have found for him changes the result of the election.

Similar motions were made in this case as those in Buckner v. Lynip, 23 Nev. —, and upon the authority of that case the motions are dismissed.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Bonnifield, J., concurs.

Bigelow, Ch. J., concurring:

As held in Buckner v. Lynip, 23 Nev. —, the spirit and purpose of the ballot law were to exclude only ballots bearing distinguishing names, words, or marks, and not those where it satisfactorily appears that the marks were not intended for distinguishing marks, and were not placed thereon with the knowledge or consent of the voter. Doubtless, in the first instance, the presumption should be that all marks not authorized by law were placed thereon for the purpose of identification, and, in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary, should exclude the ballot from the count. But clearly it was not the intent of the lawmakers that marks that do not identify the particular ballot, or that clearly appear to have been accidental or inadvertent,—as where made by the slip of a pencil, by soiled fingers, through awkwardness in making the cross, or by other unintentional means,—and that are not such as to be readily used for purposes of identification, should cause the rejection of the entire ticket. On the other hand, where the marks were apparently made intentionally, and are such as to readily distinguish the ticket, and such as may have been made for the purpose of distinguishing it, it should not be counted. Of course, this rule calls for the exercise of some discretion in the canvassers, and is not so simple as it would be to follow the letter of the law, and reject all ballots upon which any unauthorized mark appears; but we believe it to be more in consonance with the spirit of the statute and with the genius of our institutions. Our government is founded upon manhood suffrage, and in the effort to prevent intimidation and corruption in the elections, although a most commendable purpose, and one we would encourage by every means possible, it will not do to adopt rules so strict as to practically disfranchise a considerable number of innocent voters. This would be too heroic a remedy. If the sole, or even the main, purpose be to prevent fraud in the elections, this could be best accomplished by permitting no one to vote. The marking upon a ballot may be such as to prevent its being counted for a particular candidate upon two grounds: Where it is not so marked as to indicate the voter's choice as to that office, and where it bears distinguishing marks. Upon the first ground, no other mark than that of a cross or X, placed after the candidate's name, will suffice; but a failure to mark upon some office, or a defective marking, should not usually be classed as a distinguishing mark. Probably a cross or an X could be so made as to constitute an identifying mark, but we should be very certain that such was the purpose before we would be justified in rejecting the ballot on that ground. The statute recognizes that there may be defective marking upon some particular office that is still not sufficient to reject the entire ballot, by providing that when, for any reason, it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office, his vote for that office shall not be counted. All men do not make crosses and X's alike, nor do all possess the same degree of skill in making them. It would seem that any honest attempt to make the proper mark, and nothing else, even if insufficient to authorize counting the vote for that candidate, should not be treated as sufficient to cause the ballot's rejection.

The following examples will illustrate the distinctions we think should be drawn: Ballot No. 27 has a faint cross, very nearly erased, opposite the name of McNees, another candidate for the same office. It is evident that this mark was made inadvertently, and that the voter sought to change his vote from McNees to Hayes. It is perfectly clear for whom he wished to vote, and, as the faint outline of the cross does not constitute a distinguishing mark, no reason appears why it should not be counted as intended. No. 49 has a mark opposite the name of a state candidate, intended for an X, but the second stroke only comes down to, but does not cross, the first. While this was a failure to make a cross, so that probably the vote should not have been counted for that candidate, it was clearly unintentional. Had the second stroke been extended the thirty-second part of an inch, it would have been a cross. No. 50 has a light third line across the X opposite the name of a state candidate, doubtless made through accident or carelessness. No. 53 has a light mark, apparently made by a dirty finger, or in an attempt to erase a cross in a square, but which was again made and allowed to remain. No. 73 has crosses made with lines across the top and bottom of the X's, intended to be the same as the X is made in the statute. As the act does not provide how the cross shall be made, we do not see why that is not as correct as one made simply with two straight lines crossing. We think that such ballots as these, and similar ones, should be counted. On the other hand, No. 85 has in two places a number of crisscrossed lines nearly filling a square. No. 87 has the printed word "No" crossed out with a pencil. No. 88 has crosses not opposite the name of any candidate. No. 89 has a heavy round spot, made with a pencil, apparently for the purpose of covering up or blotting out a cross in a square opposite the name of a candidate. Very likely, in all these instances, the marks were made innocently, and not for the purpose of distinguishing the tickets; but they were made intentionally, and not by accident or inadvertence, and are such as might have been placed there for identification. They were, therefore, properly rejected.

All questions concerning the manner of making a cross, or where it shall be placed, can be avoided, and an advantageous change made in the law, by the legislature adopting an amendment providing for the use of a rubber stamp instead of a lead pencil, as is directed by the statutes of Indiana and some other states.

I concur in the conclusions announced by Justice Belknap as to the ballots that should or should not be counted.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

City of OTTUMWA

v.

H. A. ZEKIND, App't

(.....Iowa.....)

1. An ordinance for the licensing of transient merchants is not to be regarded as discriminating against nonresidents merely because there may not be any resident merchants who are compelled to pay the license.
2. An ordinance applying to all transient merchants, requiring a license fee, is not unconstitutional as class legislation.
3. A license fee of $250 per month, or $25 per day for shorter periods, exacted from transient merchants by an ordinance, is excessive and invalid, amounting to an exercise of the taxing power rather than a police measure.

(October 14, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Wapello County convicting him of violating a city ordinance against selling goods as a transient merchant without a license. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Steck & Smith, for appellant:

In Pacific Junction v. Dyer, 64 Iowa, 88, this court held an ordinance void upon the ground that it discriminated in favor of resident merchants of Pacific Junction, and against other resident merchants of Iowa.

The ordinance is in violation of article 1, section 6, of the Constitution of the state, which provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation; the general assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens."

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 322; 13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 534; Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642.

NOTE—As to reasonableness of license fee, see also Littlefield v. State (Neb.) 28 L. R. A. 588, and cases cited in footnotes.

29 L. R. A.

See also 39 L. R. A. 245.

A license fee of $250 per month, or $25 per day for a short period of time, exacted from transient merchants, is unreasonable and unjust, and is in fact prohibitory.

The greatest authority sought to be conferred by the legislature upon municipal corporations, as to auctioneers and transient merchants, is a mere police power, and does not extend to authorizing cities to prohibit sales or to tax the business out of existence.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 367; Berkington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673; 13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 533; Brooks v. Mangas, 86 Mich. 576; Glauser v. Cincinnati, 81 Week L. J. 248; Jackson v. Newman, 59 Miss. 383, 43 Am. Rep. 867; Mankato v. Fowler, 83 Minn. 364; Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L. R. A. 184.

An ordinance must be certain and definite.

17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 263.

Mr. W. W. Epps, City Solicitor, for appellee.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The ordinance under which defendant was convicted reads as follows:

"Sec. 1. Transient merchants selling, or in any manner offering for sale, any goods, wares, or merchandise, within the city of Ottumwa, Iowa, at auction or private sale, shall pay $250 per month as a license therefor, or $25 per day if such license is issued for short period.

"Sec. 2. Any transient merchant selling either at public auction or private sale, whether holding auctioneer's license or not, shall be deemed a transient merchant.

"Sec. 3. Any person required by this ordinance to procure a license and failing to do so shall be fined in any sum not less than $1 nor more than $50, and costs. Any person continuing business under an expired license shall pay a like fine and costs, and all persons so convicted and fined shall be imprisoned until the fine and costs are paid or until discharged by due course of law."

This ordinance was enacted in virtue of the power conferred upon cities of the first class by section 631, McClain's Code (Code 1873, § 462), which is as follows: "They shall have power to regulate and license sales by auctioneers and transient merchants within their corporate limits, provided that the exercise of the power shall not interfere with sales made by sheriffs, constables, coroners, marshals, executors, guardians, assignees of insolvent debtors or bankrupts, or other persons required by law to sell real or personal property."

The case was tried in the lower court upon an agreed statement of facts, the substance of which was that on December 15, 1894, one B. E. Myers shipped to the city of Ottumwa, from Marshalltown, a stock of ready-made clothing, and placed the same in a store building on one of the main business streets, where he offered it for sale. Defendant was an employé of Myers, and, as such, made sales from said stock at retail, in the usual course of trade. Defendant was also manager of the business. It was the intention that the business should be carried on only for such length of time as was required to sell the stock, which was valued at $6,000. Myers and Zekind are residents of Marshalltown, and neither has paid the license required by the ordinance before quoted. It is also agreed that no resident merchant of the city of Ottumwa is required, by any ordinance of the city, to pay a license. The power of the legislature to delegate to a municipality the right to regulate and license auctioneers and transient merchants is not denied. But it is insisted that the ordinance is invalid for the following reasons: (1) Because it discriminates in favor of resident merchants of the city of Ottumwa, and against nonresident merchants. (2) Because it discriminates in favor of one class of merchants, and against another class, engaged in the same business. (3) Because it imposes a license which is unreasonable, unjust, and oppressive. (4) Because it is indefinite and uncertain as to the persons intended to be included in the words "transient merchants."

1. With reference to the first objection insisted upon, it is sufficient to say that the ordinance does not, in terms, discriminate in favor of resident merchants of the city of Ottumwa. It requires a license fee from all transient merchants, no matter where they reside, and imposes a penalty upon the resident, should he become a transient merchant. We do not understand that the term "transient merchant" has reference to the residence of the individual. It more properly relates to the character of the business carried on by him. In the case of Pacific Junction v. Dyer, 64 Iowa, 38, relied upon by appellant, the ordinance held to be invalid defined a transient merchant to be "every nonresident person who shall sell, exchange, or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise of his own or of other nonresident owners." This ordinance was declared to be unconstitutional because it discriminated in favor of resident merchants of Pacific Junction, and against other resident merchants of Iowa. In the case at bar no such discrimination appears on the face of the ordinance, and the fact that no resident merchants are required by the city to pay a license is not controlling.

2. It is said, however, that if the words "transient merchant" should be held to include resident merchants of the city of Ottumwa who might temporarily engage in business, the ordinance is unconstitutional because it is not uniform in its operation, and because it grants to certain citizens, or classes of citizens, privileges or immunities which do not belong equally to all. This objection is not tenable. The ordinance makes no exceptions in favor of or against any one carrying on the business. All transient merchants must pay the fee before engaging in the business. Under numerous decisions of this and other courts, it is uniform in its operation, and is not class legislation. See Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112; McAulich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338; Mount Pleasant v. Clutch, 6 Iowa, 546.

3. It is contended that a license fee of $250 per month, or $25 per day for a short period of time, exacted from transient merchants, is prohibitory, unreasonable, and unjust, and is a manifest exercise of taxing power, rather than a police measure. The statute confers upon the municipality the power to "regulate and license auctioneers and transient merchants," and we are required to determine what may be exacted by the corporation as a fee for permission to carry on business as a transient merchant. A license must be distinguished from a tax. The power to tax is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty, and, if delegated by the legislature to the municipality, such delegation must be in express terms or by necessary implication, and cannot be implied from such general authority or power as "to license and regulate." Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 108; State v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123; Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673; State v. Smith, 31 Iowa, 493; Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. p. 387; Clark v. Davenport, 14 Iowa, 494; Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 12 Iowa, 539; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 357, 358; 13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 532. The municipality, under the authority given it to license, had the right to impose such a charge as would cover, not only the necessary expenses of issuing it, but also the additional labor of officers, and other expenses imposed by the business, but nothing beyond this. As said in Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co. supra, "Licenses are a part of the police regulations of a city, and should be charged for as such, and only to such extent as may reasonably compensate the city for issuing and enforcing the licenses, and for the care exercised by the city under its police authority over the particular person licensed." See also State v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 1255. The amount of the license fee or charge is to be considered in determining whether the exaction is not really one of revenue or prohibition instead of one of regulation under the police power. The charge made will be presumed to be reasonable, and within the authority conferred upon the municipality, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the ordinance, or is, by evidence, shown to be so. Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co. supra; Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258; Atkins v. Phillips, 26 Fla. 281, 10 L. R. A. 158; Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 861, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 1255. The fee charged by the ordinance of the city of Ottumwa was $250 per month, or $25 per day for a shorter period of time. It seems to us, in view of the nature of the business licensed; the fact that it was in no manner injurious to the public health or morals; that it was confined to a particular place, and was not of such a nature as to become a nuisance; that it did not require the police supervision, and was in no manner calculated to disturb the peace and quietness of the city,—that it is perfectly apparent that the fee exacted in this case was not required as a police regulation, but for the purpose of revenue to the city. It may also have been fixed at this sum to protect, in a measure, the home merchant against the passing one, who otherwise might not be called upon to pay anything to the support of the instrumentalities of government. But such protection, however desirable and just, cannot be afforded under an ordinance passed in virtue of authority given by the state to regulate and license. In passing, we may observe that a comparison of the language used in sections 462 and 463 of the Code clearly demonstrates that the legislature did not intend, by section 462, to confer upon municipalities the right to tax transient merchants, by the use of the words "regulate and license." Our conclusions are supported by the following cases: Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576; Mankato v. Fowler, 82 Minn. 364; Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L. R. A. 184; Jackson v. Newman, 59 Miss. 385, 42 Am. Rep. 867.

The case of Decorah v. Dunstan, 38 Iowa, 26, is relied upon as an authority in support 20 L. R. A.

of the validity of the ordinance. In that case the ordinance provided that the fee for the license "shall be not to exceed $20 for the first day of such license, and $20 for each subsequent day included in such license." The exact amount to be charged was apparently left to the discretion of the mayor, and the court says (Cole, J., writing the opinion), "Nor do we regard it as being in restraint of trade, or unreasonable or oppressive;" citing State v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123. There are several reasons why we do not regard this as conclusive of the question. The defendants in that case were auctioneers, and not transient merchants. The fee charged an auctioneer may well be larger than that imposed upon a transient merchant, on account of the character of the business, and the greater necessity for supervision over the auctioneer. Again, there was no showing that the fee demanded of defendants in that case was an unreasonable one. Under the ordinance the mayor could have fixed it at any sum under the rates named. Defendants had no license, and were prosecuted for not having obtained one before commencing their business. There was no showing of an unreasonable exaction. Moreover, the question presented in this case, even if determined in that, was not well considered. The whole matter is disposed of in less than two lines, and the authority cited in support of the rule is really against it. See the case before cited in 29 Iowa. And, lastly, the case, on all other points, has been practically overruled in Pacific Junction v. Dyer, supra; Marshalltown v. Blum, 58 Iowa, 184; State Center v. Barenstein, 66 Iowa, 249.

Some other questions are presented by counsel, but, in the view we have taken of the case, they are immaterial, and will not be noticed. Our conclusion is that the ordinance exacts an unreasonable fee, and the judgment is reversed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Richard ELLISON, Plf. in Err.,

Joel T. ALBRIGHT.

(41 Neb. 38.)

*As against strangers thereto, a receipt is incompetent evidence of the payment

*Headnote by RYAN, C.

NOTE.—A receipt as evidence of payment as against third parties.

- I. Ordinary receipts.
 - a. Not admissible.
 - b. Admissible.
- II. Receipts in deeds.

This note does not include that class of cases which involve the question of the admissibility of a receipt as evidence in matters relating to the transactions and dealings of an agent, which must necessarily involve the question of the agent's authority, and depend upon the maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se.

As to the construction of the consideration clause in a deed, and the parties' rights thereunder, see note to Dodge v. Boston & P. R. Co. (Mass.) 13 L. R. A. 318 (1891).

Upon the question of evidence as to the consideration of a deed, see note to Velten v. Carmack (Or.) 20 L. R. A. 101 (1892).

- I. Ordinary receipts.
 - a. Not admissible.

As shown by the case of ELLISON v. ALBRIGHT, supra, the general rule with respect to receipts as evidence of payment as against third parties is that such receipts are not per se admissible in evidence, and that as against such parties direct evidence of the payment must be given by the party giving such receipt, provided such party is alive and competent to testify, such being the best evidence that the nature of the case admits of.

A man's receipt is not evidence to prove a payment against a third person; it is evidence against himself, but not another, and the persons giving such receipts must be called. Cutbush v. Gilbert, 4 Serg. & R. 551, 556 (1818); Ferris v. Boxell, 34 Minn. 262, 264 (1885); Morton v. Morton, 13 Serg. & R. 108 (1825).

So it has been stated that the receipts of third persons are not evidence of the payment of money, unless such persons are either officers of the law or agents of the parties against whom they are offered. Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 419, 424, 70 Am. Dec. 137 (1857).

A plaintiff's receipt for money paid by a third person was held to be no evidence of payment by a defendant in the absence of explanation. Murphy v. Richardson, 33 Pa. 235 (1859).

If the receipt offered in evidence is the receipt simpliciter of a stranger, and is put in evidence to prove the fact of payment against defendants, it is incompetent. Ferris v. Boxell, supra.

And this is so for the reason that if such evidence were received against strangers for the purpose of extinguishing their equitable rights, hearsay evidence would be substituted for testimony under the sanction of an oath, and the advantages of cross-examination would be swept away and no equitable title could be protected. Lloyd v. Lynch, supra.

The acknowledgment of an assignor that he has been paid his debt is no evidence against the assignee, unless made anterior to the assignment, 29 L. R. A.

thereby acknowledged; for, as against such strangers, such receipt is but the hearsay declaration of the party who signed it, made without opportunity for his cross-examination, and independently of the sanction of his oath.

(June 6, 1894.)

ERROR to the District Court for Thayer County to review a judgment in favor of whether such acknowledgment be oral or written. Wilcox v. Pearman, 9 Leigh, 144 (1838).

In a case where plaintiff offered in evidence a receipt of a third party as rebutting evidence, and the defendant objected on the ground that the testimony of such third person was the primary evidence, the court held that such receipt was evidence of payment against nobody but such third person, being only his written declaration of the fact without oath, which could be attested by him in court or by deposition in the ordinary way. English v. Hannah, 4 Watts, 424 (1835).

Where defendant introduced receipts of a third party to prove payment made to such party by defendant, on the joint account of plaintiff and defendant, for a proportion of which it was claimed that the plaintiff was liable to defendant, it was held that such receipts were mere secondary evidence; the best evidence being the sworn testimony of such third party as to the payments made to him, or of any one else who saw the money paid. Ford v. Smith, 5 Cal. 314 (1855).

And in an action in assumpsit, where plaintiff claimed to be the proprietor of a certain tract of land, and contended that the defendants had received money for the use of the proprietors, the court held that a receipt signed by the plaintiff and another was not evidence to prove that the plaintiff was not a proprietor. Root v. Bull, 8 Day, 227 (1808).

So, in an action brought to recover for work and labor done and materials furnished upon defendant's property, the court rejected as evidence certain receipts signed by third parties, introduced by plaintiff, the parties giving such receipts being alive and competent to testify. Printup v. Mitchell, 17 Ga. 558, 63 Am. Dec. 258 (1855).

In Davidson v. Berthoud, 1 A. K. Marsh, 353 (1819), the question was whether, in an action of assumpsit for money laid out and expended, a receipt signed by a third party for money alleged to have been advanced by the plaintiffs to the defendant could be given in evidence. The court held that such receipt was improperly received, and that in order to prove the payment of the money in such a case the person who made it, or he by whom it was received, should be called as a witness, for the reason that the receipt or acknowledgment of such person was no evidence against the defendant, as proof of the acknowledgment of the person who received the money would only be hearsay evidence, the receipt of such person being nothing more than written evidence of his acknowledgment, and whether in writing or by parol, hearsay evidence is equally inadmissible.

In order to prove the payment of money to a third person, in an action to recover such payment against the defendant, the party to whom such payment is made must be examined as a witness, and his receipt, executed after action brought, is not admissible. Davis v. Shreve, 8 Litt. (Ky.) 260 (1823).

And in Dunn v. Woodward, 11 La. Ann. 265 (1855), it was held that an acknowledgment of a receipt of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the alleged unpaid portion of the purchase price of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Mr. W. H. Morris, with Messrs. C. L. Richards and Marquett, Deweese & Hall, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. P. Freeman and B. S. Baker for defendant in error.

Ryan, C., filed the following opinion:

In this action, as originally brought in the district court of Thayer county, Joel T. Albright was plaintiff, and Richard Ellison was defendant. Except where otherwise expressly noted, the same designation will be applied to the respective parties. In his petition, plaintiff, Albright, alleged "that on the 19th day of February, 1886, the plaintiff, then being the owner of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 28 and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 34, all in Twp. 4 N., range 1 W., 6th P. M., in Thayer county, Nebraska, sold and conveyed the same to said defendant, for which defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of \$6,400 at money by a husband from a wife was not evidence against a third party not a party thereto, and that a judgment rendered against the husband in favor of the wife had no more effect against third persons than such acknowledgment.

Again, in Boisse v. Dickson, 32 La. Ann. 1150 (1880), where a receipt given in full by an heir to his father's administrator was sought to be avoided by a creditor of such heir, the court held that it could not be contested by him, and that his only right was to require proof of its genuineness.

In Craig v. Lewis, Barrett v. Lewis, 110 Mass. 377 (1873), the owner of land gave a receipt under seal acknowledging full payment of all debts or demands for damage done by the flowing of a dam, and discharging the owner of the dam from all liability for any flowage. He subsequently conveyed the property free from encumbrance, except the right of flowage, but without admitting any such right. In an action brought by the grantees, it was held that such receipt was no estoppel to his claim for damages incurred subsequent to the receipt of his conveyance, neither was such a receipt notice to the grantee that there had been a payment for all future damages by the mill owner to the grantor.

So also, in Snow v. Moses, 53 Me. 546 (1866), where the defense alleged payment by the defendant's grantor to the complainant's grantor of a gross sum in full of all damages past and future, and the question was whether such payment was a bar to the complainant's right to recover, the court held that, although such an adjustment was good as between the parties, it was no bar to the right of a subsequent owner to recover damages, and that the receipt of the sum mentioned in full for all such damages was not evidence, and constituted no defense.

And again, in an action in assumpsit on an account, the certificate of a third party, not called as a witness, directed to the defendant, as to the number of days the plaintiff had labored with him, was held not admissible as against the defendant, although it was proved that the co-owner had settled upon the basis of such certificate and communicated the fact to the defendant. Sutherland v. Kittridge, 19 Me. 424 (1841).

Where, in an action for money had and received, or money paid or money lent, defendant offered in evidence a certain receipt for money paid to one by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, a witness being ready to prove such person's signature to the receipt, although such party was living, the court held that such evidence could not be received, the party receiving it being alive, and that such party was the best evidence of the receipt of the money. Leathbury v. Bennett, 4 Harr. & McH. 323 (1799).

So where, in an action of ejectment to recover an undivided moiety, the receipt of the lessor of the plaintiff to his guardian was offered in evidence, with the sole object of showing a privity or connection between plaintiff's lessor and the proceeding for partition, the receipt containing no reference to the real estate in controversy, but purporting to be "in full for my share of the personal estate which fell due to me from the estates of my grandfather,"—the court held that such receipt had no resemblance to that class of incidental admissions which do not differ from direct admissions, and did not amount to such conduct as constituted evidence between the parties, and that to allow a receipt from a ward to his guardian to operate as a direct or incidental admission of all the facts introduced into the account of the latter without specific reference to them is a dangerous matter. Burke v. Chamberlain, 22 Md. 293, 307 (1864).

In Ferris v. Bozell, 34 Minn. 232, 234 (1885), a principal, and the plaintiffs as his sureties, gave a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of such principal's duties as agent for the obligee, and at the same time the defendants agreed to become responsible to the plaintiffs for all losses they might sustain on account of such bond. Subsequently the obligee brought suit against the principal and the plaintiffs to recover moneys which should have been accounted for, and plaintiffs also brought suit against the defendants upon their agreement, and while both actions were pending defendants entered into a written agreement with plaintiffs in accordance with which the action against the defendants was dismissed and judgment was rendered in favor of the obligee against the principal and the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs afterwards brought action upon the agreement, alleging payment of the judgment, the payment being put in issue by the answer, but the only evidence of the payment of the judgment introduced by the plaintiffs was the assignment thereof, which recited that it was executed in consideration of a certain sum paid by the plaintiffs, the receipt whereof was acknowledged. The court held that, even assuming that the taking of the assignment, if plaintiffs actually paid the money, was equivalent to paying the judgment, yet it was clear that the receipt contained in the instrument was incompetent against the defendants as evidence of the fact of payment, as it was res inter alios acta, a person's receipt not, alone, being evidence to prove payment against a third party.

Where, in an action upon a bond to indemnify a township, it was sought to give in evidence receipts by different persons for money which they had paid for the maintenance of a child, the subject of the bond, the court held that such receipts would be competent evidence against the person signing them, but were not so against the third party. Roll v. Maxwell, 5 N. J. L. 493 (1819).

Where a husband insured his life for the benefit of his wife, and gave notes for the premium, which were accepted and received by the company, and were receipted on the payment as cash, and there was no evidence that the wife had any knowledge that her husband gave the notes for the premium instead of cash, and one of such notes was not paid at maturity, the insured dying before payment, it was held, in an action by the wife upon the policy, that the receipts so indorsed upon the policy as cash, estopped the company from denying the pay-that date; that the defendant has paid plaintiff, as part consideration for said real estate, the sum of $3,980, as follows: The sum of $1,200 thereof by assuming and agreeing to pay one half part of a mortgage for $2,400 which had been previously given by plaintiff on said northeast quarter of said section 84, and other land of plaintiff; also, by assuming and agreeing to pay a mortgage for $1,600, which had been previously given by plaintiff on said southwest quarter of said section 28, and which said mortgages, with interest and taxes on said land, then amounted to the sum of $2,980, and also the further sum of $1,000 thereof in cash. The plaintiff further says that the sum of $2,470 of said sum of $6,400,—the purchase price which defendant agreed to pay plaintiff for said lands,—with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from the 19th day of February, 1886, is unpaid, and now due from the defendant to the plaintiff." Following the above language, there was set out in the petition what was termed a "second cause of action." This appears to have been but another statement of the same cause above set ment, the receipts so indorsed upon the policy being part of the agreement. Baker v. Union L. Ins. Co. 37 How. Pr. 128, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 144 (1868).

The court in the above case placed its decision upon the ground that where one by his own words or conduct causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him or her to act on that belief, the party so doing is concluded from averring or proving a different state of things as existing at the time he made such representations. In such a case it would be a fraud to allow the insurance company to show that such an indorsement upon the policy was untrue as against a third party, and one who has acted upon the faith of the statement.

The above case of Baker v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co., was, however, reversed upon appeal, 43 N. Y. 283 (1871), the court holding that the acknowledgment or receipt of the money indorsed upon the policy was but a mere admission, and as such liable to be contradicted, and that the wife, accepting such policy and suing upon it, was subject to the same stipulations and conditions that her husband was.

In a case in which plaintiff sought to charge defendant for the board of his wife, defendant proved personal notice not to trust her, and offered in evidence certain receipts, referring to a previous agreement of separation, and for monthly allowances paid to the wife, which were said to be signed by persons authorized by the wife to receive them, but the court disallowed the receipts. Cutbush v. Gilbert, 4 Serg. & R. 555, 556 (1818).

In Farmer's Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Bair, 82 Pa. 88 (1876), property owned by a judgment debtor was insured in the insurance company for three years, and a receipt given for the premiums on a certain date, and part of the property was subsequently destroyed by fire. In an attachment in execution the judgment creditors sought to recover the amount from the insurance company, which at the trial sought to prove that the date of the receipt had been altered. The court held that the question whether or not such receipt had been altered was for the jury upon the evidence, and that the court below erred in taking the matter from the jury.

So, in an action to recover a legacy by an assignee thereof, it was held that the receipt for such legacy given by the original legatee was no evidence as against such assignee, unless proved to have been before the assignment, as such receipt could not prove itself or its genuineness nor the truth of the date. Willcox v. Pearman, 9 Leigh, 144 (1838).

In Hughson v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 9 D. C. App. 98 (1894), action was brought to recover for injuries received on the road of the latter company, and the court below admitted, as evidence of an agreement or release of the plaintiff, a receipt signed by him in favor of the Pullman Car Company, which was executed after the alleged injury. The court held that such receipt was wrongly admitted as evidence and had no retrospective operation.

In Newell v. Roberts, 18 Conn. 63 (1839), action was brought by a partner upon a covenant contained in a deed of dissolution, whereby the defendant undertook to pay all debts due by and against the late firm, plaintiff producing in evidence a receipt of a third party for certain accounts paid by him owing by the late firm which he claimed should have been paid by defendant. The court held such receipt was not admissible, being merely the written declaration of a third party who should be produced as a witness, stating that if such a receipt were admissible it was only upon the ground that it was the admission of a person interested in the subject against his interest, or of an agent of the defendants.

b. Admissible.

Cases exist, however, where a receipt by a third party in connection with other facts may be competent evidence,—as, where the person to whom the payment is made is pointed out by law, as in case of the payment of taxes to a public officer; and so when the person to whom the payment is to be made is designated by the contract of the defendant, as in case of an order on the plaintiff in favor of such person. Farris v. Boxell, 34 Minn. 262, 264 (1886).

In Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 460 (1870), in an action of assumpsit brought to recover damages for breach of contract in the sale and conveyance of land, the plaintiff was allowed to produce in evidence the official receipts for taxes paid by him upon the property.

In Locke v. Porter Gold & S. Min. Co., 41 Cal. 308 (1871), the controversy was between the creditors of the company, the principal question being as to the validity of a note given by the company to the plaintiffs with a mortgage upon the company's property to secure its payment, which mortgage the plaintiffs sought to foreclose, the other creditors, who had levied attachments, alleging and giving evidence showing that the debt secured by such mortgage was fictitious. Plaintiffs claimed that the mortgage was executed to them to secure creditors of the company, and, in particular, the claim of one creditor who had since died, and offered, in support of the bona fides of the claim, a receipt acknowledging payment of such sum, which receipt was objected to as irrelevant, not being the best evidence the nature of the case admitted of. The court held that such receipt was admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the parties for whose benefit the mortgage was given had paid such money for the grantor's benefit, although the fact of the indebtedness of the company to the parties receiving such money was to be shown by other evidence than the receipt.

In Re Minors of Smith, 22 La. Ann. 258 (1870), error was assigned in the judgment of the court below, upon the ground that there was no proof to establish the claim of paraphernal property of a wife al-out, with some slight variations, unimportant to note, since Albright, in this court, disclaims any reliance on said so-called "second cause of action." In the petition, there followed the so-called "second cause of action" this language: "(3) That at the instance and request of the defendant, and relying on the defendant's promise to reimburse plaintiff therefor, the plaintiff has incurred expense, costs, and attorney's fees, in endeavoring to sustain his title and claim to said stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, amounting to the sum of $387.46, an itemized bill and statement of said expenses, costs, and attorney's fees being hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part hereof." On the trial there was introduced no testimony to sustain the above claim for attorney's fees, costs, and expenses. Hence, this part of the petition will be dismissed from further consideration.

Plaintiff alleged that he had sustained damages in the premises in the sum of $3,500, no part of which had been paid, and he prayed judgment in the sum named, with 7 per cent interest on $2,470 from February 19, 1886.

leged to have been received by the husband and credited to his minor children in the account complained of, the only proof in support of the item being an entry in the inventory of the wife's estate, to the effect that the husband acknowledged "to have received the sum of $4,000 separate paraphernal funds of his said deceased wife," the contention being that acknowledgments of the receipt of money by the husband from the wife were not evidence against third persons. The court held that, although such contention was good law and supported by the authorities, yet it was applied in this and other similar cases to evidence adduced contradictorily with third persons, or where the husband or wife was called on to administer proof contradictorily with them, but not where the proof adduced was between the parties or their heirs; that in such a case slight proof was sufficient, and that, the acknowledgment being made at the time, not suspicious, was full proof between the parties and prima facie proof as to all until in a regular proceeding and under proper allegations higher proof was admitted.

In Smith v. Aldrich, 12 Allen, 558 (1866), the action was in trover for conversion of property, the plaintiffs being executors of deceased persons who claimed the title by purchase. The defendants contended that the purchase was merely made by the purchasers as a committee of the parish, and that the title therefore was in the parish, producing in evidence a receipt in the handwriting of one of the deceased testators, found among parish records, acknowledging the receipt of the purchase money and signed by the vendor. The court held such receipt was admissible in evidence, the same having reference to the property in controversy, being signed by a person under whom the plaintiffs claimed title, and placed the competency of such evidence upon two grounds, namely, that the receipt was in the nature of an admission respecting the subject-matter of the suit by the persons whose immediate representatives were plaintiffs in the action; and that it was also a link in the chain of evidence relating to a transaction directly connected with the title to the property, the transaction having taken place nearly forty years prior to the action, and for the reason that the point of time when the original owner parted with the property, which was not proved or agreed by the parties, was a material fact in issue, the evidence tending to show that the title claimed by the plaintiffs did not accrue at the time they alleged.

Where, in an action to recover a legacy, the defendant offered in proof of payment a receipt of one of the plaintiffs for the amount of the legacy, which was expressed to be in full thereof and to be paid by a party misled therein, such receipt was rejected on the ground that the action was not between the party giving such receipt and the plaintiff, and for the reason that it bore date two years prior to the defendant's being appointed trustee and was therefore no act or payment of his, and upon the further ground that the whole was repugnant to the New Jersey Act of November, 1806; 29 L. R. A.

but upon appeal the court held that the receipt ought to have been received in evidence. Connelly v. Kendle, 2 N. J. L. 806 (1807).

In Sherman v. Crosby, 11 Johns. 70 (1814), a defendant authorized a third party to settle an action brought by the plaintiff against such defendant, and it was held that the receipt signed by such plaintiff, stating that he had received of the defendant through such third party a certain amount in full of the judgment and execution in the action, was prima facie evidence of a payment of so much money by such third party so as to authorize him to set it off against a demand of such defendant against him, unless the latter could show fraud or abuse of authority on the part of such third party.

In Maroo v. Fond du Lac County, 63 Wis. 212 (1885), the fact that the grantor of land held a receipt for taxes assessed thereon during a certain year, was held not to estop the city from asserting as against a grantee, who had no knowledge of such receipt at the time of the purchase, that a portion of such taxes had not been paid. In that case the taxes assessed had been declared void, but there had been a subsequent reassessment and the purchaser was presumed to have knowledge of such facts.

II. Receipts in deeds.

The question of a recital in a deed as evidence of payment of the consideration as against third parties will form the subject of a future note.

It has been held that the receipt in a deed for the purchase money paid is not evidence to support this material averment against third persons, but only as against parties to the deed, or persons who subsequently derived title from the grantor. Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 419, 424, 70 Am. Dec. 137 (1857).

So the receipt in a deed is not evidence of payment of purchase money as against creditors who attack it by evidence tending to show that it was made to defraud them. Ibid.; Clark v. Depew, 25 Pa. 509, 515, 64 Am. Dec. 717 (1855).

For the reason that a receipt for purchase money at the foot of a deed has been held to be evidence of the lowest order, even against the parties signing it, being an every-day practice to have such receipt on a deed, even where no money passed. Lloyd v. Lynch, supra.

But in Foster v. Beals, 31 N. Y. 247 (1860), it was held that a mortgagee's receipt, which was proved by the date of the mortgage itself, was not evidence of the payment by a mortgagor as against a subsequent assignee of the mortgage.

Where a conveyance acknowledging the receipt of the purchase money is given, of land on which there is an unregistered mortgage, it is prima facie evidence, as against the mortgagee and in favor of one who claims as a bona fide purchaser and all claiming under him, that the consideration was actually paid, but it would not be so in equity upon a bill filed to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, for in such case defendant must plead actual payment before notice of the plaintiff's right, and show it in proof. Jackson v. M'Chesney, 7 Cow. 380, 17 Am. Dec. 551 (1827). E. W.

In the brief filed on behalf of the defendant in error, Albright, his counsel summarize the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action in this language: "Albright sold and conveyed the land before described to Ellison for $6,400, which fact is admitted by all. That Albright received $1,800 and $1,200 (being the mortgage on the quarter in section 28, and one half of the mortgage on the quarter in section 34, with other lands, with some accrued interest), and the further sum of $1,021 (or $1,023), there is no dispute. Allow us to say the mortgages assumed, with accrued interest, and the cash paid, left only $2,470 of the purchase price of the land, to wit, $6,400. It was this balance of the purchase money for which suit was commenced."

This concise statement of the matters in issue, limiting as it does the inquiry to the item of \$2,470, will be accepted as correct; for thereby, without prejudice to the rights of either party, is avoided a tedious recitation of the matters presented by the answer and reply. To an understanding of the matters involved, it will be necessary to explain the transactions which gave rise to the alleged indebtedness for the sum last mentioned. For this purpose the evidence on this point, of Mr. Albright, summarized, was as follows: On February 19, 1886, Albright sold the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 28 and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 34, Twp. 4 N., range 1 W., 6th P. M., situate in Thayer county, to Richard Ellison, for \$6,400. On one of these quarter sections there was a mortgage of \$2,400, with some interest due, one half of which principal and interest was assumed by the grantees. On the other quarter there was a mortgage of \$1,800, with some interest due, the payment of the entire amount of which was assumed by Ellison. In addition to assuming payment of the above amounts, Ellison was to pay Albright either \$1,021 or \$1,023,—there is some uncertainty as to the exact amount,—which left to be provided for the \$2,470 above referred to. Albright agreed, for this \$2,470, to accept a stock of goods owned by Mr. Brown. On this stock, Ellison held a chattel mortgage, and a bill of sale answering the purposes of a chattel mortgage. It was agreed between Ellison and Brown that the amount due on the notes secured by these two instruments was \$1,800. Before negotiations were consummated, however, the sheriff of Thayer county levied on the stock of goods, and garnished Ellison for the satisfaction of a claim due from Brown. These proceedings by the sheriff caused a delay in closing up the trade. It was finally arranged, however, that the difference between the \$1,800 and the estimated value of the stock of goods, which was \$2,470, should be paid by Ellison to Brown, less the amount of the two executions, which left \$418 going from Ellison to Brown. Following this adjustment, Albright sent a note by Mr. Brown to Mr. Ellison, wherein he said for Ellison to settle with Brown according to the agreement; that the stock had fallen a little short, but that would be fixed in rent with Mr. Brown. There was a defect in the title to the land which was to be conveyed to Ellison, and therefore, when this order was presented to him, he refused to pay it. Subsequently, the defect in title having been obviated, the land was conveyed by Albright to Ellison, and Albright took possession of the goods. Ellison indorsed to Albright, without recourse, the notes of Brown, on which was due the sum of \$1,800, together with the chattel mortgages securing payment of that amount. These notes and the mortgages were left in a bank at Alexandria, and Mr. Albright had no knowledge that either had been indorsed to him. After Albright had taken possession of the goods, Brown surreptitiously obtained possession thereof, whereupon Albright brought a replevin suit, and thereunder, having obtained possession of the stock, sold it. The replevin action resulted in a verdict and judgment for Brown, and others who were joined with him as defendants, against Albright, for the sum of \$2,421. The opinion directing an affirmance of this judgment was reported in 23 Neb. 136. The foregoing statement, as indicated, is compiled from the testimony of Albright, and is given that his version of the affair may appear. It is not to be understood, however, that by this court any attempt has been made to weigh the testimony, or settle controverted fact propositions, for no such effort has been made. As was said in the brief for defendant in error, this suit was brought to recover the \$2,470 item, to which reference has already frequently been made. It can scarcely escape observation that the defendant in error went into possession of the stock of goods which this \$2,470 represented; subsequently, such possession was resumed by Brown; and that, thereby, there was necessitated a suit on the part of Albright to regain his lost possession. Concededly, the only circumstance which could justify Brown's resumption of possession was that Ellison had failed to pay him the balance of \$418—or, as Brown figures it, \$425—due him from Ellison. Even as to this, Brown's testimony was that, after his own resumption of possession, Ellison tendered this balance to him, which he refused to receive, and refused to deliver up the stock of goods unless he was also paid for the trouble and expense he had been put to. Under these circumstances this action was brought by Albright for the recovery of the \$2,470. In his testimony, Mr. Albright said that he replevied the stock on the suggestion of Ellison that he should do so, and that he (Ellison) would sign his replevin undertaking to enable Albright to replevin. This was denied by Ellison, and in this connection it is noteworthy that, as a matter of fact, Ellison's name does not appear on the copy of this undertaking set out in the bill of exceptions. It is difficult to conjecture how the alleged encouragement of Albright by Ellison could become important in this case, for the proof necessary to sustain the plaintiff's allegations was of the failure of the consideration alleged. The petition was not framed upon the theory that Ellison was liable upon the warranty of his title as to the stock of goods transferred to Albright, but was for a failure of consideration for land transferred to Ellison by Albright. The possession of the goods was transferred to Albright in pursuance of the terms of a contract under which Ellison became the owner of Albright's land. This possession was afterwards interrupted by one who, at most, could justify his interruption of such possession to the extent, in amount, of \$425. In the case of Albright v. Brown, reported in 23 Neb. 136, it seems that Albright, as absolute owner, claimed the right of possession of the entire stock. It admits of grave doubts whether under these circumstances Ellison could in any event be held liable for more than the amount he had failed to pay to Brown; that is, according to the evidence of Albright, \$418. Vide Aultman v. Stout, 15 Neb. 586; Sycamore Marsh Harvester Mfg. Co. v. Sturm, 18 Neb. 210; Hadley v. Bazendale, 9 Exch. 841. It appears from the evidence of Albright—though this may admit of doubt—that Brown predicated his right to resume possession upon the fact that there remained due him, as Brown claimed, \$425. Under the rule laid down in Long v. Clapp, 15 Neb. 417, a serious question might be made as to whether or not it was the duty of Albright to have paid this amount; his recovery against Ellison, in that event, being limited to the amount so paid. If this petition had presented Albright's cause of action as one for damage for failure of Ellison's title to the stock of goods, it would, to say the least, have better comported with the proofs offered, and would have afforded an opportunity to try the question of the amount and nature of the damages sustained by the defendant in error. It is quite evident that the matters in controversy herein can never be satisfactorily determined on the issues heretofore presented on the pleadings. For our present purpose, however, we shall proceed as though the evidence introduced was strictly relevant to the issues joined.

There was a judgment in the replevin suit, which was afterwards affirmed in this court. The cause was then remanded to the district court. The theory of the defendant in error in the trial of this case was, that Ellison was liable for the amount paid by the defendant in error for the satisfaction of the judgment in the replevin action. For the purpose of showing this payment, there was introduced in evidence a page of the judgment docket No. 1 of the district court, on which there appeared the name of Joel T. Albright as judgment debtor, and the names of the parties to the suit; the kind of action; the date of judgment (April 21, 1886); the page of the journal; and the amount of the judgment ($2,421). The matters described were followed by this writing: "August 14th, 1889. Received of Joel T. Albright full satisfaction and payment of this judgment, interest, and costs, and the same is hereby satisfied and discharged in full. J. L. Brown, Clara A. Brown and James Lockwood, Defendants, by W. O. Hambel, their Attorney." There was no evidence of the alleged payment, other than above given. Indeed, on May 20, 1889, there was, in said replevin action, returned an execution nulla bona. In the suit which we have now under consideration there were examined as witnesses the above named J. L. Brown and Clara A. Brown, as well as Joel T. Albright, but by neither of these was there an attempt made to prove the amount paid in satisfaction of the judgment rendered in the replevin action. The plaintiff in the district court relied upon the sufficiency of the above receipt, entered, as it doubtless was, on the original judgment docket. To the introduction of the receipt proper objections were made, and exceptions taken. There is therefore now presented the competency of this receipt as against Ellison, who was not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered, of which satisfaction and payment are attempted to be shown by the receipt. In Davidson v. Berthoud, 1 A. K. Marsh. 361, the case was for money paid out and expended by the defendants in error to the use of the plaintiff, and for work, labor, etc. The language used in discussing the effect and nature of a receipt was as follows: "The only question material to be decided is whether the circuit court erred in admitting as evidence a receipt signed by A. Woolford for $222.11, alleged to be advanced by the defendants in error to the plaintiff's use. It is explicitly laid down by Peake, in his treatise on Evidence (page 254), that, to prove the payment of money in such a case, the person who made it, or he by whom it was received, should be called as a witness, for the receipt, or acknowledgment of the person will be no evidence against the defendant. And of the correctness of this doctrine, on principle, there can be but little reason to doubt, for proof of the acknowledgment of the person who received the money would only be hearsay evidence, and the receipt of such person is nothing more than written evidence of his acknowledgment, and, whether in writing or by parol, hearsay evidence is equally inadmissible. Phil. Ev. 174." In Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 419, 70 Am. Dec. 187, there was under consideration the effect to be given a receipt on a deed, as against one not a party to the deed. Having premised that such receipt was competent evidence against the grantor, and all who derived title from him, and was such evidence as to pass the grantor's title, the opinion continued in the following language: "But it is no evidence whatever of the fact of payment against a stranger, or even against one who derived title from Thomas Farrel [the grantor] previously to the date of the conveyance to Lloyd. Against them it is nothing but hearsay. It is a mere ex parte declaration, not under oath, taken without any opportunity to cross-examine. It has been long settled that such declarations are not evidence against strangers. . . . If such evidence were received against strangers for the purpose of extinguishing their equitable rights, the salutary rules established for ages would be subverted, hearsay evidence would be substituted for testimony under the sanction of an oath, and all the advantages of a cross-examination would be swept away. Under such a system no equitable title could be protected. But it is urged that there is a presumption that the grantor and grantees have acted with integrity. This may be so.

but that is no reason why their declarations should be given in evidence against persons who have no connection with them. If they are acquainted with material facts, they are as much bound to deliver their testimony under oath as other persons, if competent witnesses." Other authorities might be cited to sustain this proposition, but this is hardly necessary; for, on reflection, it is very clear that a receipt signed by Mr. Hambel as attorney could have, as against strangers to it, no greater effect than would his oral utterances made to the same parties. If Albright paid the amount of the judgment, it is no hardship that he be required to so testify; giving thereby an opportunity for an examination as to the media and time of payment, as well as to other material circumstances. Certain it is there was no competent proof of payment, and without such proof of this essential fact the judgment is unsupported in a very important respect.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed.

Rehearing denied.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

CAPITAL CITY WATER CO., Appt.,

v.
STATE of Alabama ex rel. Gordon MACDONALD.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation need not be commenced by summons and complaint under Code, §§ 2351, 2352, requiring all "civil actions," except as otherwise provided, to be so commenced.
2. The relator in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation need not obtain leave or an order of court to institute and prosecute such proceedings.
3. An irregularity in commencing a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation before giving security for costs is waived, where such security is subsequently given and the respondent files a demurrer and motion to quash, and afterwards its pleas, and no motion to dismiss on that ground is made until nearly two years after the commencement of the action, when the case comes on for hearing.
4. The relator in proceedings in the nature of quo warranto will not be required to give additional security for costs on the ground that the security given is insolvent, where the evidence in support of the motion only shows that according to the tax records of the county the security has only $320 of taxable property.
5. A plea in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation, alleging that respondent has fully performed all its duties arising out of its charter by providing a system of waterworks of sufficient capacity and power to furnish the city an abundant supply of water, does not deny an allegation in the petition that respondent failed to supply the city and its inhabitants with such water.

NOTE.—A valuable addition to the rapidly growing subject of municipal water supply is furnished by the above case.

As to liability for failure of supply, see note to Howsmon v. Trenton Water Co. (Mo.) 23 L. R. A. 147.

As to municipal condemnation of waterworks, see Re Brooklyn (N. Y.) 23 L. R. A. 270, 29 L. R. A.

6. A waterworks company whose charter makes it its absolute duty to supply pure, wholesome, deep-well water, is not justified in failing to supply such water by the fact that extra expense would be required in digging the necessary deeper wells, for which the city would not have to pay if it should ever elect to purchase such works, which it has the right to do.

7. The right of the state to declare the forfeiture of the charter of a waterworks company for infractions of duty imposed by its charter and contract is not taken away by a provision in the contract that the city may rescind the contract if the company's works fail to meet the requirements of the contract.

8. A provision in the contract of a waterworks company, that if any "unforeseen or inevitable accident" shall happen to any part of its system of works the company shall have a reasonable time to repair injuries resulting from the accident, and that such accident shall not be construed to be a breach of the contract, does not apply to an insufficiency of water during a drought caused by the failure of the company to bore wells necessary to an adequate supply in such seasons.

9. The charter of a waterworks company which supplies river water, instead of pure, wholesome, deep-well water, as required by its charter and contract, during four droughts in two years, and refuses for a wholly insufficient reason, to sink additional wells in order to furnish a proper supply of water, will be annulled, where the only reason for not annulling is that if the charter is vacated all water supply will cease, and a promise by the company after suit is begun that it will sink the additional wells necessary to afford an adequate supply of water.

(December 21, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the City Court of Montgomery in favor of relator in a quo warranto proceeding to annul defendant's charter. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. J. M. Falkner, for appellant:

The giving of security for costs was a condition precedent to the right of relator to bring this action.

Ala. Code, § 3168; Taylor v. State, 81 Ala. 383; Tuscaloosa Scientific & Art Assn. v. State, 58 Ala. 54.

Relator could not give the security for costs after the suit was commenced.

Taylor v. State and Tuscaloosa Scientific & Art Assn. v. State, supra.

Sections 22 and 28 of the ordinance contract furnish a full, complete, plain, and adequate remedy for any violation or breach of duty on the part of this appellant.

The election by the city council of Montgomery to purchase its works furnishes abundant reason why appellant should not change the character of its works in any respect pending such election, or add to the amount which the city council would have to pay appellant for the same.

Linn v. McLean, 80 Ala. 864.

A charter will not be revoked for every wrongful act committed by a corporation. A single act of abuse or wilful nonfeasance may be a ground for a forfeiture; but where an act of nonfeasance has not been committed wilfully or negligently, and does not injure any one, and is not expressly forbidden by the charter, the courts will not, in general, apply the severe remedy of a judgment of forfeiture.

4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 306, par. 8.

A writ of quo warranto or a writ issued in the proceedings in the nature of a quo warranto was not a writ of right. The issuance of the writ did not end the discretion of the court.

Com. v. Ouley, 56 Pa. 270, 94 Am. Dec. 76.

Mr. Gordon Macdonald, for appellee:

Wilful neglect, abuse, misuse, or nonuser of its franchises by a corporation, or failure to discharge the obligations to the public imposed on it, either expressly or by implication in its charter, constitutes grounds for the forfeiture thereof.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 606; People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 38; People v. Kingston & M. Turnp. Road Co. 28 Wend. 198, 35 Am. Dec. 551; Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. & Trustees, 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747, note; People v. Hillsdale & O. Turnp. Road, 28 Wend. 254; Washington & B. Turnp. Co. v. Maryland, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 210, 18 L. ed. 180; People v. Utica Ins. Co. 15 Johns. 358, 8 Am. Dec. 248; Atty. Gen. v. Tudor Ice Co. 104 Mass. 289, 6 Am. Rep. 227; Beach, Priv. Corp. § 54 d, note 3.

The same principles involved in determining the forfeiture of private grants for nonperformance of conditions are applicable to the forfeiture of charter grants to corporations.

People v. Kingston & M. Turnp. Road Co. 28 Wend. 198, 35 Am. Dec. 551; People v. Kankakee River Imp. Co. 103 Ill. 491; State v. Brown, 5 R. I. 1; State v. Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. 28 Ohio St. 121; Com. v. Tenth Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. 5 Cush. 509; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 1.

The neglect or refusal to perform any of the duties to the public enjoined on the corporation by its charter, or by general laws, is sufficient to work a forfeiture of its charter.

Lombard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60; People v. Hillsdale & O. Turnp. Road, supra; Washington & B. Turnp. Road v. State, 19 Md. 289; Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 53, 54, and notes; Pas- chall v. Whittsett, 11 Ala. 472; Torrett v. Taylor, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 51, 3 L. ed. 663.
20 L. R. A.

The courts have no discretion and must declare a forfeiture where sufficient grounds are shown.

State v. Minnesota C. R. Co. 36 Minn. 249; People v. Northern R. Co. 53 Barb. 123; State v. Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. 23 Ohio St. 121.

Excuse for failure to perform corporate duties are no reply to facts showing wilful, deliberate abuse.

People v. Kingston & M. Turnp. Road Co. 23 Wend. 206, 35 Am. Dec. 551.

Cause of forfeiture, once committed, cannot be attoned for by any subsequent good conduct.

People v. Hillsdale & O. Turnp. Road, 23 Wend. 258.

The state is not required to prove an actual injury to the public as a result of the corporation's wrongful acts. It is sufficient if their tendency be injurious.

Beach, Priv. Corp. § 54; Commercial Bank v. State, 6 Smedes & M. 599, 45 Am. Dec. 290.

The difference and litigation between the city of Montgomery and the appellant, and the acts of the city council, can furnish no excuse for the nonperformance of duties to the public enjoined on appellant by its charter.

Hart v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 40 Conn. 324; Washington & B. Turnp. Co. v. Maryland, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 210, 18 L. ed. 180.

McClellan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, prosecuted by the state on the relation of Macdonald against the Capital City Water Company, a corporation, under sections 3187 et seq. of the Code, for the dissolution of said corporation. It was commenced by petition or information addressed to the judge of the city court of Montgomery. The petition avers that said company is an organized body acting as a corporation, and claiming to be chartered under the laws of this state, and to have the franchise for the business of furnishing water through its system of water-works to the municipality and residents of Montgomery for domestic and other uses, and is now engaged in that business, in which it operates steam pumps, and uses the streets of the city for the purpose of running its pipes for the passage of its water to the consumers thereof; that it is the clear and imperative duty of said company, under and by the expressed terms of the charter, under which it is claiming and exercising the franchise to own and operate said system of water-works, to furnish to the city of Montgomery and the residents thereof at all times a sufficient supply of pure, wholesome water for the use, domestic and otherwise, of said city and the residents thereof, which duty is the principal object and purpose of said company's corporate existence, and for the performance whereof it claims to be authorized to, and does, charge certain rates to the city and its inhabitants; that, "notwithstanding the clear and obvious duty of said Capital City Water Company, undertaking to exercise and exercising said corporate franchise as aforesaid, as to furnishing pure and wholesome water to said municipality and the residents thereof, yet in open and flagrant violation of said duties and wilful misuse and abuse of the corporate franchises exercised by said Capital City Water Company, said company has for, to wit, three years last past, persistently refused and failed to perform said corporate duty of furnishing said municipality and the residents thereof for any purpose whatsoever any supply of pure and wholesome water, and said company still persists in refusing and failing to perform its said duty;" that said company "has and does still misuse and abuse, as aforesaid, the franchise operated by it as aforesaid, though frequently admonished of such failure in its duty, and requested to obey and observe its corporate duties aforesaid." And the petition further avers and concludes as follows: "That by reason of the use and exercise of the franchise aforesaid by said Capital City Water Company and its contract with the city of Montgomery as to furnishing good, pure, and wholesome water to said city and its inhabitants, said municipality and its inhabitants are now almost wholly dependent on said company for their supply of water for domestic and other uses; that by reason of said Capital City Water Company's persistent misuse and abuse of its franchises and duties aforesaid in failing to supply said municipality and its inhabitants with a sufficient supply of pure and wholesome water, as aforesaid, the health and comfort of the inhabitants of said city are greatly impaired and most seriously endangered, to the great and incalculable damage of said city and its inhabitants, and they are wholly without any due and adequate remedy at law in the premises." The prayer of the petition is for "a writ of quo warranto, or some other appropriate writ, directed to said Capital City Water Company, commanding it to appear and show under what warrant of law it exercises the corporate franchises as aforesaid and acting as a corporation, and also show cause, if any it can, why its said charter, if it hath any such, should not be forfeited and annulled, and its corporate existence, if any such it hath, should not be dissolved." Upon presentation of this petition to the judge of the city court this order was made by him: "To the Clerk of the City Court of Montgomery: Let an alternative writ issue according to the prayer of the petition, returnable on the 10th of May, 1892." And thereupon the petition and order were filed with the clerk of the city court, and on the same day a writ was issued in accordance with the prayer of the petition, addressed to the water company, reciting the allegations of the information, and commanding said company to appear and show "under what warrant of law you exercise the corporate functions and franchises herein above set out, and also to show cause, if any you have, why your charter should not be vacated and your corporate existence annulled." The respondent company appeared, and interposed a demurrer to the complaint or petition, and also a motion to quash the writ. All the assignments of demurrer which are insisted on in argument are also set down as grounds of the motion to quash, and are available to the appellant, if at all, as well upon that motion as on demurrer to the petition. We therefore need only review the action of the trial court in overruling said motion.

The first ground of the motion proceeds on the theory that this proceeding should have been commenced by summons and complaint, under sections 2651 and 2652 of the Code, which provide (sec. 2651) that all civil actions in courts of record, except as otherwise provided in the Code, must be commenced by the service of summons, and (sec. 2652) that the summons must be issued by the clerk of the court, and be accompanied by the complaint, signed, etc., setting forth the cause of action. This position is, in our opinion, untenable. The statutory provisions in question have reference solely to the ordinary civil actions for the recovery of property or money, as is clearly demonstrated by a reference to the original statute, as found in the Code of 1852 (sec. 2160) and as carried into the Revised Code (sec. 2558) and into the Code of 1876 (sec. 2924), which provides: "All civil actions in the courts of record of this state for the recovery of real estate, or any interest therein, or for waste or trespass on land, or for the recovery of money or personal property, or for the recovery of damages (except in such cases as is otherwise provided by the code), must be commenced by the service of a summons." The omission from the statute in the codification of 1886 of the specification of the civil actions covered by it manifestly was not intended to either enlarge or narrow its operation, but only to express the same proposition more concisely; and there is nothing in its present context requiring or justifying an extension of its provisions to any case not originally within its terms, or to any action except those for the recovery of property or money. The sole purpose of the statute at first, all along, and now was, and has been, and is to substitute a summons and complaint for the common-law writ and declaration, and not to require proceedings which at common law were prosecuted by information or petition and the like, such as mandamus, prohibition, certiorari, supersedeas, habeas corpus, etc., to be commenced by the service of summons and complaint. This view is strengthened by reference to the provisions of the code in respect of the form of the summons required to be issued and served in "all civil actions," as well by the present as all former codes, and by the forms of complaint found in all the codes. None of these forms are adapted to other actions than those for the recovery of property or money or damages, and it has never been supposed that any of the extraordinary proceedings noted above should or could be commenced by a summons accompanied either by a common-law declaration or by a complaint in any form analogous to those given. Moreover, quo warranto was not even a civil proceeding at the common law, but criminal in its nature, involving severe pains and penalties; and, now that it has been shorn of these consequences, it still cannot be said to be a "civil action," within statutes like section 2651 of the Code, which is defined: "An action which has for its object the recovery of private or civil rights, or compensation for their infraction." Bouvier, Law Dict., § 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 257. And, beyond all this, it may well be said to be the settled practice in this state to commence proceedings under sections 8167 et seq. of the Code by information or petition in the nature of an information setting forth the facts, and praying a writ of quo warranto, as in the case at bar (Tuscaloosa Scientific & Art Asso. v. State, 58 Ala. 54; State v. Webb, 97 Ala. 111); and this practice is expressly approved, with reference to similar statutory provisions, by the supreme court of New Jersey (Vanatta v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 88 N. J. L. 282), where it is also decided that this proceeding is not "an action" within statutes like section 2651 of our Code. State v. Roe, 26 N. J. L. 215.

It was not necessary for the relator to obtain leave or an order of any court to institute and prosecute this proceeding before filing the information, or at all, as is insisted by the second ground of the motion to quash. Tuscaloosa Scientific & Art Asso. v. State and State v. Webb, supra.

The remaining grounds of the motion to quash are obviously ill taken, and, as they are not insisted upon by appellant's counsel, we shall not discuss them. The motion to quash the writ was properly overruled.

The respondent also moved to dismiss the proceeding for that the relator did not give security for costs before filing the information. It is quite true that in such cases security for the costs must be given before the proceeding is instituted, and cannot afterwards be supplied, if seasonable objection be made. Taylor v. State, 81 Ala. 388. But it is equally well settled that where the security is in fact given after the suit has been commenced, the respondent may waive the irregularity, and that he does waive it by proceeding with the cause and omitting to move with reasonable promptness for a dismissal on account of it. This proceeding was begun on April 27, 1892. The security for costs was approved and accepted by the clerk of the court on May 2, 1892. The respondent filed his demurrers and motion to quash on May 10, 1892, and afterwards its pleas, to which the petitioner demurred; and when the case came on for hearing, in February, 1894, this motion to dismiss on the ground that security for costs was not given before the commencement of the proceeding was for the first time interposed. Under these circumstances the court properly overruled it. Duncan v. Richardson, 34 Ala. 117; Weeks v. Napier, 83 Ala. 568; Heftin v. Rock Mills Mfg. & L. Co. 58 Ala. 618. We cannot affirm that the trial court should have granted respondent's motion "to require the relator to give other or additional security for costs of this suit, for the reason that the security given by the relator, to wit, T. Gardner Foster, is insolvent," because the evidence adduced in support of the motion only went to show that, according to the tax records of the county, he had only $320 of taxable property. He 29 L. R. A.

may have been perfectly solvent notwithstanding he had only that amount of taxable property in the county of Montgomery.

The respondent filed several pleas to the information and writ of quo warranto. Demurrers were interposed to each of these pleas, and sustained by the court; and, the respondent declining to further plead, judgment was entered dissolving the corporation. We are now to consider the sufficiency of said several pleas, and, before proceeding to that, it is to be recalled that the information avers a charter duty upon the respondent to supply the city of Montgomery and the residents or inhabitants thereof with pure and wholesome water sufficient in quantity at all times for domestic and other uses, and that said corporation had failed, and persistently fails and refuses, to perform this duty, which was the chief object and end of its creation and existence, and to supply said city and its people at all times with pure and wholesome water sufficient for their uses. The several pleas of the respondent admit that it was the duty of the Capital City Water Company, under its charter, "to supply the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants with clear, wholesome, and deep-well water, suitable for all domestic and ordinary manufacturing purposes, and sufficient in quantity for all uses of said city and its inhabitants," and they severally set forth as an exhibit the declaration and certificate of incorporation of said company, constituting and being the act or charter creating said corporation, wherein the objects, powers, and duties of said corporation, so far as they are involved in this case, are declared, granted, and imposed in the following language: "The object for which this corporation is formed is to supply water to said city of Montgomery, and to build, construct, lay, set, use, and operate pumps, reservoirs, mains, pipes, hydrants, wells, and the necessary fixtures in and near said city of Montgomery; and to supply to said city and its inhabitants clear, wholesome, and deep-well water, suitable for all domestic and manufacturing purposes, and sufficient in quantity for all uses of said city and its inhabitants, as set forth and provided in a certain ordinance contract ordained by the honorable city council of said city on, to wit, the 7th day of October, 1885, granting to Arthur H. Howland, his associates, successors, and their assigns, the right to lay down, use, and maintain water mains, pipes, and aqueducts and other fixtures pertaining to supplying a water supply to and in the city of Montgomery, . . . and to carry out and perform said contract in all respects and particulars according to the true meaning and intent thereof on the part of the said Arthur H. Howland, his associates, successors, and assigns, and to use, exercise, and enjoy all the rights, franchises, and privileges at any time owned, possessed, or enjoyed by said Arthur H. Howland, his associates, successors, or assigns, under and by said ordinance." The ordinance contract referred to in the declaration of incorporation is also made an exhibit to and set out in the pleas, and it is claimed that certain provisions thereof, taken in connection with certain action or omission to act on the part of the city council under such provisions, qualify the otherwise absolute duty of the corporation to furnish, at all times, water of the prescribed quality and quantity to the city and its inhabitants, and justify whatever of failure may have occurred in that behalf; and it is also claimed that certain of said provisions in and of themselves afford an adequate and indeed the only remedy for an abuse of its franchise by the corporation. Upon the information and the writ, therefore, as also upon the confessions of the pleas and the provisions of respondent's charter exhibited by the pleas, the case presented involves a charter duty resting on the Capital City Water Company to supply water of the prescribed quality and adequate quantity to the city and its inhabitants at all times; and upon the information and writ the case presented involves a wilful failure on the part of said company to discharge and perform this duty. The duty is obviously a public one and of vast importance to the municipality and people of Montgomery. It is of no less consequence in respect of the quality of the water to be supplied than in respect of its quantity and the constancy of the supply. The "act creating the corporation" is equally imperative in respect of the quality and the quantity and the continuity of the supply of the water for the furnishing of which to the city and the residents thereof the corporation was organized, chartered, and invested with the valuable franchise of constructing and operating a system of waterworks in the city of Montgomery. Nay, more, it is readily conceivable that, to supply the city and its inhabitants with impure, unwholesome, and polluted water would be more disastrous than to supply an insufficient quantity of pure water, or even none at all. And so in respect of the constancy of the supply, the charter requires the prescribed water to be furnished at all times without exception; and to fail in this duty for any material length of time is as much a breach of corporate duty, as much an offense against the charter and abuse of the franchise granted, as a total failure in that regard, though not so mischievous in results. Hence we feel no hesitation in affirming that a failure to constantly furnish water of the prescribed quality is an offense against the act creating this corporation, within the terms of section 8167, clause 1, of the Code, unless justification or excuse for such failure on the particular facts under which it occurred can be found in the charter of the corporation.

Recurring to the pleas of the respondent, it is to be considered whether they severally either negative the charge of failure made by the petition and recited in the writ, or, without such negation, present facts which excuse or justify such failure in such sort as to strip it of the essentials of an offense against the charter of the respondent company; or, failing this, whether they present a case which addresses itself to the discretion of the court, and requires an exercise of that discretion in the respondent's favor. Respondent's first plea does not negative the failure of corporate duty laid in the information. Construing it, as all pleas must be construed, most strongly against the pleader, it, in the first place, only claims that the water company discharged the duty in question for the first five years after its organization and incorporation and the completion of its works,—that is, down to the year 1890; and this is to be taken as a confession that it has not performed that duty during the two years elapsing from 1890 to 1892, when this proceeding was commenced. And the plea proceeds, upon the assumption of failure to supply pure and wholesome water continuously during said last-named period, to state facts which are intended to afford justification or excuse for such failure, thus emphasizing the admission of its failure. After this it proceeds to aver that the city and its inhabitants are entirely dependent upon the respondent for a supply of water for fire and sanitary purposes, and that, should the company's charter be taken away from it, the city will be left without any supply of water for either of said purposes; and further, "that many of the inhabitants of said city are now depending solely upon the defendant for their water supply, and they are now, and have been at all times since the construction of defendant's works, furnished with an abundant supply of pure, wholesome, and deep-well water, and sufficient in quality and quantity for all the wants of the city and its inhabitants; and defendant avers that if its charter was forfeited it would have no right to supply either the city of Montgomery or its inhabitants with water, or to operate its works in any way, and it would result in irreparable injury, and in probable devastation and ruin to this city and its inhabitants." It was not intended by the pleader in the above excerpt from the first plea to allege that the respondent had at all times supplied pure and wholesome deep-well water to the city and its inhabitants, and counsel for the defendant do not at all insist upon that interpretation of the plea. To give it that construction, moreover, would render the plea duplex, and inconsistent with itself, for that in the first part of it the respondent confesses failure to supply water as prescribed in its charter, and attempts to excuse and justify such failure. But, more than this, in the averment quoted it is not stated that the respondent company has at all times furnished the prescribed water supply, but only that such supply has been furnished, and this not to the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants, but to "many of the inhabitants of the city of Montgomery" only. This whole averment was obviously intended as a mere basis for the further conclusion, stated in the plea, that to dissolve the respondent corporation would stop all supply of water and "result in irreparable injury, and with probable devastation and ruin to this city and its inhabitants;" and so it seems to be considered by counsel. There is, then, we conclude, no denial in this plea of the failure to supply water of the prescribed quality charged in the petition and set out in the writ. Nor is there any denial of the charge of failure to supply water of the prescribed quality made by the petition and recited in the writ attempted in respondent's second plea, and the fourth expressly admits that the respondent has not at all times since the completion of its works supplied the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants with pure and wholesome water, as required by the charter of the corporation.

Respondent's fifth plea contains this averment: "And defendant avers that it has from the beginning until now complied in all respects with all the terms and conditions" of the ordinance contract between it and the city, "and has fully performed all its duties arising out of its charter by providing a system of waterworks of sufficient capacity and power to furnish the city of Montgomery an abundant supply of pure, wholesome, deep-well water, sufficient for all the purposes of the city and its inhabitants. And it avers that each and every assignment of breach in this respect as set forth in plaintiff's alternative writ, heretofore served upon this defendant, are wholly untrue." It is insisted by counsel for appellant that this averment is a denial of the charge that the company has failed to supply the city and its inhabitants with pure and wholesome water, and that this plea presents the general issue upon said charge. The position is not tenable. The plea does not allege facts showing that the pleader has performed its charter duty in the respect in question, but only a general conclusion of compliance with its engagements to the city, and performance of all its corporate duties. This conclusion may be based, and, indeed, as appears from the plea itself, is based, upon a wholly unwarranted and erroneous construction of the charter by the pleader. The plea sets forth that the company has performed all its charter duties, not, indeed, by the construction of suitable works of adequate capacity, and by furnishing the city and its inhabitants at all times with a sufficient quantity of pure, wholesome, deep-well water, but only that it has performed its charter duty, and complied with all the requirements of the act creating it, "by providing a system of waterworks of sufficient capacity and power to furnish the city of Montgomery an abundant supply of pure, wholesome, deep-well water, sufficient for all the purposes of the city and its inhabitants." It is not averred in this plea that the water company has in fact supplied water of the requisite quality and quantity to the city and its inhabitants at all times, or, indeed, at any time, but only that it has a system of works capable of supplying water according to the charter. On the construction which we are asked to put upon this plea the whole charter duty of the respondent would be fully performed by the building of its system of works, though no drop of water ever passed through the system to the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants. And the concluding sentence of the plea is, in effect, merely an averment that all charges of the petition and writ in respect of the construction of a system of waterworks of adequate capacity are untrue. The gravamen of the petition and writ is a failure, not to construct the works, but to supply pure and wholesome water; and the fact of the construction is no answer to the charge of a failure to operate the works so as to supply the water required by the charter to be supplied, but on the contrary goes in aggravation of such failure.

The sixth and only other plea of respondent makes no pretense of denying the charge that the corporation has failed to supply water as required by the charter at all times to the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants, but admits, as does the fourth plea, "that on a few occasions, to wit, four times, after a protracted drought, for which the company was in no way responsible, and which it could not anticipate, it has been compelled to obtain a part of its water supply from the Alabama river; but that this character of water was furnished only for a short period of time, and only so long as there was an absolute necessity therefor, resulting from a failure of its artesian wells to supply the usual amount of water." It is thus seen that none of the respondent's pleas deny, and some of them expressly, and all except the fifth inferentially, admit that the corporation has not at all times supplied the city and its inhabitants with pure and wholesome water, etc. Several matters are set up in justification of this failure, and in avoidance of the consequences thereof. These are all based, as we have seen, upon certain provisions of the contract between the city and the company, and referred to in the declaration of incorporation. First, it is insisted by the pleas that the fact that the city had and exercised an election to purchase respondent's works in 1890 excused the company from all duty to increase the supply of pure, wholesome, deep-well water to meet the wants of the city and requirement of the charter, and justified the furnishing of river water for the two years or more ensuing, during which time the city and the company were disputing over the price the former should pay for the works; the company having the while the full possession and control, and being in undisturbed operation, of its works, and presumably in the receipt of the full rates of compensation fixed by the contract for supplying the city and its inhabitants with pure, wholesome, deep-well water sufficient at all times for the uses of the municipality and the residents thereof. The essence of this plea is that, notwithstanding the absolute charter duty of the defendant to supply pure, wholesome, deep-well water, and notwithstanding there is not one word in this contract which qualifies that duty, yet the company need only perform it when the circumstances are such that to do so will entail no expense upon it except such as the city would have to pay should it ever elect to purchase the works. The principle of the plea would justify the company in supplying polluted, pestilential water to the people for years, and charging and receiving compensation as for pure and wholesome water, solely upon the ground that to supply the water the corporation was chartered to supply, contracted with the city to supply, and which it is at all times paid to supply, would entail some expense upon the company. This, with what was said of this defense when the case was formerly here, will suffice to dispose of it. State v. Capital City Water Co. (Ala.) 14 So. Rep. 652.

Again, it is stipulated in said ordinance contract that the ordinance may be repealed on ninety days' notice to said corporation, "if at any time the works herein provided for to be constructed by the said Arthur H. Howland, his associates, successors, or assigns, shall in any substantial or material particular fail to meet the requirements of this contract, unless within said ninety days" said works shall have been made to conform to the provisions of the contract. And it is claimed that this right of the city to rescind the contract is the remedy, and the only remedy, for an abuse by the corporation of the franchises which the state has granted to it for the public good. This right of rescission does not, upon its face, as given in the contract, import any power in the city to vacate the respondent's charter, or to disturb in any way its corporate existence, but only to avoid a contract which, so far as it was of benefit to the respondent, authorized it to charge certain rates for water furnished by it to the city and its inhabitants. So that, if it be conceded that this ordinance contract becomes a part of the charter of the respondent corporation because of the reference to it in the declaration of incorporation, this power of annulling the contract would not be the power of vacating the corporation. Whatever the city's competency to make this contract, it had not the sovereign power of breathing life into the corporate entity; and, whatever its right to annul the contract, it was impotent to take away the life of the corporation. The state gave, and the state only can take away, that life. Considering the contract as part of the charter, the state might declare forfeiture of the charter for infractions of duty imposed by the contract; but it by no means follows that the city, having powers only in respect of that part of the charter embraced in the contract, could exert any influence upon the vital principle of corporate existence which emanated from the state. The case is analogous to the turnpike cases to which we have been referred, in which it was insisted that the right vested by the charters or general statutes in supervisors to throw open toll gates on the roads of the corporations upon their failure to construct and maintain roads of a certain character prescribed in the charters, and the fact that this had been done by the supervisors, precluded the state from enforcing forfeitures of the charters for such failure. But the position was held unsound, the court in one case saying: "That the inspectors may throw open the turnpike gates is no argument against forfeiture for nonrepair. The application to them is but a cumulative remedy. . . . But the statute does not forbid the remedy by information, any more than the statute giving a summary remedy to the landlord against his tenant may be said to inhibit the action of ejectment." People v. Hillsdale & O. Turnp. Road, 23 Wend. 254. And in another case: "I am entirely satisfied that it could form no bar to this proceeding, even admitting that the gates were opened under a judicial order of an inspector of turnpikes, pursuant to the statute. Such a step, if noticeable at all, would operate rather to ascertain and strengthen the case against the company than as furnishing matter of defense." People v. Bristol & R. Turnp. Road, Id. 247.

There is another provision of this ordinance contract to the effect that, if any unforeseen or inevitable accident should happen to any part of the respondent's system of waterworks, the company should have a reasonable time to repair injuries resulting from such accident, and that such "accident and the reasonable time rendered necessary to repair or provide for the same as aforesaid shall never be construed to be a breach of this contract, or any cause for repealing this ordinance," etc.; and this stipulation of the contract is set up in defense to the writ in this case. As no "unforeseen or inevitable accident" is averred, it is difficult to see what pertinency this stipulation has to the issue in the case. Surely a drought is not an "accident," and a failure of the company to bore wells shown to be necessary to an adequate supply in seasons of drought can in no sense be charged to an "unforeseen or inevitable accident."

So much for the matters relied on in justification of the failure of respondent to supply at all times the water prescribed by the charter, or as qualifying the corporate duty in that regard. Very clearly, we think nothing which is alleged or which appears by the ordinance contract either qualifies in any degree the absolute corporate duty in that behalf, or justifies the failure to perform that duty, averred in the petition, and not denied in the pleas. It only remains to be considered whether, on the case presented by the petition and writ on the one hand and the pleas on the other, we should, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, refuse to declare respondent's charter forfeited, notwithstanding the failure of duty and consequent abuse of franchise which it admits, or rather whether we should hold that its pleas were sufficient to invoke an exercise of that discretion in its favor by the court below. These pleas show that, commencing the latter part of 1890 or in 1891, and extending down to the time of plea filed in February, 1894, there have been four periods during which river water, and not pure, wholesome, deep-well water, was supplied to the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants. It is said that these periods were "short," but how short or long is not shown. For aught that is alleged, they may as well have covered a month or more on each occasion as a day. It is shown that these periods occurred during protracted droughts, which almost always occur in the heated season, when it is fair to assume river water is specially impure, and the use of impure water is especially dangerous. It is shown that the respondent was fully conscious of the incapacity of its wells to meet the requirements of its charter duty certainly as early as the year 1890, and then, after resolving to sink additional wells in order to perform the duty resting upon it, failed, for a wholly insufficient reason, to make any effort in that direction, and went on in disregard of its said duty, without other effort or purpose to meet its obligations to the public for more than two years, meantime failing to supply for indefinite periods, in the most unhealthy seasons of the year, the pure, wholesome, deep-well water required both by the grant of the state and the contract with the city. It is not pretended that the respondent was unable for any reason to supply the water. There seems to be no question at all but that an abundant supply of this water could have been reached and utilized by the company. If it were unable to supply the water, that itself would be a ground for vacating its charter. Knowing all this time—from 1890 to 1892—the urgent necessity for additional wells, having the ability to sink them, and thereby secure and furnish to the city an abundant supply of pure and wholesome water, and having failed for so long to make any effort to that end, it would be a confusion and a misuse of terms to say that this default in respect of a plain, absolute, and practicable duty was other than a wilful abuse of the franchise granted by the state, and a wilful offense against the act creating the corporation. Why should not the penalty for this offense be visited upon the respondent? What facts are set forth in the pleas to challenge the discretion of the court in favor of continued corporate existence, and to furnish reasons for allowing the company to further exercise the franchise which it has abused? For one thing it is said that, if the charter is vacated, all water supply will at once cease, and the city will be exposed in consequence to utter devastation and ruin. There is nothing in this dire prognostication. The law is not wanting in means and instrumentalities for the administration of the affairs and the carrying on of the business of this company ad interim, and ultimately winding it up, and passing its system of works into other hands, charged with a more faithful performance of the great public duty of supplying the city and its people with wholesome water, and thereby subserving the end for which this company was brought into existence, and which it has failed to meet.

Again, it is said that the respondent is now, or was when the case was heard in February last, after having pretermitted all effort in that direction for more than two years, and until, and even for a year after, this proceeding was begun, exerting itself to sink a sufficient number of additional deep wells to furnish the water supply required by its charter; and the promise is made by the pleas that these efforts will be continued unremittingly, and with the greatest diligence and skill, until they are crowned with success. That this fact, transpiring after the franchise has been sufficiently abused to authorize and require the forfeiture of corporate existence, and after proceedings for forfeiture had commenced and been pending for a year, and this promise of the performance of corporate duty in the future, can exert no influence by way of curing the abuse already committed, or of absolving the company from responsibility for the offense of which it has already been guilty, constituting a legal ground of forfeiture, is most clear. People v. Hildale & C. Turnp. Road, 28 Wend. 254, 258. And this fact and promise are equally impotent and vain as an invocation to judicial discretion. The fact is not a new one in the history of this company, developed in the pleadings here. There have been former occasions, according to the pleas, when the company had resolved upon the sinking of additional wells, and set about the execution of that purpose, only to turn away from it upon wholly insufficient considerations. And the promise is no greater obligation than has all along rested upon the company to do the very thing it now promises to do; and, as that obligation has not sufficed in the past to keep the corporation up to the mark of this most vital duty, it would not be wise to rely upon the promise for the future. And as the company has in the past, with full consciousness of duty unperformed, been easily diverted from its tentative resolution to discharge it, it is not harsh to say the future cannot be contemplated without grave apprehension that when the sword of this writ no longer hangs over its life the present resolution to discharge its duty would lose its force, the present night and day effort to sink wells would lose its energy, and upon some entirely insufficient consideration, invited to lodgment in the mind of the company by the abortion of this proceeding, there would be another default of duty, the resolution would become infirm, the work would cease, the town would continue to be supplied with impure and unwholesome water, and the object and end of corporate existence would go unaccomplished and unattained. There are averments of good faith, of great skill and perfection in the construction by the respondent of its system of waterworks, of the use of the most approved machinery and appliances and the most expert human skill in the service of the city and its people; but all these have fallen short of meeting the plain and simple requirement of the chart of respondent's life—that it should furnish the city of Montgomery and its inhabitants with pure, wholesome, deep-well water sufficient at all times for their domestic and other uses. We have, and in the nature of things can have, no sufficient assurance that this duty will be performed in the future. The interests involved are most vital and important, involving the health and lives, it may well be, of the inhabitants of the city and the public. We feel that a sound judicial discretion requires the removal of this corporation from the important work it has so illy performed, that it may be committed to other agencies having a juster appreciation of the trusts imposed, and a quicker sense of the duties to be discharged. None of the pleas, we therefore conclude, present any denial of the abuse of franchise charged by the petition and writ, nor any justification or excuse for such abuse, not set up any fact which should have challenged the discretion of the city court to a denial of the prayer of the petition, notwithstanding the charges made were confessed. The city court properly sustained demurrers to each of the pleas. The respondent declining to plead further, nothing was left to the trial court but to enter a judgment forfeiting the respondent's charter and ousting it of the franchises thereby granted, and that judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing denied July 21, 1895.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

R. K. STEPHENS et al., Respts.,

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Appt.

(..... Cal.)

1. A provision in a lease of property owned by a railroad company and adjoining its railroad grounds, that such company shall not be responsible for any damage to buildings thereon caused by fire, is not void as against public policy, on the ground that the property of the public will thereby be in danger.

2. A contract valid when made cannot be rendered invalid by a general statute subsequently passed.

(September 7, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Tulare County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the value of property destroyed by fire alleged to have been set out by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Foshay Walker, for appellant:

Why should a different rule be applied to defendant, with regard to the exemption provided for in this lease, from what would be applied if defendant had taken out a policy of insurance to protect it against damage from negligence of the same employes? Such a contract is everywhere held to be valid and as not violating any rule of public policy.

Civil Code, §§ 2629, 2755; Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 222, 7 L. ed. 659; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 9 L. ed. 512; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 218, 9 L. ed. 691; Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 128 U. S. 67, 31 L. ed. 63; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. (Limited) v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 438, 32 L. ed. 791; California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 133 U. S. 414, 33 L. ed. 737; Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 718, 41 Am. Dec. 661; Henderson v. Western Marine F. Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 164, 43 Am. Dec. 176; Gates v. Madison County Mut. Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 13 Barb. 284; Hynds v. Schenectady County Mut. Ins. Co. 16 Barb. 119; Enterprise Ins. Co. v. Patriot, 35 Ohio St. 35, 35 Am. Rep. 889; Goss v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 48 N. H. 41, 97 Am. Dec. 572; Johnson v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 4 Allen, 388;

NOTE.—For validity of contract by railroad company to avoid liability for negligence causing injury when the relation of common carrier to the public is not involved, see also Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa) 24 L. R. A. 647, 29 L. R. A.

Hale v. Washington Ins. Co. 2 Story, C. C. 176.

Insurance against fire covers loss by fire through negligence of assured or that of his servants, even though not expressly provided for in the policy.

Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 222, 7 L. ed. 659; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 9 L. ed. 512; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 218, 9 L. ed. 691; Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 128 U. S. 67, 31 L. ed. 63; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. (Limited) v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 438, 32 L. ed. 791; California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 133 U. S. 414, 33 L. ed. 737.

It is not pretended that defendant was under any public obligation to lease, either to respondent Stephens or any other person, the land upon which the warehouse stood.

As to whether it would lease its land, it stood in the same position as any owner. It had the undoubted right to make its own terms.

Even a common carrier may lawfully contract, when not forbidden so to do by statute, with the donee of a free railroad pass, so as to relieve the carrier from all injury resulting from any sort of negligence, however gross, of its employes.

Welles v. New York C. R. Co. 26 Barb. 641, 24 N. Y. 181; Bissell v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 442, 32 Am. Dec. 369; Ulrich v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 80; Kinney v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. L. 407, 90 Am. Dec. 675; Griswold v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 53 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 365, 5 L. R. A. 846.

Where the contract is not forbidden by statute, nor by the declared policy of the state, the master may, by contract with his servant, relieve himself from all liability to the servant for damage because of the negligence of any of the employes of the master.

Western & A. R. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465; Western & A. R. Co. v. Strong, 52 Ga. 461; Hendricks v. Western & A. R. Co. 52 Ga. 467; Galloway v. Western & A. R. Co. 57 Ga. 512; Mitchell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 1 Am. L. Reg. 717.

In Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa), 24 L. R. A. 647, the question arose upon a covenant in a lease precisely similar to the one in question here, and the action, like the present one, was brought by the lessee in conjunction with the insurance companies who had paid the loss under policies issued by them. Every point made by respondents here was made in that case, and the cases relied on by respondents were cited there. But the validity of the covenant was upheld.

Messrs. Van Ness & Redman, for respondents:

Where insured property is destroyed through the negligence of a third party, the insurer paying the loss is, to the extent of its payment, subrogated to the rights and remedies of the insured, and may, with the insured, maintain an action against the wrongdoer to recover the value of the destroyed property.

Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 20 Or. 569.

The exemption clause is void.

We do not think that a contract insuring a party against loss or damage to his own property, arising exclusively out of negligent conduct on his part, would be upheld.

Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 86 U. S. 11 Pet. 213, 9 L. ed. 691; Walker v. Maitland, 5 Barn. & Ald. 174.

Public policy is "that principle of the law which holds that no one can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good."

19 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 565; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 2.

The doctrines advanced in the cases involving questions of public policy go far beyond the requirements of the case at bar.

St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Ryan, 11 Kan. 603, 15 Am. Rep. 857; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. § 687; Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 782, 10 Biss. 486; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1025; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471.

So far as the consideration of public policy is concerned, it cannot be overridden by any stipulation of the parties to the contract of passenger carriage, since it is paramount from its very nature.

Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 360; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 41 Ala. 486, 94 Am. Dec. 607; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McCloskey, 23 Pa. 526; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 493; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Morrison, 19 Ill. 136; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 260.

On petition for rehearing.

The clause that no law shall be passed impairing contract obligations does not so far remove from state control the rights and properties which depend for their existence or enforcement upon contracts, as to remove them from the operation of such general regulations for the good government of the state and the protection of the rights of individuals as may be deemed important.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 710, *574; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 33 L. ed. 269; Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co. 111 N. Y. 182, 2 L. R. A. 384; People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 380.

The fact that the agreement was made prior to the passage of the act is of no consequence. The parties to the agreement should not be deemed to have intended to cover acts which then, or thereafter, within the life of the agreement, might be declared by law to be criminal.

Buffalo East Side Street R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co., supra.

The exemption clause should be held contrary to public policy, in that by having a tendency to lessen the care of the defendant in its use of fire, which, in the absence of such an agreement, it would take in view of the presence of the warehouse upon the right of way and by reason of the increased danger of fire and of the spread thereof by reason of the presence of the warehouse on the right of way, the risk to the property of the public at large would be materially increased.

Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 782; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975.

A railroad company will not be permitted to contract with a passenger against liability for injuries resulting from the negligence of itself or employes.

Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 360; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 41 Ala. 486, 94 Am. Dec. 607; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McCloskey, 23 Pa. 526; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 493; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Morrison, 19 Ill. 136; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 260.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff Stephens was the owner of a certain warehouse situated upon land adjoining the defendant's depot grounds in the town of Hanford, Cal. The said land was held by Stephens under a lease from the defendant. One of the covenants of said lease was as follows: "And it is further agreed that the said party of the first part [defendant] shall not be responsible for any damage caused by fire, whether from railroad engines or from the buildings of the said party of the first part, or by fires caused from any other means, but the risk and damage, from whatever source, shall be alone sustained by the said party of the second part [Stephens]." Upon August 8, 1891, and while said lease was in force, the said warehouse was destroyed by fire which had been kindled by defendant's employes upon adjoining land for the purpose of burning the dry grass, rubbish, etc., thereon. At the time of said fire, the plaintiff Stephens was carrying insurance on said warehouse, in the two insurance companies, plaintiffs, in the sum of $9,000. The insurance was paid, and this action was brought by the insurers and insured jointly to recover from the defendant the value of the premises so destroyed. The verdict and judgment were for the plaintiffs, from which judgment, and from a subsequent order denying its motion for a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

The trial court held the foregoing provision of the contract of lease void, as against public policy, and our attention shall be addressed to the consideration of that question, for, as we view the case, a solution of it is determinative of the litigation. The fact that the defendant is a common carrier has no place in the case. The rights of parties dealing with common carriers, and the duties of common carriers towards parties with whom they deal, and towards the public in general, are elements foreign to any question here involved. At that time it was not dealing with plaintiff Stephens as a common carrier, nor was Stephens contracting with it upon any such understanding or hypothesis. As far as this transaction was concerned, the parties, when contracting, stood upon common ground, and dealt with each other as A and B might deal with each other with reference to any private business undertaking. It follows that all those principles of law denying or restricting the right of common carriers to limit their legal liabilities for damages arising from injury to person or property stand upon a different plane, and are not controlling here.

Is this provision of the contract void as against public policy? That the principle of law involved is an original one, as applied to the present state of facts, is apparent when we consider that but a single case has been found directly in point, although it is evident from the argument that counsel upon both sides have very industriously sought for precedents. This provision of the contract is declared by respondents to be opposed to public policy, in this: That it has a tendency to lessen the amount of care that defendant would exercise, both in the selection and operation of its machinery, and in the general conduct of its business, through its employees, in respect to the control of fire, the element here involved. That the undoubted effect of a contract exempting a party from damages flowing from his negligent use of fire is to increase the chances of conflagration,—that is, one who is protected by an agreement against the results of his carelessness in this respect will not take the same care as he otherwise would,—and, therefore, carelessness occasioned and caused by the agreement, increasing the probabilities of conflagrations, injuriously operates upon the interests of the public at large.

The foregoing line of reasoning is ingenious, but we cannot indorse it as sound in law. It has been well said that public policy is an unruly horse, astride of which you are carried into unknown and uncertain paths, and here that horse would be carrying us beyond all limits ever reached before, if respondents' position should meet with our approval. While contracts opposed to morality or law should not be allowed to show themselves in courts of justice, yet public policy requires and encourages the making of contracts by competent parties upon all valid and lawful considerations, and courts, recognizing this, have allowed parties the widest latitude in this regard; and, unless it is entirely plain that a contract is violative of sound public policy, the court will never so declare. "The power of the courts to declare a contract void for being in contravention of sound public policy is a very delicate and undefined power, and, like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt." Richmond v. Dubuque & S. O. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191. "Before a court should determine a transaction which has been entered into in good faith, stipulating for nothing that is malum in se, to be void, as contravening the policy of the statute, it should be satisfied that the advantage to accrue to the public for so holding is certain and substantial, not theoretical or problematical." Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pinney, 125; 56 Am. Dec. 164. "No court ought to refuse its aid to enforce such a contract on doubtful and uncertain grounds. The burden is on the defendant to show that its enforcement would be in violation of the settled public policy of this state, or injurious to the morals of its people." Swann v. Swann, 31 Fed. Rep. 299.

Turning our attention to this provision of the lease, let us concede, for present purposes only, this covenant to be opposed to the policy of the law, if its results are fairly and truly stated by respondents. But we deny that such results would follow. Respondents' argument is, that the inevitable and necessary tendency of the covenant is to reduce in some appreciable degree the quantum of care exercised by the defendant in guarding against the destruction of the property of the public by fire. Not the warehouse of the plaintiff Stephens, for, as between him and the defendant, considered alone, there can be no question as to the validity of the contract under consideration. It is the rights and interests of the public which it is claimed are infringed upon, and a trespass upon their interests and rights must be shown, or a case of the present character is a total stranger to any question of public policy.

Were the dangers and risks to the public as to the destruction of its property by fire in any degree increased by the aforesaid covenants? Answering respondents' argument by a like argument, we say, "No." It may be conceded that the covenant had the effect, as to plaintiff's warehouse, to lessen defendant's care in guarding against fire, but, as defendant's care lessened, the owner's care proportionately increased. Knowing that the defendant was absolutely absolved from any legal responsibility for its destruction by fire, we must assume that plaintiff Stephens, the owner, in the protection of his building from the negligence of the defendant's acts, exercised a degree of care commensurate with the dangers that surrounded it; for it cannot be gainsaid that a man of ordinary business understanding, having bartered away any right of action for damages for destruction of his property by fire which might thereafter accrue from defendant, would increase his care and watchfulness in preserving his property from such destruction. We think it must be assumed that, in proportion as the amount of care exercised by defendant in the protection of this property from fire decreased, the amount of care exercised by plaintiff in its protection increased. Having sold his remedy for damages in case of fire, it behooved him to be ever on the alert in the protection of his property. Under any aspect of the case, this question is only material in view of the contingency of a spreading of the conflagration from the warehouse of plaintiff to the property of the public in general, for the whole argument concedes that, if the danger and risk by fire to the property of the public are not increased, then there is nothing whatever in the contention. And thus it is again made apparent to what distant and untrodden paths that unruly horse, public policy, will carry you, unless he be guided by a steady hand and a strong rein.

The remaining question presents itself: Is the result of this covenant necessarily to lessen the degree of care formerly exercised by the defendant towards the property of the public, and which the law ever enjoins upon it to exercise? In other words, are the probabilities of the destruction of the property of the public by fire communicated by defendant—not via the warehouse of plaintiff, but directly communicated—increased by reason of this covenant in the lease? It is argued that, defendant's losses by fire arising from its negligence being materially reduced, if a large number of these contracts were outstanding it would necessarily become careless in the selection of its servants, and neglectful and over-economical in the selection of modern machinery, and thus the dangers to the public from conflagration would be multiplied. We do not see that such result would follow. It must be borne in mind that the lessees of defendant under these contracts are no part of the public. Each one of them has sold his right as one of the public, and is not in a position to complain as to the burdens cast upon him as an individual. The public here are the people holding no leases. The defendant in this case not only owes the public the same duty after the execution of the lease that it did before, but there is no reason in the world why it would not perform that duty in the same way as it had done in the past, however careful or neglectful that performance might be. Why would not this be so? For the public had the same rights and the same remedies against the defendant after as before the execution of the lease, and, likewise, the defendant was liable for damages in the same amount, upon the same property, and upon the same facts. It thus appears that the contract in no way changed the relations and conditions existing between the defendant and the public; and, such being the fact, no reason exists for a change upon its part in the manner of the conduct of its business. While it is true that the making of this contract withdrew plaintiff as one of the public, and, it may be said, thereby reduced the proportions of the public to that extent, still it would seem the refinement of absurdity to hold, for such reason, that, the public being reduced, the care exercised by defendant towards the public would be reduced pro tanto.

The late case of Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa) 24 L. R. A. 647, in its facts is fully analogous to the case at bar, and, upon a rehearing and reargument, a similar covenant in a lease was sustained, as in no manner contravening public policy. Especially is this case valuable as precedent when we pause to consider the stringent provisions of the code of that state in dealing with the liability of common carriers for damages to property arising from fire and other causes. And doubly so in view of the further salient fact that the lease in that case upon its face appears to indicate that benefits to the lessor in its capacity as a common carrier would accrue by reason of the making thereof. These matters are not found in the case at bar, and, to that extent, the case occupies much broader ground than we are required here to take. The dissenting opinion of the learned chief justice is based, to some extent at least, upon these provisions of the Iowa code, and the further claim that the railroad company was acting in its capacity as a common carrier in making the lease,—conditions which, we have already suggested, do not surround us here. The remaining objection of the learned chief justice to the validity of the judgment ordered by the majority of that court is in line with these respondents' contention, and, we think, unsound.

29 L. R. A.

Farmer A is in the habit of burning his stubble field in the fall of the year. B leases from him a small portion of his farm for storage or residence purposes, there being a clause in the contract similar to the one here involved. Farmer A, in burning his stubble, allows the fire to escape from his control, and B's property is destroyed. Or A is the owner of a powder factory, and leases to B an adjoining tract of land. This exemption damage covenant is placed in the lease. The powder plant explodes, and B's property is destroyed. These illustrations in principle are parallel with the case at bar. Both the farmer and the factory owner owed the duty to the public of exercising a certain degree of care, one in burning his stubble field, the other in carrying on his factory. If this covenant in the present case had the effect to lessen the degree of care exercised by defendant, it had the same effect in the lease of the farmer and the powder man. If the risks and dangers to the property of the public from fire were increased in this case by reason of the covenant, they were likewise increased in those cases. Yet it would seem a gross trespass upon the rights of parties to make contracts to hold the covenant void, as against the policy of the law, in the hypothetical cases cited. To hold that the interests of the public were of such gravity, and were so interwoven into such a contract, as to vitiate the contract, would carry us far beyond any principle of law yet recognized by courts or law writers.

If the doctrine enunciated by respondents be sound, then a multitude of contracts, covering many and diverse subjects, and which are being entered into every day of the world, and recognized and acted upon both by parties and courts, must fall to the ground. As a striking example, the ordinary contract of fire insurance cannot stand the test, for it cannot be gainsaid that such a contract necessarily has the tendency to lessen the care which the owner would otherwise exercise in the protection of his property from fire. Upon respondents' line of argument, such owner owes a duty to the public, possibly in the protection of his own property from fire, certainly in the protection of the property of the public, and, if his care is lessened in the performance of that duty by reason of the contract of insurance, then, surely, the dangers and risks to the property of the public are increased. Yet, notwithstanding this reasoning, courts everywhere have upheld this class of contracts, and repelled all assaults upon them as being opposed to the policy of the law. While it may not be found in the contract itself that the negligence of the owner in causing the fire shall be no bar to a recovery, it has been held always and everywhere that such is the law, even in the absence of express stipulation to that end; and an express stipulation inserted in the contract in accordance with the general principle would certainly in no wise weaken the doctrine. As sustaining this general principle, see Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 28 U. S. 8 Pet. 222, 7 L. ed. 659; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 9 L. ed. 512; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 86 U. S. 11 Pet. 213, 9 L. ed. 691; and Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. (Limited) v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 488, 32 L. ed. 791.

Let us look at another class of contracts which have been sustained by the courts, but sustained wrongfully, if the soundness of the argument advanced by respondents can be maintained. Courts have sustained contracts, made by common carriers with insurance companies, whereby property under their control and in transit has been insured against negligence of their employes. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 133 U. S. 887, 33 L. ed. 787; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 117 U. S. 812, 29 L. ed. 878. Following respondents' line of argument, surely such contracts would have a tendency to lessen the care otherwise exercised by common carriers in the transportation of goods, and would thereby trespass upon the rights of the public, and, so trespassing, would render void all contracts of that character. But the courts, after careful investigation, have arrived at a contrary conclusion.

To support the invalidity of this contract, counsel rely upon an act of the legislature, found in the Statutes of 1891 (p. 478), which declares a party guilty of a misdemeanor who starts fires in certain localities (without first taking certain precautions), whereby the property of an adjoining or contiguous owner is injured, damaged, or destroyed. If for no other reason, this act of the legislature cannot be relied upon to assist respondents' case, for it was passed subsequent to the making of the contract, and, if the contract was valid when made, no subsequent act of the legislature can render it invalid. It is laid down as an elementary principle in Greenhood on Public Policy that, if a contract conform to the public policy of the state when made, a change in public policy will not avoid it.

We conclude that the line of reasoning indulged in by respondents to support the invalidity of this contract is more specious than sound; that the interests of the public in the contract are more sentimental than real; and that such a contract violates no statute, conflicts with no principle of law, and in no way infringes upon public policy.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

Petition for rehearing denied.
29 L. R. A.

Charles KING et al., Respts.,
v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO., Appt.

-----Cal.-----)

1. A covenant in a lease of railroad property used for warehouse purposes, relieving the company from liability for loss by fire, does not bind an agent of the lessee in charge of the property, a stranger to the lease, who stores his own property in the warehouse.
2. The allowance of interest upon the value of property destroyed by negligence must be left to the discretion of the jury, under Civ. Code, § 8238.
3. A judgment upon a verdict for a lump sum of damages and interest will not be modified to exclude the interest which is found to be erroneous, but a reversal is necessary.

(September 7, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment*of the Superior Court for Tulare County, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the value of certain property destroyed by fire which was alleged to have been set out by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Foshay Walker for appellant.

Messrs. Van Ness & Redman, for respondents, in support of petition for rehearing:

Where, as in this case, the appellate court can determine from the record with certainty in what amount a judgment is excessive, it will remit the excess and affirm as to the balance.

Hayden v. Florence Sewing Mach. Co. 54 N. Y. 221; State v. Hope, 121 Mo. 84; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Jobe, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 403; Harvard Powder Co. v. Volger, 58 Fed. Rep. 152; Markell v. Matthews, 3 Colo. App. 49; Salida v. McKinna, 16 Colo. 523; Gerber v. Jones, 36 Neb. 126; Emerson v. Schoonmaker, 185 Pa. 437; Wilson v. Troy, 60 Hun, 183; Ganseevoort Freezing & C. S. Co. v. Westels Co. 60 N. Y. S. R. 611; Taylor v. Coolidge, 64 Vt. 506; Bal-lard v. Burton, 1d. 887, 16 L. R. A. 684; Ward-er v. Henry, 117 Mo. 580; Boehm v. Shedlin-sky, 15 N. Y. Supp. 974; Durie v. Anderson (Tex.) 16 S. W. Rep. 845; Bank of Kentucky v. Ashley, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 827, 7 L. ed. 440; People v. Sierra Buttes Quartz Min. Co. 39 Cal. 511; Ward v. Clay, 83 Cal. 502.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action entitled Stephens v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) (No. 13,869; this day decided) ante, 751, damages were sought to be recovered from this defendant for the destruction of a certain warehouse by fire engendered by the negligence of defendant. The plaintiff and respondent King, in this case, had charge of this warehouse, as the agent of Stephens, the owner, at the time of the fire, and now seeks to recover from defendant damages for the destruction by that fire of certain property belonging to him, and then stored in said warehouse. Judgment went against defendant, and this is an appeal from such judgment, and from an order denying the motion for a new trial.

NOTE.—For interest on sum allowed as damages, see note to Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 449.

As to contracts against negligence, see also Stephens v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) ante, 751.

At the trial defendant offered to prove that the plaintiff King had actual notice of the covenant, in the lease to Stephens, exempting defendant from liability for property destroyed by fire, which covenant we have considered at length in the above-mentioned case of Stephens v. Southern P. Co. Under objection, defendant was not allowed to make the proof, and the ruling of the court in this regard forms the main ground for the present appeal. Was the question of plaintiff's knowledge of the existence of such a covenant material to the merits of this litigation? We fail to see its materiality. It is not necessary to determine the length and breadth of this covenant, for, of itself, it could in no way bind third parties. Whatever liabilities Stephens assumed thereunder were a matter solely with him and the defendant. And the defendant's primary liability to third parties was the same after as before the making of such a lease. Conceding that all property stored in the warehouse, as between the parties to the lease, was the property of Stephens, yet, as to third parties, such contention avails defendant nothing. Plaintiff King, as the agent of Stephens, received goods in storage, and we do not see that he can be in a different position by reason of having stored his own goods therein than though he had received upon storage the goods of other parties. These goods were not stored by King as Stephens' goods, but rather by Stephens, through his agent, as King's goods. King's agency would seem to be an immaterial element in the case, and no principle of law is cited that would bar a recovery from the defendant, for the destruction of goods arising from its negligence, by any person storing goods in the warehouse under contract with the owner. The question of notice as to this covenant would be immaterial, as a matter in which third parties had no interest. Let us suppose a party storing goods had notice of the lease in this particular. It would put him upon notice of what? Why, simply that by the lease, in its widest possible sense, Stephens would indemnify the defendant against any loss from the destruction by fire of property situated upon the leased land,—a matter certainly of no interest or moment to a party contemplating a storage of his goods in the warehouse. Stephens could not recover for the destruction of his warehouse, or his property stored therein, nor could his lessee, having notice of the covenant. Thomas v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 82 Mo. 588; Nolon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 28 Mo. App. 855. But plaintiff King occupied no such position. He was no lessee. No rights or interests ever passed to him under the lease, and he was in no sense in privity with Stephens. His right to recover grows out of, and is based upon, the fact that he was lawfully entitled to store his goods in the warehouse, without any regard to the exemption clause of the lease made by the owner, and that, while so stored they were destroyed, through the negligence of the defendant's employes. The cases relied upon to support appellant's contention fall short of the mark. McCoy v. Southern P. Co., 94 Cal. 568, is based upon a section of the civil code, and must be read in the light of that section. If the plaintiff in that case had been a tenant of the Boyds, without notice as to their agreement with defendant regarding the opening in the fence, then the doctrine of the Missouri cases above cited would probably have been applicable, and a recovery sustained; but the status of plaintiff was held to be that of a mere licensee of the Boyd Bros., they being at all times in the actual possession of the land, and for the purposes of the statute heretofore referred to, the owners thereof.

The court gave the jury the following instruction: "If, from the evidence, you are satisfied that the plaintiff King had in the warehouse and addition thereto, referred to in the testimony as 'Blum's Warehouse,' the property testified to by him; and that the value of said property was, at the time of its destruction by fire, of the value testified to by him; and that said fire and the destruction of said property were caused by the negligence of the defendant,—you will find a verdict for plaintiffs for $5,500, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, from the date of the fire." This instruction is clearly erroneous in this, that it arbitrarily required the jury to add interest from the date of the fire to such sum as they might find to be the amount of the damage caused. In a case of this character, the question of interest must be left to the discretion of the jury. Section 3288, Civ. Code, provides: "In an action for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, and in every case of oppression, fraud, or malice, interest may be given in the discretion of the jury." We think the exception to the instruction sufficiently full and explicit, and, the verdict being for a lump sum, a modification of the judgment cannot be made.

For this reason, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

Rehearing denied.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

LAKE ERIE & WESTERN R. CO., Pf.
in Err.,

v.
 Joseph MACKEY, by His Next Friend.

(.....Ohio.....)

*1. It is not error for a reviewing court to refuse to treat as part of a bill of exceptions a deposition claimed to be the identical deposition given in evidence at the trial, where such deposition is attached to the bill only by being placed between the paste-board back and the stenographer's report (although held with sufficient tenacity to retain its place), and not marked as an exhibit, or identified by either the trial judge or the stenographer, or by any one.

2. Where a petition in an action against a railroad company for personal injuries charges that defendant negligently and unlawfully stopped a freight train across a public highway for a period of more than five minutes, and that while plaintiff, after the expiration of that period, was attempting to cross the street between the cars, defendant, without warning, wrongfully and negligently backed the train, causing plaintiff's injuries, such two charges of negligence are not separable in the sense that one only would be the proximate cause of the injury; taken together they constitute a sufficient allegation of negligence as against a general demurrer.

3. A child nine years of age is not guilty of negligence if he exercises that degree of care which, under like circumstances, would reasonably be expected from one of his years and intelligence. Whether he used such care in a particular case is a question for the jury. And even though the petition might, if the plaintiff were an adult, be construed as disclosing contributory negligence, an averment that the plaintiff was at the time a child nine years of age, and of immature experience and judgment, is sufficient to rebut the presumption of contributory negligence.

4. Where, in such case, the evidence at the trial tends to show that a freight train has been permitted to stand across a public street beyond the period of five minutes to the hindrance or inconvenience of travel thereon, in violation of section 6960, Revised Statutes, and persons rightfully on the street are passing between the cars of the train, it becomes a question for the jury whether or not it is negligence for the company's servants to move the train without giving timely warning of their intention to do so.

5. Whether, under such circumstances, a child of nine years who attempts to cross, and in doing so climbs upon the coupling of a car, is a trespasser or not, is a question for the jury.

6. It is also a question for the jury whether or not the mere presence of the train is to be taken as notice to such child that the train is likely to be moved at any time.

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For negligence in passing between or under cars, see Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Eylee (Ga.) 13 L. R. A. 634, and note.

For duty as to children on railroad track, see Bottoms v. Seaboard & R.R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 784, 29 L. R. A.

(October 29, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mercer County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Marsh & Loree, W. E. Hack-edorn, and John B. Cockrum, for plaintiff in error:

The pleading says the train was set in motion "without care," "without notice," "without warning," "imprudently," "carelessly," "negligently," "wrongfully." These are mere epithetic statements and not the statement of the omission of any duty as the proximate cause of the injury. They are not statements of any facts and are not admitted to be true by the demurrer.

Faurot v. Nef, 32 Ohio St. 44; Peterson v. Roach, 32 Ohio St. 374, 30 Am. Rep. 607.

Negligence cannot be alleged without setting forth the acts and omissions of the defendant upon which the right of recovery is based, and then showing by appropriate averments that they occurred through the negligence of the defendant.

2 Kinkad, Code Pl. p. 835.

The petition must show a legal duty or obligation imposed on the defendant towards the person injured, existing at the time and place of the injury, which the defendant failed to perform, by reason of which the injury was occasioned.

Thiele v. McManus, 3 Ind. App. 133; Boonsville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 221; Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Black, Proof & Pl. § 138.

It is not sufficient to allege that a duty existed and that the defendant violated it, but all the facts showing the duty should be stated.

Angus v. Lee, 40 Ill. App. 304; Clark v. Dyer, 81 Tex. 339; Davis v. Guarneri, 45 Ohio St. 470.

There was no imposed duty to send employes to Main street crossing to relieve persons from any perilous position that their curiosity or rashness had led them to, before such employes could start their freight train upon its mission for the public.

Morrissey v. Eastern R. Co. 126 Mass. 380, 30 Am. Rep. 636; Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 233, 31 L. R. A. 448; McGuinness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 233; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364.

Defendant in error contributed to his own injury.

Had Joseph Mackey been an adult there certainly would be no question but the act of crossing a train occupying a street crossing by climbing upon and over the coupling of two freight cars would be an act of such rashness as, if injured in the attempt to cross, would bar a recovery.

Corcoran v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 105 Mo. 399; Howard v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G.

R. Co. 41 Kan. 405; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plaskett, 47 Kan. 112.

Joseph Mackey being nine years of age was not per se non sui juris. Therefore his petition must be as free from disclosing contributory negligence as in a case of an adult.

Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber, 5 Ohio St. 541, 87 Am. Dec. 812; Street R. Co. v. Nothern, 40 Ohio St. 376; Robison v. Gary, 28 Ohio St. 241; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whitacre, 85 Ohio St. 627; Voss v. Young, 10 Week. L. Bull. 292; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Fullbright, 7 Week. L. Bull. 187; Hays v. Gallagher, 73 Pa. 140; Hoth v. Peters, 55 Wis. 405; Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1; Mathews v. Cedar Rapids, 80 Iowa, 459; Guess v. South Carolina R. Co. 80 S. C. 168; Oil City Fuel Supply Co. v. Boundy, 122 Pa. 449.

A railroad is liable to trespassers upon its premises only for wanton or willful acts of negligence. The rule applies to a child of tender years as to an adult.

Morrissey v. Eastern R. Co. supra; Moore v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 11 W. N. C. 310; Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 58 Conn. 461; Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 238, 21 L. R. A. 448.

If a child trespass on the premises of the defendant, and is injured by something which he does while trespassing, he cannot recover unless the injury was wantonly inflicted by, or was due to the recklessly careless conduct of, the defendant.

McGuinness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 238; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248; McEachern v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 515; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596; Wabash R. Co. v. Norway, 7 Ohio C. C. 449.

Messrs. Mattingly & Kenney and Edgar B. Kinhead, for defendant in error:

The petition states a good cause of action.

Rauch v. Lloyd, 81 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; Henderson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 52 Minn. 479; Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 119 Mo. 256, 23 L. R. A. 250; Cleveland, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely, 188 Ind. 600; Angus v. Lee, 40 Ill. App. 304; Harper v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 86 Fed. Rep. 102; Davis v. Guarnieri, 45 Ohio St. 470; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Golley & F. Iron Works v. Callan, 9 Ohio C. C. 217.

Where a railroad company by leaving its trains on a street crossing has negligently and unlawfully taken the exclusive possession thereof, and unlawfully holds the same as against persons who are congregated at the crossing to pass such point, and some are crossing over the cars in view of the engineer and other servants in charge of the train, it is a question for the jury whether or not the company may suddenly remove such train without first giving some warning to apprise persons who may be in positions of danger induced by such obstruction of the highway.

Barkley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 96 Mo. 378; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Loyer, 112 Pa. 414; Eaton v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 364.

29 L. R. A.

The degree of care required to be exercised by a child of tender years, and the omission of which will constitute negligence on his part, is to be measured in such case by the maturity and capacity of the individual, the law only requiring that degree of care to be reasonably expected in view of the particular situation and the age and capacity of the particular individual.

Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 288, 3 L. R. A. 385; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 400, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 327; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114; Rauch v. Lloyd, 81 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kelly, 81 Pa. 372; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Sparen, 47 Pa. 300, 86 Am. Dec. 544; Glassey v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 57 Pa. 172; North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Mahoney, 57 Pa. 187; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra.

When the petition charging the negligence is sufficient, and the evidence tends to prove the allegations thereof, the question of negligence is to be left to the jury.

Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 60 N. Y. 826; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, Rauch v. Lloyd, and Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra; Milwaukee Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 103 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 417; Marietta & O. R. Co. v. Pickaley, 24 Ohio St. 654.

Where the statute declares the obstruction of a street crossing by railroad cars or trains for more than a determinate period unlawful, and requires the same to be opened after that period; and declares any obstruction of a street or crossing a nuisance,—it is within the design of such statutes to require the railroad company to observe certain rules of care and precaution to provide against injuries to the public or any member thereof; and for the omission to observe such regulations of the law any person injured thereby may recover.

Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 239, 28 L. ed. 415; Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 45 Mich. 74, 40 Am. Rep. 457; Eaton v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 364; Barnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 392; State v. Morris & E. R. Co. 25 N. J. L. 497; Continental Imp. Co. v. Stead, 95 U. S. 161, 24 L. ed. 403; Beisiegel v. New York C. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 9; Black v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. 38 Iowa, 515; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Maurer, 21 Ohio St. 421; Robinson v. Western P. R. Co. 48 Cal. 409.

A general allegation of negligence without stating the particulars is sufficient as against a general demurrer, and is equivalent to whatever degree of negligence is necessary to sustain the pleading.

Harper v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 86 Fed. Rep. 102; Davis v. Guarnieri, 45 Ohio St. 470; Norton v. Western R. Corp. 15 N. Y. 444, 60 Am. Dec. 623; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 66 Ill. 551; Angus v. Lee, 40 Ill. App. 304; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Neil, 49 Kan. 367.

The allegation of the age of a child, taken with the allegation of want of capacity to apprecipitate the act committed, brings the case squarely within the rule announced in—

Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Rauch v. Lloyd, 81 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 400, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11; Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 283, 8 L. R. A. 385; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, §§ 71-73, and authorities cited.

It is unnecessary to allege the duty where it follows from the facts alleged.

Angus v. Lee, supra; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Washington, 49 Fed. Rep. 349, 4 U. S. App. 121; Gurley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 445; Sullivan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113.

The matter of contributory negligence is one of defense to be made out by the defendant.

Street R. Co. v. Nolthenius, 40 Ohio St. 876; Robison v. Gary, 28 Ohio St. 241; Voss v. Young, 10 Week. L. Bull. 292.

Between seven and fourteen years of age children are prima facie incapable of exercising judgment and discretion, but evidence is received to rebut the presumption of incapacity.

1 Bishop, Crim. L. § 868; 1 Whart. Crim. L. § 58; Schmidt v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23 Wis. 186, 99 Am. Dec. 158.

The question of capacity is for the jury, and not one of law to be determined by the court.

Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114; 1 Thomp. Neg. 452; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1183; Byrns v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 620; Douling v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 671; O'Mara v. Hudson River R. Co. 88 N. Y. 445; Mourey v. Central City R. Co. 51 N. Y. 666; Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 60 N. Y. 836.

A child is not guilty of contributory negligence if he exercises that degree of care which, under the same or similar circumstances, would be reasonably expected from one of his age and capacity; and where the petition charging the negligence is sufficient, and the evidence proves its allegations, the question is properly left to the jury.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kelly, 81 Pa. 372; Rauch v. Lloyd, 81 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Spear, 47 Pa. 300, 86 Am. Dec. 544; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, supra; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; Corcoran v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 105 Mo. 899; Hudson v. Wabash Western R. Co. 101 Mo. 18; Milwaukee Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 103 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 417.

A wrongdoer is responsible for the damages caused by his misconduct.

Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622.

The defendant owed a public duty at this crossing that was almost quasi contractual.

The provision was for the benefit of the public, including every person lawfully using the particular highway.

29 L. R. A.

Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 238 28 L. ed. 414.

Whether the train could be moved under such circumstances without some notice is a question for the jury.

Ibid.; Eaton v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 364; Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Layer, 112 Pa. 414; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238.

A child is not negligent if he exercises that degree of care which, under like circumstances, would reasonably be expected of one of his years and capacity.

Spillane v. Missouri P. R. Co. 111 Mo. 555; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 327; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Rauch v. Lloyd, 81 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co. 64 Mo. 480; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239; Hughes v. Macfie, 2 Hurlst. & C. 744; 4 Am. L. Rev. 405.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. A preliminary question is made with respect to the action of the circuit court in overruling a motion to reattach certain depositions to the bill of exceptions. It is recited in the bill that depositions of the witnesses named were given in evidence, and that they are attached marked respectively Exhibits "E" and "F." Proof was heard for and against the claim that the depositions were ever part of the bill. Giving to the testimony a construction most favorable to the plaintiff in error, the question, reduced to its last analysis, is whether a paper claimed to be the identical paper given in evidence at the trial, which was attached to the bill of exceptions only by being placed between the pasteboard back and the stenographer's report, in which position it was held with sufficient tenacity to retain its place, but which paper was not marked or identified as an exhibit either by the trial judge or the stenographer, or by any one, can be treated as a part of the bill. We think it cannot. The circuit court did not err in overruling the motion, nor in refusing to pass upon the weight of the evidence. Hicks v. Person, 19 Ohio, 426; Wells v. Martin, 1 Ohio St. 836; Busby v. Finn, Id. 409.

2. It is insisted that the petition fails to state a cause of action, and that the trial court therefore erred in overruling a general demurrer to that pleading. The criticisms are that there is no averment that the train was unnecessarily detained on the crossing; that the allegations of negligence are mere epithets, and not a statement of the omission of any duty, and that the presumption of contributory negligence arising from the facts stated is not overcome by proper averments.

Omitting formal parts, the petition alleges in substance that the plaintiff was a minor of the age of nine years; that defendant's track through the village of Coldwater intersects and crosses Main street at grade; that Main street is a common thoroughfare and highway, the principal street of said village, and the point of junction of both a public highway and street crossing, necessarily much used and frequented by the public. On June 5, 1890, the defendant did negligently and unlawfully, and without due care on the part of the servants of said defendant in charge thereof, leave a long train of freight cars attached to a locomotive, standing upon and over, obstructing and blocking said crossing for a period of more than five minutes, without any attention to said crossing or the consequence to the convenience or life and limb of persons having occasion to pass such obstruction. That at the time aforesaid, during the hour of noon of said day, while said train was so unlawfully standing on said crossing, the plaintiff, a child of tender years and immature experience and judgment, was lawfully passing along said street going to a point beyond said crossing on Main street. When, arriving at said crossing and in full view of the engineer's position, and in full view of any servant being on the lookout or keeping watch over said train, he found said crossing so obstructed and blocked by said defendant's train that after remaining at said crossing for more than five minutes, and receiving no warning, plaintiff, in full view of the engineer's proper position, and within the knowledge of ordinary prudence of defendant's servants, attempted to pass over and cross such obstruction. While so passing over said cars defendant's servants, without any care or attention to said crossing, or the consequence to any one attempting to pass such unlawful obstruction, without due care, without signal, without notice, without warning, did then and there imprudently, carelessly, negligently, and wrongfully start said cars suddenly and violently backward, whereby said plaintiff's right foot was caught between the couplings of two cars, and the injury followed.

If the action were to recover the penalty prescribed by section 4748, Revised Statutes, or to recover damages arising to any person by reason alone of the obstruction, it would be necessary to aver that the obstruction was continued unnecessarily, for that condition is incorporated in the statute. But section 6980, Revised Statutes, which provides that "any person who permits any car or locomotive of which he has charge to remain upon or within 30 feet of the center or across any public road, street, or alley for a period longer than five minutes . . . shall be fined," etc., does not impose the requirement of showing that the cars were so permitted to remain unnecessarily, and the language quoted clearly implies the duty to remove the obstruction after the lapse of five minutes. Notice of this statute being taken, the neglect of duty is implied from the statement of the fact of continued obstruction. So construed, the petition makes a case of violation of duty, and this, with the averment that the act was negligently done and the further allegation that the starting of the cars, by which the injury was immediately caused, was done negligently, without warning and wrongfully, we think is sufficient charge of negligence as against a general demurrer. The general rule is that allegations which adequately state the facts of negligence are sufficient to constitute a good pleading. An allegation specifying the act, the doing of which caused the injury, and averring generally that it was negligently done, states a cause of action, although it be not apparent from the complaint how the injury resulted from the negligence alleged." Boone, Code Pl. § 174; Bliss, Code Pl. § 211a; Maxwell, Code Pl. 251; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Washington, 49 Fed. Rep. 347, 4 U. S. App. 121; Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124. Nor are the two negligent acts independent of each other. Both concur in constituting an act of negligence, viz.: the negligent starting of a train negligently and unlawfully obstructing a street crossing. Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238.

Nor is the petition faulty in that it does not sufficiently negative the presumption of contributory negligence. It is well settled that a child is presumed to possess only such discretion as is common to children and is therefore held only to the exercise of such care as is reasonably to be expected from children of his own age and capacity. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 288, 8 L. R. A. 885. The law as to personal responsibility of a child for his acts is declared by Bishop, in his work upon New Criminal Law, 8th ed. section 368, in these words: "Since in reason criminal capability depends on the understanding rather than the age, there can be no fixed rule of age which will operate justly in every possible case. But an imperfect rule is practically better than none. Therefore, at the common law, a child under seven years is conclusively presumed incapable of crime. Between seven and fourteen, the law also deems the child incapable, but only prima facie so, and evidence may be received to show a criminal capacity." The rule is sustained by many authorities, and may be regarded as an accepted rule of criminal law; and it would seem that the principle should have application to a case of negligence. Prof. Thompson in his work on Negligence, at page 1191, comments as follows: "Two questions arise: 1. At what age or period of a child's development shall it be held to be sui juris for the purpose of cases of this kind? 2. Whether this is a question of law or a question of fact. Where the age of the child admits of no doubt as to its capacity to avoid danger, the court will decide this question as a matter of law. . . . If there is any doubt as to the child being of the age and capacity that in law constitutes one sui juris, it should be submitted to the jury to say by their verdict whether he is so or not." The rule is tersely stated by Mr. Justice Hunt, in Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 408, 21 L. ed. 116, thus: "The caution required is according to the maturity and capacity of the child, and this is to be determined in each case by the circumstances of that case."

Unless, therefore, it can be held as matter of law that the injured person had the capacity to foresee and avoid danger, negligence will not be imputed to him. And inasmuch as this presumption will not be visited upon children under the age of fourteen, it follows that the averment that the plaintiff was a boy nine years of age, and that he was of immature experience and judgment to rebut any legal presumptive contributory negligence from other things in the petition. Sharswood's 435, 464; vol. 4, 20; Rauch v. Ra 858, 73 Am. Dec. 747; Nagle v. Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 85, 89, 82 118; Rhodes v. Georgia R. & Bkg. 820; Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, 2 Co. 60 N. Y. 836; Dowling v. J. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 670. Defendant's counsel asked the court to jury that, "if you find in this evidence, that defendant's cars occupied Main street crossing at, Ohio, for a period exceeding ten minutes, and more than the statutory time, and you further find that plaintiff's train so occupied said crossing, and that between two of defendant's cars, and that, he, by so doing, became a trespasser, and while so trespassing defendant owed him no duty in moving from such crossing, unless you find evidence that defendant and its operating the train knew of his presence,"—which was refused. The request implies that, under the circumstances stated, the plaintiff would, as a matter of law, be a trespasser if he climbed upon two of the cars while attempting to pass over. We think this a question of fact and law. The evidence tended to show that at the time the attempt to cross was made the crossing had been obstructed for more than five minutes to the use of travel thereon, which act of obstruction, if proven, was a violation of law and made the company itself a trespasser. Its cars were where they had no right to be, while, if the boy was rightfully crossing, as the evidence tended to show, he was where he had a right to be, and his attempt to pass the obstruction by climbing upon the cars would not make him a trespasser. It was, we think, for the jury to say whether he was a trespasser or not.

Defendant's counsel also requested the court to charge "that if a public highway is completely blocked by a united freight train, attached to an engine, such possession of the highway by the train, even though such possession extends beyond the statutory time, is notice to all traveling public, children and adults alike, of the presence of such train at such place, and that it is likely to be moved at any time, and such train in that condition is not an invitation to any of the traveling public to pass over the crossing by climbing upon or over such train,"—which was refused.

One objection to this request is that it ignores the difference between the responsibility of adults and children already adverted to. Whether or not the presence of a train upon a crossing should be treated as notice to a child nine years of age that it is likely to be moved at any time depends upon the degree of intelligence and judgment possessed by the child, and that, as we have already found, is a question of fact for the jury. Besides this, it might be argued that the train would naturally furnish temptation to such a child, when desiring to pass, to take great risk in doing so, and that trainmen, as reasonable men, ought to anticipate that children would exercise only the discretion usual among children, and, if circumstances indicated their presence at the crossing, to take reasonable precautions for their safety.

The charge as a whole was excepted to. We think it correctly presents the law, and is as favorable to the defendant below as its counsel could well ask.

Other questions were argued. They have all been considered, but we do not find anything in the record which would warrant a reversal of the judgment.

Affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

BANK OF NEWPORT, App't.

Allie E. COOK et al.

(60 Ark. 288.)

- I. A constitutional provision on the subject of usury must be presumed NOTE.—Lawfulness of taking interest in advance.

I. In discount.

- a. In general.
- b. By persons other than banks.
- c. On instruments other than bills and notes.

II. In periodical payments.

III. For what length of time allowed.

I. In discount.

a. In general.

It must be regarded as well established that, at least on short-time paper, interest may be taken by way of discount in advance, and at the highest rate 20 L. R. A.

to have been adopted with reference to an existing custom which permitted interest to be taken in advance.

2. Taking interest in advance on a negotiable note at the highest rate allowed by the constitution is not usury.

3. The fact that a note is payable twelve months after its date does not take allowed by law, although this does in reality make the interest paid, if computed on the amount actually received for use by the borrower, exceed the legal rate by the amount of the interest upon the interest for the time of the debt.

It is said in Bank of Burlington v. Durkee, 1 Vt. 408: "The taking of interest in advance is, in one sense, taking excessive interest, because it gives to the plaintiffs the use of the interest thus taken. But this is scarcely contended to create usury, it has been so long a time sanctioned by judicial adjudications."

"It seems difficult upon principle to sustain such a transaction," says the court in Tholen v. Duffy, it out of the rule which permits the highest rate of lawful interest to be taken in advance.

(February 23, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Woodruff County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rose, Hemingway & Rose, J. W. Stayton, and J. M. Stayton, for appellant:

The rules of the bank, whereby interest is taken in advance and taking interest on renewals on the old and new note both, for the day of renewal, and also calculating interest for a day as one three hundred and sixtieth part of a year, etc., are legal, being sanctioned by universal banking usage.

Lyons v. State Bank, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 442; Maine Bank v. Butts, 9 Mass. 52; Thornton v. Bank of Washington, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 38, 7 L. ed. 594; Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 581, 6 L. ed. 166.

Lending is done upon a per annum basis, and a discount for a year would therefore be natural and legitimate, and could raise no presumption of a corrupt intent; but if the interest for several years should be taken out in advance, it would be in the nature of compounding interest, and might raise a presumption against the lender.

Tyler, Usury, 155; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 50; Perley, Interest, p. 224; Boone, Banking, § 77; Lloyd v. Williams, 2 W. Bl. 798; Agricultural Bank v. Bissell, 12 Pick. 586; Manhattan Co. v. Osgood, 15 Johns. 162; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 2 Cow. 664; Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652; Bloomer v. McInerney, 80 Hun. 201; Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 631; Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co. 141 U. S. 399, 35 L. ed. 790.

The taking of full legal interest in advance on a loan upon note and mortgage, for one year, is not usurious.

Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 405; Rose v. Mansford, 36 Neb. 143; Brown v. Cass County Bank, 86 Iowa, 527; Leonard v. Cox, 10 Neb. 541; Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 631; English v. Smack, 84 Ind. 116, 7 Am. Rep. 215; Bacchus v. Moreau, 7 Rob. (La.) 539; McGill v. Ware, 5 Ill. 21; Goodrich v. Reynolds, 31 Ill. 491, 83 Am. Dec. 240; Mitchell v. Lyman, 77 Ill. 536; Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 110 Ill. 235; Hoyt v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, Id. 390; Telford v. Garrels, 182 Ill. 550; McKiel v. Real Estate Bank, 4 Ark. 592; Thompson v.

7 Kan. 405, but it adds: "In cases where note or bill is given, it is supported by such an overwhelming current of decision, and is a matter of such universal practice, that it may well be considered as engrafted upon the law as a settled rule." In this case it is held that it is lawful to take interest in advance on a note and mortgage given for one year.

That the practice of discounting by taking interest in advance is "sanctioned by the courts, rather from necessity than upon principle" is stated in Wetmore v. Brien, 8 Head, 723.

That discount taken in advance by a bank is not usurious when taken at the rate allowed by law, is decided in Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 631.

Mr. Justice Story, in writing the opinion of the court in Fleckner v. Bank of United States, says: "If a transaction of this sort is to be deemed usurious, the same principle must apply with equal force to bank discounts generally, for the practice is believed to be universal; and probably few, if any, charters, contain an express provision authorizing in terms the deduction of the interest in advance upon making loans or discounts. It has always been supposed that an authority to discount, or make discounts, did, from the very force of the terms, necessarily include an authority to take the interest in advance. And this is not only the settled opinion among professional and commercial men, but stands approved by the soundest principles of legal construction. Indeed, we do not know in what other sense the word 'discount' is to be interpreted. Even in England, where no statute authorizes bankers to make discounts, it has been solemnly adjudged that the taking of interest in advance by bankers, upon loans, in the ordinary course of business, is not usurious."

In Marvine v. Hymers, 13 N. Y. 223, the court, sustaining this practice, said: "I have been thus particular in collating the authorities, for the reason that the position which they establish is at variance with the natural reading of the statute, and because the practice referred to seems to stand altogether upon ground of judicial decision. It does not, however, in my opinion, stand less firmly than it would do if it had the sanction of legislative authority."

In Agricultural Bank v. Bissell, 12 Pick. 586, it is said in respect to taking interest in advance: "We think it too well settled by a series of decisions, both in this and other states, to be now questioned, that such practice is not a violation of the statute and does not render the contract usurious."

In deciding that banks are not exempt from a statute against usury by virtue of "banking principles," it is said in Maine Bank v. Butts, 9 Mass. 49, that this expression, if it has any peculiar meaning, is an authority to deduct the interest at the commencement of loans or to make loans upon discounts instead of the ordinary forms of security for an accruing interest, but that individuals have a like authority, although in both cases the construction is a relaxation of the prohibition of a statute against usury, and allows a rate of interest which may be estimated at a small extent beyond 6 per cent per annum.

That merely discounting a note is not necessarily usury, is also decided in Lyman v. Morse, 1 Pick. 236, note, although the court says it might be evidence of a design to evade the statute.

Charter authority of a bank, "to receive for discounts . . . at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent per annum" is sufficient to authorize the bank on discounting a note to retain 6 per cent interest on the face of the note as discount. Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, 1 Cranch, C. C. 522. In this case the court distinguishes mercantile discount from cases of loan, and says: "I can find no case in which it was ever made a question whether, in a clear mercantile discount, the taking in advance by way of discount the whole interest, upon the whole sum, for the whole time the bill has to run, was within the statute of usury."

It is said in Manhattan Co. v. Osgood, 15 Johns. 162: "It cannot be questioned that it has been the uniform practice of all banking institutions, since their establishment to exact the payment of interest in advance; and it would be an alarming principle to introduce, that all paper thus held should be usurious and void. The law, however, does not require such a decision. It supports a Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 59; Reed v. State Bank, Id. 198; Hogan v. Hensley, 23 Ark. 414.

There must be an intention knowingly to contract for and to take usurious interest, for, if neither party intends it, the law will not infer a corrupt agreement.

Jordan v. Mitchell, 25 Ark. 260; Moody v. Hawkins, Id. 195; Bank of United States v. Waggener, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 878, 9 L. ed. 163. Mr. J. W. House for appellee.

Hughes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is, Does the taking in advance of the highest rate of interest allowed by the constitution upon a negotiable promissory note, payable twelve months after its date, constitute usury? The provision of the constitution upon the subject of usury is (art. 19, § 13): "All contracts for a greater rate of interest than 10 per centum per annum shall be void as to principal and interest, and the general assembly shall prohibit the same by law, but when no rate of interest is agreed upon, the rate shall be 6 per centum per annum." The Act of the legislature approved February 9, 1875, only a few months after the adoption of the constitution, upon the subject of discounting commercial paper, mortgages, or other securities, is as follows: "It shall be lawful for all parties loaning money in this state to reserve or discount interest upon any commercial paper, mortgages, or other securities at any rate of interest agreed upon by the parties, said rate not to exceed 10 per cent per annum, etc. The only limitation in this act is upon the kind of paper, so far as it affects the case at bar, and that is that it shall be commercial paper. In Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 589, 4 L. R. A. 463, this act is held to be constitutional when the paper discounted, or upon which interest is reserved, is three-months paper, used in commercial transactions; the question in that case having arisen upon, and necessarily been confined to, three-months paper. The act of the legislature passed soon after the adoption of the constitution,—in fact at the first session thereafter,—though not obligatory if it violates the constitution, is entitled to serious consideration as a legislative construction of the above provision of the constitution, and, unless it is clear beyond reasonable doubt that it is in conflict with the constitution, it is the duty of the court to sustain it. It is said in Vahlberg v. Keaton, supra, in reference to the constitutionality of the above statute, that "it is also said to be a correct rule in different and more salutary principle, and more conducive to mercantile convenience, by allowing bankers to receive interest in advance." This case was reversed on other grounds in 3 Cow. 612, 15 Am. Dec. 304.

This decision was followed in Bank of Utica v. Phillips, 3 Wend. 408; also in Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 662.

Taking sixty-four days' discount upon a sixty-day note is held lawful in Bank of United States v. Crabb, 2 Cranch, C. C. 299, but no discussion of the question is made in the case.

The same decision, without discussion, was made in Union Bank v. Gozler, 2 Cranch, C. C. 349; Thornton v. Bank of Washington, 28 U. S. 8 Pet. 38, 7 L. ed. 664, citing also the unreported case of Bank of Washington v. Elliot.

The custom of banks at Washington in former years to give four days of grace is the basis of these decisions.

Such deduction of discount for sixty-three days on a sixty-day note was held valid in Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, 1 Cranch, C. C. 552.

For a bank to take interest in advance in discounting a note, is also held lawful in Second Nat. Bank v. Smoot, 2 McArthur. 371; Lafayette Bank v. Findlay, 1 West. L. J. 321.

That taking interest in advance on short loans in the usual and ordinary course of business is not usurious, if the interest reserved does not exceed the legal rate, is declared to be well settled in MacKenzie v. Flannery, 90 Ga. 560.

That interest may lawfully be taken in advance is settled law in Illinois. Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 110 Ill. 235; Hoyt v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, 110 Ill. 890; McGill v. Ware, 5 Ill. 21; Mitchell v. Lyman, 77 Ill. 525; Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co. 141 U. S. 8, 38 L. ed. 793; Maxwell v. Willett, 49 Ill. App. 554.

It is also held in Virginia that it is lawful to take interest in advance upon the whole amount of a note discounted at a bank. Stribbling v. Bank of the Valley, 5 Rand. (Va.) 132.

In the case of Crump v. Nicholas, 5 Leigh, 251, the legality of taking interest in advance by way of discount is also sustained, although the question was as to the validity of the practice of a bank in 29 L. R. A.

receiving double interest for every sixty-fourth day on a renewal of notes.

The right to take advance interest on discounts is also sustained in Newell v. National Bank, 13 Bush, 57; Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 405.

So the legality of taking interest in advance is sustained in State Bank v. Cowan, 8 Leigh, 238, although the chief question in controversy was as to the right to assume sixty days as one sixth of a year, or ninety days as one fourth of a year.

A bill was discounted at the rate of 1 per cent a month in Planters' Bank v. Bivingsville Cotton Mfg. Co., 11 Rich. L. 677, and it was held not usurious, but no discussion of the right to take interest in advance is made, but the question was whether or not the exchange on the bill might be included.

A deduction of interest on the loan of the face of a note which did not draw interest is also held valid on a note given for three days, in Hawks v. Weaver, 46 Barb. 164.

So, deducting in advance the interest for one year computed at the lawful rate on a note due one year after date, is not usurious. Tucker v. Coffin, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 415.

Charter authority to deal in "bullion, gold and silver coin, promissory notes, mortgages, bills of exchange, public stock, or any collateral security," etc., and a subsequent statute prescribing at what rate the bank shall discount "all bonds, notes, and bills payable," etc., will sustain the discount of bonds running for twelve months. Reed v. State Bank, 5 Ark. 193.

So, statutory authority to discount or loan money is held to include authority to take interest in advance. Haas v. Flint, 5 Blackf. 67.

And again, in Alabama, charter authority to take interest at a certain rate is held equivalent to authority to discount at that rate and to permit taking the interest in advance. Lyon v. State Bank, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 443.

The right to take interest in advance is also recognized in McKiel v. Real Estate Bank, 4 Ark. 562; Thompson v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 56; Cameron v. Merchants & Mfra. Bank, 37 Mich. 240.

Taking interest in advance has been so common that the custom has undoubtedly been acquiesced in without objection in a great number of in-constitutional interpretation, to construe it, not according to its technical meaning, but according to the acceptance of those who adopted it. . . . It must be presumed that it was framed and adopted in the light and understanding of prior and existing laws, and with reference to them. . . . The Statute of 12 Anne provided, in substance, that no person should take, directly or indirectly, for loan of money, etc., interest at a higher rate than 5 per cent per annum, and that all contracts whereby there was reserved or agreed to be paid interest at a higher rate should be utterly void. The question came before the court of common pleas under this statute, and Sir William Blackstone 'conceived that interest may as lawfully be received beforehand for forbearing, as after the term is expired, for having forborne.' Lloyd v. Williams, 3 W. Bl. 792." And this was followed in Auriol v. Thomas, 3 T. R. 52; Marsh v. Martindale, 3 Bos. & P. 154; and Floyer v. Edwards, 1 Cowp. 112. But "no shift will enable a man to take more than legal interest upon a loan." So it is settled in our state that it is not usury, under our present constitution, to take interest in advance, and that the above act is valid "so far as it relates to transactions of a commercial kind in short-time paper." It is said in the opinion in Vahlberg v. Keaton that, "although this relaxation of the prohibition against usury was first sanctioned in the transaction of banks and other corporations authorized to make discount, a distinction could not be made against individuals, and it became universal;" citing 3 Parsons, Cont. p. 181; Maine Bank v. Butts, 9 Mass. 49; Marsh v. Martindale, supra; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 3 Cow. 708; Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 681; Parker v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 373, 44 Am. Dec. 888. In the case of Vahlberg v. Keaton, it is also said that "the clause of the constitution is no broader in its terms, and seems to reach no further in its purpose than the Act of 1838, the Act of Anne, or the acts of the other states, upon the subject. The framers of the constitution intended only to make the prohibition against usury, as it had formerly been understood, a part of the organic law, and not leave it to depend on the discretion of the legislators, or the chances of party ascendancy. Such being the purpose of the constitution, and such the meaning given statutes embodying its terms by previous judicial construction, it follows that it will receive the same construction placed upon the similar statutes. This conclusion receives support in the fact that the legislature meeting very soon after its adopstances. Although usury was charged in Leonard v. Cox, 10 Neb. 541, on the ground that the money was not received upon the date that interest began to run, the court says no question was made respecting the payment of the interest in advance.

The taking of interest in advance by way of discount, if it could be held to constitute usury, was held to have been legalised by statute in Savings Bank v. Bates, 8 Conn. 511.

In some cases, banks have been expressly authorized by their charter to take interest in advance. So it is recited in McLean v. Lafayette Bank, 3 McLean, 587, that the charter provision was that the corporation should not "take more than 7 per cent per annum in advance."

A constitutional prohibition of usury does not prevent the legislature from authorizing interest to be taken in advance on commercial paper running for a short time. Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 548, 4 L. R. A. 468; Baird v. Hillwood, 51 Ark. 548.

But the Mississippi Code of 1880, allowing interest only upon the amount of money actually loaned, does not allow it to be retained in advance, and it is therefore held that a national bank in that state is subject to a penalty, under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5193, when it deducts 10 per cent interest in advance. Timberlake v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Fed. Rep. 261.

The right to take interest in advance is expressly given to national banks by U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5197, which fixes the rate at 7 per cent in cases where no rate is fixed by the laws of the state, territory, or district where the bank is located, but providing that such banks shall not take greater interest than the local laws permit, except where such laws fix a different rate for the state banks of issue, and then such rate is allowed to the national banks. A considerable number of decisions have been rendered interpreting this section, but they are not cited here except so far as they touch on the question of taking interest in advance. In many of these cases interest was in fact taken in advance, but the right to do so was not questioned and the decisions turn on other questions, such as the rate of interest.

Taking a portion of the interest on a five years' note in advance is held lawful in Pierce v. Davey, 29 L. R. A.

48 Neb. 45, where the total interest, including that taken in advance, does not amount to more than 10 per cent, as Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 44, § 1, expressly permits interest not exceeding 10 per cent to be taken "yearly, or for any shorter period, or in advance, if so expressly agreed." In this case less than 8 per cent was taken in advance and notes given drew interest at 7 per cent.

Under the Nebraska statutes where a note as bonus for obtaining a loan is taken, interest for the time of the loan cannot be added to the note in determining whether the amount exceeds what the statute permits. Tepeol v. Saunders County Nat. Bank, 24 Neb. 815.

Under Minnesota Laws 1879, chap. 65, § 2, allowing interest in advance for one year at a rate not exceeding 10 per cent, if a bonus is exacted by the lender it is to be deducted as of the date when it is payable for the purpose of determining whether the borrower is charged usury, and what the borrower receives and retains is to be taken as the basis for computation if the bonus is paid at the time of the loan. Smith v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 530. A note for $3,880 payable one year from date, given in renewal of a note for $3,000, was held usurious under a statute authorizing 10 per cent interest, although interest could be lawfully taken in advance. First Nat. Bank v. Davis, 108 Ill. 688. Two judges dissented from this decision on the ground that the amount of the note was no more than might have been realized from lawful interest had the interest for one year been paid in advance.

So, under a statute allowing by express written agreement a rate of interest not exceeding 10 per cent, a note with interest at 10 per cent discounted by deducting 10 per cent of the interest to accrue as well as of the principal, was held in Carolina Sav. Bank v. Parrott, 30 S. O. 61, to be usurious, in the absence of an express written agreement that interest should be deducted in this manner from the interest as well as from the principal. In this case the note was for a little less than one year, and the interest upon the interest which was held usurious amounted to $15.72.

Where the maker of a note and mortgage for tion, dominated by the purpose that controlled in its adoption, and charged with the duty of carrying it into effect, enacted the statute referred to." We have quoted largely from the above case because we consider it a well-considered and sound opinion, throwing much light upon the question under consideration here, supported, as we find it to be, by the numerous cases referred to in it. It will be observed that the opinion is confined to "short-time paper" and in "transactions of a commercial kind." The opinion does not undertake to define "transactions of a commercial kind in short-time paper," because it was unnecessary, for the paper was unquestionably of that kind in that case, being three-months paper,—a negotiable promissory note.

The statute above quoted uses the term "commercial paper," and the note in the case at bar was commercial paper,—a negotiable promissory note, payable in twelve months from its date, for $2,500; and the interest, $250, was taken out in advance, and only $2,250 paid to the borrower. Now, if this transaction was not usurious, by reason of the length of time the note, out of which the interest was taken in advance, had to run, it was not usurious. This is the only possible question in the case. In the following cases taking interest at the highest legal rate in advance, on six-months paper, was held not to be usurious, viz.: Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652; Bloomer v. McInerney, 30 Hun, 201. In the following cases the taking of the highest legal rate of interest in advance on one-year paper was held not to be usurious, viz.: Cole v. Lockhart, supra; Mitchell v. Lyman, 77 Ill. 525; McGill v. Ware, 5 Ill. 21. In the following cases the highest legal rate of interest was reserved in advance on paper having from twenty-three months to five years to run, and this is held not to be usurious, viz.: Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 389, 5 L. ed. 631; English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 116, 7 Am. Rep. 215 (semiannually in advance for five years); Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 110 Ill. 235 (semiannually in advance for five years). See also Hoyt v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, Id. 390; Bacchus v. Moreau, 7 Rob. (La.) 589 (semiannually in advance for five years). In McGill v. Ware, 5 Ill. 29, the court, after reviewing the cases in England and America upon this question, said: "I have reviewed these decisions to show that the first impression of the courts was, that it was usurious to take interest in advance, as $600 under an oral agreement to pay 12 per cent the first year and 9 per cent thereafter, immediately on receiving the money paid back $36 as he was required to do by the lender, and afterwards paid at the rate of 9 per cent per annum, it was held that the contract directly secured the sum of $36, for unlawful interest. Minot v. Sawyer, 8 Allen, 73.

In England, deduction of interest in advance is also upheld, although it was said in an early case to be unlawful.

Thus, that it would be usurious to require advance payment of interest is an obiter statement made by Popham, J., in deciding that it was not usurious to make interest payable semiannually. Barnes v. Worledge, Noy, 41, Feiv. 30, and Cro. Jac. 25.

Blackstone, J., said in Lloyd v. Williams, 2 W. Bl. 728: "Interest may as lawfully be received beforehand for forbearing, as after the term is expired, for having forborne." While Gould, J., was inclined to think that the amount of the original loan was only that which was retained by the borrower. But the decision in this case did not turn on the right to take interest in advance.

In Floyer v. Edwards, Cowp. 112, where the actual decision was that a bona fide sale was not usurious, the court declared that bank discount taken in advance is not usurious, although by nice calculation it is in excess of the legal rate, and while it is said that usages will not protect usury, it is admitted that it goes a great way to explain a transaction.

The legality of discount by taking interest in advance is assumed in later cases in which other questions are contested, as, for instance, the effect of giving to the borrower drafts not yet due, instead of cash. Madcock v. Hammett, 7 T. R. 184; Hammet v. Yea, 1 Bos. & P. 144.

b. By persons other than banks.

Individuals as well as banks have the right to take interest in advance. Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 384, 4 L. R. A. 463. It is said in this case: "Although this relaxation of the prohibition against usury was first sanctioned in the transaction of banks and other corporations authorized to make discount, a distinction could not be made against individuals and it became universal."

The right of a private individual to deduct interest at the time of a discount on discounting commercial paper is sustained in Parker v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 372, 44 Am. Dec. 388.

Taking interest in advance, by an individual as well as by a corporate bank, is held lawful in Anderson v. Schenck, 1 N. Y. Legal Obs. 107.

Taking interest in advance was held lawful in the case of a loan by a private individual, in Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 631.

The taking as discount on a note of interest in advance is not usury whether it is done by a bank or by corporations or other persons having no banking powers. New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 2 Cow. 664; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, Id. 678; Bank of Utica v. Wager, Id. 712, affirmed in 8 Cow. 308; Bank of Utica v. Smalley, 2 Cow. 770, 14 Am. Dec. 523; International Bank v. Bradley, 19 N. Y. 246; Marvine v. Hymers, 12 N. Y. 223.

But, on the other hand, a Connecticut case decides that a charter provision that a corporation shall not be authorized to discount notes or exercise any banking privileges is held to make it unlawful for the company to take a note for a loan and receive the interest thereon in advance. Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Townner, 13 Conn. 240. This decision is based on the theory that, "the discounting of notes by receiving the interest in advance for the time they have to run being one of the peculiar privileges of a banking company," such privilege was one that the legislature intended this company should not possess.

So, in Ohio, express authority by statute given to banks and other corporations to reserve interest in advance was regarded in the case of Penn Mut. Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 49 Ohio St. 260, as furnishing a strong implication that other persons were not entitled to take interest in this way.

And in Metzger v. Wiechers (Hamilton Co. Dist. Ct.) 4 Cin. W. L. R. 549, a note given to an individual lender calling for 8 per cent interest on its face amount from which the interest was deducted in advance was held usurious.

evidenced by the first dicta and decisions; and, also, that the courts very early decided it was not usury, under the Statutes of Henry VIII., and have followed up that decision uniformly down to this period, under all the English and American statutes. Such a long course of uniform decisions, for upwards of two hundred years, ought to settle the question, more particularly so with us, as those decisions were made upon statutes precisely like our own, as to the mode of reserving interest, and which were known before its passage. . . . If the question were now new, and the business of the country not so deeply involved in transactions of the kind before named, I believe it would be differently ruled." The note discounted in that case had one year to run, and interest at the highest legal rate was taken out in advance, and, yielding to authority, the court held that it was not usury. The proof in the case at bar tends to show that it is customary in the vicinity where this note was executed to pay debts in the fall or winter season, when the proceeds of the cotton crop can be realized; and that notes for the payment of money are made in reference to this, for convenience of trade. And it may be supposed that the business of the country is largely involved by reason of this custom, which, in our judgment, ought not to be ignored in this opinion. In Fleckner v. Bank of United States, supra, a note to the bank, dated the 26th of March, 1818, payable the 1st of March, 1820, was discounted for the full term it had to run by taking out or reserving in advance the interest at the highest legal rate allowed by law, and it was held that this was not usury. In discussing the question, Judge Story, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "If a transaction of this sort is to be deemed usurious, the same principle must apply with equal force to bank discounts generally, for the practice is believed to be universal." He also said, in substance, that taking interest in advance is not usury in bankers or others. It is so well settled that we deem it unnecessary to cite the numerous cases to show that it is the consensus of judicial opinion that it is not usury for a bank to discount commercial paper in the usual course of business by taking out the interest in advance, at the highest legal rate, even in the absence of a statute allowing it; this being the universal custom, which has grown into law, and in reference to which the provision of our constitution upon the subject of usury is presumed to have been framed and adopted.

c. On instruments other than bonds and notes.

A mortgage was upheld in Rose v. Munford, 88 Neb. 148, when it stipulated for interest in advance, but the case turned on the construction of Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 44, § 1, which expressly authorizes interest in advance.

A bond given to a bank in renewal of previous obligations was sustained in Magruder v. State Bank, 18 Ark. 9, when interest was added to the face of the bond as part of the principal.

Taking interest in advance on a bond and mortgage is also held valid in Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co. 141 U. S. 384, 25 L. ed. 738.

So on bonds it was held lawful to take interest in advance by way of discount, in State Bank v. Hunter, 1 Dev. L. 100; Reed v. State Bank, 5 Ark. 193; Magruder v. State Bank, supra.

See the next division as to periodical payments.

II. In periodical payments.

Taking interest annually in advance on a note for three years was held usurious in Penn Mut. Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 40 Ohio St. 280. The court said that express authority by statute in that state had been given to banks and other corporations to reserve interest in advance, and this furnished a strong implication that it was denied to all others.

But nearly all cases have upheld payments of interest in advance when interest was paid periodically.

In Illinois making annual interest on a note payable sixty days previous to the lapse of each year does not make the note usurious, as it is well settled interest may be lawfully made payable in advance. Telford v. Garrels, 132 Ill. 550.

Payment of interest in advance or semiannually is declared not to be usurious, in English v. Smock, 84 Ind. 115, 7 Am. Rep. 215. In that case such interest is held invalid in case of bonds issued under a statute which expressly required the interest to be paid at the end of the year.

A stipulation by a purchaser of property who gives his note therefor, that he shall have the option to postpone payment of the note for five years after its maturity upon paying the interest upon it annually in advance, is not usurious. Beechus v. Moreau, 7 Rob. (La.) 539.

An agreement in a bond and mortgage to pay interest semiannually in advance, which was not intended to evade the statute against usury and does not name any precise sum, is held valid, but the court raised the question whether or not the interest should be computed at the full rate as if it were paid at the end of the time, or the interest upon the interest for such period be deducted. The court said that the rule in regard to taking interest in advance grew up in regard to commercial paper, and seems never to have been raised as to bonds and mortgages, and adds: "So the courts must now make a rule. And the rule that they make should be in harmony with that which has been made already." Bloomer v. McInerney, 30 Hun, 201.

The fact that interest is paid half yearly in advance on a bond and mortgage is held not to make it usurious, in Hoyt v. Bridgewater Copper Min. Co. 6 N. J. Eq. 253, affirmed in Bridgewater Copper Min. Co. v. Hoyt, Id. 625. In this case the chancellor said: "I am not aware that this question has ever been presented to our courts; and I have found no case in which the distinct question has ever been decided." But he remarked that it was held in New York and Massachusetts that other persons as well as banks might take interest in advance on discounting a note in their usual course of business, "unless the time it has to run be so long as to afford a presumption that usury was intended." He adds: "If the interest for the whole time these bonds had to run was to have been paid in advance, perhaps the court might consider that the parties made the transaction the subject or occasion of a contract between them for the loan or forbearance of money at an usurious rate of interest."

The question of usury in respect to payments on interest semiannually or at other period less than one year is not considered here, except so far as payments in advance are concerned. So with many other questions of usury, such as the withdrawing of the principal from the borrower for a time after the date from which he begins to pay interest, or the giving to him of depreciated money

There are numerous decisions of courts of last resort in other states of the Union which, in effect, hold that there is no distinction to be taken between discounting paper used in commercial transactions, whether it has a long or a short time to run. In the early cases in England, discounting paper in advance was held to be usurious, without regard to the time it had to run; and the right to do so grew out of the custom of banks in commercial transactions, for the convenience of trade. The banks confined their discounts to paper having from thirty to ninety, and sometimes one hundred and twenty, days to run; but it seems that as the commercial transactions became more extended and numerous, and the necessities and convenience of different localities demanded, the custom widened and expanded to meet the growing and ever-changing conditions of commerce and trade. As is shown by many decided cases in other states, the custom of discounting commercial paper having a year, and even more, to run was clearly recognized, and such transactions were held not to be usurious, where the highest legal rate of interest was taken in advance, before the adoption of our constitution. As our constitution was adopted before this question had arisen in our state or in this court, it is not a harsh presumption that the provision of the constitution above quoted was framed and adopted in reference to a custom well established in other states, and recognized as not in violation of laws similar to our own upon the subject of usury. It must be understood that the legislature thought so when the act above quoted was passed. It cannot be presumed that the legislature intended to override the constitution. It is easy to perceive the policy that might have controlled the legislature in passing the act quoted. Our people were an agricultural people almost exclusively. They were engaged in the production chiefly of cotton, the great staple of the south, which as the proof shows, is marketed in the fall and winter seasons; and they were in the habit of making their obligations to fall due at a time of the year when they could realize upon their crops. Their general custom was to make their notes and obligations for the payment of money to become due in the fall and winter, and for the additional reason that it is more convenient and less troublesome to the borrower to borrow money on twelve months' time, and pay the interest in advance, than to borrow on three months' time, and renew every three months for twelve months, and have the interest taken out at each renewal in which is to be repaid and bear interest as if it were worth its face value.

A note for $500 including promise to pay $15 interest every thirty days in advance was held valid in Heddish v. Watson, 6 Ohio, 510, on construction of the Ohio Act of 1824, which was said not to prevent contracting for any rate of interest. But this case was overruled in Lafayette Ben. Soc. v. Lewis, 7 Ohio, 80, holding that a contract to pay more than 6 per cent per annum could not be enforced under that statute.

An agreement for semiannual interest in advance on a bond given to the internal improvement commissioner in his official character for money borrowed, is held usurious in Hogan v. Hensley, 22 Ark. 413, on the ground that the privilege of taking advance interest has been uniformly confined to bankers and those dealing in bills of exchange or promissory notes by way of trade, while it is the commissioner's duty to loan the public funds and it was not contemplated that bonds taken by him should circulate as negotiable instruments for the benefit of trade.

III. For what length of time allowed.

What the effect would be of extending the time of the obligation so long that the interest that would accrue upon it would equal the principal, and then attempting to take the interest in advance, has not been decided. In Pierce v. Davey, 43 Neb. 45, which was a case of taking part of the interest in advance on a five-year note it is said: "Whether the doctrine that interest may be paid in advance or retained from the amount loaned would be held to cover transactions wherein the amount loaned and the time of its existence would, by the application of such rule, and allowing the interest to be paid or retained in advance, at the inception of the loan, take it all, or so near it as to leave very little for the party borrowing, we need not say. Such is not the case before us."

But in Rose v. Munford, 36 Neb. 148, it was held that under Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 44, § 1, allowing interest at 10 per cent "yearly, or for any shorter period, or in advance, if so expressly agreed," the right to stipulate for interest in advance does not 29 L. R. A.

depend upon the time the loan runs. To hold that it does would be interpolating words into the statute. In this case a mortgage running for ten years with one note for the first year's interest which itself bore 10 per cent interest from date, and nine coupon notes each for 10 per cent of the face of the mortgage, one of them due each year thereafter and bearing 10 per cent interest from its maturity, was held not to be usurious, although it is said to be the settled law of the state that no interest would be allowed on such coupons.

So, in Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co., 141 U. S. 384, 25 L. ed. 786, the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice Harlan said: "Whether that doctrine would apply where the loan was for such period that the exaction by the lender of interest in advance would, at the outset, absorb so much of the principal as to leave the borrower very little of the amount agreed to be loaned to him, we need not say. The present case does not require any expression of opinion upon such a point, for the interest reserved in advance on the loan . . . was only of 3 per cent out of 10 per cent, and a reservation to that extent, it would seem, is protected by the decisions of the state court."

In holding that it is legal for banks to deduct the legal interest from the face of a note or bill discounted, the court, in Newell v. National Bank, 12 Bush, 57, says: "This practice must be confined to short-time paper, and the instrument discounted or upon which the interest is taken in advance must be such as will circulate in the course of trade, or such as by statute has been placed upon the footing of that character of paper."

In State Bank v. Hunter, 1 Dev. L. 100, holding discount lawful on a bond, the court said: "The rule extended completely shows its impropriety by producing a result perfectly absurd," and instances the case of a note for sixteen years and eight months which would be all absorbed in discount if the interest were taken in advance, but the court held that "an exposition legislative, judicial, and popular has been given to the law which the court is bound to respect."

It has been said that taking interest in advance on paper running for a long time raises a presumpadvance. It may reasonably be supposed that a consideration of the convenience and the saving of trouble to the borrower by making long-time paper and paying interest in advance, and the fact that this was held in other states not to be usurious, under laws similar to our own upon the subject of usury, influenced the legislature to provide that this might be done in discounting any commercial paper. Commercial paper is defined to be "bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks, and other negotiable instruments for the payment of money, which, by their form and on their face purport to be such instruments as are by the law merchant recognized as falling under the designation of commercial paper." Black, Law Dict. 226, Commercial Paper. The note in this case falls within this definition, and within the above act of the legislature.

In discussing the question whether it is usurious to take in advance the highest legal rate of interest in discounting commercial paper, Judge Brewer said, in Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 408: "It seems difficult upon principle to sustain such a transaction. But in cases where note or bill is given, it is supported by such an overwhelming current of decision, and is a matter of such universal practice, that it may well be considered as engrafted upon the law as a settled rule." And he added: "It was so settled before the passage of our interest law; and if the legislature had intended to change this rule of construction, such intention would have been plainly expressed." The same may be said substantially in reference to the custom of discounting negotiable or commercial paper having one year to run by taking out the highest legal rate of interest in advance, as affected by our constitution. The custom was well established before our present constitution was adopted. It will be observed that some of the cases cited in Vahlberg v. Keaton to sustain the position that it is not usury to take out in advance the highest legal rate of interest on discounting three months' paper equally sustain the position that it does not constitute usury to so discount commercial paper having six months or a year to run. The only question decided in Hogan v. Henley, 22 Ark. 418, was that a bond given to an internal improvement commissioner, contracting to pay interest at the rate of 10 per cent semiannually in advance, was not negotiable or commercial paper, and that the agreement was usurious and void. This was the question in that case. The case at bar is entirely different, for there can be no dispute that the note in this case is ne-tion of usury. Thus, where a right to redeem from an annuity existed on making a payment of £4,083, 6s., 8d., and to this was added a cash loan of £168, 12s., 4d., and then the further addition of $750, as interest for three years on £5,000, and in connection with the redemption of the annuity a bill for £5,000, due in three years, was given, it was held usurious. The court said: "The discount of such a bill as this, not coupled with the transaction respecting the annuity, would have been almost sufficient to have afforded a presumption of usury; but coupled as it is with the redemption of this annuity, it is impossible to wink so hard as not to see what the real transaction is." Marsh v. Martindale, 3 Bos. & P. 154. It will be observed that like other English cases this turns on the corrupt intent of the parties which in some of the American cases is immaterial, although often important in determining whether a transaction fair on its face is really a cover for usury.

Most of the cases actually decided have been cases of short-time instruments.

Thus, thirty-day notes with an agreement to continue the discount for eighteen months were held lawfully discounted by taking the interest in advance in Stribbling v. Bank of the Valley, 5 Rand. (Va.) 122.

While notes for sixty days were discounted in Agricultural Bank v. Bissell, 12 Pick. 586; International Bank v. Bradley, 19 N.Y. 245; Crump v. Nicholas, 5 Leigh, 261; State Bank v. Cowan, 8 Leigh, 238; Parker v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 372, 44 Am. Dec. 388; Bank of United States v. Crabb, 2 Cranch. C. C. 269; Union Bank v. Gozler, Id. 349; Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, 1 Cranch, C. C. 652; Thornton v. Bank of Washington, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 36, 7 L. ed. 594,—citing also the unreported case of Bank of Washington v. Elliot.

The notes discounted were for ninety days in Second Nat. Bank v. Smoot, 2 MoArth. 371; Dyon v. State Bank, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 442; Marvine v. Hymers, 13 N. Y. 223; Manhattan Co. v. Osgood, 15 Johns. 162; Bank of Utica v. Phillips, 3 Wend. 408; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 3 Cow. 678; Bank of Utica

v. Wager, Id. 712; Bank of Utica v. Smalley, Id. 770, 14 Am. Dec. 526.

The notes were for three months in Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 534, 4 L. R. A. 462; Baird v. Millwood, 51 Ark. 548.

A bond for eighty-eight days was discounted in State Bank v. Hunter, 1 Dev. L. 100.

The note was for four months in New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 3 Cow. 664; Newell v. National Bank, 12 Bush, 67.

The note was for six months in the case of Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652; Haas v. Flint, 8 Blackf. 67.

On a note for one year, interest in advance was held lawful in Mitchell v. Lyman, 77 Ill. 525; Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 681; Tucker v. Coffin, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 415; Maxwell v. Willett, 49 Ill. App. 564.

A note and mortgage were for one year in Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 406.

A bond due in one year, given to a bank as a renewal of previous obligations, is not usurious because the year's interest is added to the face of the bond as part of the principal, where the bond is made payable without interest until after maturity. Magruder v. State Bank, 18 Ark. 2.

One year's interest was deducted in advance on a note for five years, in the case of McGill v. Warr, 5 Ill. 21, and notes received for the interest of the succeeding years, one of them due at the beginning of each year.

The note was for a little less than two years in Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. ed. 681.

Notes and a trust deed due in five years were given in Hoyt v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, 119 Ill. 390; also in Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 110 Ill. 235.

On bonds and mortgage due five years after date interest was taken in advance in Fowler v. Equitable Trust Co. 141 U. S. 384, 36 L. ed. 788.

So, the loan was for five years in Tepoel v. Saunders County Nat. Bank, 24 Neb. 315.

The case of BANK OF NEWPORT v. COOK thus appears to be clearly within the authorities.

R. A. R.

gotiable paper governed by the law merchant. The rule laid down in the American and English cases is that there must be a corrupt agreement by some device or shift to take or reserve a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law, and that payment or receipt of usurious interest is prima facie evidence of a corrupt agreement. New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow. 678. The note in this case was drawn by the appellee, or, at her instance, by her attorney, payable twelve months after date, to bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, after maturity only, and was presented to the bank for discount, and was discounted by the bank, for her convenience, by taking out the highest legal rate of interest in advance. We find that there is no evidence of a corrupt agreement in this case; that the transaction was in accord with a custom well established before our constitution was adopted, and with the act of the legislature. We therefore hold that the taking or reserving of the highest legal rate of interest in advance on negotiable paper having twelve months to run is not usurious.

The decree in this case is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court, with directions to enter a decree for the foreclosure of the mortgage.

Battle, J., dissenting:

The practice of discounting bills or notes by deducting from their face the highest rate of interest allowed by law for the whole time which must expire before they become due is undoubtedly usurious in the strict sense of the word; for the lender receives interest on the whole amount of the principal for the use of only a part. "But this practice," says Mr. Parsons, in his work on Contracts, "began with our banks, and was soon so firmly established that it was sanctioned by the courts almost of necessity." It was allowed and tolerated by the courts for the benefit of trade, and was confined to such paper as will, and usually does, circulate in the course of trade.

In Marsh v. Martindale, 8 Bos. & P. 158, Lord Alvanley expressly admits this to be the established law in relation to the negotiation of bills of exchange made in the usual course of trade; but he held the transaction in that case to be usurious, principally because the bill discounted was a bill at three years. He says: "The jury were impressed with a notion that a bill at three years was such a bill as no reputable man would discount; though it was said that some East India bills of two years' date had been discounted. Indeed, Lord Chief Justice Eyre seems to have thought that the length of the date of a bill was sufficient to afford a presumption that the discount was intended as a cover for a loan. And if we consider the effect of discounting bills at very long dates, the strength of this presumption will be manifest, for, if the practice be carried to a great length, the interest will annihilate the principal."

After a short review of the English cases in New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow. 708, Mr. Justice Sutherland said: "The principle to be extracted from these cases, and from a variety of others which might be cited in confirmation of them, I hold to be this: That the taking of interest in advance is allowed for the benefit of trade, although by allowing it more than the legal rate of interest is in fact taken; that, being for the benefit of trade, the instrument discounted, or upon which the interest is taken in advance, must be such as will, and usually does, circulate or pass in the course of trade. It must, therefore, be a negotiable instrument, and payable at no very distant day; for, without these qualities, it will not circulate in the course of trade. Under these limitations the taking of interest in advance, either by a bank, or incorporated company without banking powers, or an individual, is not usurious."

In Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 541, 4 L. R. A. 482, this court said: "As the American states have adopted the English statute as a model, so the American courts have adopted the construction given it by English courts. So we find the statement that 'the courts uniformly hold, at the present day, that the interest for ordinary paper, having the usual time to run, such as is the custom of banks, may be taken in advance, by way of discount, and not subject the paper to the taint of usury.'"

It is obvious that the right to take interest in advance can be exercised to such an extent that any amount of excessive interest may be collected, and our usury laws will cease to be a protection to the necessitous borrower. Thus, if A discounts the note of B for $2,500, payable at ten years, by taking 10 per cent per annum interest in advance for the whole time the note has to run, he would take the whole of the $2,500, and B would not receive a dollar, and A would have his note. There must be some limit to the right. Where shall it be? It seems to me it should be confined within the limits existing when first sanctioned by the courts—that is to say, to such short-time paper as will, and usually does, circulate or pass in the course of trade, according to the long-established custom of banks. It should not be extended further than it was when the courts, constrained by the necessities of trade, first sanctioned it. In speaking of it, Mr. Parsons says: "There seems . . . to be a strong disposition to limit this practice to short paper, or at least not to apply it to long loans or discounts." 3 Parsons, Cont. *181. There is no valid reason for extending it further. Newell v. National Bank, 19 Bush, 57. We should keep within the limits of the rule established by Vahlberg v. Keaton, supra. See Smith v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 530.

I think the note and mortgage in question are usurious and void.

Riddick, J., concurs with me in this opinion.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

George M. HODGES, City Tax Collector, Appt.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(.....Misc.....)

A city ordinance exacting a specified sum as rent from a telegraph company for the entry upon and occupation of the streets with its poles is void under Laws 1886, p. 93, § 1, authorizing companies to operate telegraph lines on and along all streets, without providing for compensation to the cities.

(May 20, 1895.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lauderdale County, in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of a tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cochran & Bozeman for appellant.

Messrs. Mayes & Harris for appellee.

Whitfield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The ground upon which the ordinance of the city of St. Louis, of which the one in this case is said to be a copy, is placed in St. Louis v. Western U. Tele. Co., 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 880, and 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810, is that the city of St. Louis is the absolute owner of the fee in its streets, and the charter powers of the city are "self-appointed." It is expressly declared that St. Louis occupies "a unique position." "It does not, like most cities, derive its powers by grant from the legislature; but it framed its own charter under express authority from the people of the state, given in the constitution." And again it is said: "This charter is an organic act,—so defined in the constitution,—and is to be construed as organic acts are construed. The city is, in a very just sense, an imperium in imperio. Its powers are self-appointed, and the reserved control existing in the general assembly does not take away this peculiar feature of its charter." Treating the city, therefore, as the absolute and uncontrolled proprietor of its streets, rent, which is, like toll, a "demand of proprietorship," and not like a tax, "a demand of sovereignty," was declared to be within the power of the city to exact. Meridian occupies a very different attitude as to its streets and its power over them. All the power which it has over its streets is derived from the legislature, whose power over them is "supreme and transcendent," to use Judge

Dillon's language. We are not advised by the record whether the fee in the streets of Meridian is in the city, or whether the city has a mere easement; but it is not denied that the power of the city to deal with the streets is derived wholly from a charter granted by the legislature, and hence, of course, under legislative control. The legislature, by the Act of 1886 (Laws 1886, p. 93), § 1, provided "that any telegraph company, chartered by the laws of this, or any other state of the United States, shall upon making due compensation, as hereinafter provided, have the right to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines . . . on, across, and along all . . . streets," etc., "provided that 'there shall be no interference with the ordinary use of such streets,' etc., or with 'the convenience of any land owner, more than may be unavoidable.'" The following sections provide for compensation to turnpike and railroad companies and private owners for the use and occupation of their "ways," "structures," or lands. No compensation was provided for cities, in case their streets should be used; but the use and occupation of so much of the streets of cities as may be reasonably needed for the construction and maintenance of telegraph poles and telegraph lines is expressly authorized, without compensation to the state or to the cities,—municipal subdivisions of the state. Without this act the appellee could not have entered upon the streets of the city of Meridian for the purpose of constructing and maintaining its telegraph lines; and under it, it could only have so entered and occupied its streets, with its poles, by virtue of the right of eminent domain, upon due compensation first made, had not the terms of the act clearly shown that such compensation was dispensed with. Had such compensation been required, such damages awarded, in such exercise of the delegated right of eminent domain, such compensation would have been made, such damages awarded, for the use and occupation of said streets by said telegraph company with its poles, wires, etc. And it is this identical use and occupation for which the city seeks here to recover rent under the ordinance in question. The ordinance is entitled: "An ordinance to fix the rent charged telegraph . . . companies . . . for the use of the streets," etc. It is manifest that if the state, having "supreme and transcendent" power over the streets of Meridian, granted the appellee the right to so use and occupy the streets without compensation to the state or the city, then the city of Meridian, a political, municipal subdivision of the state, cannot, by ordinance, affect the license thus granted. It is revocable at the pleasure of the state, but not of the city, unless granted such power by the state, so far as affects it.

It is to be noted that this is not a tax. The license is a mere permission to enter the streets of the city, and so use and occupy them, without paying the damages usually assessed and paid, when the right of eminent

NOTE.—That municipal charges for poles and wires of a telegraph company placed in its streets are not precluded by the interstate character of the business, is shown by Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Baltimore (Md.) 24 L. R. A. 161, and note. The Maryland case was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in 150 U. S. 210, 39 L. ed. 399. The present case is in no way inconsistent with the doctrine there declared, as it turns on the relation of the municipality to state authority.

39 L. R. A.

domain is used for condemning rights of way in streets, etc. It is a permissive statute. What it grants is a mere license, revocable by the state. 148 U. S. 102, 37 L. ed. 384. It was not intended to exempt the appellee from the "ordinary burdens of taxation." But this is not a tax, and the scheme for the taxation of telegraph companies is elsewhere fully provided. Code 1892, §§ 3880, 3885. And this scheme is directed to be so arranged that "each municipality shall receive its just share of such taxes, proportionately to the amount of property therein situated."

The act conferring the charter powers, it will be noted, was passed prior to the Act of 1886,—April 9, 1874. We have nothing to do with the wisdom of the Act of 1886, doubtless passed at the instance of telegraph and telephone companies, but under its provisions, feel constrained to affirm the judgment. See Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 701 et seq.; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 473, 26 L. ed. 197; 15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 988, and authorities cited.

We are not to be understood as denying or restricting the power of the city to regulate the use of its streets within legal limits. See Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 332, 333. This is not an ordinance regulating the use of its wires and poles by the company, nor the use of the streets by the company in the occupation of them by poles, but one exacting a certain sum as rent, pure and simple, from the company, for the identical entry upon and occupation of the streets by the company, with its poles, which it was authorized by the Act of 1886 to make, without compensation to the state or city, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The act, it will be observed, provides that such use of the streets must not interfere with their ordinary use as such. In Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 24 Iowa, 469, Dillon, Ch. J., speaking for the court, says: "By virtue of these charter provisions, and this ownership of the fee, the city claims that it has the exclusive control of the streets, and therefore it may consent to or prohibit, as by its common council it shall deem best for the public interest, the use of its streets for railway purposes, and that the courts cannot interfere with or control the decision of the common council respecting this matter, whatever that decision may be. If these were all the provisions of the law applicable to this subject, the position of the city might, and, I think, would, be well taken." He then proceeds to notice two other statutes of similar purport with our Act of 1886, supra, as affecting this question, and then, at page 473, continues: "But it is a mistake to suppose that, where the fee of the streets is in the city, in trust for the public, the city is constitutionally and necessarily entitled to compensation, the same as a private proprietor holding the fee."

The constitutional provision is that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation to the owner. . . . The streets of the city are not the private property of the corporation in such a sense that the legislature cannot, so far as regards the corporation, authorize the same to be used for any public purpose for which it may see fit, unless it makes compensation to the city for such use." We refer specially to the entire reasoning in this case. Of course, the use of the streets by the telegraph company is "subject to all reasonable police and other regulations," in Judge Dillon's language in another part of this opinion; and, as we have shown, no question of taxation is here involved, nor any private rights of any "land owner." The case of Donnaheer v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 649, though not referred to by counsel, has not escaped our careful attention. We are disposed to think that the decision in that case may possibly be upheld on the ground that, as urged by the distinguished counsel for appellee,—the late Judge William Yerger,—the charter of the railroad company expressly stipulated that the company could not make its road "so as to interfere with the passage of any of the public streets of the town;" from which it might have been argued, as he did argue, that the tracks could not be laid in the streets at all, so far as the railroad's charter power to do so was concerned. It would seem that the court, however, went rather on the ground that, as stated in the opinion, "the Statute of 1823 reserved to the legislature the right to dispose of the entire two sections of land designated by the commissioners to locate the seat of government, except the streets," etc., and hence that "this vested the title to the streets in the corporation of the city, and deprived the legislature of the power to dispose of them, except so far as the jus publicum, or the right of eminent domain, might authorize it." If the decision is sound,—and it must be remembered that Mr. Justice Thacher dissented,—it is only on the first ground. Otherwise the decision, like the general language of the opinion of the majority of the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Clayton, is justly amenable to the criticism pronounced on it by Judge Dillon in the second volume (4th ed.) of his work on Municipal Corporations (sec. 701, note 3, p. 384), where he says: "A different view has been sometimes taken. Thus, in Donnaheer v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 649, the court decided that, where the statute under which a city was laid out vested the title of the streets in the city, such streets cannot be subjected to the use of a railroad without the consent of the city, unless the damages to the city are assessed and paid. In other words, the legislature can only interfere with the use of the streets of the city by its exercise of the right of eminent domain; and if it exercise this right it must compensate the city. But this conclusion seems to have been adopted without sufficient reflection, and is undoubtedly erroneous;" citing authorities. "The ground on which the city of Jackson stands was given to the state of Mississippi by the general government," as said by Judge Yerger in his brief; and this fact, connected with the "reservation of the right of the legislature to dispose of the entire two sections of land, except the streets," etc., hereinbefore adverted to as emphasized by the court, seems to have confused Judge Clayton,—at least to have left him with rather indistinct conceptions of the power of the legislature, generally, to deal with the streets of a city. For we find him saying (page 660) that "this principle [of compensation being made for private property taken for public use] applies as forcibly to the streets, in this instance, as to private property in other cases;" seemingly holding that the streets of Jackson are its "private property," in the same sense that any individual's property is his "private property." And the case immediately cites Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co., 11 Leigh, 76, 86 Am. Dec. 874, which is one of a canal company against a railroad company; both private (not municipal) corporations. And a more extraordinary thing still is the announcement, on page 661, that "at present we are strongly inclined to the belief that the owners of lots adjacent to the track of the railroad will have no claim to compensation, because they have no right of soil in the streets,"—a proposition the converse of which is everywhere now established law. We are not, of course, saying here anything as to the streets of Jackson, but are merely putting this Case of Donnaher in its only solvable light, as to the particular decision therein made, if in that light it be solvable. In so far as the general language of the opinion of the court in that case conflicts with the views herein announced, it is, as said by Judge Dillon, "undoubtedly erroneous," and is to that extent hereby overruled.

Affirmed.

Hon. J. A. P. Campbell presided, as special judge, in place of Woods, J., sick, during the time this case was decided.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

John A. ARMSTRONG, Appl.,

v.

Robert AUSTIN.

(.....S. C.)

1. Failure of the officer to index a mortgage is not fatal to its validity, in the absence of any statute making the indexing a part of the recording.
2. A mortgage covering both real and personal property was properly recorded in a lien and mortgage book, under Rev. Stat. 1872, p. 422, chap. 82, § 2, requiring a real-estate mortgage to be recorded in the register's office, without specifying in what book the record should be made.
3. Failure of a subscribing witness to a mortgage to sign the affidavit made by him does not invalidate the affidavit, in the absence of a statute or rule of court requiring such signing.
4. A point as to variance in the clerk's signature to the certificate of record and to the affidavit attached to a mortgage, not raised before a master or passed upon by him or raised by any exception to his report, cannot be considered by the court in passing upon such report, for the purpose of invalidating the mortgage.

(September 2, 1895.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Kershaw County in favor of defendant in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

The master's report was as follows:

"This is an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. In 1871 John Goff and others gave a mortgage of the real estate in question to the plaintiff, J. A. Armstrong. Subsequently Goff sold part of the land to the defendant, Robert Austin. The defendant, Austin, sets up the plea—First, that he was a purchaser without notice of encumbrance upon the land; that the mortgage was not recorded in the book, in the office of the register of mesne conveyances, kept for the purpose of recording deeds and mortgages, and that the law required them to be so recorded in separate books. By reference to the mortgage it will be seen that it was recorded in Lien and Mortgage Book No. 2, pages 856 and 857. Now, I can find nothing in the General Statutes of this state in force at that time requiring the clerk to record mortgages of real estate in a book separate from mortgages of personal property. This mortgage is a mixed mortgage, and, by reference to the set of books in which it was recorded, it will be seen that it was the custom at that time to so record mixed mortgages in this set of books. So I hold that Robert Austin had constructive notice of the mortgage, and bought subject to it. Another defense raised by defendant's attorney is that the mortgage was not properly probated, the affidavit not being signed. The following is a copy of the affidavit: 'South Carolina, Kershaw County. Personally appeared Wm. M. Shannon, and made oath that he saw J. A. Armstrong, John Goff, W. W. Goff, Sarah Yates, and Margaret Goff sign and seal the within lien and mortgage, and that he, with Arthur P. Linning, witnessed the execution thereof. Sworn to before me, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1872. C. Shiver, Clerk.' Under the head of 'Affidavits,' in 1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, I find it laid down that the signing of an affidavit is not necessary unless it is required by statute that the party making the affidavit sign it. While it is the custom in this state for affidavits to be signed, I can find no statute requiring it. So I hold that the probate of the mortgage in question is properly executed. The case of Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 23 S. C. 882, cited by defendant's attorney, does not apply here. There the party who took the affidavits was not duly qualified to take an affidavit in this state. In the Revised Statutes of South Carolina, adopted in 1872, under the chapter on 'Clerks of Court' (sec. 15), the clerk is invested with the authority to administer oaths, etc. I have made diligent search for the index to Book 2 of Liens and Mortgages, but cannot find it. I found the index to Book 1 of this series, for the year 1871, and also the index from 1876 to the end of the series. The defendant also contends that he entered into an agreement with plaintiff to give plaintiff a certain amount of cotton in satisfaction of his mortgage, and that he did so deliver to the plaintiff the cotton. The evidence shows that Robert Austin did give some cotton to the plaintiff, but it was for rent of the land.

NOTE.—For index as part of records, see also Dewey v. Sugg (N. C.) 14 L. R. A. 328, and note. 29 L. R. A.

"Therefore I find as matter of fact: (1) That on the 18th day of February, 1872, John Goff and William W. Goff made and delivered to plaintiff their promissory note in writing, and thereby promised to pay to plaintiff the sum of 152 ¹⁰/₁₀₀ dollars on or before the first of November, 1872, and if not paid at maturity then to bear interest at 2 per cent per month. (2) That at the date of said note, and as collateral for the payment of said note, the said John Goff and W. W. Goff, together with Sarah Yates and Margaret Goff, did grant, bargain, sell, and release, by way of mortgage, to the said plaintiff, the land described in the complaint. (3) That said mortgage was, on the 18th day of February, 1872, recorded in the clerk's office for Kershaw county, in Lien and Mortgage Book No. 2, pages 356 and 357. (4) That there is remaining due and unpaid upon said note and mortgage up to date of this report the sum of three hundred and thirty-five ¹⁰/₁₀₀ dollars ($335.40). (5) That part of the mortgaged premises were, subsequent to the date and recording of said mortgage, sold and conveyed by the said John Goff, W. W. Goff, Sarah Yates, and Margaret Goff to the defendant, who is now in possession of the premises described in the complaint. (6) That the defendant, Robert Austin, rented the land in question from plaintiff, and paid the rent in cotton for the years 1885, 1886, and 1887, but refused to pay rent in 1888, and has not paid any since.

"I conclude as matter of law:

"(1) That the defendant, Robert Austin, had constructive notice of the mortgage of John Goff and others to J. A. Armstrong, and bought the land subject to said mortgage;

"(2) That the probate of the mortgage in question is sufficient, and that it was not necessary for the affidavit to have been signed by the deponent;

"(3) That, the condition of the mortgage having been broken, the property should be sold, the equity of redemption barred, and the proceeds of sale applied to the payment of the mortgage debt."

To this report the following exceptions were filed:

"(1) That the master erred in holding that Robert Austin rented the land in question from plaintiff, such conclusion being irrelevant to the issue, unwarranted by the allegations of the complaint, and contrary to the 29 L. R. A.

evidence. (2) That the master erred in holding that Robert Austin had constructive notice of the mortgage of John Goff and others to J. A. Armstrong, and bought the land subject to said mortgage, as said mortgage was recorded in an improper book, and no proof was adduced to show that said mortgage was ever indexed as required by law. (3) That the master erred in holding that the probate of the mortgage in question was sufficient, and that it was not necessary for the affidavit to have been signed by deponent, as the evidence showed that there was no name signed to said affidavit, and there was no jurat affixed thereto, in that there was no seal, and the name of no officer authorized by law to administer oaths, and that said affidavit is inherently insufficient in itself. (4) That the master erred in his third conclusion of law, because it would be inconsistent and illegal if one, any, or all of the exceptions in the premises are correct."

After hearing argument upon the exceptions BENNET, J., delivered the following opinion:

"This is an action for foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. The cause was heard by me on defendant's exceptions to the report of the master, wherein he decided in favor of the plaintiff, and held that the mortgage should be foreclosed, and the property sold. The testimony on both sides is meager and unsatisfactory, and some of it offered by the plaintiff was inadmissible, but not objected to. The complaint alleges that on 18th February, 1872, John Goff and William W. Goff made and delivered to this plaintiff their promissory note for $152.10, to mature 1st November, 1872, with interest at 2 per centum per month after maturity; that, as collateral for the payment of said note, the said John and William W. Goff, along with Sarah Yates and Margaret Goff, mortgaged to the plaintiff the land in question, some 200 acres; that said mortgage was duly proved and recorded, the mortgage and the recording being of even date with the note; that two payments were made on said note, $45 on 12th November, 1872, and $100 on 9th March, 1875; 'that the mortgaged premises were, subsequent to the date and recording of said mortgage, sold and conveyed by the said John Goff, W. W. Goff, Sarah Yates, and Margaret Goff to the defendant, who is now in the possession of said premises.' Austin, the defendant, admits that the parties named above sold and conveyed the land to him, or, rather, 'a part of the tract of land;' and he avers 'that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without legal notice of any prior encumbrance, the proper index in the office of the register of means conveyances for Kershaw county, relating to real estate, not showing that any mortgage on said tract of land had been recorded in the proper books of said office.' And he 'therefore denies that the mortgage set forth in the complaint was properly or duly recorded,' and 'denies that he had legal notice of the same.' For a further defense he alleges that he learned of plaintiff's claim in 1885, and that he agreed to pay him three bales of cotton to satisfy said claim; and that he did pay the three bales, in full satisfaction of plaintiff's claim, paying one bale in 1885, one bale in 1886, and one in 1887. The evidence before the master fails to show at what time, or on what terms, the defendant entered into possession; but the complaint alleges that he purchased and had a conveyance from the makers of the mortgage 'subsequent to the date and recording of said mortgage.' The plaintiff in his testimony admits the payment of the cotton, but says it was paid him as rent. If such be the case, no evidence is adduced to show when the plaintiff ceased to regard the defendant as a purchaser in possession, and began to regard him as a tenant. He says: 'I never received anything from him myself from 1871 to 1885. Mr. McDowall did [his agent].'

"My view of the case, however, makes it unnecessary to clear up the confusion as to this payment of cotton, or to decide whether it was paid as rent or as satisfaction of the plaintiff's mortgage claim. The plaintiff's allegation that the land was sold and conveyed to the defendant subsequent to the date and recording of the mortgage leaves only one question to be decided, viz.: Was the defendant, Austin, a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration without notice? Indeed, the question may be framed more simply still, thus: Was the defendant a subsequent purchaser without notice? For no issue is raised as to the consideration. The master held that the defendant must be charged with constructive notice. From this conclusion of law I am compelled to dissent. The mortgage in question was a mixed mortgage,—a lien and a mortgage,—embracing a lien on crops, a lien on mules, and a lien on real estate. It was an agricultural lien, a chattel mortgage, and a mortgage of real estate, all in one. It was executed in 1872, according to the evidence and the pleadings, although on its face it says 1871. At that time the law with reference to recording required that a book of a certain size be used, and that the proof must be recorded with the writing, and that to the records indexes should be prepared, in books of a size prescribed. The law also required that conveyances of real estate should be recorded in books kept for that purpose. See Rev. Stat. 1872 (chapter on Register; Means Conveyances) p. 188, § 5. The mortgage shows that it was filed the 13th of February, 1872, and 'recorded same day in Lien and Mortgage Book No. 2, pages 356 and 357.' The report of the master shows that there was no index to this 'Book No. 2,' while there was to 'Book No. 1' and others. There is no evidence that it was recorded in the book kept for the recording of conveyances of real estate. All that is shown by the testimony is that it was recorded in 'Lien and Mortgage Book No. 2,' to which there was no index. As a mortgage of real estate, it surely should have been recorded in the book kept for that purpose. But it is urged that, being a mixed mortgage, it was proper and sufficient to record it in the Lien and Mortgage Book. This view I cannot assent to. It is held that, when a mortgage includes both real and personal property, it should be recorded both as a mortgage of realty and a chattel mortgage. See 20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 558. The position of the subsequent purchaser is to be considered. When he contemplates purchasing a tract of land, and desires to be informed as to prior encumbrances, does the law require him to look in the books of record of agricultural liens and chattel mortgages? Is it not sufficient that he inspect the records of mortgages or conveyances of real estate in books required by law to be kept for that purpose? It must be great injustice, and an undue and unauthorized stretching of the law of notice, to hold that the defendant, Austin, is to be charged in conscience with constructive notice of the Armstrong mortgage. Had the defendant been purchaser of one of the mules covered by the same mortgage, the case might be different.

"In addition to the foregoing ground, the defendant excepts to the finding of the master that the probate of the mortgage was sufficient. This exception must be sustained, and the master's report overruled, on this ground also. Indorsed on the mortgage is the form of an affidavit of one of the witnesses to the mortgage, the late William M. Shannon, Esq., but it is not signed by Mr. Shannon. And the jurat is signed only 'C. Shiver, Clerk', in handwriting entirely different from the 'C. Shiver, Clerk,' which follows the indorsement of the filing and recording. Yet both indorsements bear the same date,—18th February, 1872. Assuming that one 'C. Shiver' was clerk of the court at that time, it is assuming too much to say that the 'C. Shiver' of the jurat is his signature. There is no proof that it is his signature, and no evidence as to which of the two signatures is his. Nor does it appear that the writer was clerk of the court,—simply 'Clerk;' not even 'C. C. P.' And there is no seal. It may be that the signature of Mr. Shannon is not necessary to make the affidavit sufficient, as seems to be the holding of the supreme court in Fuller v. Missouri, 35 S. C. 331. It may be that the failure to affix the seal to the signature of the clerk of the court would not prevent due probate. It may be that a court may take judicial notice of the fact that in 1872 one C. Shiver was clerk of the court for Kershaw county. Still, I cannot hold that the mortgage in question was duly and sufficiently probated when the jurat is signed only 'C. Shiver, Clerk,' without any testimony that such was the signature of the C. Shiver who may have been clerk of the court. In the absence of the signature of the affiant, especially, there should be clear proof that the affidavit was made before the officer authorized by law to administer oaths and take affidavits in such cases. There is no such proof. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the report of the master herein be, and the same is hereby, overruled. Ordered, further, that the complaint be dismissed, with costs to the defendant."

The plaintiff excepted to said decree on the following grounds: "(1) That his honor erred in holding that the mortgage of plaintiff was not properly recorded, and was not constructive notice to the defendant. (2) That his honor erred in holding that there is no evidence that the book in which the said mortgage was recorded was a book kept for the record of mortgages of real estate. (8) That his honor erred in holding that the said mortgage was not properly probated for purposes of record. (4) That his honor erred in holding, in effect, that he would not take judicial notice that C. Shiver was clerk of the court at the time of the record of the mortgage, and in holding that his signature, 'C. Shiver, Clerk,' was not a sufficient attestation of the affidavit. (5) That his honor erred in holding that there was no evidence that the signature to the affidavit was in the handwriting of C. Shiver, the clerk, and in partly basing his decree on that ground, when no such question was made before the master, or in the defendant's exceptions to the master's report, and it was never questioned before the master that the signature was that of C. Shiver, the clerk of the court. (6) That his honor erred in overruling the master's report and dismissing the complaint."

Messrs. J. T. Hay and W. D. Trantham, for appellant:

A failure to enter on the index does not affect the recording.

1 Jones, Mortg. § 558; 20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 563.

It cannot be contended that Armstrong can be held responsible for the loss of any part of the public records; and because the index was not in the office in 1894, it does not follow that it was not there in 1873.

20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 602.

Weight must be attributed to usage as to the books in which records are made.

20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 560.

The statutory duty to record his conveyance, which is imposed upon the grantee for the benefit of subsequent purchasers, is sufficiently discharged when the grantee has duly deposited a valid instrument for record, and the grantee must be protected thereby, even though the recorder incorrectly transcribes this instrument upon the records, or fails to record it at all.

20 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 578; Wade, Notice, § 162.

No question having been made before the master as to the signature of C. Shiver, clerk, or raised by an exception, his honor, the circuit judge, could not entertain such objection when made before him.

Griffin v. Griffin, 20 8. C. 489.

Messrs. B. B. Clarke and J. D. Dunlap for respondent.

McIver, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented by this appeal is whether the mortgage sought to be foreclosed in this action was duly recorded so as to affect the defendant, a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged premises, with constructive notice of said mortgage. In the complaint it is alleged "that said mortgage was duly proved, and on the 18th day of February, A. D. 1873, recorded in the clerk's office for Kershaw county, in the Mortgage Book No. 2, pages 356 and 357." To this allegation the defendant in his answer responded as follows: "This defendant avers that he was a purchaser of a part of the said tract of land for a valuable consideration, without legal notice of any prior encumbrance on same, the proper index in the office of the register of meane conveyances for Kershaw county relating to real estate not showing that any mortgage on said tract of land had been recorded in the proper books of said office. The defendant, therefore, denies that the mortgage set forth in the complaint was properly or duly recorded in the office of the clerk for Kershaw county, and that he had legal notice of the same." The case was referred to the master, who made his report, sustaining the validity of the mortgage, and recommending that the mortgaged premises be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the mortgage debt, the amount of which was ascertained in his report. To this report the defendant excepted upon the grounds set out in the "case," and the case was heard by his honor, Judge Benet, upon the report and exceptions thereto, who rendered judgment overruling the master and dismissing the complaint. From that judgment plaintiff appeals upon the several grounds set out in the record. We think it due to the parties, as well as to the circuit judge, that the report of the master, together with the exceptions thereto, as well as the decree of the circuit judge and the grounds of appeal therefrom, should be incorporated in the report of the case.

It is very obvious that, if the case should be made to turn upon the only issue (so far as this appeal is concerned) presented by the pleadings, the only question to be decided would be whether the failure to index (if, indeed, there was such failure) would be fatal to the validity of the recording of the mortgage so far as to affect subsequent purchasers with constructive notice thereof. For in the complaint it is distinctly alleged that the mortgage was duly recorded on the day of its date, and that allegation is not denied in the answer, except in the form above quoted, which is based solely upon the ground of the failure to index, as the defendant says that he "therefore" denies that the mortgage was duly recorded: that is, for that reason, alone, is the validity of the recording denied. So that our first inquiry is whether the alleged failure to index is fatal to the validity of recording. So far as we are informed, we have no direct decision upon that question in the state. We must therefore resort to the aid of reason and authorities elsewhere. In the first place, it will be observed that statutes requiring mortgages and like papers to be recorded, so as to operate as notice to subsequent creditors or purchasers, contain no provision requiring such records to be indexed. That requirement is found in another statute, prescribing the duties of registers of meane conveyances and clerks of court in the counties where such clerks are ex officio registers. It would, therefore, seem that when a paper required to be recorded, in order to operate as notice, had been spread upon the books of the proper office, all requirements of the statute have been complied with, and the fact that the clerk or register has failed to comply with the provisions of another statute requiring such officer to keep an index of such books should not affect the validity or effect of the record. There is nothing in the statute making the indexing any part of the recording; and therefore the failure of the officer to perform a duty imposed upon him by a separate statutory provision, while it may subject him to an action at the instance of a party who may suffer by his default, yet cannot affect the validity or effect of the recording. In support of these views we have been able to find two cases from other states in which the point has been distinctly decided—Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 538, and Chatham v. Bradford, 50 Ga. 327, 15 Am. Rep. 692. So that we think that, even if the record of the mortgage in question was not indexed, it would still, if properly recorded, operate as constructive notice. But we do not think that it has been made to appear in this case that the record of this mortgage was never indexed. The master certainly does not find that as one of the facts of the case. All that he says upon the subject is: "I have made diligent search for the index to Book 2 of Liens and Mortgages [the book in which the indorsement on the original mortgage shows it was recorded], but cannot find it." It may be, for all that appears, that there was such an index, which has either been lost or misplaced.

While, as we have said, this disposes of the only issue, so far as the present appeal is concerned, which is raised by the pleadings, yet, as other objections were made to the record of the mortgage, which, though overruled by the master, were sustained by the circuit judge, we will proceed to consider them. The first of these objections seems to be that the mortgage was not recorded in the proper book. The certificate which is indorsed upon the mortgage, which was received in evidence without objection, is, after a statement of the names of the parties and the nature of the paper, in the following form: "Filed Feb. 13th, 1872. Recorded same day in Lien and Mortgage Book No. 2, pages 356 and 357. Examined and certified by me,"—and signed "C. Shiver, Clerk." This objection was overruled by the master but sustained by the circuit judge. Section 1, chapter 120, pp. 548, 549, Rev. Stat. 1872, only required that a mortgage of personal property should be recorded in the office of the register of mesne conveyances, without specifying in what book such record should be made, except that in the county of Richland such a mortgage must be recorded in the office of the secretary of state; and by Rev. Stat. 1872, chap. 82, § 2, p. 422, a mortgage of real estate was only required to be recorded in the office of register of mesne conveyances, without specifying in what book such record should be made. This was the law at the time of this transaction, and by that law must its validity be tested. It was not until ten years afterwards that the law was amended by the Act of 1882 (17 Stat. at L. 1053), requiring mortgages of real and personal estate to be recorded in different books. It seems to us, therefore, that this, being a mixed mortgage, covering both real and personal property, was recorded in the proper book under the law as it then stood.

The next objection was that the mortgage was not properly probated, and could not, therefore, be properly recorded. There is no doubt, under the express terms of the statute (Rev. Stat. 1872, chap. 23, § 5, p. 188), that no paper can be properly recorded until its execution "shall first be proved by affidavit of a subscribing witness, taken before some officer competent to administer an oath." Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 22 S. C. 532. The affidavit to prove the execution of this mortgage, and indorsed thereon, purports to have been made by one of the subscribing witnesses in the usual form, and sworn to before "C. Shiver, Clerk;" but the affiant does not appear to have signed the affidavit. This does not invalidate the affidavit, as may be seen by reference to 1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 311, and the cases there cited, as well as the case of Fuller v. Misroon, 35 S. C. 814, unless there is a statute or rule of court requiring the signature of the affiant; and no statute or rule of court has been brought to our attention making such requirement. The affidavit indorsed on the mortgage was sufficient to warrant its recording, as the clerk before whom it was taken is certainly an officer competent to administer an oath,—indeed, is expressly made so by section 15, chap. 23, p. 180, Rev. Stat. 1872. This objection cannot, therefore, be sustained. The circuit judge bases his conclusion in part, at least, upon a point not raised before the master, and, so far as appears, not touched upon in the argument before him on the exceptions to the master's report, and the point, therefore, was not properly before him. Griffin v. Griffin, 20 S. C. 436. It may be that, if the point referred to—that is, the supposed variance in the handwriting of the signature "C. Shiver, Clerk," to the certificate of the record of the mortgage, and that of the same signature to the affidavit proving the execution of the mortgage—had been raised, such apparent variance might have been fully explained. But this point was not only made before the master, or passed upon by him, but, on the contrary, the mortgage, with these indorsements thereon, was received in evidence without objection. At all events, we think it clear, under the case just cited, that there was error in considering a point not raised before the master nor passed upon by him and not raised by any exception to the master's report.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed; but as there is one issue raised by the pleadings—that of payment of the mortgage debt—which was not determined by the circuit judge, as, under the view which he took of the case, it was not necessary for him to do, the case must go back to the circuit court for the determination of that issue, and for such further proceedings as may be necessary under the views herein announced, in case the issue of payment should be determined adversely to the defendant.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, and that the case be remanded to the Circuit Court for such further proceedings as may be necessary under the views herein set forth.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Minnesota ex rel. REALTY COMPANY, Rept.,

Clayton R. COOLEY, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

The language found in section 3 of article 9 of the State Constitution, whereby it is provided that "public property used exclusively for any public purpose" shall, by general laws, be exempted from taxation, and the legislation on the subject (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 1512), cannot be construed as authorizing the exemption of real property owned and leased by a private party who receives and retains all revenues derived from such leasing, although, under a contract with the owners, the authorities of the municipality in which the property is situated have ordained that such property shall be a public market house or place, and shall be exempt from taxation, and it is thereafter exclusively used for such public purpose, the authorities regulating the business to the extent necessary for the public welfare.

(October 2, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County directing the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to place certain property upon the tax list for taxation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. E. Vanderburgh, with Messrs. Frank M. Nye and Wilson & Vanderlip, for appellant:

The market in question was a public market, established and regulated by municipal authority, exclusively used for public purposes. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 880; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 128.

If, in consideration of the public services rendered by the market company to the city, and the expenses, risk, and trouble incurred in building and operating the market, the company are entitled to collect certain rents and charges, that is only matter of administration, and in no way affects the question here.

Ramsey County v. Stryker, 52 Minn. 144.

Public property owned by the public is impliedly exempt.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 173.

The exemption section of the constitution in question is certainly open to the construction we claim for it, and hence the practical construction which has been adopted and followed in good faith by the legislature and people for many years is always entitled to receive great consideration from the courts.

Ames v. Lake Superior & M. R. Co. 31 Minn. 289; Cooley, Const. Lim. 367; State v. Mayhew,

2 Gill, 487; Harrison v. State, 23 Md. 468, 85 Am. Dec. 658; Boyden v. Brookline, 8 Vt. 286; Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 476; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 144, 9 Am. Dec. 128; Stuart v. Laird, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 115.

Our courts and legislatures have from the outset aimed to construe the exemption provision of the constitution according to its spirit, and to give effect to it accordingly, and no harm has ever come to the public therefrom.

Hennepin County v. Bell, 43 Minn. 344; Ramsey County v. Stryker, supra; Harney v. St. Louis, 90 Mo. 318; LeClair v. Davenport, 13 Iowa, 312; Palestine v. Barnes, 50 Tex. 588.

Messrs. Ripley, Brennan & Booth for respondent.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus to the respondent county auditor, requiring and compelling him to enter upon the assessment books for taxation certain real property in the city of Minneapolis. There is no dispute over the facts. The real estate in question is owned by the Minneapolis Central City Market Company, a corporation organized and existing under the provisions of Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2794, for the purpose of conducting a wholesale and retail market in said city. It has not been assessed for taxation for several years, because of the provisions of a certain ordinance passed by the city council in the year 1893, and a contract entered into between the city and the market company. This ordinance and the contract provided for the immediate erection of a market house upon the land in question by the company, and the latter agreed, and was given a franchise, to maintain a market house and place on such premises, to be used exclusively as a public market, for the period of twenty-five years. The ordinance also provided that for such period of time the entire premises should be exempt from taxation. It is contended in behalf of the company that, notwithstanding the private ownership of this property, it was and remains exempt from taxation because it has been established as a public market house and place, regulated and controlled by municipal authority, used exclusively by the public as a market house, and thus clearly within the language of the exemption statute (Id. § 1512), which, by its eighth subdivision, exempts from taxation "all public market houses, public squares, or other public grounds, town or township houses or halls, used exclusively for public purposes."

We must concede at the outset that under the terms and provisions of the ordinance the market house and the ground used in connection therewith are as public as if built and

*Headnote by COLLINS, J.

NOTE.—As to exemptions from taxation by municipal corporations, see note to Whiting v. West Point (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 361.
29 L. R. A.

owned by the city itself as a market house and place. The statute which we have quoted was designed to harmonize with a clause in article 9, § 8, of our Constitution, and of course it cannot be construed so as to enlarge its operation, and exempt property not clearly contemplated by the fundamental law. Section 8 reads as follows: "Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money; but public burying grounds, public school-houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property used for religious purposes, and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purposes and personal property to an amount not exceeding in value two hundred dollars for each individual, shall by general laws be exempt from taxation." The particular clause to which we have adverted is that which authorizes the exemption of "public property used exclusively for any public purpose" from taxation, and it is really this language which we are to construe and apply. The trial court seems to have taken the position that, in order to have the benefit of the exemption clause, the property must be owned by the public; and, further, that it must be exclusively used for a public purpose. We think this interpretation altogether too literal and radical, for, if this construction must prevail, the ownership must not only be in the public, but the property itself must be actually and exclusively used for some public purpose. Under this view this immunity from taxation would be taken away from all property having public ownership while it was unused or while any part of it was used for private purposes under the supervision of the public authorities and by their consent. Nor are we convinced that the exemption might not be as to property owned by private parties under certain conditions. To so construe the constitution would be to compel the owners of property used exclusively by the public with the owners' consent, and from which the latter derived no benefit pecuniary or otherwise, to pay taxes upon the same, or the payment of such taxes would have to be made directly out of the public funds. These suggestions indicate that a reasonable and practical construction must be placed upon the exemption clauses. In the case at bar the facts are that a private corporation has been organized for the specified purpose of erecting a building upon its own land, and in that building, and in the adjoining streets, furnishing a market place. Through the ordinance and the contract it has secured a franchise for the conducting of the business for the period of twenty-five years, and it has also had this place of business declared a public market. We are not to suppose that in making this investment and furnishing a place for the transaction of such a business the company has undertaken and is carrying out an enterprise purely philanthropic, or that the business is not expected to prove fairly remunerative. While the maximum fees and rates for standing room for vehicles in the abutting streets are prescribed by the ordinance, the stalls in the building are annually rented to the highest bidder at public auction, and all fees and rentals are the property of the market company. The city, as a municipality, receives no benefit therefrom, nor do its inhabitants, save in the way of incidental conveniences. And instead of being used for a public purpose exclusively, with all that the term implies, the erection of the market house, and the prosecution of the business there to be transacted, will, in all probability, prove very profitable to the corporation before the expiration of its franchise, while the city is benefited in no other way than it is at the present time. Clearly, the exemption clause in the constitution was never designed to cover such a case. If it was, the legislature could amend the present statute so as to exempt from taxation street-car, water, gas, and electric light companies, and a variety of private enterprises organized and operated for pecuniary gain, but owned by the public in the same general sense, serving the public, and devoted to or used for public purposes, quite as exclusively as is the property in question. We are sure that an amendment to the tax law through which such an exemption was attempted would at once be pronounced unconstitutional. No rule can be formulated by which to determine what is "public property used exclusively" for a "public purpose," within the meaning of the clause in section 8, article 9. But the language there used cannot be construed as authorizing the exemption from taxation of real property owned and leased by a private party, who receives and retains all revenues derived from such leasing, although, under a contract with the owners, the authorities of the municipality in which the property is situated have ordained that such property shall be a public market house or place, and it is thereafter exclusively used for such public purpose, the authorities regulating the business to the extent necessary for the public welfare. The statute (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 1513) which exempts "all public market houses" from taxation must be read and construed in connection with the fundamental law which authorized its passage. Our conclusion is that the court below correctly ordered the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus.

29 L. R. A.

Order affirmed.

Michael J. FARRELL, App't.

City of ST. PAUL, Resp't.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. In improving the street in front of plaintiff's lot, the city wrongfully graded down the street below the estab-

*Headnotes by CANTY, J.

NOTE.—The above case is believed to be a novel one on the subject of the conclusiveness of a judgment for an assessment against property as benefited by a local improvement.

graded, and wrongfully removed the lateral support of the lot, by reason of which plaintiff was damaged. The city made a special assessment against the lot, to pay for such improvement, and procured a tax judgment against the lot for the tax so levied. The plaintiff did not appear in such proceedings, or defend against the application for judgment. Held, this judgment is not against the plaintiff, but against the lot, in the proceeding in rem, and does not estop him, only so far as it affects his right to or ownership of the lot, since the same was seized in the proceedings in rem, and does not estop him from asserting that such improvement of the street prior to such seizure was tortious.

2. Whether such judgment would estop him if such wrongful improvement were made after such seizure.—quere.

(October 24, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by a change of grade in the street in front of plaintiff's property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. L. Pierce and W. L. Pierce, for appellant:

The owner of property damaged by tortious acts of defendant or its contractor, "arising out of matters or transactions within the general powers of the corporation," has his remedy by action, and is not estopped by failure to object to judgment in special proceedings to assess for benefits resulting from an improvement to the property damaged.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 971.

The facts fail to disclose any of the essentials of estoppel in pais.

Chaska Co. v. Career County Supra. 6 Minn. 204.

When the acts complained of are tortious, the plaintiff is not bound to "seek his remedy in the same proceeding by appeal or otherwise."

Oermann v. St. Paul, 39 Minn. 120.

A judgment is only conclusive of such matters as were necessarily passed upon.

Johnson v. Johnson (Minn.) 58 N. W. Rep. 824; Dixon v. Merritt, 21 Minn. 196; Washington, A. & G. Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 592, 18 L. ed. 558.

The power of the court to render judgment in this proceeding is purely statutory, and while, as held by this court, the judgment stands on the same footing as in ordinary cases after it appears the court has acquired jurisdiction, "with such distinctions as are created by statute" (Dousman v. St. Paul, 23 Minn. 394; Hennessey v. St. Paul, 54 Minn. 219), the distinction is important.

Ullman v. Lion, 8 Minn. 381, 38 Am. Dec. 783; Corson v. Shoemaker, 55 Minn. 386; Barber v. Morris, 37 Minn. 194; Morse v. Presby, 25 N. H. 299; 12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 276, note 2.

Unless the improvement is authorized, the board has no power to assess.

Mayall v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 294.

The authority of municipalities to impose burdens of any kind upon persons or property is wholly statutory, and as its exercise may 29 L. R. A.

result in a divestiture and transfer of property, it must be clearly given and strictly followed.

Sevall v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 511.

Messrs. E. J. Darragh and Robertson Howard, for respondent:

There is no attempt on the part of the appellant to show that there was any want of jurisdiction on the part of the court to render the judgment in the former suit, and therefore that judgment is an absolute bar to his action for the alleged trespass, for it is only when such proceedings are without jurisdiction that an injured party is not obliged to seek his remedy in those proceedings by appeal or otherwise.

Genois v. St. Paul, 35 Minn. 330; Overmann v. St. Paul, 39 Minn. 120.

The judgment could not be collaterally attacked by appellant, and was binding on him and his property.

Black, Judgm. § 261; Wellshear v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 351; Chestnut v. Marsh, 12 Ill. 173; Mayo v. Foley, 40 Cal. 283; Driggers v. Cassidy, 71 Ala. 529; Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 1; Chicago County v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 27 Minn. 109.

A default judgment stands on the same footing in such a case as any other judgment.

Wallace v. Brown, 23 Ark. 118, 76 Am. Dec. 421; State v. Sargent, 12 Mo. App. 238.

The rule is applied with the same force in the case of a judgment to enforce a special assessment as in the matter of a general tax.

Cadmus v. Jackson, 52 Pa. 295; Hennessey v. St. Paul, 54 Minn. 222; Dousman v. St. Paul, 23 Minn. 394.

The fact that the judgment in the assessment proceedings was a judgment in rem, and not in personam, does not affect the operation of such judgment as an estoppel.

Scott v. Shearman, 2 W. Bl. 971; Barton v. Anderson, 104 Ind. 581; O'Brien v. Moffitt, 133 Ind. 665; Gelston v. Hoyt, 13 Johns. 561; Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 444, 29 L. ed. 687; Whitney v. Walsh, 1 Cush. 29, 48 Am. Dec. 590; Buchanan v. Biggs, 2 Yeates, 232; Street v. Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. 12 Rich. L. 13, 75 Am. Dec. 714; Crowdson v. Leonard, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 434, 2 L. ed. 670; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co. 3 Sumn. 600; Bishop v. Travis, 51 Minn. 183; Thurston v. Thurston (Minn.) 59 N. W. Rep. 1017.

Canty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff is, and since 1891 has been, the owner of a certain city lot situated in St. Paul, and having a frontage of 40 feet on Wells street. In 1892 the city excavated and graded down the half of said street adjoining said lot, 5 feet below the legal and established grade, and erected a retaining wall in the middle of the street, leaving the other half of the street at the established grade, thereby giving the street a dual grade. In doing the grading the city removed the lateral support of plaintiff's lot where it abuts on the street. This action is brought to recover the damages to the lot caused by so removing the lateral support, and also the damages caused by grading down the street below the natural surface of the lot and the established grade of the street, thereby depriving the lot of means of access to the street. On the trial it was stipulated that the judge should determine all questions in the case except the amount of damages, which should be determined by the jury. The jury, by their special verdict, found that plaintiff was damaged by reason of the removal of the lateral support of the lot in the sum of $50, and by reason of the grading down of the street below the established grade in the sum of $225. Thereupon the judge filed his findings of fact and conclusions of law, in which he found for defendant, on the ground that a certain tax judgment entered against this lot, for the tax levied against it on a special assessment to pay for the grading in question, is a conclusive adjudication, so far as the lot and the plaintiff are concerned, that the grading was legally done, and that said judgment is a bar to this action, and estops the plaintiff from asserting that the grading in question was wrongful. From the judgment entered thereon in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals.

The tax judgment in question was entered in a proceeding in rem against the lot, commenced on published notice. Plaintiff was not personally served with notice,—no such service is required by the statute,—and he did not appear in the proceeding, or defend against the application for judgment. It is, perhaps, true, as stated by the learned judge of the court below, that if the work was illegal the city was not entitled to judgment, and if that defense had been made in that proceeding it would have prevailed. But the only consequence flowing from the failure to make such defense is that it has been conclusively adjudicated that the lot in question owes the city of St. Paul $143 for doing this grading, and certain costs, and that the lot is condemned to pay the same. This judgment is against the plaintiff only so far as it affects his right to, or ownership of, the lot since the seizure of the same in the tax proceedings, and does not estop him from asserting that, prior to such seizure, he was the owner of the lot, in full possession thereof, and entitled to all the rights and emoluments of such ownership. The court does not find any facts from which it appears that the lot was seized in the proceedings in rem before the trespass in question was committed. What the effect would be if it had so found, we will not now determine, as the point has not been argued. The burden was on the defendant to establish every fact necessary to sustain its defense of former adjudication, and, as far as appears by the record, it has failed to do so. Just how far a judgment in rem estops, in a collateral proceeding, the parties immediately interested and their privies, and how far it estops the whole world, are questions hard to determine from the books. Respondent has cited a number of cases in which it has been held that a judgment in rem in a court of admiralty, condemning the vessel for reasons appearing in the record, is conclusive against the owner, in a suit by him on the policy of insurance for the loss, that such reasons in fact existed, and if the facts thus established constitute a breach of the warranty of the owner to the insurer, the owner cannot recover. As applied to this class of cases, this is a well-established rule of law. Crouson v. Leonard, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 434, 2 L. ed. 670, and cases cited; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co. 3 Sumn. 600, Fed. Cas. No. 1,793; Street v. Augusta Ins. & Bkq. Co. 13 Rich. L. 18, 75 Am. Dec. 714; Baxter v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 277, 4 Am. Dec. 125. But, as establishing a general principle of law, applicable to all classes of cases, this rule cannot be upheld. As the whole world are parties to a proceeding in rem, it would amount to saying that, as to the facts necessarily passed upon and adjudged to exist by the judgment in rem, there arises an estoppel by verdict against every one in every collateral proceeding, and that every one in the world is conclusively estopped from disputing the existence of such facts. This would amount to saying that a judgment in rem has the same effect, in all collateral matters, all over the world, that an edict of the czar has in the Russian dominions,—a result that would be most appalling. But it is said that the cases which we have cited only go to the extent of holding that a judgment in rem has this effect as against a party directly interested, and in favor of a party collaterally interested. Let us analyze this proposition. Supposing that, in such a case as those already cited, A is interested directly in a proceeding in rem, and is also interested in a collateral matter involving the same facts, in which collateral matter B is also interested. Now, it is well settled that, in subsequent litigation between A and B, B is not bound by the judgment in the proceeding in rem, because he had no direct interest which entitled him to appear and defend in that proceeding. Therefore, the judgment in that proceeding cannot estop him. Then, how can it be held that, as between A and B, it estops A? Such estoppels must be mutual. Then, if the estoppel by verdict is not equally binding on every one in the world in all collateral matters, so as to make it mutual, these cases are unsound in principle. The only ground on which they can be sustained is that public policy has attached to the warranty of legality made by the insured to the insurer a further implied warranty that the insurer will defend, so that in fact his undertaking is both to warrant and defend; and this seems to be the opinion of the supreme court of Massachusetts, as expressed in Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 418, in which that court declined to apply the rule laid down in these cases as a general principle of law. It is true that, in the case at bar, both parties were directly interested in the proceeding in rem, and also in the collateral matter on which this action is brought. But why should this change the rule? A proceeding in rem assumes the whole world to be interested. It knows no particular party, unless he has appeared, when it may become, as to him, a proceeding also in personam. A judgment in rem does not concern itself about any particular party in interest who has not appeared. It treats the whole world alike, and is binding on the whole world alike. It seems to be more binding on the party directly interested, simply because his direct interest is bound. He may be more interested in the result, and have more to lose or gain by the judgment, than the rest of the world; but how does this add to the conclusiveness of the judgment, as against him, more than as against the rest of the world, who are as much parties to the proceeding as he is? The thing in which he is interested is in court, but he himself is no more in court than are all the rest of the world. Unless he appears and becomes a party to the proceeding, he is not a party in any such sense as a party in personam. But how can the estoppel as to the collateral matter or thing operate unless it operates through the person? The collateral matter or thing was not seized, and was not in court in the proceeding in rem. How, then, can it be affected by that proceeding? To hold so would be to hold that a proceeding in rem is, as to collateral matters, a proceeding in personam; aye, more than a proceeding in personam.

If the tax judgment here in question was entered by default, in an action strictly in personam, in which the city of St. Paul was plaintiff, and the plaintiff here was defendant, it would not estop him from asserting, in this action, that the improvement in question was tortious, and injured his lot. This is not the same cause of action as that in the tax proceeding, and the wrongful acts here set up were not set up or litigated as a defense in that action. Under these circumstances, this plaintiff is not estopped. See Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 73; State v. Cooley (Minn.) 60 N. W. Rep. 338; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 856, 24 L. ed. 199. The class of cases to which those first above cited belong are the only ones that we can find which sustain respondent's position. It is true that many of those cases lay down the doctrine, generally, that a judgment in rem is binding on the whole world in collateral matters, but the authorities cited in these cases do not bear this out. In fact, most of the authorities so cited are not cases of judgments in rem at all, but of judgments in personam, which for certain purposes are held conclusive upon the whole world. As to such cases, there is a distinction between doing an act and declaring that it has been done. There is a distinction between adjudging what now is and shall hereafter be, and adjudging what has heretofore been. In an action in rem, and also in an action in personam, when all the parties in interest are before the court, the act which the judgment in itself performs—the legal consequences of the judgment—is binding on the whole world, if for no other reason, for the simple reason that the act is, in fact, performed. Thus, if the court had jurisdiction, a judgment of divorce is conclusive on the whole world that the parties have ceased to be husband and wife, for the simple reason that, if the stranger to the judgment is not able to dispute the existence of a valid judgment, there is nothing left for him to dispute. But, supposing that the judgment also adjudges the prior existence or nonexistence of certain facts, there is no estoppel by verdict as to these facts, except as between the parties in personam and their privies. Thus, a valid judgment declaring a marriage absolutely void, and annulling it, is conclusive on the whole world that the parties have not since been husband and wife; but it is only conclusive on the parties and their privies that they never were husband and wife. As to the rest of the world, it has no other effect than that of a judgment of divorce. The following cases illustrate the doctrine that the act performed by the judgment itself is conclusive for and against the whole world. Frost v. St. Paul Bkq. & Inv. Co. (Minn.) 59 N. W. Rep. 308; Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 468. See also Greenl. Ev. § 538. The following cases illustrate the doctrine that the mere adjudication by the judgment of the existence or nonexistence of prior facts is conclusive only as between parties and privies. Gill v. Read, 5 R. I. 843, 78 Am. Dec. 78; Butterfield v. Smith, 101 U. S. 570, 25 L. ed. 868; Williams v. Williams, 63 Wis. 58, 58 Am. Rep. 258.

But there is another reason why the tax judgment does not, in this action, estop this plaintiff. In a proceeding in rem there is a wide distinction between things guilty or hostile, and things indebted. The libellant in the one case claims the jus in rem; in the other, the jus ad rem. "Decrees against things guilty and things hostile merely declare the status of such things. They do not forfeit anything, but simply declare or pronounce the forfeiture previously incurred. On the other hand, decrees against things indebted, are similar to a judgment for debt against a personal debtor." Waples, Proc. in Rem, § 3, subd. 10. "The object of the action against debtor property is to make the money that is owing by it. When that object is accomplished, any surplus of proceeds inures to the owner of the res proceeded against. He may stop the proceedings at any stage by paying the debt, while the owner of a thing guilty or hostile has not this privilege." Id. § 455. In a proceeding in rem against a thing guilty or hostile, it is held that the judgment relates back to the time of forfeiture, and divests the title to the thing seized (not to collateral things) from that time. But, in a proceeding in rem or quasi in rem, against a thing indebted, how can the judgment relate back beyond the time of seizure or attachment? The prior ownership of such property is divested, not merely by the judgment, but by the subsequent sale. In such a case, is anything sold that is not seized? It would seem not. Again, the question in such a case is usually, not the extent or character of the thing seized, but the existence, extent, and character of the indebtedness against it. But it is well settled that the determination of the existence, character, and amount of such indebtedness is res judicata only so far as it is satisfied by the condemnation and sale of the res. Bishop v. Travis, 51 Minn. 188; Thurston v. Thurston (Minn.) 59 N. W. Rep. 1017.

The tax judgment here in question was obtained against a thing indebted, and the adjudication of the existence, character, and amount of that debt in that proceeding, is an estoppel against all now claiming the thing seized, in so far as the indebtedness so adjudged was satisfied by the condemnation and sale of the thing seized; but we can give that adjudication no other or greater effect. We cannot hold that, in an action in which the title obtained to the thing seized and condemned is not involved, this adjudication now estops this plaintiff from disputing the existence, character, or amount of the indebtedness so adjudged in that proceeding to exist.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and, on the verdict and findings of fact, judgment is ordered for plaintiff pursuant to this opinion.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Joseph R. BICKERDIKE, Appt.,

Mary C. ALLEN et al., Exrs., etc., of Edwin C. Allen, Deceased.

(187 ILL. 95.)

1. A judgment of revival in scire facias to revive a judgment, based upon notice by mail as well as by publication, to a resident of the state, is prima facie valid in a collateral proceeding.
2. Mailing to a resident of a state, as well as publishing, a notice of a proceeding in scire facias to revive a judgment, as provided in 2 Starr & C. Stat., p. 1789, where his residence is stated in the affidavit, which shows that he has gone out of the state or is concealed within it so that process cannot be served on him, is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement of due process of law.
3. A certificate of the clerk that he has mailed a notice of scire facias addressed to the defendant, which, under Rev. Stat., chap. 22, § 12, is declared to be evidence, is prima facie evidence that the notice so sent by mail was received.
4. An answer under oath has no greater force as evidence than the bill, under Rev. Stat., chap. 22, § 20, where the bill waives the oath.
5. The satisfaction or discharge of a judgment may be shown as a defense against a creditors' bill to enforce the judgment after revival on scire facias, as well as to defeat the revival.
6. An affidavit in which the affiant "on oath states," but which the certificate of the notary merely states to have been "subscribed," without saying that it was sworn to before him, on which a scire facias to revive a judgment is based, is not so defective as to defeat the judgment of revival in a collateral proceeding, where this recites that it was made on due proof.
7. A recital in a judgment that due proof was made is at least prima facie evidence of that fact.
8. The objection that an affidavit for substituted service was in the disjunctive in stating that defendant was concealed within the state, or had gone out of the state so that process could not be served upon him, is not well taken where the material fact of the impossibility of finding his whereabouts is alleged.

(April 1, 1895.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in NOTE.—As to effect of constructive notice to give jurisdiction over residents or nonresidents, see note to Moyer v. Bucks (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 231.

39 L. R. A.

favor of plaintiffs in a creditors' bill to reach assets belonging to defendant in satisfaction of a judgment which had been revived against him upon scire facias. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Swift, Campbell, Jones & Martin, for appellant:

Section 27 of chapter 110, Starr & C. Statutes, is unconstitutional.

The procedure pointed out by the above section does not constitute due process of law within the meaning either of the constitution of this state or the Constitution of the United States.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Webster v. Reid, 52 U. S. 11 How. 437, 13 L. ed. 761.

The court acquired no jurisdiction of the person of appellant in the suit to revive the judgment, for the following reasons:

(a). The affidavit upon which the publication notice was based is void because it was not sworn to.

McDermid v. Russell, 41 Ill. 499.

(b). Assuming for the argument that Barbour's affidavit was sworn to, still it does not set up any state of facts which authorized service by publication on appellant.

(c). The affidavit of Barbour was void because in the alternative.

Ranaldson v. Hamilton, 5 La. Ann. 203; Kegel v. Schrenkheisen, 37 Mich. 174; Dintruff v. Tuthill, 62 Hun, 591; Dickenson v. Conoley, 15 Kan. 269.

(d). The notice itself was fatally defective. Haywood v. Collins, 60 Ill. 384.

Messrs. Sleeper, Barbour & Emrich, for appellees:

The facts stated in the affidavit, the efforts made to ascertain the whereabouts of Bickerdike, and the results of these efforts, tend to prove that he was either out of the state, or that he was concealed within the state.

North v. McDonald, 1 Biss. 57; Hartung v. Hartung, 8 Ill. App. 156.

If there had been no jurat at all attached to the affidavit, but the name of the notary, with his seal, had appeared there, the affidavit itself shows that it was upon oath.

King v. Emden, 9 East, 437; Cook v. Jenkins, 30 Iowa, 452.

This was not the commencement of a new or original suit, but a continuation of one already begun, proceeded in to the stage of entering up judgment, but not executed, the execution of which remained to be done in and by the superior court of Cook county, and no other court.

Wright v. Nutt, 1 T. R. 386; People v. Con- pher, 14 Ill. 447; Challenor v. Niles, 78 Ill. 78; Smith v. Stevens, 183 Ill. 191.

The writ of scire facias is a common-law writ, issued upon a record, and might have been sued out without any provision of statute whatever, and the court would have had authority to order execution to issue upon the judgment for its execution.

3 Tidd, Pr. 1107.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a creditors' bill, filed on December 17, 1891, in the superior court of Cook county by the appellees as executors of the estate of Edwin C. Allen, deceased, against appellant and others, based upon a judgment recovered by said testator, in his lifetime, on November 20, 1873, against appellant and one Pratt, and claimed to have been revived by judgment of revival entered on December 9, 1891, upon which execution was issued and returned unsatisfied after demand made. Amendments were filed to the original bill, and afterwards a supplemental bill was filed. Answers were filed by the appellant and other defendants alleged to have in their hands stock belonging to appellant. A receiver was appointed by agreement of parties, with directions to sell the stock and hold the proceeds to abide the final disposition of the case. The answer of the appellant here to the creditors' bill below set up, among other things, that in the scire facias proceeding to revive the judgment the revival judgment was void because the court obtained no jurisdiction over the appellant by personal service or entry of appearance; and that section 26 of the Practice Act (Rev. Stat. 1893, chap. 110, par. 27; 2 Starr & C. Stat. p. 1789, par. 27) was unconstitutional as being in conflict with section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution of Illinois, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," and also as being in conflict with section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Appellant's answer to the bill admits that the judgment was recovered against himself and Pratt on November 20, 1873, as alleged in the bill, and that on October 1, 1891, appellees instituted proceedings by scire facias in said superior court to revive said judgment, and that execution was issued upon the judgment as revived, and returned nulla bona. The answer also sets out in full all the proceedings in the suit to revive, from the præcipe for a scire facias to the judgment of revival. Upon the hearing, appellees introduced in evidence the said proceedings as set out in the answer. The appellant introduced no evidence whatever, but at the close of the evidence introduced by appellees made a motion to dismiss the bill, upon the alleged grounds that the court had no power to enter a judgment of revival for want of jurisdiction over appellant, and that the said section 26 was unconstitutional, as aforesaid; and also because of certain alleged defects in the affidavit for publication and the publication notice in the scire facias proceeding. This motion was overruled, but no exception is shown 29 L. R. A.

by the bill of exceptions to have been taken to the order overruling it. The court below rendered a decree finding that the original judgment remained due and unpaid; that it had been duly and regularly revived; that the proceedings of scire facias to revive it were valid and legal; and directed that there should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of said stock the original judgment and interest from the date of its rendition, and the costs accrued both in the original proceeding and in the scire facias proceeding. From this decree the present appeal is prosecuted.

First, as to the alleged unconstitutionality of section 26. That section is as follows: "It shall not be necessary to file a declaration in any scire facias to revive a judgment, or foreclose a mortgage, in any court of record in this state. And in such case of scire facias to revive a judgment, where the plaintiff in the judgment sought to be revived, or his attorney, shall file an affidavit in the office of the clerk of the court out of which the writ issues, showing that the defendant in the scire facias resides or has gone out of the state, or is concealed within the state, so that process cannot be served on him, and stating the place of residence of such defendant, if known, or that on due inquiry his place of residence cannot be ascertained; then, in such case, notice to the defendant may be given by publication and mail in the same manner as is provided by statute for notice in like cases in chancery." 2 Starr & C. Stat. p. 1789, par. 27; Rev. Stat. 1893, chap. 110, par. 27, § 26. The provision for notice in cases in chancery, so far as applicable, is as follows: "The clerk shall cause publication to be made in some newspaper printed in his county . . . containing notice of the pendency of such suit, the names of the parties thereto, the title of the court, and the time and place of the return of summons in the case; and he shall also, within ten days of the first publication of such notice, send a copy thereof by mail, addressed to such defendant whose place of residence is stated in such affidavit. The certificate of the clerk, that he has sent such notice in pursuance of this section, shall be evidence." Rev. Stat. chap. 22, par. 12, § 12. Where the defendant is a nonresident of the state of Illinois, and the proceeding is not in rem, but in personam, the publication of notice and the mailing of a copy thereof to an address outside of the state, without personal service or appearance, would not give to a court in this state such jurisdiction over the person of the defendant as to make a judgment in personam against him valid and impervious to collateral attack, except in cases affecting the personal or civil status and capacities of the citizen of the state towards a nonresident,—as, for instance, in reference to the dissolution of the marriage relation,—and, except in cases where another mode of service than that of personal service may be regarded as having been assented to in advance,—as, for instance, the appointment of agents in the state to receive service,—and requirements as to service upon corporations created by the state. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565. A proceeding in rem is not merely a direct proceeding against property, but any action between the parties where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them or of some interest therein. For example, suits by attachment against the property of debtors, suits for the partition of land, to foreclose mortgages, to enforce liens or contracts respecting property, may be regarded as proceedings in rem so far as they affect property in the state. Pennoyer v. Neff, supra. In such proceedings in rem, where the object is to reach and dispose of property within the state, or some interest therein, service by publication, or in some mode other than upon the person, may be sufficient. The theory of the law is that when a man's property is brought under the control of the court by seizure, such seizure informs and notifies him of the proceedings taken for its sale or condemnation. In such cases, constructive notice is permitted and becomes effectual solely by reason of the attachment or seizure of the property. The jurisdiction of the court to determine the obligations of the defendant constructively notified is incidental to its jurisdiction over the property. The judgment has no effect beyond the property reached or affected in that suit. "Jurisdiction is acquired in one of two modes: First, as against the person of the defendant by the service of process; or, secondly, by a procedure against the property of the defendant within the jurisdiction of the court." Borwell v. Otis, 50 U. S. 9 How. 336, 18 L. ed. 164. "But," says Mr. Justice Field, in Pennoyer v. Neff, supra, "where the entire object of the action is to determine the personal rights and obligations of the defendants,—that is, where the suit is merely in personam,—constructive service in this form upon a nonresident is ineffectual for any purpose. Process from the tribunals of one state cannot run into another state, and summon parties there domiciled to leave its territory and respond to proceedings against them. Publication of process or notice within the state where the tribunal sits cannot create any greater obligation upon the nonresident to appear. Process sent to him out of the state, and process published within it, are equally unavailing in proceedings to establish his personal liability." See also Webster v. Reid, 52 U. S. 11 How. 487, 18 L. ed. 761.

So far as section 36 applies to defendants residing out of the state, we do not see how it can be upheld as a valid law, in view of the principles hereinbefore announced. That is to say, where the proceeding by scire facias is instituted to revive a judgment rendered against a nonresident, the judgment of revival cannot be regarded as valid, if such nonresident has not been personally served or has not entered his appearance, but has only been served by publication and the mailing of a notice to him to his residence outside of the state. The scire facias proceeding to revive a judgment is not a proceeding in rem,—certainly not where the original judgment sought to be revived is a judgment in personam. Although the nonresident may receive the notice mailed to his residence out of the state, he is not bound to appear, because "no state can exercise direct jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory." Pennoyer v. Neff, supra. We held in Cloyd v. Trotter, 118 Ill. 391, that service out of the state by copy of the bill and notice in a chancery case, so far as property in this state was sought to be affected, would give the court jurisdiction to decree concerning it, but not to render a personal decree against the defendant for the recovery of money or costs, and to award a general execution against him for the collection of the same. If the statute provided for bringing in a resident of the state by publication of the notice only, without the mailing of any notice to him, the same objection might lie as in case of a nonresident. A judgment in personam in the court of a state against one of the citizens who is not served with process, but is served by publication only, cannot be valid, except in cases coming within the exceptions already indicated. In Webster v. Reid, supra, it was said: "These suits were not proceedings in rem against the land, but were in personam against the owners of it. Whether they all resided within the territory or not does not appear, nor is it a matter of any importance. No person is required to answer in a suit on whom process has not been served, or whose property has not been attached." So, in Pennoyer v. Neff, supra, it was said that such judgments were not binding in the state where rendered, any more than they were outside of such state, and that since the passage of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution their enforcement in the state could be resisted "on the ground that proceedings in a court of justice to determine the personal rights and obligations of parties over whom that court has no jurisdiction do not constitute due process of law." But this statute does something more than require the publication of the notice. It requires a copy of the notice to be sent by mail, addressed to the defendant whose place of residence is stated in the affidavit. Suppose that a defendant resides in this state, and has a known residence here, but conceals himself so that process cannot be served upon him, and that the notice specified in the statute is sent to him by mail. If he receives the notice so sent, he has received personal notice just as much as though a summons was served upon him by the sheriff. The certificate of the clerk is made proof of the mailing of the notice. "Proof of the mailing of notices, properly addressed, is prima facie evidence of their having been received by the party addressed." Meyer v. Krohn, 114 Ill. 574; Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176, and 198. When, therefore, in any collateral proceeding, a judgment of revival based upon notice given through the mail as well as by publication to a resident of the state is relied upon, it is prima facie valid. In such case the judgment cannot be said to have been rendered without jurisdiction over the defendant. The proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is not a new suit, but merely the continuation of the old one. It does not determine the obligations of the defendant to the plaintiff as involved in the original controversy and as settled by the former judgment, but merely seeks a revival of the former judgment in order to have execution of it. The defendant cannot show any matter which was pleaded or might have been pleaded in the former action. The only defenses which can be set up in the scire facias proceeding are that no judgment was rendered, or, if one was rendered, that it has been satisfied or discharged. 21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 855, 864; Smith v. Stevens, 133 Ill. 188. Hence we are inclined to think that section 26, taken in connection with section 12 of the Chancery Act, is a constitutional enactment so far as it provides for service by publication of notice and mailing of copy thereof to residents of the state whose residence is stated in the affidavit.

In the case at bar the appellant admitted in his answer that the copy of the notice required by the statute was mailed to him. He sets forth therein in hac verba the certificate of the clerk filed in the scire facias proceeding, in which that official certifies that on October 10, A. D. 1891, he sent by mail a notice (of which a copy is thereto attached) addressed to "Joseph R. Bickerdike, Elston Road, near Belmont Ave., Chicago, Ill." This certificate was prima facie evidence that the notice so sent by mail was received by appellant. If it be permissible to introduce evidence in the collateral proceeding to show that the copy of the notice sent by mail was not received, it is sufficient to say that, in this proceeding by creditors' bill, no evidence was introduced to overcome the prima facie case made by the clerk's certificate. It is true that, in his answer to the creditors' bill, appellant states that the notice was not received by him, but the bill waives the answer under oath; and therefore, under the statute, the answer has no greater force as evidence than the bill. Rev. Stat. chap. 22, par. 20, § 20. Where the oath is thus waived, the fact that the answer is sworn to gives it no force as evidence, but it will be deemed as merely a pleading. Wallwork v. Derby, 40 Ill. 527; Willenborg v. Murphy, 36 Ill. 844; Moore v. Hunter, 6 Ill. 817. As to the only defenses which appellant could have made in the scire facias proceeding, namely the nonexistence of the judgment, or its satisfaction or discharge, it may be said that, in his answer in the case at bar, appellant admits the existence of the original judgment, and he neither pleads nor attempts to prove any satisfaction or discharge. If the judgment had been satisfied or discharged, such fact could have been shown as a defense against the enforcement of the revived judgment by creditors' bill. It follows that, so far as the justice of the matter is concerned, appellant has been deprived by the filing of this creditors' bill of no defense which he was entitled to make in the scire facias proceeding.

Second, it is claimed that, even if section 26 is a valid enactment, the publication and mailing of the notice are not authorized without the filing of the affidavit mentioned in the section, and that the affidavit in this case was so defective as not to warrant the publication and mailing of the notice.

The affidavit which was filed in the scire facias facias proceeding on October 9, 1891, is as follows:

"STATE OF ILLINOIS, } ss. In Superior Court,
County of Cook } Oct. Term, 1891.

"Mary C. Allen and Edwin C. Allen, Jr., Executors of the Estate of Edward C. Allen, Deceased, } 185,499.

v.
"Joseph R. Bickerdike and Zacharias I. Pratt.

"James J. Barbour, attorney for above-named plaintiffs, on oath states that Joseph R. Bickerdike, one of the above-named defendants, resides in the city of Chicago, in this state, and that he is concealed within this state or has gone out of this state, so that process cannot be served upon him. Affiant further states that he has made inquiries at the residence of said defendant as to his whereabouts, and the replies received from said defendant's wife were to the effect that he was away, and she could not tell when he would be home; and when asked where said defendant was, she refused to state, and to every question put by this affiant she would make an evasive answer. Affiant further states that his inquiries of the person in charge of said defendant's office in the city of Chicago, in this state, failed to bring any information, further than that Mr. Bickerdike was away and did not wish to have it known where he was. Affiant further states that said defendant's neighbors stated to this affiant that said defendant would conceal himself to avoid service should suit be brought against him, and affiant is utterly unable to find said Bickerdike.

"JAMES J. BARBOUR.

"Subscribed before me this 6th day of October, 1891.

"[SEAL.] JOHN M. MEYER, Notary Public."

It is said that the affidavit is void because the notary whose certificate is attached does not state that it was sworn to before him, but only states that it was subscribed before him. The case of McDermid v. Russell, 41 Ill. 489, is referred to in support of the objection. In that case, where the widow of the deceased husband, who had died intestate and childless, filed a bill to have her interest as statutory heir in her husband's estate set off to her, and sought to bring in by publication certain minor heirs at law of her husband, it is said: "The affidavit of non-residence does not appear to have been sworn to before any officer. For that omission it was no affidavit, and gave no authority to the court to enter an order of publication." The affidavit is not set forth; and how the fact that it was not sworn to appeared is not stated. That, however, was a case where the decree, which was against infants, was brought up for review in a direct proceeding. Here, the attack upon the judgment of revival is made in a collateral proceeding, and it appears that the affiant, whose name is signed to the affidavit, avers therein that what he states, he states "on oath;" and the name of the notary public with his seal appears below the notarial certificate attached to the affidavit; and the judgment of revival entered on December 9, 1891, recites upon its face that there was presented to the court

"due proof of publication of the notice to the defendants." The clerk is directed by the statute to cause publication of the notice to be made, and to mail a copy thereof, where the plaintiff or his attorney files an affidavit. The presumption is that the clerk did his duty, and that he would not have caused publication to be made and notice to be mailed unless such an affidavit as the statute requires was first filed. Here, an affidavit made by plaintiff's attorney was filed in the clerk's office, and it will be presumed that the affidavit was sworn to, or that the statements alleged upon its face to have been made on oath were made on oath. Non constat that the clerk himself did not administer the oath before causing the publication to be made. The recital in the judgment that "due proof" was made is at least prima facie evidence of that fact, and it will be presumed that such proof was made to the satisfaction of the court. Pierces v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 54 Am. Dec. 405; King v. Emden, 9 East, 487; Barnett v. Wolf, 70 Ill. 76; Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 807. In Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233, the action was ejectment, and the defendant relied upon a sheriff's deed made in pursuance of a sale under a judgment in an attachment proceeding. The record showed that the jurat attached to the affidavit for the attachment writ was not signed by any officer, and had no signature at all; and it was held that the affidavit was sufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ, and could not be assailed in the ejectment suit. In that case, the clerk recited in the attachment writ that the plaintiff had complained on oath to him; and we said: "It is not to be presumed the clerk has made a false statement in the writ, or that he would have issued the writ without the oath." It is true that here the clerk makes no such recital as that made in the attachment writ in that case. But the presumption that he did his duty is as strong, from the fact that he signed and published the notice and mailed a copy of it, as it would have been had he made a recital that an affidavit had been sworn to and filed in his office. Cook v. Jenkins, 80 Iowa, 452.

A further objection is made to the affidavit upon the ground that it is in the disjunctive, and cases are referred to where affidavits in attachment proceedings which state two or more statutory causes or grounds of attachment in the disjunctive are held to be defective. We do not think that those cases are applicable here. The material fact was that appellant, being a resident of the state, could not be found in it, so that process could be served on him; and it could not be certainly known, as the facts set up in the affidavit show, whether the impossibility of finding his whereabouts was due to his concealment within the state or to his departure from it. The fact that he could not be found might be due either to his having gone out of the state or to his concealment within it; but the result of either circumstance was the same, namely, ignorance of his whereabouts, making it impossible to serve him with process. The alternative causes are linked by a common and necessary consequence. We think that the notice conforms to the requirements of the statute, as above set forth.

The judgment of the Superior Court of Cook County is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied October 15, 1895.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky, Appt.,
v.

Ebenezer PETTY.

(.....Ky.....)

A state statute requiring a license for the sale of patent rights is in violation of the rights of the patentee under federal law.

(January 22, 1895.)

A PPEAL by the Commonwealth from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Christian County in favor of defendant in a prosecution against him for selling without a license the right to use a certain patent right. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Hendrick, Atty-Gen., for appellant:

The appellee was indicted for unlawfully peddling without a license.

NOTE.—Power of state to restrict and regulate the sale or enjoyment of patent rights.

- I. As to sales.
 - a. Sales of patent rights.
 - b. Sales of patented articles.
- II. Police regulations of other business in which patents are used.
- III. Restricting right of action for infringement.
- IV. Taxation of patent rights.

I. As to sales.

a. Sales of patent rights.

The above case is somewhat different from any others in which the rights of patentees under state laws have been decided, and the decision seems clearly correct by analogy to decisions which have established the unconstitutionality of license fees charged upon interstate commerce. The statute condemned by the court in the present 29 L. R. A.

case made it unlawful to sell a patent right or territory for the sale, use, or manufacture of patent rights without procuring and paying for a license for such business. In other states the statutes which have been passed upon have been of two classes, although some statutes combined both: First, those which required certain conditions precedent to the sale of patent rights to be complied with, consisting, in substance, of the placing on file with the clerk of any county in which a sale was to be made of a copy of the letters patent, and obtaining a certificate of the right to sell; second, those which required the words "given for a patent right" to appear on the face of any instrument given for such a consideration. The Kentucky statute involved in the present case of COM. v. PETTY seems to go somewhat further by imposing the burden of license fee upon the owner of a patent as a condition of his right to sell it.

Vendors for patent rights or territories for the sale, use, or manufacture of patent rights, goods, wares, etc., are included in the definition of peddler.

Rash v. Farley, 91 Ky. 844; Rash v. Holloway, 83 Ky. 874; Com. v. Jones, 7 Bush, 502; Brown v. Young, 3 B. Mon. 26; Spadone v. Reed, 7 Bush, 455; Bull v. Harragan, 17 B. Mon. 349.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The grand jury of Christian county returned an indictment against the appellee, Ebenezer Petty, charging that he did unlawfully sell and offer for sale the patent right to make and use a certain machine or contrivance called a post and pile driver, and did sell territory for the use, sale, and manufacture of the post and pile driver without first having obtained a license as required by law, and that at the time he was an itinerant person selling and offering to sell the patent right and territory as stated. This indictment is under the statute which imposes a penalty on all itinerant persons who vend patent rights or territory for the sale, use, or manufacture of patent rights, without procuring and paying for a license authorizing such sale. The law fixes the fee for the li-

First, as to the decisions holding the statutes unconstitutional.

A state statute regulating the sale of patent rights was held void in Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, where the statute attempted to make it unlawful for any one to sell any patent right without first filing with the clerk of the county copies of his letters patent with an affidavit to their genuineness; and his authority to make the sale, also setting forth his name, age, occupation and residence. The circuit court said: "If the patentee complies with the law of congress on the subject, he has a right to go into the open market anywhere within the United States and sell his property."

The law in question attempts to punish by fine and imprisonment a patentee, for doing with his property what the national legislature has authorized him to do, and is, therefore, void." In this case it will be noticed that the statute applied to a sale of patent rights generally, and was not an exercise of the police power with respect to any particular article or thing.

In Illinois a statute making it unlawful to sell or barter a patent right without first making the affidavit and proof required by the statute, and also requiring the words "given for a patent right" to appear in the note, and making the note subject to the same defenses after transfer as before, is held unconstitutional in Hollida v. Hunt, 70 Ill. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 63, since the statute is exclusively restricted to notes given in whole or in part for a patent right, and deprives them of one of the important attributes of negotiability.

A similar decision was rendered in Minnesota, in Crittenden v. White, 23 Minn. 24, 23 Am. Rep. 676, in respect to a statute requiring the compliance with certain conditions before a person can lawfully sell a patent right within the state. This decision was based on Ex parte Robinson, supra.

So the Nebraska Act of February 18, 1873, making it a misdemeanor for any person to sell or barter any patent right until after he has submitted the letters patent, or a copy thereof, and his authority to sell the patent right, to the county judge for examination, and made affidavit as to his name, age, place of residence, and former occupation, was held unconstitutional. Wilch v. Phelps, 14 Neb. 134. The court distinguishes the case from those relating to regulations of sales of manufactured patented articles.

It was also decided in an opinion by Swayne, J., in Woolen v. Banker, 2 Flipp. 33, that the Ohio statute requiring the words "given for a patent right" to be written or printed on the face of any note the consideration for which consisted in whole or in part of the right to make, use, or vend any patent, was unconstitutional.

Such a statute is also declared unconstitutional in Castle v. Hutchinson, 26 Fed. Rep. 394, distinguishing Patterson v. Kentucky, 37 U. S. 501, 24 L.

ed. 1115, as a case relating to tangible property rather than the right in letters patent.

So the Michigan statute requiring notes or other obligations given for patent rights to have the words "given for a patent right" on the face of the instrument is held unconstitutional in Cranston v. Smith, 37 Mich. 300, 26 Am. Rep. 514, on the ground that it imposes conditions on the transfer of patent rights, which are not applied to the transfer of any other property, thereby interfering with the value and enjoyment of such rights, and treating them as a species of interests to be regarded with disfavor.

In reversing an erroneous conviction in State v. Lockwood, 43 Wis. 403, under a statute making it a misdemeanor to take a note or other written obligation, any part of the consideration of which is a patent right, without inserting in it the words "given for a patent right," the court said if the validity of the statute were properly before it, it would be much disposed to follow the ruling of the supreme court of Michigan in Cranston v. Smith, 3 Cent. L. J. 389, and hold the statute to be an invasion of federal authority and therefore void; citing also Woolen v. Banker, 17 Alb. L. J. 72.

The Indiana statute requiring a patent-right note to have on its face the words "given for a patent right" was also held unconstitutional in Helm v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Ind. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 386, but this case is overruled by later cases in the same state. See infra.

But much the larger number of decisions have upheld such statutes.

The validity of the Indiana statute making it unlawful to sell or barter a patent right without first filing with the clerk of the county copies of the letters patent duly authenticated, with an affidavit that they are genuine and have not been revoked or annulled, and that the person selling has full authority to do so, setting forth also his name, age, occupation, and residence, is expressly affirmed in Reeves v. Corning, 51 Fed. Rep. 774, in which the court says that Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, is overruled by Patterson v. Kentucky, 37 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115, and cites the earlier Indiana cases, which deny the constitutionality of the statute, as overruled by the later cases in the same state. The court also distinguishes Castle v. Hutchinson, 23 Fed. Rep. 394, which denied the constitutionality of a statute making it a criminal offense for the seller of a patent to take a note without the words "given for a patent right" on its face, as this statute discriminated between notes given for patent rights and those given for other considerations.

So, the validity of the Indiana statute requiring persons who sell patent rights to file a copy of the letters patent and an affidavit that the letters are genuine, and that authority to sell exists, is sustained in Brechtall v. Randall, 102 Ind. 623, 32 Am. Rep. 696, declaring that Grover & B. Sewing Mach.

cense that shall be paid. The appeal is taken from a judgment of the court below sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing the indictment.

The sole question is as to the validity of the statute which requires a patentee or his vendee or assignee to first procure and pay for a license before he is authorized to vend his patent right or territory for the sale, use, or manufacture of his patent rights. This statute in effect declares unlawful the sale of any patent right, or the sale of any part of the territory which is covered by such patent right, to any one, unless the vendor first procure from the officials, as provided in the statute, a license authorizing the sale. The 8th clause of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States confers authority upon congress "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." The power thus given to congress has been exercised by it since the organization of the government. Statutes have been enacted relating to the subject, and the provisions thereof fully prescribe the circumstances and the manner of the issue of patents, how they may be transferred, and the character and extent of the rights which they confer on the patentee or his vendee or assignees. The moment the patent is granted, Co. v. Butler, 58 Ind. 454, 21 Am. Rep. 200, is overruled by Toledo Agri. Works v. Work, 70 Ind. 253, and Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 30 Am. Rep. 238.

The constitutionality of the Indiana statute in its entirety is also affirmed in New v. Walker, 108 Ind. 865, which regards the decision of Ex parte Robinson, 2 Bliss 309, as overruled, and says all other decisions against the constitutionality of such statutes were based on that decision.

The validity of the Indiana statute is also sustained in Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 503, in which a patent right had been sold without complying with the statutory requirements.

The Indiana statute is also assumed to be valid in Mayfield v. Sears, 133 Ind. 86, where the question involved was as to the sufficiency of the compliance with the statute.

The protection of the citizens from fraud and imposition as an exercise of the police power is the purpose of the Indiana statute as interpreted by Reeves v. Corning, 51 Fed. Rep. 774, and the statute is said to afford protection while it imposes no unjust burden on honest dealers, and to deprive the owner of a patent of no right or immunity justly his own, or discriminate against the owners of patent rights.

The validity of a statute making it a misdemeanor to take, sell, or transfer a negotiable instrument given for a patent right, knowing that fact, unless it has on its face the words "given for a patent right," is sustained in Herdick v. Boeseler, 108 N. Y. 127, affirming 39 Hun, 198, on the ground that it in no way interferes with the exclusive right of the patentee, and did not make the note illegal, although the statutory words were omitted, or defeat the rights of a bona fide holder.

A statute permitting all defenses against any assignee, indorser, holder, or purchaser of a note, draft, or bill of exchange given for a patent right which could have been made between the original parties, is held in Tilson v. Gatling, 60 Ark. 114, to be valid, and not to violate the provisions of the United States Constitution giving congress power to secure to inventors exclusive rights in their discoveries.

The court argues in Tod v. Wick Bros., 36 Ohio St. 870, that if the act of congress of its own force secured to the owner of a patent right the right to receive negotiable paper on the sale of his patent, accompanied by such incidents or immunities as would protect it in the hands of an innocent holder against prior equities or defenses, it would seem to require a uniform operation throughout the United States, and would defeat the law of some states in which a transfer of paper which is negotiable in form does not cut off any defenses existing against the payee. That is to say, any variation in the laws of the several states respecting the transfer of negotiable paper and its effect would be impossible so far as applied to notes given for patent rights. The exclusive right of a patentee to make, use, and vend his discovery is declared in Tod v. Wick Bros. to be property in no higher sense, and to possess no greater incidents and immunities, than property acquired by purchase at common law. And it is said that the legislature has as complete power to withdraw from negotiable paper that quality which protects an indorsee against defenses when the note is given for an interest in a patented invention as when given for any other kind of property.

A statute which should make absolutely void all notes given for patent rights, unless the words "given for a patent right" prominently appeared on the face of the instrument, would interfere with the right of a patentee secured to him by the acts of congress to sell and assign his patent, says the court by Mr. Justice Sharswood in Hamell v. Jones, 86 Pa. 173. Such a statute he declares would be unconstitutional and void. But the Pennsylvania statute is held not to have this effect, but merely to subject patent-right notes with such words therein to the original defenses after their transfer or assignment as well as before, and the sole object of the legislature is declared to be to secure, so far as could be done consistently with the rights of innocent third persons, that notice of the consideration should be given to all who should take the paper; and it is held accordingly that the rights of bona fide holders are not prejudiced by the omission of the statutory words from such an instrument. The court says: "This very plainly distinguishes our act from the statutes of other states which have been held unconstitutional."

The constitutionality of the Pennsylvania statute requiring the words "given for a patent right" to appear on the face of every note given in whole or in part for a patent right, and that the note shall be subject to the same defenses in the hands of a purchaser as in the hands of the original holder, was again sustained in Shires v. Com., 120 Pa. 368, which was the case of a conviction under an indictment for taking a note in violation of the statute.

The sale of a right to use, and to manufacture for sale and use, the patented article, is a sale of the patent right itself, within the meaning of such a statute. New v. Walker, 108 Ind. 865.

The validity of statutes requiring the words "given for a patent right" in instruments given therefor is also assumed, if not expressly declared, in the following cases construing such statutes and instruments:

That the Pennsylvania act does not apply to non-negotiable notes is decided in Gray v. Mortimer, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 671.

The same is decided as to the Ohio statute, in State v. Brower, 30 Ohio St. 101.

Although the Indiana statute was applied to a non-negotiable note in Robertson v. Cooper, 1 Ind. App. 73.

It is held that a statute making it a misdemeanor the rights of the patentee are complete. Even his property rights cannot be destroyed or impaired by congress subsequently repealing the law which authorized the granting of it. McClurg v. Kingsland, 42 U. S. 1 How. 206, 11 L. ed. 103. A patent right is not a tangible property. It is an incorporeal right. The patent secures to the patentee the exclusive right in the discovery. The Supreme Court, in the case of Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115, said: "The right of property in the physical substance, which is the fruit of the discovery, is altogether distinct from the right in the discovery itself, just as the property in the instruments or the plate by which copies of a map are multiplied is distinct from the copy-right, as the map itself. Stephens v. Cady, 55 U. S. 14 How. 528, 14 L. ed. 528; Stevens v. Gladding, 58 U. S. 17 How. 447, 15 L. ed. 155." The incorporeal right, or the right in the discovery, congress has full and complete authority to secure to the inventor, and protect him in its enjoyment and against all interference. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Webster v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565, said: "It is only the right to the invention or discovery—the incorporeal right—which the state cannot interfere with." It is proper that this authority should be exercised, that the efforts of genius may be re-to take a note for a patent right without the words "given for a patent right" contained on its face makes such note void in the hands of a person who takes it in violation of the statute. Bowen v. Kemmerer, 2 Pearson, 250; Weaver v. Frank, 1 Pennyp. 158; Hunter v. Henninger, 93 Pa. 373.

But the bona fide holder of such note given, which omits the words required by statute, is entitled to enforce the note. Knis v. Holbrook (Ind.) 41 N. E. Rep. 1118; New v. Walker, 108 Ind. 365; Teecher v. Merce, 118 Ind. 593; Pendar v. Kelley, 48 Vt. 27; Streit v. Waugh, 48 Vt. 298; Kraft v. Gingrich, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 393; Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 21 N. Y. S. R. 622 (Feb. 7, 1899); Vosburgh v. Diefendorf, 16 N. Y. S. R. 493 (May, 1898); Herdic v. Roessler, 109 N. Y. 127, affirming 39 Hun, 198; Moses v. Comstock, 4 Neb. 515.

The holder of such a note without the words required by statute therein has the burden of proving that he was a bona fide holder without notice. Horstman v. Zimmerman (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 242; Knis v. Holbrook, supra.

Knowledge of the purchaser of a note that it was given for a patent right puts him on inquiry as to whether or not the conditions of the statute as to such notes have been complied with. New v. Walker, 108 Ind. 365; Johnson v. Martin, 19 Ont. App. 562; Tod v. Wick Bros. 36 Ohio St. 370.

But not if the note was made in another state and the purchaser does not know of such statute in the other state. Palmer v. Minar, 8 Hun, 342.

Negotiable paper given for patented machines, or to secure an agency to sell patented machines in a certain specified territory, is held, in State v. Peck, 25 Ohio St. 23, to be unaffected by the statute respecting notes given for "patent rights."

And notes given for articles manufactured under a patent are not within the provisions of the Indiana statute requiring compliance with specified conditions in case of notes taken for patent rights. Hankey v. Downey, 116 Ind. 113, 1 L. R. A. 447.

The Tennessee statute allowing all defenses against an indorsee of a note given for a patent right is held in Harmon v. Hagerty, 88 Tenn. 705, to apply only to notes which disclose on their face that they were given for an interest in a patent right, but nothing is said in the case about the validity of such a statute.

In Delong v. Barnes, 45 Ohio St. 237, without any question as to the validity of the statute, it was held that where a note for a patent right was given containing such words, and immediately surrendered at a discount for another note without those words, the latter also was a patent-right note within the statute.

So, a transfer of an interest in a patent by one partner to another, to induce the latter to join in firm notes for an individual debt of the former, does not bring such notes within the scope of the Bills of Exchange Act 1890, 53 Vict. chap. 83 (D), requiring patent-right notes to have on their face the words "given for a patent right." Samuel v. Fairgrieve, 21 Ont. App. 418.

In First Nat. Bank v. Stockell, 32 Tenn. 232, 30 L. R. A. 503, it was held that the purchaser of a note was not chargeable with knowledge that it was given for a patent right by the letters "C. I. P." standing unexplained on its face, although they were in fact intended to show that it was given for an interest in the "Chapin iron process."

With the above case is a note on the validity of notes given for patent rights. A portion of that note covers some of the ground of this note, but it is thought best to make the present note complete on the subject here treated.

It will be seen from the above cases that a considerable majority of the decisions, and about one half of the courts, sustain the validity of the statutes such as are above mentioned, although in several states such statutes are held unconstitutional. Thus, in Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Michigan statutes like one or both of the kind mentioned have been held unconstitutional, and to the same effect are several decisions of the circuit courts of the United States, and an expression of opinion without deciding the question in a Wisconsin case. On the other hand, the decisions in Arkansas, Indiana, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, as well as in one of the circuit courts of the United States, sustain the validity of one or both of such statutory regulations, and the Tennessee case of Harmon v. Hagerty, 88 Tenn. 705, seems to assume their validity.

It is not easy to say what may be the final controlling decision of the question by the Supreme Court of the United States which shall settle the present conflict of decisions. But an analogy exists between this question and that of interstate commerce. The decisions on the subject of interstate commerce seem to indicate the invalidity of these patent-right regulations. The question is, Can a state by police regulations discriminate between a sale of patent rights and sales of other property, in respect either to the conditions precedent to the right to sell or to the form of obligations taken on the sales? Or, to put the question in another way, Can state police regulations be valid when aimed exclusively at sales of patent rights? It is clear that police regulations when general in their nature may be valid, although applied to dealings in patent rights; but when they are aimed only at sales of patent rights, thus discriminating against such sales, even if the purpose is not to depreciate the rights of the owners, but only to prevent them from committing fraud in such sales, the question is a different one. The case is similar to that of a police regulation aimed exclusively at interstate or foreign commerce, such as inspection laws applicable only to goods from other states. While general inspection laws are valid, as shown in Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115, yet any discrimination in warded, thus stimulating and encouraging the production of useful inventions. When the property is brought into existence by the application of the discovery, and is brought into or produced in the state, the use of it is not beyond the control of its legislation. The question as to the use of the property thus produced is not involved here. In Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. 10 How. 494, 18 L. ed. 511, Taney, Ch. J., said: "The monopoly granted to the patentee is for one entire thing; it is the exclusive right of making, using, and vending to others to be used, the improvements he has invented, and for which the patent is granted. The monopoly did not exist at common law, and the rights, therefore, which may be exercised under it, cannot be regulated by rules of the common law. It is created by the act of congress." In Illinois, a statute required vendors of patent rights to procure a certificate from the county clerk, and provided, further, that every note given for a patent right should contain the words "given for a patent right," and that such obligation should be subject to all defenses as if owned by the payee. The supreme court of Illinois, in the case of Hollida v. Hunt, 70 Ill. 109, 22 Am. Rep. 63, held that the law was unconstitutional, because it was an attempt to regulate and control by enactments of the legislature of Illinois a matter of which congress had sole jurisdiction. Part such inspection law against property (such as flour) brought from outside the state, is expressly condemned in Volght v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 688. Yet danger from unwholesome or fraudulent articles of merchandise may in some instances be more peculiar to importations from other states than any danger of fraud in sales can be peculiar to sales of patent rights; and police regulations aimed exclusively at the former seem as justifiable as those aimed exclusively at the latter. Therefore the rule adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in respect to state inspection laws, which condemns a law aimed only at goods brought from outside the state, would condemn any state statute which aimed to regulate sales of patent rights only, unless interstate commerce has greater immunity from state interference than patent rights have. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States suggest that the limit of state police power, when it affects rights given by federal law, is an interference which is merely incidental to other purposes, and which is not exclusively aimed at or limited to its effect on such federal rights.

b. Sales of patented articles.

"We can find no objection to the legislation of Virginia in requiring a license for the sale of the sewing-machines, by reason of the grant of letters patent for the invention," says the opinion of Mr. Justice Field in Webber v. Virginia, 108 U. S. 844, 28 L. ed. 568.

The relation of the police power of the states to the rights of patentees under letters patent granted by the United States is expressed very fully and with great clearness by Mr. Justice Field in his opinion on behalf of the Supreme Court of the United States in Webber v. Virginia, supra. Because of the clearness of the statement as well as because it is from the court of ultimate authority on the subject, we quote at some length. The language is as follows: "The right conferred by the patent laws of the United States to inventors to sell their inventions and discoveries does not take the tangible property, in which the invention or discovery may be exhibited or carried into effect, from the operation of the tax and license laws of the state. The combination of different materials so as to produce a new and valuable product or result, or to produce a well-known product or result more rapidly or better than before, which constitutes the invention or discovery, cannot be forbidden by the state, nor can the sale of the article or machine produced be restricted, except as the production and sale of other articles, for the manufacture of which no invention or discovery is patented or claimed, may be forbidden or restricted. The patent for a dynamite powder does not prevent the state from prescribing the conditions of its manufacture, storage, and sale, so as to protect the community from the danger of explosion. A patent for the manufacture and sale of a deadly poison does not lessen the right of the state to control its handling and use. The legislation respecting the articles which the state may adopt after the patents have expired, it may equally adopt during their continuance. It is only the right to the invention or discovery—the incorporeal right—which the state cannot interfere with. Congress never intended that the patent law should displace the police powers of the states, meaning by that term those powers by which the health, good order, peace, and general welfare of the community are promoted. Whatever rights are secured to inventors must be enjoyed in subordination to this general authority of the state over all property within its limits."

The fact that oil is a patented article was held in Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1114, affirming 11 Bush, 311, 21 Am. Rep. 220, to be immaterial when the oil did not conform to the standard or test required by a state statute as a prerequisite to the right to sell or offer it for sale for illuminating purposes.

The declaration of Chief Justice Kent in Livingston v. Van Ingen, 9 Johns. 581, that, "if the inventor's machine or other production will have a pernicious effect upon the public health or safety, no doubt a competent authority remains with the states to restrain the use of the patent right," has been quoted with approval in later cases, especially in Patterson v. Kentucky, supra, where it is said that although the action was no longer authority and the language not absolutely necessary to the decision of the case, yet, "as an expression of opinion by an eminent jurist as to the nature and extent of the rights secured by the Federal Constitution to inventors, it is entitled to great weight."

The police power of the state to regulate the business of peddlers is not limited by the fact that a peddler may be selling patented articles. The court said the patent laws "give exclusive rights, but they do not determine personal capacity to contract, or prescribe the requisites for sales of patented articles, or impose the customary restrictions which are supposed to be important to the protection of public morals. All these matters are left to the state law. A patentee must observe the Sunday law as much as any other vendor; he must put his contracts in writing under the same circumstances which require writings of others, and he must obey all other regulations of police which are made for general observance. Patterson v. Kentucky, supra. Invidious regulations, applicable to patentees exclusively, might be valid, but there is no question of that nature here." People v. Russell, 49 Mich. 617, 43 Am. Rep. 473.

A state statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of any article not made from unadulterated milk or cream, designed to take the place of butter or cheese, is sustained in De Brounahan, 13 Fed.

of the Illinois statute was similar to the one in question. It was an effort to regulate or control the sale of a patent right by first requiring a permission from the county clerk. In Oranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309, 26 Am. Rep. 516, the supreme court of Michigan decided that a statute of that state requiring obligations given for patent rights to contain the words "given for a patent right," and making them subject to defenses in the hand of innocent holders the same as in the hand of the original payee, was an unconstitutional interference with the prerogative of congress, and void. The court said: "Where any right or privilege is subject to the regulations of congress it is not competent for state laws to impose conditions which shall interfere with the rights or diminish their value. In those cases where the congressional power is lawfully exercised it is supreme." Patterson v. Com., 11 Bush, 811, 21 Am. Rep. 220, arose under a statute prohibiting the sale within the state of all illuminating oils which did not ignite at a certain named temperature, and imposing a fine for its violation. The same act imposed a penalty on all who should sell such fluid after it had been condemned by the state inspector, and the barrels or packages were branded by him, "Unsafe for illuminating purposes." The defendant was selling an oil which had been condemned by the inspector. The court held

Rep. 62, in an opinion by Justice Miller of the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of habeas corpus by a person who had been convicted of violating the statute by selling oleomargarine, which was a patented article. He said: "The answer is, that the purposes of the patent law and of the constitutional provision are answered when the patentee is protected against competition in the use of his invention by others; and when the law prevents others from infringing on his exclusive right to make, use, or sell, its object is accomplished."

So the fact that an article was manufactured under letters patent issued by the United States is held to constitute no defense for violating Ohio Rev. Stat. § 7090, making it an offense to sell any substance not made wholly from pure cream or pure milk which purports to be butter or cheese. Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 226, 48 Am. Rep. 429.

The owner of a patent medicine is not by virtue of his patent entitled to administer the medicine as a profession in violation of a state law regulating the practice of medicine. Smith v. Tracy, 2 Hall, 466; Thompson v. Staats, 15 Wend. 386; Jordan v. Dayton Overseers, 4 Ohio, 294.

In Jordan v. Dayton Overseers, supra, the court said: "An attempt by the legislature in good faith to regulate the conduct of a portion of its citizens in a matter strictly pertaining to its internal economy, we cannot but regard as a legitimate exercise of power, although such law may sometimes indirectly affect the enjoyment of rights flowing from the federal government." In discussing the patent law the court said: "The sole operation of the statute is to enable him (the patentee) to prevent others from using the products of his labors except with his consent. But his own right of using is not enlarged or affected."

In an action for the price of a patented machine a reply that the plaintiff, although a foreign corporation, had the right to sell patented articles in the state notwithstanding any law of the state to the contrary, is held bad on demurrer where the answer alleged that the foreign corporation had not complied with the laws of the state so as to be authorized to do business. Toledo Agri. Works v. Work, 70 Ind. 233. This decision was based on Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 533, 30 Am. Rep. 238, which sustained a police regulation respecting scalpers or ticket brokers, and it overrules, without mentioning them, the prior decisions of the court which are directly in conflict with it, namely, Grover & R. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Butler, 53 Ind. 454, 21 Am. Rep. 200, and Shook v. Singer Mfg. Co. 61 Ind. 530.

A foreign corporation which receives notes from an agent on an accounting in which he is charged with notes taken by him from the purchasers of patented machines is, in an action against the agent on his notes, subject to the statutes which require certain conditions to be complied with by foreign corporations before doing business in the state, and until these are complied with the corporation cannot maintain its action. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Hatfield, 58 Ind. 187.

The court does not deny that a foreign corporation could sell its patented articles in the state before compliance with the statutes, but declares that the taking of the note sued on in this case, in consideration of other notes retained by the agent, was a transaction which had nothing to do with the manufacture, sale, or use of any patented article.

II. Police regulations of other business in which patents are used.

As to state power to regulate the use of patented articles, there is but little disagreement. It is well established that the manner of the use of a patented article is subject to state regulation and control when the public welfare requires it. So it was held in State v. Bell Teleph. Co. 38 Ohio St. 293, 38 Am. Rep. 583.

The power of the legislature to regulate charges for and prevent discrimination in the use of telephones is not affected by the fact that the instruments are patented. Central Union Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1; Hookett v. State, 105 Ind. 250; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. 66 Md. 417, 59 Am. Rep. 167.

The fact that a licensee of patents for telephones was forbidden by the terms of the license to supply the instrument to any telegraph company for telegraphic purposes without consent of its licensor, was held no justification for discrimination between those who wished to make use of the telephone, on the ground that the telephone company occupied the position of a common carrier and was by common-law principles precluded from making unjust discrimination. State v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 47 Fed. Rep. 635. Although the licensor was a corporation of another state, the court laid down the rule that when the use of a patented device is thrown open to the public or to classes of the public all are entitled to use it on the same terms as others in the same class, and therefore any contract or agreement which would effectually evade the rule must be declared void as being against public policy both at common law and by statute.

Likewise a provision in a license from a foreign corporation to a domestic corporation for the use of a telephone system, which restricts the right of the licensor to give equal privileges to telegraph companies, was held void as contrary to public policy, especially when that policy is declared in a statute of the state, in State v. Bell Teleph. Co. 38 Ohio St. 293, 38 Am. Rep. 583.

The same decision was made in State v. Bell Teleph. Co. by the St. Louis circuit court, as cited in a note in 38 Am. Rep. 587. Also in Missouri v. Bell Teleph. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 592.

that the legislation was within the jurisdiction of the state, and that, when the article is made by reason of the application of the principle discovered, and is sold or attempted to be sold or used within the jurisdiction of the state, it is subject to its law the same as other property. Judge Pryor, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "There is a manifest distinction between the right of property in the patent, which carries with it the power on the part of the patentee to assign it, and the right to sell the property resulting from the invention or patent. A state has no power to say through its legislature that the patentee shall not sell his patent, or that its use shall be common to all of its citizens; for this would be in direct conflict with the law of congress; and that portion of the opinion referred to, giving the patentee an unrestricted power to sell, has allusion alone to his right of property in the patent right, as that was the only question involved in the case. The discovery or invention is made property by reason of the patent, and this right of property the patentee can dispose of under the law of congress, and no state legislation can deprive him of this right; but when the fruits of the invention or the article made by reason of the application of the principle discovered is attempted to be sold or used within the jurisdiction of a state, it is subject to its laws, like other property and such has been the uniform decision of all the courts, state and federal, upon this question." This opinion most clearly states the distinction between the right of property in the patent and the right in the article which has been produced by the application of the principle discovered. Patterson v. Com., supra, was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court affirmed the judgment. 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115.

Another case holding such a stipulation void and against public policy as declared by the common law and by statute is Bell Teleph. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 907.

A decision to the same effect was made in Vermont in Commercial U. Teleg. Co. v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161.

But in conflict with the above cases it was held in American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Connecticut Teleph. Co. 49 Conn. 352, 44 Am. Rep. 287, that a statute requiring a telephone company to be impartial toward persons using its line did not apply in case of a domestic corporation which had a limited license for the use of patented telephone instruments from a corporation of another state. The court said the utmost reach of the statute is to require an impartial use of such rights or privileges as they possess, and if their system was carried on by instruments not patented or by patented instruments which the defendant owned, the statute would apply. But when the patents were owned by a resident of another state the licensees could be compelled to give impartially to applicants only the full measure of the right which it had been able to procure. It was also said that the domestic corporation could purchase from the owner even the most limited right, and the court could not enlarge or diminish the purchase.

A statute limiting telephone charges is sustained in Central U. Teleph. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 195, but the effect of patents is not considered.

A telephone company was also compelled by mandamus to furnish a telephone for the office of an attorney, in State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co., 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, but nothing was said in the case about any claim of exemption from control on account of patents.

Other decisions by which telephone companies have been compelled to serve those who demand service in a proper way are collected in a note on Compulsory service by the party whose business it is to serve the public, in Rushville v. Rushville Nat. Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321, but do not seem to have involved any express decision as to any rights under patents, as no such right seems to have been asserted.

The police power of a state to compel electric wires to be placed under ground is sustained in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 552, 8 L. R. A. 449, 2 Intern. Com. Rep. 538, as against a telegraph company which is a business agency of the general government and has the right under act of congress to operate its lines along post roads, but no question seems to have been made in this case as to the effect of any patents.

29 L. R. A.

The right to draw a lottery in violation of state law is denied in Vannini v. Paine, I Harr. (Del.) 6, notwithstanding a right to do so was claimed under a patent from the United States. The court said: "A person might with as much propriety claim a right to commit murder with an instrument because he held a patent for it as a new and useful invention."

III. Restricting right of action for infringement.

A state statute relieving a state from liability for acts of its officers cannot relieve it from liability for the infringement of a patent. Bliss v. Brooklyn, 8 Blatchf. 533.

In deciding that a county was liable for infringement of a patent it is said in May v. Logan County Comrs., 30 Fed. Rep. 250: "The state could not, by either direct or indirect legislation, exempt its counties from liability for the infringement of patents, nor has it attempted to do so."

The power of a state to exempt counties from liability for infringement of letters patent is also denied in May v. Rails County, 31 Fed. Rep. 473, which holds that U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4919, authorizing damages for infringement of any patent in an action on the case, applies to actions against a county.

Some other cases holding counties liable for infringement, but not involving the effect of state statutes, are May v. Juneau County, 30 Fed. Rep. 241; May v. Mercer County, 30 Fed. Rep. 246; May v. Fond du Lac County, 27 Fed. Rep. 655; May v. Johnson County Comrs., not reported, but cited in 26 Fed. Rep. 260.

That a county is not liable for infringement of a patent was decided in Jacobs v. Hamilton County Comrs., 1 Bond, 500, following the supposed authority of a state decision denying the liability of a county for negligence. But this decision has been disapproved in all subsequent cases.

A state statute limiting the right to sue a county until a proper demand for payment or settlement has been made, was held in May v. Buchanan County, 29 Fed. Rep. 473, to be valid as applied to an action against a county for infringement of a patent, denying the contention that the law could not apply because the subject-matter of the action was beyond state control.

The effect of state statutes of limitations or other matters of state practice or remedies in infringement cases is not considered here.

IV. Taxation of patent rights.

In Pennsylvania the capital stock of a corporation which is issued for patent rights merely, and not for any tangible property or goods manufac-

National authority only can grant patents, and regulate the sale of the right of the inventor in his discovery, and the manner of the disposition of such rights. While the states have jurisdiction to legislate on the matter of the use or sale of the article, which is brought into existence by virtue of the application of the patented process, it is an invasion of national authority for the legislature of a state to make a law which requires the patentee or his vendee to first procure and pay for a license to sell his right in his discovery,—his intangible right,—or the territory in which such right is granted. In so far as the statute attempts this, it is in conflict with the law of congress. If the legislature has authority to require the patentee or his assignees to procure and pay for this privilege, then there is no limit to the extent of such requirement. The legislature could fix the license fee so high that the patentee could not afford to pay it, as it might exceed the commercial value of his right. By this means the legislature of a state could utterly destroy the power which is in congress, by the Federal Constitution, "to promote the progress of science and useful arts." The right to protect the inventor is necessarily with the authority which constitutionally and lawfully granted such rights. It was said by Marshall, Ch. J., in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 426, 4 L. ed. 606: "(1) That a power to create implies a power to preserve; (2) that a power to destroy, if wielded by a different hand, is hostile to, and incompatible with these powers to create and to preserve; (8) that where this repugnancy exists, that authority which is supreme must control, not yield to that over which it is supreme."

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Grace, J., did not sit.

tured under such patents, is held not taxable by the state. Com. v. Philadelphia Co. 157 Pa. 537; Com. v. Edison Electric Light Co. Id. 529.

That a state cannot tax the capital stock of a corporation which is invested in patent rights, whether originally issued or merely assigned to the company, was also decided in Com. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 151 Pa. 205, and Com. v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. 151 Pa. 376.

But a subordinate or subsidiary corporation which merely leases telephones from the parent company, which is a foreign corporation, is not exempt from taxation on its capital stock on the ground that it is invested in patent rights, nor even on stock issued to the foreign company as consideration for the leases. Com. v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. 145 Pa. 121.

The same is held in respect to stock issued to a nonresident for the license of a patented apparatus used by a gas company. Com. v. Philadelphia Co. 145 Pa. 142.

The same is held as to a tax on the stock of an electric light company issued for the use of patented appliances. Com. v. Brush Electric Light Co. 145 Pa. 147; Com. v. Edison Electric Light Co. Id. 151; Com. v. Chester Electric Light & Power Co. Id. 139.

On the other hand, it is held in New York that, although the capital stock of a corporation, or a part of it, is invested in patents, no part of the corporate franchise or business is exempt from taxation on that account. This was decided in People v. Wemple, 61 Hun, 58, although this case was reversed on other grounds in 129 N. Y. 664.

But the court of appeals also decided to the same effect in People v. Campbell, 128 N. Y. 543, 20 L. R. A. 458. In this case although a portion of the capital stock was invested in patents, the court did not discuss the power of the state to impose taxes thereon, but it did declare that it was not error to 29 L. R. A.

include the patents in the capital of the company estimated for taxation. The question discussed in the opinion is, Where were the patent rights employed? and the court held that they were employed within the state and consequently taxable there.

The fact that stocks and bonds of a corporation were received as proceeds of the sale of patents was also held not to exempt them from taxation, in People v. Campbell, 88 Hun, 530; People v. Campbell, 128 N. Y. 543, 20 L. R. A. 458.

But the New York statute imposes a tax on the "corporate business or franchise," although the amount of it is determined by reference to the capital stock, and under this statute a tax was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 694, 33 L. ed. 1025, notwithstanding the fact that part of the capital stock was invested in United States bonds which were themselves not taxable by the state. This clearly distinguishes the New York tax from that of Pennsylvania, and leaves the question of a tax on patent rights unaffected by these New York cases.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in California v. Central P. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 150, denying the power of a state to tax a corporate franchise granted by congress unless congress consents, is cited by McPherson, J., in rendering the opinion of the court of common pleas in the Pennsylvania case of Com. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., supra, as showing the invalidity of a state tax on patent rights. His position was approved by the Pennsylvania supreme court as appears above. Up to this time the only decisions on the question are those of the Pennsylvania courts, but the same reasons which operate to require a denial of state taxes on franchisees granted to corporations by federal authority seem equally applicable against state taxes on patent rights.

R. A. E.

WATERLOO MILLING CO., App't.,H. KUENSTER et al.

(158 ILL. 350.)

1. A bank with which a draft is deposited for collection discharges its duty by transmitting it in due season to a suitable agent at the residence of the drawee, with necessary instructions, and is not liable for loss occasioned by the negligence or default of the latter, as such collecting agent becomes the agent of the holder of the draft, and not of the bank with which it is deposited for collection.
2. That worthless drafts were received by a bank with which paper was deposited for collection, from a collecting bank to which the paper was sent, and thereupon credited to the depositor without knowledge of the insolvency of the collecting agent, does not change the rule that the depositor must bear the loss, since the rights of the parties are the same as if the worthless drafts had been deposited by him.
3. The retention of worthless drafts after knowledge of the insolvency of the drawer, by a bank which has received them as proceeds of paper forwarded for collection and credited to the depositor before learning of such insolvency, and the subsequent proof of a claim on the drafts by the bank in its own name and the receipt of a dividend thereon from the receiver of the drawer, do not relieve the depositor from liability to the bank for the loss sustained on the balance of the drafts.

(October 16, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Fourth District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Monroe County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the amount of certain drafts which had been delivered to defendants for collection, but which were lost because of the failure of defendants' correspondent. Affirmed.

Statement by Bailey, J.:

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the Waterloo Milling Company against H. Kuenster and others, copartners doing a banking business at Waterloo, Illinois, to recover certain moneys alleged to have been collected and received by the defendants from divers persons for the plaintiff, and as its agent. The defendants pleaded non assumpsit, and gave notice of set-off, and on trial before the court, a jury being waived, the issues were found for the defendants, and their damages, under their notice of set-off, were assessed at $314.83. For that sum and costs the defendants had judgment. On appeal to the appellate court that judgment was affirmed, and this appeal is from the judgment of affirmance.

The facts appearing at the trial were all admitted by stipulation, and are as follows:

NOTE.—For bank collections of negotiable paper through agency of other banks, see note to National Butchers' & D. Bank v. Hubbell (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 352.

29 L. R. A.

"The plaintiff is a milling company, doing a general milling business in the city of Waterloo, Monroe county, Illinois, and has been so engaged for seven years last past. The defendants were engaged in the banking business as partners, and have been so engaged for eleven years, in said city of Waterloo. On the 21st of August, 1891, the plaintiff delivered to the defendants its thirty days' date draft on one M. J. Heyer, of Wilmington, North Carolina, for $613, with bill of lading attached for flour shipped that day to said Heyer, the said draft to be transmitted by defendants for collection. On the same day the draft was received by the defendants it, together with the bill of lading attached, was sent to the First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, with instructions to collect same and remit to the defendants. The draft contained the privilege to the drawee of obtaining 1 per cent discount for cash. This draft was transmitted, as above stated, for collection, in the usual course of business, without any special instructions or any special arrangements as to compensation, except that the defendants were in the habit of charging plaintiff nothing except costs of such collections to them. The plaintiff had been doing business with defendants' bank since 1886, and kept its deposits with said bank. On October 28, 1891, plaintiff delivered to defendants another draft for the sum of $219.50, upon King & Montgomery, of Wilmington, North Carolina, with bill of lading attached. This draft was payable on arrival of the goods, and was to be transmitted, the same as the first-mentioned draft, for collection in the usual course of business. On the same day the plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft, payable on arrival of goods, drawn on J. M. Forshee, of the same place, for the sum of $219.50. This was also attached to bill of lading, and to be sent on for collection the same as the other. On the same day plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft, with bill of lading attached, payable on arrival of goods, drawn on West & Co., of the same place, for the sum of $116, and also on the same day plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft, with bill of lading attached, payable on arrival of goods, drawn on Fillyaw & Skulker, of the same place, for the sum of $69.60, the last two named drafts to be transmitted to Wilmington for collection, the same as the others. On the 30th of October of the same year plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft on West & Co., of Wilmington, North Carolina, with bill of lading attached, payable on arrival of goods, for the sum of $108.50, and the same day plaintiff delivered to defendants another draft, with bill of lading attached, drawn on J. S. McEacher, all of the same place, for the sum of $108.50, both of these drafts to be collected in the usual course of business, as the others. And on the 4th of November of the same year plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft, drawn on West & Co., of Wilmington, for the sum of $108.50, with bill of lading attached, payable on arrival of goods, same to be collected in usual course of business, as the other drafts named. No instructions were given by the plaintiff to defendants as to what bank or agency these drafts should be sent to in Wilmington, North Carolina. Defendants sent all of them, in due time and with due diligence, to the First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, with instructions to collect as in the draft directed, and to transmit the proceeds to the defendants. The First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, was a responsible bank, in good standing, its solvency never having been called in question, and the defendants exercised due diligence in selecting that bank. It is further agreed that all the aforesaid drafts were collected by the First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, to which they were sent, but that said bank, on or about the 25th of November, 1891, failed and the proceeds were never remitted to defendants.

"On the 24th of November, 1891, defendants received from said First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, two drafts upon the United States National Bank of the city of New York, one for the sum of $327.25, and the other for the sum of $613. On receipt of said drafts, the intelligence of the First National Bank failure not having reached the defendants, the amount represented by them, being $940.25, was placed to the credit of the plaintiff, paid to and has been retained by it, and the drafts themselves immediately forwarded to New York for collection and credit there, the defendants keeping an account there. The drafts were protested by the New York bank on receipt, and nothing realized from them.

"It is further agreed that on the 27th of May, 1893, plaintiff gave defendants a draft, with bill of lading attached and drawn on B. F. King, of Wilmington, North Carolina, to be transmitted for collection in the usual course of business, without special instructions, same as the other drafts above mentioned, for $77.25, and on the same day plaintiff delivered to the defendants another draft, with bill of lading attached, payable on arrival of goods, drawn on McNair & Pearcell, of Wilmington, North Carolina, for collection, same as draft last mentioned, for the sum of $140.50. These last two drafts were promptly forwarded to the Bank of New Hanover, of Wilmington, North Carolina, with instructions to collect as directed and remit the proceeds to the defendants. This bank was considered a suitable and safe agency, and the defendants are not charged with negligence in this selection. The bank was in good standing, so far as known. This bank afterwards, to wit, about the 18th or 21st (from 15th to 21st) day of June, 1893, likewise failed, after having collected the two drafts, but before remitting the amounts as directed.

"Plaintiff makes no claim on account of drafts mentioned herein, other than those mentioned in the copy of account sued on, attached to the declaration herein, and the sum of $6.14 balance on the draft of August 31, 29 L. R. A.

1891, and said other items and drafts as introduced by the defendants under the notice of set-off.

"It is further agreed that for some time previous, and terminating about 1890, it was the practice of the defendants, on receipt from the plaintiff of drafts for collection, to immediately credit the plaintiff with the amount of the draft, and then charge the plaintiff interest from date of giving it credit to the time defendants received the proceeds of the collection. About 1890 this practice was changed, the defendants receiving items for collection to credit the plaintiff with the proceeds when received, and that continued and was the practice at the time of receiving the drafts above mentioned.

"It is further agreed that on the failure of the banks at Wilmington, North Carolina, respectively, as above stated, the defendants filed affidavits with the respective receivers for the amount of the several drafts that had been collected and not remitted; affidavits and forms of claim furnished by the receivers were made out and presented by the defendants in their own name, the drafts having been indorsed by the plaintiff to the defendants at the time they were respectively delivered to them to be transmitted for collection, as above stated. The defendants have received as dividends on the drafts above mentioned, from the First National Bank of Wilmington, North Carolina, the sum of $625.92, and from the Bank of New Hanover nothing. The dividends, as above stated, have been retained by the defendants.

"It was not uncommon for delays to occur in payment of drafts sent on for collection in this way, caused by delay in the arrival of goods and from other causes, and there is no claim of negligence against the defendants on this account."

Messrs. Josh Wilson and Hartzell & Sprigg, for appellant:

The appellees having received the drafts from their agent, and having paid the amount thereof to the appellant as a partial payment on the collections in their hands, surely the transaction, so far as the $940.25 is concerned, is closed between the appellees and the appellant.

Odell v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 188 Ill. 601.

In Exchange Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 113 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 723, the court says: "The agreement of the defendant in this case was to collect the drafts, not merely to transmit them to the Newark bank for collection."

The taking by a bank from a customer, in the usual course of business, of paper for collection, is sufficient evidence of a valuable consideration for the service.

The contract then becomes one to perform certain duties necessary for the collection of the paper and the protection of the holder. The bank is not merely appointed an attorney, authorized to select other agents to collect the paper; its undertaking is to do the thing, and not merely to procure it to be done. In such case the bank is held to agree to answer for any default in the performance of its contract:

and whether the paper is to be collected in the place where the bank is situated, or at a distance, the contract is to use the proper means to collect the paper, and the bank, by employing subagents to perform a part of what it has contracted to do, becomes responsible to its customer.

Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 808, 23 L. ed. 898.

The Wilmington banks having collected the drafts, and mixed them with the general funds of the banks or otherwise appropriated them, their agency for the appellees at once terminated and they became the debtors of the appellees, and in like manner the appellees became the debtors of the appellant.

Marine Bank v. Rushmore, 28 Ill. 471.

Messrs. Travous & Warnock, for appellees:

Where a draft is left with a bank for collection, and is transmitted by it in due season to a suitable agent at the place of the residence of the drawee, with the necessary instructions, it thereby fully discharges its duty and is not liable for loss accruing through negligence of the latter.

Mechem, Agency, p. 849, § 514; Morse, Banks & Banking, 2d ed. 414, 8d ed. chap. 17; Etina Ins. Co. v. Alton City Bank, 25 Ill. 248, 79 Am. Dec. 828; Drovers Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 18 Ill. App. 191, 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Fabens v. Mercantile Bank, 28 Pick. 880, 84 Am. Dec. 59; Daly v. Butchers & D. Bank, 56 Mo. 94, 17 Am. Rep. 663; Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 521; Citizens' Bank v. Howell, 8 Md. 580, 63 Am. Dec. 714; Stacy v. Dane County Bank, 12 Wis. 629; Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa, 484, 41 Am. Rep. 110; Third Nat. Bank v. Vicksburg Bank, 61 Miss. 112, 48 Am. Rep. 78; Bank of Louisville v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Bart. 101, 35 Am. Rep. 691; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Hyde v. Planters' Bank, 17 La. 560, 36 Am. Dec. 621; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 589; Bank of Lindborg v. Ober, 31 Kan. 599; First Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 34 Neb. 818, 15 L. R. A. 498.

Even the courts which hold the bank receiving paper for collection liable for the negligence of its corresponding bank, the decisions of which are relied upon by counsel for appellant, do not so hold in cases like the present, where the undertaking is to "transmit for collection." The distinction between engaging to do a thing and engaging to procure it to be done is recognized in all the cases.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 845; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, supra; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 28, 7 L. ed. 89; Exchange Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 722; Farmers' Bank v. Owen, 5 Cranch, C. C. 504.

Appellees, having discharged their full duty in the premises, were entitled to recover from appellant the money paid them upon the drafts received from appellant's agent, which proved worthless, less the amount afterward received from the receiver, and the circuit court properly so held.

Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Second Nat. Bank v. Cummings, 89 Tenn. 609; Rapp v. National Security Bank, 186 Pa. 426; Farmers' Bank v. Owen, supra.

121 R. A.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The controlling question in this case is, whether the First National Bank and the Bank of New Hanover, of Wilmington, North Carolina, to which the defendants transmitted the drafts in question for collection, were, in making the collections and remitting the money, the agents of the defendants or of the plaintiff. It appears from the stipulation of the parties that the drafts were delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants with bills of lading attached, to be transmitted by the defendants to Wilmington for collection. No instructions were given by the plaintiff to the defendants as to the bank or agency in Wilmington to which the drafts should be sent, and all were sent in due time and with due diligence to these banks, all but the last two being sent to the First National Bank, and those two to the Bank of New Hanover. At the time the drafts were sent to these banks, respectively, the banks were each responsible and in good standing, their solvency then never having been called in question, and it is admitted that the defendants used due diligence in selecting these banks as the agencies for collecting the drafts and remitting the money. The drafts were all paid to the Wilmington banks in due course of business, but before the money collected was remitted to the defendants both banks failed, and the money, with the exception of certain sums paid over by the receiver of the First National Bank of Wilmington, was never received by either the defendants or the plaintiff.

Where a draft upon a nonresident drawee is deposited with a local bank for collection, and especially where, as in this case, it is deposited to be transmitted to the place of residence of the drawee for collection, the bank fully discharges its duty by transmitting the draft, in due season, to a suitable agent at the place of residence of the drawee, with necessary instructions, and it is not liable for loss occasioned by the negligence or default of the collecting agent thus employed. Such collecting agent becomes the agent of the holder of the draft, and not of the bank with which it is deposited for collection. While some of the courts have been disposed to hold the bank in such cases to a higher degree of responsibility, the better reasoning, as well as the weight of authority, seems to support the rule as we have stated it, and that rule has long been recognized and adopted in this state.

In Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 23 Wend. 215, the stricter rule is held, but in a note to that case as it is reported in 34 Am. Dec. 815, by Mr. Freeman, it is said: "The preponderance of authority is against the doctrine of the principal case, and in favor of the rule that the liability of a bank taking a note or bill for collection, which is payable at a distance, extends merely to the selection of a suitable and competent agent at the place of payment, and to the transmission of the paper to such agent with proper instructions, and that the correspondent bank is the agent, not of the transmitting bank, but of the holder, so that the transmitting bank is not liable for the defaults of the correspondent, where due care has been used in selection of such correspondent." The foregoing statement of the rule by Mr. Freeman is quoted with approval in First Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 34 Neb. 313, 15 L. R. A. 493, and the rule itself is adopted.

In Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa, 434, 41 Am. Rep. 110, the reasons of the rule are stated as follows: "The course of business of defendant, and all other banks, is, in such cases, to make collections through correspondents. They do not undertake themselves to collect the bills, but to intrust them to other banks at the place payment is to be made. The holder of the paper, having full notice of the course of business, must be held to assent thereto. He therefore authorizes the bank with whom he deals to do the work of collection through another bank. . . . The bank receiving the paper becomes an agent of the depositor with authority to employ another bank to collect it. The second bank becomes the subagent of the customer of the first, for the reason that the customer authorizes the employment of such an agent to make the collection. The paper remains the property of the customer, and is collected for him; the party employed, with his assent, to make the collection, must therefore be regarded as his agent."

In Daly v. Buichers' & D. Bank, 56 Mo. 94, 7 Am. Rep. 663, the plaintiff was a depositor in the defendant's bank, and deposited therein certain drafts in controversy in that case. The drafts were sent by the defendant to the National Bank of Vicksburg, which the defendant believed trustworthy, with directions to collect and remit. The Vicksburg bank collected the money and kept it, and became insolvent, and it was held that the defendant was not liable for the loss.

The foregoing cases are entirely in harmony with the decision of this court in Alton Ins. Co. v. Alton City Bank, 25 Ill. 248, 79 Am. Dec. 328, in which it was held that, where a bill or note is received by a bank for collection which renders its transmission to another place necessary, the bank discharges its duty by sending it in due season to a competent, reliable agent, with proper instructions for its collection. There the legal holder of the bill indorsed and delivered it to the defendant bank for collection in the usual and regular course of banking business, and the defendant bank on the same day indorsed and transmitted it for collection to certain bankers in St. Louis, Missouri, the proceeds of the bill, when collected, to be placed to the credit of the Alton bank. By the negligence of the correspondent bankers in failing to have the bill protested for non-acceptance and to give notice of non-acceptance, the amount of the bill was lost, and it was held that the defendant bank was not liable. In discussing the case the court said (p. 234): "This presents the question whether the bank receiving such paper for collection is bound for the acts of its correspondents and is responsible for their negligence, or whether its undertaking requires anything more than that it should use reasonable care and prudence in the selection of a responsible correspondent to whom it shall be intrusted. That a bank receiving such paper for that purpose in the usual course of business is bound to use ordinary and reasonable care in selecting an agent competent and responsible, there is no doubt, and a want of such precaution would clearly render them liable for consequent loss. It does not appear that there was any agreement on the part of the bank to become liable, at all events, for any loss that might occur from the acts of its correspondents, and the law has imposed no such liability." See also Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Fabens v. Mercantile Bank, 23 Pick. 833, 84 Am. Dec. 59; Stacy v. Dane County Bank, 19 Wis. 629; Citizens' Bank v. Howell, 8 Md. 580, 63 Am. Dec. 714; Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 521; Third Nat. Bank v. Vicksburg Bank, 61 Miss. 112, 48 Am. Rep. 78; Bank of Louisville v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Bart. 101, 35 Am. Rep. 691; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 423, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Hyde v. Planters' Bank, 17 La. Ann. 560, 86 Am. Dec. 621; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539; Bank of Lindborg v. Ober, 81 Kan. 599; Mechem, Agency, § 514.

In the light of these authorities it must be held that the First National Bank and the Bank of New Hanover, of Wilmington, North Carolina, were the agents of the plaintiff, and not of the defendants, and that the losses resulting from their default must be borne by the plaintiff, and not by the defendants.

It appears, however, that on the 24th day of November, 1891, the First National Bank of Wilmington, after collecting the drafts forwarded to it, remitted to the defendants two drafts on the United States National Bank of the City of New York, aggregating $940.25, and failed and became insolvent the day following; that the defendants, on receipt of the drafts, not having received intelligence of the failure of the drawer, placed the amount of the drafts to the credit of the plaintiff and paid the same over to it, and that the money so paid has been retained by it; that the drafts themselves were immediately forwarded to New York for collection, and were there dishonored and protested, and that nothing was realized from them; that the defendants subsequently proved up their claim for the amount of the two drafts before the receiver of the First National Bank of Wilmington, and afterwards obtained from the receiver, by way of dividends on their claim, the sum of $625.92. They now claim, and have been permitted to recover by way of set-off, the difference between the amount of the dividends so received and the face of the drafts. This we think was proper. If the plaintiff had itself deposited these drafts with the defendants and received payment of their amount, the drafts being at the time worthless by reason of the insolvency of the drawer, there can be no doubt that the defendants would have had the right to charge back and recover the amount of the loss from the plaintiff. They were in fact received by the defendants from the First National Bank of Wilmington, which, for all the purposes of the transactions under consideration, is to be regarded as the plaintiff's agent. The rights of the defendants would therefore seem to be the same as though the plaintiff had itself deposited the drafts with the defendants.

Nor are we able to see that the case is at all affected by the circumstance that the defendants retained the drafts and proved up a claim for their amount before the receiver in their own name. They had paid the amount of the drafts to the plaintiff and until the money so paid was refunded to them they were entitled to hold the drafts, and collect in their own name and for their own benefit whatever could be collected from the estate of the insolvent drawer, of course crediting whatever they might be able to collect upon their claim against the plaintiff.

We are of the opinion that the judgment is fully warranted by the facts appearing by the stipulation of the parties, and the judgment of the Appellate Court will therefore be affirmed.

WASHINGTONIAN HOME OF CHICAGO,
Appt.,
v.

City of CHICAGO et al.

(187 ILL. 414.)

1. A corporation composed of private individuals, not restrained by law from conducting its business for private benefit, which does not report to and is not inspected by any state official, elects its own managers without the state's approval, and by law owes the state no duty, is a private corporation within the provisions of the Illinois constitution prohibiting municipalities from making donations to private corporations.
2. A statute requiring a county and city to pay a percentage of liquor license fees to a certain home is repealed, but not retrospectively repealed, by a constitutional provision prohibiting municipalities from making donations to a private corporation.
3. The provision of the constitution prohibiting municipalities from making donations to private corporations is self-executing, and operated as paramount law from the adoption of the constitution.
4. A city does not, by an appropriation and payment of its revenue for many years in violation of the constitution, estop itself to assert that it is prohibited in future from making such payment.

(October 11, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to turn over to petitioner certain money derived from liquor licenses. Affirmed.

NOTE.—For note on the question when constitutional provisions are self-executing, see note to Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co. (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 261.

For state institutions as distinguished from private corporations, see note to State v. Board of Regents (Kan.) ante, 373.

29 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. B. Loomis and F. S. Loomis, for appellant:

The charter of the Washingtonian Home was a valid exercise of legislative power and discretion at the time it was granted, and was not repealed or annulled by separate section No. 2 of the Constitution of 1870.

Schall v. Bowman, 62 Ill. 321; Corington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548; Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Pinckney, 74 Ill. 277; Middleport v. Atina L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 562; Wright v. Bishop, 88 Ill. 302; Lippincott v. Pana, 92 Ill. 24; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 77; Allyer v. State, 10 Ohio St. 588; State v. Barbee, 3 Ind. 253; Keane v. Phillips, 117 Pa. 236; Perkins v. Board of Police, 41 La. Ann. 701; State v. Thompson, 2 Kan. 482; Slack v. Maysville & L. R. Co. 18 B. Mon. 1; State v. Macon County Ct. 41 Mo. 458; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 557; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607; Indiana County v. Agricultural Soc. of Indiana County, 85 Pa. 857; Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397.

The Washingtonian Home is not a private corporation within the meaning of the constitutional clause referred to.

Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 263, 14 Am. Rep. 99; Prettyman v. Tawcwell County Supra, 19 Ill. 406, 71 Am. Dec. 230; Firemen's Benev. Assn. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511, 74 Am. Dec. 115; Johnson v. Stark County, 24 Ill. 75; Perkins v. Lewis, 24 Ill. 208; Butler v. Dunham, 27 Ill. 474; Keithsburg v. Frick, 34 Ill. 405; Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill. 9; McLean County v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 878; Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659; Wetherell v. Devine, 116 Ill. 631; Cook County v. Chicago Industrial School for Girls, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 437; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 189, 21 L. R. A. 519; Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 35; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565; Philadelphia v. Masonic Home of Pennsylvania, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545; Donohugh v. Library Co. of Philadelphia, 86 Pa. 306; McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 482, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Gooch v. Association for Relief of Aged Indigent Females, 109 Mass. 558; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1019-1025; Shepherd's Fold v. New York, 96 N. Y. 137; Speer v. Blairsville School Directors, 50 Pa. 150; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 625, 88 Am. Dec. 711; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 559 et seq.

The legislature, having incorporated the Washingtonian Home as a public charity, had the right to endow it from the public treasury.

Sauyer v. Alton, 4 Ill. 127; Mason v. Wait, 5 Ill. 184; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610; Coles v. Madison County, 1 Ill. 120; People v. Wren, 5 Ill. 269; Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1; People v. Power, 25 Ill. 187; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 85; People v. Moon, 4 Ill. 125; Shaw v. Dennis, 10 Ill. 405; Gutzwiller v. People, 14 Ill. 142; Dennis v. Maynard, 15 Ill. 477; Pike County Comrs. v. State, 11 Ill. 202; Sangamon County Supra, v. Springfield, 63 Ill. 66; Logan County Supra, v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 156; Harris v. Whiteside County Supra, 105 Ill. 445, 44 Am. Rep. 808; Marion County v. Lear, 106 Ill. 349; Firemen's Benev. Assn. v.

Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511, 74 Am. Dec. 115; McLean County v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 878.

The legislation in question was a valid exercise of the police power of the state.

4 Chitty's Bl. Com. 163; Cooley, Const. Lim. 203, 704; Hawthorn v. People, supra; Dennehy v. Chicago, 120 Ill. 627; Wilson v. Chicago Sanitary Dist. Trustees, 133 Ill. 448; Marion County v. Lear, supra; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Donoghue v. Philadelphia County, 2 Pa. 230; Kensington Comrs. v. Philadelphia County, 18 Pa. 76; Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 897, 35 Am. Rep. 670; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 243; Ely v. Niagara County Supra, 36 N. Y. 297; Folsom Bros. v. New Orleans, 28 La. Ann. 936; Street v. New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 577; Underhill v. Manchester, 45 N. H. 215; Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 196.

A license is not a tax; therefore the decisions holding that a corporate tax cannot be perverted from corporate purposes have no application.

People v. Thurber, 18 Ill. 554; East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 46 Ill. 892; Livingston v. Board of Trustees, 99 Ill. 564; East St. Louis v. Trustees of Schools, 102 Ill. 489, 40 Am. Rep. 603; Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 261, 36 Am. Rep. 143; Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Peoria, 29 Ill. 180; Ducat v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529; Walker v. Springfield, 94 Ill. 872; Gutweller v. People, 14 Ill. 142; Pike County Comrs. v. State, 11 Ill. 203; Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1; Firemen's Benev. Assn. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511, 74 Am. Dec. 115; People v. Power, 25 Ill. 187; Sangamon County Supra. v. Springfield, 68 Ill. 66; Benevolent Assn. of Paid Fire Dept. v. Farnwell, 100 Ill. 197; Dennehy v. Chicago, 120 Ill. 627.

The city consented to the appropriation of the fund in question to the Washingtonian Home.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 39; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Quincy, 136 Ill. 493; People v. Salomon, 54 Ill. 41; People v. Farnham, 35 Ill. 563; Roby v. Chicago, 64 Ill. 447; Mariel v. East St. Louis, 94 Ill. 69; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. West Chicago Park Comrs. 151 Ill. 204, 25 L. R. A. 300; Booth v. Wiley, 102 Ill. 106; Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 578; Choisser v. People, 140 Ill. 21; Connett v. Chicago, 114 Ill. 239; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Sparta, 77 Ill. 505; Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1; People v. Logan County Supra, 63 Ill. 874; Gaddis v. Richland County, 92 Ill. 119; Owners of Lands v. People, 118 Ill. 296; Strosser v. Ft. Wayne, 100 Ind. 451; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 470; People v. Lothrop, 24 Mich. 235; Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41; Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447.

Mr. S. P. Shope, with Messrs. Harry Rubens and Sigmund Zeisler, for appellee:

The Washingtonian Home is a private corporation.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 8; Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Rundle v. Delaware & R. Canal, 1 Wall. Jr. 290; Sweatt v. Boston, 29 L. R. A.

H. & E. R. Co. 8 Cliff. 339; Waterman, Corp. § 17; Louisville v. Louisville University Trustees, 15 B. Mon. 642; People v. McAdams, 82 Ill. 356; Cleveland v. Stewart, 3 Ga. 291; Walker, American Law, 7th ed. 236, 237; Harvard v. St. Clair & M. Leves & D. Co. 51 Ill. 180; Harvard v. People, 51 Ill. 188; Hessler v. Drainage Comrs. 53 Ill. 105.

The Constitution of 1870 repealed section 7 of the Washingtonian Home Act.

Phillips v. Quick, 63 Ill. 445; People v. Maynard, 14 Ill. 419; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Chance v. Marion County, 64 Ill. 66; Concord v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 92 U. S. 625, 28 L. ed. 628; Cook County v. Chicago Industrial School for Girls, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 437.

The legislature is powerless to impose a tax upon a city without its consent. A law creating a corporate debt without the consent of the municipality is unconstitutional.

Marshall v. Stillman, 61 Ill. 218; Choisser v. People, 140 Ill. 21; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Aurora, 99 Ill. 205.

The elements of an estoppel against the city are entirely wanting.

Logan County Supra. v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 156; Rigelow, Estoppel, 4th ed. p. 445; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 17, 18; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 40; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 251.

Craig, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a petition for mandamus brought by the Washingtonian Home of Chicago against the city of Chicago to compel the city to pay to the petitioner $25,000,—10 per cent of moneys received for licenses granted by the city for the right or privilege to sell spirituous liquors from January 1, 1893, to April 1, 1894. To the petition the city of Chicago interposed a general demurrer, which the court sustained, and the petition was dismissed. To reverse the judgment of the circuit court the petitioner appealed.

The petitioner is a corporation organized under an act of the legislature approved February 16, 1867. That act was set out in the petition, sections 1 and 2 of which are as follows:

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, that the Washingtonian Home Association of Chicago is hereby created, and declared to be a body corporate and politic, under the name of 'The Washingtonian Home of Chicago,' with power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, contract and be contracted with; to take, by gift, grant, devise or otherwise, property, real, personal and mixed, and the same to hold, use, lease, convey, mortgage and otherwise dispose of, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned; to adopt and use a corporate seal, and alter the same at pleasure; also to erect and maintain such buildings and other fixtures and conveniences as may be deemed requisite or necessary for the purposes of this corporation.

"Sec. 2. The object of this incorporation shall be the founding and maintenance of an institution for the care, cure, and reclamation of inebriates."

Section 3 authorized the corporation to adopt such by-laws for the management of the institution as it thought proper.

Sections 4 and 5 are as follows:

"Sec. 4. Fifteen of the directors of said home, to be selected by lot, shall hold their office until the third Monday of January, A. D. 1869, and the remaining fifteen until the third Monday of January, A. D. 1871; and on the second Monday of January, A. D. 1869, and biennially thereafter, said corporation shall elect successors in place of those whose term of office shall expire the Monday thereafter, who shall, respectively, hold their offices for two years, and until their successors shall have been elected; and in case of removal, death, or resignation of any one or more of said directors or their successors before the expiration of their term of office, their place may be filled by said remaining directors; and such person or persons shall hold their office until the next biennial election. Seven of said directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"Sec. 5. Any person sentenced by the authorities of the city of Chicago to the Bridewell or house of correction for intemperance, drunkenness, or for any misdemeanor caused thereby, may, with the consent of the proper officers of said home, be received and detained as an inmate of said home in lieu of the Bridewell or house of correction, until the expiration of such sentence; and when any such person has been committed to the city Bridewell or house of correction for any such misdemeanor caused by intoxication or for drunkenness, either justice of the police court may, with the consent aforesaid, cause him to be transferred to said home for the unexpired term of sentence."

Section 7 provides:

"Sec. 7. It shall be the duty of the treasurer of the county of Cook and the treasurer of the city of Chicago, or of the officers of either into whose hands the same may come or be paid, to pay over to said corporation in quarterly installments, for the support and maintenance of said institution, 10 per cent of all moneys received for all licenses granted by authority of said county or city for the right or privilege to vend or sell spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors within the said county of Cook and city of Chicago."

Section 7 was amended by an act in force July 1, 1883, providing that in no case shall the sum so paid for or during any one year exceed $20,000.

It is alleged in the petition that, immediately after the act went into effect, petitioner perfected its organization, and at once proceeded to carry out the objects of its incorporation, and has continued its organization and continued to carry out the objects of its organization; that, since its organization up to the present time, petitioner has cared for and treated in its said institution not less than 18,000 inebriates, large numbers of whom have, by reason of such care and treatment, been cured and reclaimed from their unfortunate habits of drunkenness and inebriety.

That, of the above number of inebri-ates as aforesaid for and treated by petitioner as aforesaid, a large number, to wit, about 3,865 thereof, were persons sentenced by the authorities of said city of Chicago to the Bridewell or house of correction of said city, for intemperance, drunkenness, or for misdemeanors caused thereby, who, with the consent of the proper authorities of said home, were received and maintained as inmates of the home in lieu of the Bridewell until the expiration of such sentence. It is also alleged in the petition that from the time of petitioner's organization until July 1, 1883, the treasurer of the city of Chicago paid to it, in quarterly installments, for its support and maintenance, 10 per cent of all moneys received for licenses to sell spirituous liquors within the city. That after the said amendatory act went into force, to wit, after July 1, 1883, the treasurer of the said city of Chicago continued to pay over to petitioner, in the manner hereinbefore stated, in quarterly installments, for the support and maintenance of its aforesaid institution, 10 per cent of all moneys received by him as such treasurer as aforesaid for all licenses granted by authority of said city of Chicago, not exceeding $20,000 in any one year, up to and including the quarterly installment due on the 1st day of January, 1893. That since January 1, 1893, the city treasurer has refused to make any payments.

It is claimed on behalf of the city of Chicago that section 7 of the Act of 1867, which requires the city to pay to the home 10 per cent of all moneys received for licenses to sell spirituous liquors, and the amendatory Act of 1883, whereby the amount was limited to $20,000 per annum, are unconstitutional and void; that the section and amendment violate that clause of the Constitution of 1870 which reads as follows: "No county, city, town, township, or other municipality shall ever become subscriber to the capital stock of any railroad or private corporation, or make donation to, or loan its credit in aid of such corporation: Provided, however, that the adoption of this article shall not be construed as affecting the right of any such municipality to make such subscriptions where the same had been authorized, under existing laws, by a vote of the people of such municipalities prior to such adoption." It will be observed that this provision of the constitution prohibits cities and other municipal corporations from making donations or loaning their credit in aid of any private corporation; and the first question to be considered is whether the Washingtonian Home is a private corporation, within the meaning of the constitution. As has been seen, the 2d section of the Act creating the home declares the object of the corporation to be the founding and maintenance of an institution for the care, cure, and reclamation of inebriates. The charter contains nothing prohibiting the corporation from making such charges for the care or cure of patients as it may think best; but, on the other hand, section 8 confers the power to adopt such by-laws as it may think proper for the management of its business. The charter does not specify who the incorporators shall be, but the 1st section of the charter declares the Washingtonian Home Association of Chicago to be a body corporate and politic. Who constituted the association or what was the qualification of members when it was created a corporation is not disclosed by this record. Section 4 provides that fifteen directors, to be selected by lot, shall hold office until the third Monday of January, 1869, and the remaining fifteen until the third Monday of January, 1871; but the act is silent as to who shall elect the first board of directors. The act nowhere prescribes how any person can become a member of the corporation, nor is there any provision in regard to the salary of officers or directors. So far as appears, the persons who composed the Washingtonian Home Association of Chicago when the act was passed were clothed with corporate power, under which they might transact the business mentioned in the act for their own private benefit. At all events, no state control over the institution is provided for, nor has Chicago or Cook county any voice in its control or management. The corporation has the right to acquire and hold property, both real and personal, but the state has no voice in the management or control of the property thus acquired, or in the mode or manner in which the institution shall be managed or conducted. The act makes no provision for any report to be made by the institution to the state or any of its officials. Indeed, no provision whatever is made for an inspection or visitation of the institution in behalf of the state or by any state officer, but the entire supervision and control seem, under the charter, to be intrusted to private individuals. No officer or manager of the corporation is elected by the people or appointed by the state. The institution owes no duty to the public or the state.

Is such a corporation a public one, or is it a private corporation, within the meaning of the constitution? A brief reference to a few authorities will demonstrate, as we think, that the corporation is a private one. Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 8, says: "By another classification corporations have been divided into public corporations and private corporations. The difference between these two classes of corporations is radical, and hence they are in many instances governed by widely different principles of law. Private corporations are associations formed by the voluntary agreement of their members, such as banking, railroad, and manufacturing companies. Public corporations are not voluntary associations at all, and there is no contractual relation between the corporations who compose them; they are merely government institutions, created by law for the administration of the public affairs of the community. States, counties, and municipalities are examples of public corporations." In Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 688, 4 L. ed. 667, Justice Story, in pointing out the distinction between private and public corporations, said: "Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public purposes only, such as towns, cities, parishes, and counties; and in many respects they are so, although they involve some private interests; but, strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government, for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. If, therefore, the foundation be private, though under the charter of the government, the corporation is private, however extensive the uses may be to which it is devoted, either by the bounty of the founder, or the nature and objects of the institution. For instance, a bank created by the government for its own uses, whose stock is exclusively owned by the government, is in the strictest sense, a public corporation. So an hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity. But a bank whose stock is owned by private persons is a private corporation, although it is erected by the government, and its objects and operations partake of a public nature. The same doctrine may be affirmed of insurance, canal, bridge, and turnpike companies. In all these cases the uses may, in a certain sense, be called public, but the corporations are private,—as much so, indeed, as if the franchises were vested in a single person. This reasoning applies in its full force to eleemosynary corporations. An hospital founded by a private benefactor is, in point of law, a private corporation, although dedicated by its charter to general charity. So a college founded and endowed in the same manner, although, being for the promotion of learning and piety, it may extend its charity to scholars from every class in the community, and thus acquire the character of a public institution. This is the unequivocal doctrine of the authorities; and cannot be shaken but by undermining the most solid foundations of the common law. . . . When the corporation is said, at the bar, to be public, it is not merely meant that the whole community may be the proper objects of the bounty, but that the government have the sole right, as trustees of the public interests, to regulate, control, and direct the corporation, and its funds and its franchisees, at its own good will and pleasure." Waterman, Corp. § 17, says: "A corporation is private when the whole interest does not belong to the government, or the corporation is not created for the administration of political or municipal power. A chartered religious society is a private corporation. A corporation may be private and yet the charter contain provisions of a purely public character introduced solely for the public good, and as a general police regulation of the state." See also Louisville v. Louisville University Trustees, 15 B. Mon. 642; People v. McAdams, 82 Ill. 356; Cleveland v. Stewart, 8 Ga. 238. Under the rule declared in the authorities cited, it is plain that the Washingtonian Home is nothing more than a private corporation.

The Constitution of 1848 contained no provision prohibiting cities from making donations to private corporations, and, if the legislature conferred the power upon cities, no reason is perceived why that power might not be exercised. But conceding that section 7 of the Act of 1867, under which the Washingtonian Home was incorporated, was constitutional when enacted, the question then arises how that act was affected by the constitutional provision of 1870, which prohibits cities from making donations to private corporations. It will be observed that the act does not authorize the city to make a contract with the home under which persons sentenced to the Bridewell for intemperance, drunkenness, or for any misdemeanor caused thereby, may be taken into the home, and retained for such time as they may have been sentenced for treatment or for any other purpose; but the act, by its terms, is mandatory on the city, and compels it to pay over $20,000 per annum in quarterly installments to the home for its support and maintenance. The petition for mandamus is not predicated on any contract existing between the city and the home, but the right to require the payment of the fund is predicated on the provisions of the Act of 1867, and upon those provisions alone. It is set out in the petition that during the years 1892 and 1893, and up to the time the petition was filed, in 1894, the amount received by the city from licenses has not been less than $2,000,000 per annum, so that 10 per cent received for licenses each year is far in excess of $20,000, so that the amount the home seeks to compel the city to pay over has become a fixed and definite sum; and it is a matter of no moment whether the money demanded by the home comes from liquor licenses received by the city into its treasury, or from funds in the treasury raised by taxation. Under the Act of 1867, the city was required to pay over to the home each year, from its revenues derived from liquor licenses, 10 per cent of the amount received, not exceeding $20,000, for the support and maintenance of that institution. This was required as a donation. By the terms of the section of the constitution, supra, such donation was prohibited; and, whatever may have been the obligation imposed upon the city by the Act of 1867 before the Constitution of 1870 was adopted, after the adoption of the constitution the city had no power or authority to donate any of its revenues derived from liquor licenses or from any other source to a private corporation. It declares: "No county, city, town, etc., shall ever become subscriber to the capital stock of any railroad or private corporation, or make donation to or loan its credit in aid of such corporation." This provision of the constitution required no legislation to place it in full force and effect. It was, like some other provisions of the constitution, self-executing, and operated as a paramount law from the time the constitution was adopted by the people. Phillips v. Quick, 63 Ill. 445; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Chance v. Marion County, 64 Ill. 66. In the case first cited, it is said: "But it may be said that constitutional provisions require legislation to carry them into effect. This is true in many cases, but not in all, as will occur to every person on a moment's reflection. In cases where its provisions are negative or prohibitory in their character, they execute themselves. Where that instrument limits the power of either of the departments of the government, or where it prohibits the performance of any act by an officer or person, no one would contend that the power might be exercised or the act performed until prohibited by the general assembly. The constitution undeniably has as much vigor in prohibiting the exercise of power or the performance of an act as the general assembly. That body could add to the prohibition penalties and forfeitures if the constitutional prohibition should be disregarded, but the prohibited act would, nevertheless, be void. Where the constitution requires the performance of an act, but provides neither officers, the means, or the mode in which the act shall be performed, in such a case there is no other means of carrying such a provision into effect but by appropriate legislation. In such cases the constitution does not execute such provisions. That instrument, all will concede, may repeal, and does repeal, laws which are repugnant to its provisions. The very first section of the schedule declares that all laws in force at the adoption of the constitution, and not inconsistent with its provisions, shall continue to be as valid as if the constitution had not been adopted. This, by implication, says that all that conflict therewith shall be invalid and of no force. In fact, this provision preserves rights of the state and of individuals that would have otherwise been lost. The understanding with all persons is that a law passed either before or after the adoption of the constitution which is repugnant to its provisions must be held to be of no valid force, and precisely as if it had been repealed before the performance of the act." This question is discussed in Cook County v. Chicago Industrial School, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 487, and, among other things, it is there said (566): "If, on the one side, a statute directs the county board to pay money to a school which appears, not on the face of the statute, but from outside proof, to be controlled by a church, and if, on the other side, the constitution, in a self-executing provision, directs the county board not to pay money to such a school, which direction is to be followed? We answer, unhesitatingly, the latter. When the constitution says, 'You must not pay,' it must be obeyed in preference to a statute which says, 'You must pay.' And this is true, not only where the statute on its face is in conflict with the constitutional provision, but also in a case where an attempt to apply the statute to a given state of facts gives rise to a violation of such provision. We are therefore of the opinion that, upon the facts of this case, the Act of May 28, 1879, imposes no obligation upon the county of Cook which is superior to its obligation to obey section 8 of article 8 of the Constitution." We do not think the constitution operated retrospectively. Under section 7 of the Act of 1867, the city was authorized to make an annual donation to the home; but, upon the adoption of the Constitution in 1870, all cities were thereafter prohibited from making donations to a private corporation. The donations made prior to the adoption of the constitution remained unaffected, but donations after that time were prohibited.

But it is insisted in the argument that as the city paid over this fund quarterly for a period of over twenty years, as required by section 7 of the Act, and as the payment was recognized each year in the annual appropriation ordinances of the city, and as the city has received a substantial benefit each year in return, the city is bound by its ratification of the act, and is now estopped from denying its constitutionality. By the adoption of the Constitution in 1870, the 7th section of the Act of 1867 was repealed, and from that time it was nugatory; and the fact that the officers of the city for twenty-two years paid over to the home annually a portion of the revenue of the city, in violation of law, could not work an estoppel on the city; nor did the fact that the city council annually, in its appropriation ordinances, recognized and made provision for the payment of the fund to the home, estop the city from refusing payment at any time it might elect to do so. The revenues of the city of Chicago arising from licenses, from taxation, and from all other sources are owned by the city, and held by it in trust to be used for corporate purposes which are lawful, and the revenues of a city cannot be diverted to any other purpose. The revenues of a city cannot be donated by the officers of the city or by the city council to any person they may think entitled to the same; but, on the other hand, such revenues can only be paid out or appropriated by the city council or its officers in the manner and for the purposes authorized by law. Where the lawful power does not exist, the payment is unauthorized and void, and the city will lose no rights where the money has been unlawfully paid out by its officers. The city having no power to pay over its revenues to the home, the fact of payment for a series of years will not estop it. In Logan County Suprs. v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 166, in speaking in regard to estoppel in pais, it is said (159): "Before the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked, there must have been some positive acts by the municipal officers which may have induced the action of the adverse party, and where it would be inequitable to permit the corporation to stultify itself by retracting what its officers had done." An estoppel by matter in pais may be defined as an indisputable admission, arising from the circumstance that the party claiming the benefit of it has, while acting in good faith, been induced, by the voluntary, intelligent action of the party against whom it is alleged, to change his position. Bigelow, Estoppel, 2d ed. p. 845. "The other party must have been induced to act upon the representation or concealment. His action must have been of a character to result in substantial prejudice, were he not permitted to rely on the estoppel." 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 17, 18. Here, so far as appears, the home was not induced to change its position, nor was it induced to do or not do anything on account of the payments which were annually made by the city of Chicago different from what it would have done if the city had never made any payments.

The judgment will be affirmed:

39 L. R. A.

Ira BARCHARD et al., Appts.,

v.

Josephine KOHN.

(157 Ill. 579.)

The lien of a chattel mortgage upon property exempt from execution is not waived by obtaining judgment upon the notes secured by the mortgage and levying upon the mortgaged property under execution thereon, although the exempt property is set off to the debtor as such; but such lien may be enforced by seizure and sale under the terms of the mortgage, in a jurisdiction where the mortgage creates only a lien and does not transfer the legal title, since there is no such inconsistency between remedies as there would be where the levy asserted title in the mortgagor while the enforcement of the mortgage claimed title in the mortgagee.

(October 11, 1895.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged trespass in taking property claimed under a chattel mortgage. Reversed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an action of trespass, begun on April 14, 1891, by appellee against appellant Borrmann, a dry-goods merchant, and appellant Barchard, a constable, for the alleged unlawful taking and carrying away of a stock of goods claimed to be the property of appellee, and entering for that purpose into the store No. 981 West Eighteenth street in Chicago, on April 18, 1891, where the goods were then located. Three pleas were filed: The first, not guilty. The second, averring that plaintiff, Josephine Kohn, was the wife of William Kohn; that William Kohn was the owner of the goods and chattels on June 16, 1890, and on that day executed a chattel mortgage upon the same to the defendant Borrmann to secure $3,000, of which $2,000 remained unpaid at the time of the alleged trespass; that Borrmann, by his agent, Barchard, took possession of the property under said mortgage, and, in pursuance of its terms, the property was sold at public auction on May 2, 1891, for $421.40, an amount insufficient to pay what was due upon the mortgage. The third plea sets up that the entry into the premises was made in a quiet and peaceable manner, and without unnecessary damage, in order to take the goods under the mortgage. The trial in the circuit court was before the court and a jury, and resulted in verdict and judgment for $800 in favor of plaintiff. The judgment has been affirmed by the appellate court, and an order has been made by that court certifying that the cause involves questions of law of such importance on account of collateral interests involved that it should be passed upon by the supreme court. The case is brought here by appeal from the judgment of the appellate court.

NOTE.—On the general subject of election of remedies, see notes to Mills v. Parkhurst (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 472; Crossman v. Universal Rubber Co. (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 91; Terry v. Munger (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 216; Conrow v. Little (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 632; Fowler v. Bowery Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 145.

The material facts necessary to present the question involved are as follows: The chattel mortgage was given to secure twenty-nine notes executed by William Kohn to Borrmann, dated June 16, 1890, twenty-eight of which were each for $100, payable weekly thereafter, and the twenty-ninth was for $200, payable on March 1, 1891; so that all the notes had been due for some two weeks before the levy of the executions hereinafter named. The mortgage was not recorded until July 26, 1891, long after the present trespass suit was begun. On March 18, 1891, the mortgagor, William Kohn, executed two judgment notes,—one for $98.52, to D. Liebman, and one for $231.27, to A. Lewin & Sons. On the next day, March 19, 1891, judgments were entered up upon these notes, and executions issued and placed in the sheriff's hands, the sheriff receiving the Lewin execution at 10:55 A. M. and the Liebman execution at 11 A. M. of that day. On the same day the appellant Borrmann, learning of these judgments, caused judgment for $2,000 to be entered up upon eighteen of the notes secured by his chattel mortgage then remaining unpaid, and execution to be issued thereon, the sheriff receiving said execution at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of March 19, 1891. On the same day, and in the order in which they came to the hands of the sheriff, the three executions were levied upon the property included in the chattel mortgage. The next day, Kohn, the judgment debtor, presented a schedule, and asked to have his legal exemptions set off to him out of the property levied upon under the provisions of the exemption law of this state. 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. p. 1112, chap. 52, § 14. Appraisers were appointed, and on March 26, 1891, Kohn selected, and there was set off to him as exempt, property to the amount of $400, being a part of the property covered by the chattel mortgage. Subsequently the balance of the property levied upon, after taking out the exemptions, was sold under the executions, and out of the proceeds of the sale the Lewin and Liebman executions were paid in full, and the remainder of the proceeds was, on March 30, 1891, applied upon the execution of the appellant Borrmann, leaving still due to him upon his judgment about $950. It is claimed by appellee that her husband, William Kohn, owed her $250 when the executions were levied; that he paid $100 of this amount to her on March 19, 1891, and in payment of the remaining $150 turned over the exempt property, amounting to about $400, to her by first transferring it to one Adolph Cohen, who, on or about March 26, 1891, transferred it back to appellee. All instructions asked by the defendants submitting to the jury the question whether the property really belonged to the plaintiff were refused. It was this exempt property which the appellants took under the mortgage on April 18, 1891, for the purpose of satisfying pro tanto the $950 remaining due thereon, and which was sold, after the giving and posting of notice as required by the mortgage, at public auction, on May 2, 1891, as alleged in the pleas.

Mr. Jesse Holdom for appellants.

Messrs. Moran, Kraus & Mayer, for appellee:

Under the law of this state, a chattel mortgage is but a conditional sale, and when the mortgagor fails to perform the condition, the title to the mortgaged property, so far as it is held by the mortgagor, vests in the mortgagee.

Rhines v. Phelps, 8 Ill. 456; Pike v. Colvin, 67 Ill. 227; Durfee v. Grinnell, 69 Ill. 371.

The levy of the execution upon the mortgaged property on April 19, 1891, seven weeks after default had been made in the payment of the last note secured under the mortgage, was pursuing a course which was neither concurrent nor consistent with the assertion of any right under the mortgage.

Evans v. Warren, 123 Mass. 303; Buck v. Ingersoll, 11 Met. 226; Suett v. Brown, 5 Pick. 178; Legg v. Willard, 17 Pick. 140, 28 Am. Dec. 283; Libby v. Cushman, 29 Me. 429; Whitney v. Farrar, 51 Me. 418; Kimball v. Marshall, 8 N. H. 291; Haynes v. Sanborn, 45 N. H. 429; Dyckman v. Seatonson, 39 Minn. 182.

If one holding goods in pledge in the hands of an agent attach them for the same debt secured by the pledge, he thereby relinquishes the lien of his pledge.

Jones, Pledges, § 600; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 565; Butler v. Miller, 1 N. Y. 496; Hanchett v. Riverdale Distillery Co. 15 Ill. App. 57.

Where a mortgagee permits the mortgagor to remain in possession until long after the maturity of the mortgage debt, a purchaser who buys the property from the mortgagor will hold it as against the mortgagee, even though said purchaser had actual notice of the mortgage.

Lemen v. Robinson, 59 Ill. 115; McDonnell v. Stewart, 83 Ill. 588; Sage v. Browning, 51 Ill. 217; Frank v. Miner, 50 Ill. 444.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in the case is whether the appellant Borrmann, mortgagee in the chattel mortgage, had a right to take possession under his mortgage of the goods set off as exempt to William Kohn, the judgment debtor and mortgagor, or whether, by taking judgment upon the notes secured by the mortgage, and levying the execution issued thereon upon the mortgaged property, and allowing a part of the proceeds of the sale made under the executions to be applied upon the judgment, he thereby waived his right to proceed under his mortgage against the portion of the mortgaged property not sold under the executions, and set off as exempt to the judgment debtor. The question arises out of the ruling of the trial court excluding the chattel mortgage when offered by the defendants as a justification of the alleged trespass, and admitting it only in mitigation of damages, and also out of the action of the court in instructing the jury that as a matter of law the chattel mortgage did not justify the defendants in seizing the goods in question. As the mortgage was not recorded, and provided for the sale of the goods mortgaged in the ordinary course of business, it was void as to creditors, but it was good as between the parties to it. Grogg v. Sanford, 24 Ill. 17, 76 Am. Dec. 719; Forest v. Tinkham, 29 Ill. 141; McDowell v. Stewart, 83 Ill. 588; Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 188; Greensbaum v. Wheeler, 90 Ill. 296; William Deering & Co. v. Washburn, 141 Ill. 153.

The main case which holds that an attachment of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee for the mortgage debt is a waiver of his lien under the mortgage is Evans v. Warren, 122 Mass. 308. The decision in that case was placed upon the ground substantially that the liens created by mortgage and by attachment upon the same property are essentially different, and cannot coexist, for the reason that under the Massachusetts statutes the equity of redemption of personal property is not subject to attachment, and hence, if the mortgagee causes an attachment to issue against the mortgaged property, it is a waiver of the mortgage lien. The cases which hold that the attachment operated as a waiver of the plaintiff's rights under the mortgage do so upon the general grounds that a person cannot avail himself of inconsistent remedies in relation to the same matter, and, having chosen and carried into effect one remedy, he cannot resort to a different one, involving a repudiation of the grounds upon which the first one was based; that the suit on the mortgage and the attachment suit were inconsistent, because the one proceeds upon the ground that the mortgagee is the owner of the property, and the other upon the ground that the mortgagor thereof is owner; that when the debt matured the mortgagee had the right to take the property under the mortgage, he having the legal title, subject only to a right of redemption; and that by bringing the attachment suit he elected to treat the property as the property of the debtor, and cannot, by seeking to enforce his mortgage, assert an ownership and right of possession in himself antedating the attachment. The reasoning in Evans v. Warren, supra, was held to be unsatisfactory, and its doctrine was repudiated in Byram v. Stout, 127 Ind. 195. In the latter case the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage brought an action to foreclose it; and a junior mortgagee set up as a defense that the complainant had previously brought suit upon the evidences of debt secured by his mortgage, and had therein issued a writ of attachment, and levied it upon the mortgaged property, and had thereby released his mortgage lien; but the court held that the attachment was not a waiver of the mortgage lien, and did not estop the mortgagee from claiming under his mortgage, basing its decision mainly upon the ground that in Indiana the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage is a mere lien holder. Jones, Mortg. § 565. In support of the conclusion that the mortgagee of personal property is a mere lien holder, Indiana decisions are there referred to, holding that personal property under mortgage may be levied upon and sold by execution subject to the mortgage lien. The case of Howard v. Parks, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 603, follows the case of Byram v. Stout, supra, holding that a mortgage lien upon personal property is not waived by suing out an attachment upon the debt secured by the mortgage, and that in Texas a chattel mortgage has the effect of a lien on the property.

There can be no doubt that the chattel mortgage act of Illinois recognizes a lien as existing under the mortgage upon the property mortgaged. Section 1 thereof speaks of a mortgage, trust deed, or other conveyance of personal property "having the effect of a mortgage or lien upon such property." 2 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. p. 1680. We have held that a court of equity has jurisdiction to foreclose a chattel mortgage. McCauley v. Rogers, 104 Ill. 578; Dupuy v. Gibson, 36 Ill. 197; Gaar v. Hurd, 92 Ill. 815. A bill in equity could not be filed to foreclose such a mortgage, unless a lien was thereby conferred which could be enforced against the property. If, therefore, an attachment of the mortgaged property in a suit upon the debt secured by the chattel mortgage is not a waiver of the right to proceed under the mortgage where the mortgage is a lien upon the property, such an attachment will not be a waiver in this state when the subsequent proceeding, begun to enforce the mortgage, is a bill in equity to foreclose. In such case there is no inconsistency between the two remedies, as both certainly recognize the mortgagor as owner. Where a chattel mortgage is properly acknowledged and recorded, a third person, who is a creditor of the mortgagor, may levy an attachment or an execution upon the property in the possession of the mortgagor subject to the mortgage. Beach v. Derby, 19 Ill. 617; Pike v. Colvin, 67 Ill. 237; Durfee v. Grinnell, 69 Ill. 371. We have also held that a chattel mortgage is a conditional sale; that when there is default in the performance of the condition the title of the mortgagor vests in the mortgagee; and that the mortgagee, upon default or condition broken, being invested with the legal title, may bring replevin or trover, or reduce the property to possession, and proceed to sell under the power in the mortgage. Pike v. Colvin and Durfee v. Grinnell, supra; Cleaves v. Herbert, 61 Ill. 126; Simmons v. Jenkins, 76 Ill. 479; Arnold v. Stock, 81 Ill. 407; Greensbaum v. Wheeler, 90 Ill. 296; Rhines v. Phelps, 8 Ill. 455.

But even in this class of remedies the inconsistency relied upon as the basis of the theory of waiver is more seeming than real. In Howard v. Parks, supra, which was a statutory action for the trial of the right of property, in which it was sought to foreclose and enforce a contract lien upon personalty, the court says: "We are of opinion that . . . this lien was not waived by suing out an attachment upon the debt secured by such lien. We see no such inconsistency in the two suits as that the suing out of the attachment should have this effect." In the case at bar there was no attachment of the property covered by the chattel mortgage in the proceeding upon the note secured thereby. The property was levied upon under an execution issued upon a judgment entered upon the note so secured. There can be no substantial difference, however, between taking the property under execution after judgment and taking it under an attachment before judgment. If there is no inconsistency between the enforcement of the mortgage lien and an attachment of the property, there can be none between the enforcement of such lien and the levy of an execution upon the property. The chattel mortgage here provides that, in case of default in payment, or in any of the other conditions of the mortgage, the mortgagee shall have the right to take immediate possession of the property, and may sell the same, and out of the proceeds of sale, after paying the costs and debt secured, shall render the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor. Although the naked legal title, after condition broken, vests in the mortgagee for the purpose of obtaining possession and applying the proceeds of the sale of the property to the payment of the debt, yet the requirement that the surplus proceeds be paid to the mortgagor shows that the absolute and exclusive ownership is not in the mortgagee. On the contrary, this requirement indicates that even the enforcement of the mortgage by seizure and sale under the power therein contained proceeds upon the idea that the rights of an owner still remain with the mortgagor to a certain extent.

It has long been the doctrine of this court in regard to real-estate mortgages, that the mortgagee may sue upon the note secured by the mortgage, or bring ejectment on condition broken, or file a bill in chancery to foreclose, and that he may pursue these remedies either concurrently or successively. Fish v. Glover, 154 Ill. 86, and cases there cited. In such cases, reducing the debt to judgment does not release the mortgage. It merely changes the form of the debt, so that the mortgage then becomes a security for the payment of the judgment. The judgment on the note without satisfaction is no bar to a proceeding in equity to foreclose, and the two suits may be pending at the same time. The lien of the debt secured by the mortgage attaches to the mortgaged property, and, as between the parties, can only be defeated by the payment or discharge of the debt, or by the release of the mortgage. Ibid. It has never been regarded as an objection to the prosecution of ejectment at law and of foreclosure in equity at the same time against the mortgagor of realty that the one proceeds upon the theory of title in the mortgagee and the other upon the theory of title in the mortgagor. Notwithstanding their apparent inconsistency, they may proceed concurrently until the debt secured is satisfied, it being always understood that there can be but one satisfaction. The rule that a mortgagee may proceed concurrently with an action on his note and with lawful proceedings to foreclose his mortgage applies to mortgages of personal property as well as to mortgages of real estate. Burtis v. Bradford, 123 Mass. 129.

The holder of a chattel mortgage, after default, has three remedies, any one or two or all of which he may pursue concurrently, — an action at law to recover the debt, an appropriate action to recover the mortgaged property, and a foreclosure of the mortgage. Herman, Chat. Mortg. § 206; 2 Cobbey, Chat. Mortg. § 947. In the case of chattels, as well as of realty, a personal judgment on the note secured by the mortgage is no bar to a subsequent suit to foreclose the mortgage, and the mortgagee does not lose his right to the mortgaged property if he seizes it on execution under the judgment. 2 Cobbey, Chat. Mortg. §§ 944, 1018. The mortgage, being a specific lien, and the judgment a general lien, may be pursued consistently until the debt is satisfied. The doctrine of election does not apply in such cases. Pingrey, Chat. Mortg. § 1027; Tyson v. Weber, 81 Ala. 470. The authorities which sustain the doctrine of waiver as above stated "depend upon a mere legal technicality, and not upon any principle in equity." Byram v. Stout, supra. In Stier v. Harms, 154 Ill. 476, where the main point decided was that replevin and trespass for the wrongful taking of goods under a distress warrant were analogous, consistent, and concurrent remedies the case of Dyckman v. Sevaton, 39 Minn. 182, was cited as illustrating the general doctrine that, where there are two inconsistent remedies, the selection of one will preclude the right to pursue the other; yet it was not intended to hold that the remedies here under discussion of attachment and foreclosure are inconsistent. Moreover, it is difficult to reconcile them with the decision of this court in Atkins v. Byrnes, 71 Ill. 326. In that case the action was replevin, brought by the holder of a junior chattel mortgage, who had suffered the mortgaged property to remain in the hands of the mortgagor long after the mortgage debt had matured, against the bailiff, who had taken possession of the property under a distress warrant issued by the holder of a prior chattel mortgage, after the debt thereby secured had been overdue an unreasonable length of time. It was held that, although both mortgagees had been guilty of laches, yet, as against each other, under the circumstances, the one first acquiring possession was entitled to priority; that, although the defendant took the property as bailiff under the distress warrant, yet his possession was legally that of the prior mortgagee, for whom he was acting; that the prior mortgagee did not thereby release any lien which he had upon the property by virtue of his chattel mortgage; that, consequently, he could subject the property, except as against third persons whose interests had attached before the property was taken, to the payment of either or both liens; and that the execution of a note for rent due and a chattel mortgage to secure its payment does not operate as a waiver of the right to enforce payment by distress. If the holder of a chattel mortgage, given to secure a note for rent due does not waive his mortgage lien by causing the property to be seized under a distress warrant issued for the rent, then it would seem to follow that the mortgage lien is not waived when the mortgagee causes the property to be taken under an execution upon the judgment obtained in a suit upon the note secured by the mortgage. The lien of the execution is no different from the lien of the distress warrant in its effect upon the right to enforce the mortgage lien.

In the case at bar the mortgaged goods were in custodia legis, when Borrmann's execution came into the sheriff's hands, because they had theretofore been levied upon under the executions issued upon the judgments in favor of Liebman and Lewin & Sons. Borrmann's execution lien was subject to the prior liens of the two other executions. The property set off to Kohn as exempt was set off as exempt from the levy of the three executions. So far as the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property levied upon were applied upon Borrmann's execution, his chattel mortgage was to that extent satisfied. But the execution did not take effect against the property set off as exempt. That property was released from the lien of the execution. It was not sold and applied upon the execution, and did not operate as a satisfaction pro tanto of the judgment into which the mortgage note had been merged. In Conway v. Wilson, 44 N. J. Eq. 457, which was a bill to foreclose a chattel mortgage, the answer set up that the complainant had sued at law on the claim secured by his mortgage, recovered judgment, issued execution, levied on the mortgaged property and other property, and then had directed the sheriff to surrender the goods levied upon to the defendant, and the sheriff did so; and it was claimed from these facts that the complainant, having once had a levy on goods enough to satisfy his demand, his demand would be presumed to be satisfied; but it was held that, although such was the general rule, it could not apply when the defendant himself had received the goods, and retained them. Where property is not taken from the possession of the defendant, or is restored to him at his request, the levy does not operate as a satisfaction, so far as his rights are concerned. Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 475; Hanness v. Bonnell, 23 N. J. L. 159. Hence, if the mortgaged property levied upon by Borrmann had been surrendered to and retained by Kohn, it would not have affected the right of Borrmann to proceed against it under his mortgage. We cannot see why that right was in any way affected by the fact that the property was, upon the application of the debtor, set off as exempt. In Tuesley v. Robinson, 108 Mass. 558, 4 Am. Rep. 575, a chattel mortgage covering property exempt by law was held to be fraudulent as against creditors, but good as between the parties; and upon the bankruptcy of the mortgagor the property was set apart by the assignee as excepted from the operation of the bankruptcy act. It was held that the right of the mortgagee to hold the property as security under his mortgage was not waived or affected by the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy, and that he was entitled to replevy from the mortgagor the property so set off to him. In Sumner v. McKee, 89 Ill. 127, where the mortgagor in a chattel mortgage died before the note secured thereby had matured, and the mortgagee failed to take possession at its maturity, and the widow relinquished her claim to the articles mentioned in the appraisal of her specific allowance, and in lieu thereof elected to take all the articles of personalty inventoried and appraised, including the goods mortgaged, as a creditor of the estate, it was held that she took them subject to the lien of the mortgage. In case of a chattel mortgage the owner waives the benefit of the exemption so far as the encumbrance is operative. Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, § 741. It is questionable whether, as between Borrmann and Kohn, the latter was entitled to have the property set off as exempt from the levy of Borrmann's execution. Borrmann had the right, under his mortgage, to take possession of the property and sell it. There could be no material difference in selling it under the mortgage and directing the sheriff to sell it under the execution and apply the proceeds pro tanto towards the payment of the execution. "Where personal property otherwise exempt from execution has been pledged as collateral security for the payment of a debt, and judgment has been rendered on the debt, an execution may be issued, and the property seized and sold thereon as in other cases." Jones v. Scott, 10 Kan. 38. "Where, by the terms of a chattel mortgage, the mortgagee, at the maturity of his debt, has the right to take possession of the property, he may, if he choose, reduce his debt to judgment, take out execution, and levy upon and sell the mortgaged property as in other cases; in which case the debtor sustains no such injury as will support an action of trespass, even though the chattels thus mortgaged be the articles enumerated by law as exempt from execution." Prost v. Shaw, 8 Ohio St. 270; Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, § 742; Herman, Chat. Mortg. § 207. We are inclined to think that the lien of the mortgage upon the property not sold under the execution was not waived by the proceedings under the execution, and that the court below erred in refusing to admit the mortgage in evidence as a justification of the act of taking possession of the property, and in instructing the jury as follows: "The court instructs you as a matter of law that the defendant Borrmann lost the benefit of any lien which he may have had upon any of the property in question under the chattel mortgage in evidence by the entry of the judgment by him against William Kohn, and by the levy of the execution issued thereon, as shown by the evidence; and that, as a matter of law, the chattel mortgage did not justify the defendants in seizing the goods in question, and it is your duty to find the defendants guilty."

The judgments of the Appellate and Circuit Courts are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas DURKIN

v.

KINGSTON COAL CO. et al., Appts.

(171 Pa. 193.)

1. The constitutional right to acquire, possess, and protect property prevents making a man liable for the acts and engagements of strangers over whom he has no control.
2. The imposition of liability on a mine owner by the Act of 1891, art. 17, for the failure of a certified foreman, whom he is compelled to employ, and with whose acts he cannot interfere, and whose duties are prescribed by the act, to comply with those duties, is unconstitutional and void.
3. A mine foreman is personally liable for his negligence causing injury to a workman in the mine, either under the Act of 1891, permitting only certified foremen to be employed and regulating their duties, or without regard to such statute.

(October 7, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Luzerne County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff while working in the mine of the defendant corporation of which the defendant Jones was the superintendent. Reversed as to the corporation. Affirmed as to Jones.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William C. Price and H. W. Palmer for appellants:

A mine boss, under the Act of March 3, 1870, is a fellow servant with a driver boy employed to haul coal from the chambers of the mine.

The operator of a coal mine fulfils the measure of his duty to his employés if he commits his work to careful and skilful bosses and superintendents, who conduct the same to the best of their skill and ability.

Waddell v. Simons, 112 Pa. 567.

In the absence of constitutional prohibition, legislation of this character cannot be sustained.

Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Cooley, Const. Lim. 1st ed. p. 391; Budd v. State, 3 Humph. 483, 39 Am. Dec. 189; Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511; People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 377, 53 Am. Rep. 34.

This action is brought under the statute which gives the action against the operator for negligence of the boss. Such an action cannot be sustained without the aid of the statute.

NOTE.—The above case is believed to be the first of the kind, as the statute condemned differs from others which have made employers liable to employés for acts of fellow servants in the particular that it attempts also to create the relation of master and servant between the mine owner and a person whom he does not voluntarily employ.

For other statutory regulations for protection of workers in mines, see note to Consolidated Coal & M. Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 25 L. R. A. 648, 29 L. R. A.

ute. But the bosses are joined in the suit. The statute gives no action against them. If they are liable to fellow servants for injuries arising from their negligence, it would be in a common-law action joined with one for statutory negligence.

Kendrick v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 81 Mo. 521; Smith v. Meanor, 16 Serg. & R. 377.

Messrs. Edward A. Lynch and John T. Lenahan, for appellee:

Anthracite mining being a separate and distinct class of mining from any other kind, and as the Act of 1891 includes all anthracite coal mines in the commonwealth, and does not make special provisions for the regulation of some and the exclusion of others, it is clearly constitutional under the principle that the fundamental law permits legislation for classes but not for persons or things of a class.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 351; Kilgers v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401; Lackawanna Twp., Harris App. 160 Pa. 494.

If a law is general and uniform throughout the state, operating alike upon all persons and localities of a class or who are brought within the rules and circumstances provided for it, it is not objectionable as wanting a uniformity of operation.

Reading v. Savage, 124 Pa. 338; State v. Berka, 20 Neb. 375; State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98; Allen v. Pioneer Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 8 L. R. A. 532; State v. Hudson, 44 Ohio St. 187; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 388.

To make such general regulations for the good government of the state and the protection of the rights of individuals as may be deemed important, all contracts and rights are subject to the power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. p. 574; State v. Noyes, 47 Me. 211; Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 234, 60 Am. Rep. 350; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L. R. A. 250; Wright v. Com. 77 Pa. 470; New York v. Williams, 15 N. Y. 502.

In a long line of adjudicated cases this police power of the state stands unchallenged, so that now it has become the accepted law of all the states of our Union.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 37 Vt. 148, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; State v. Noyes, 47 Me. 211; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477; Dabbs v. State, 39 Ark. 353, 43 Am. Rep. 275.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first article of the constitution of this state, known as the "Bill of Rights," declares that all men are possessed of certain inherent and inalienable rights. One of these is the right to acquire, possess, and protect property. The preservation of this right requires, both that every man should be answerable for his own acts and engagements, and that no man should be required to answer for the acts and engagements of strangers over whom he has no control. A statute that should impose such a liability, or that should take the property of one person and give it to another or to the public, without making just compensation therefor, would violate the bill of rights, and would be, for that reason, unconstitutional and void. Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 66, 36 Am. Dec. 141; Ervine's App. 16 Pa. 265, 55 Am. Dec. 499; Kneass' App. 31 Pa. 87; Wolford v. Morgensthal, 91 Pa. 30; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 118 Pa. 431. It is in furtherance of the right to acquire, possess, and protect property that section 18 of the Bill of Rights prohibits the enactment of laws that shall interfere with or impair the obligation of contracts. The tendency toward class legislation for the protection of particular sorts of labor has been so strong, however, that several statutes have recently been passed that could not be sustained under the provisions of the bill of rights. Such was the case in Godcharles v. Wigeman, supra; such was the case with some recent provisions relating to mechanics' liens; and such is alleged by the appellants to be the case with some of the provisions of the Act of 1891 (Pub. Laws, p. 176), under which this action was brought. The title of the Act of 1891 is, "An Act to provide for the health and safety of persons employed in and about the anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania and for the protection and preservation of property connected therewith." It divides the anthracite region into eight districts, and provides for the appointment by the governor of a competent mine inspector in each district, who shall have a general oversight of mining operations within his district. It creates an examining board for each district, with power to examine candidates, and recommend such as they shall deem qualified for the position of mine foreman to the secretary of internal affairs. It is made the duty of this officer to issue certificates to those who apply therefor and have been recommended by the board of examiners. Article 8, § 1, declares that no person "shall be permitted to act as mine foreman or assistant mine foreman of any coal mines or colliery" who has not been examined by the board of examiners, recommended to the secretary of internal affairs, and provided by that officer with a certificate. The employment of a certified mine foreman is made obligatory upon all mine owners and operators, and a failure to do so is punished by a fine of $20 per day, which may be collected from the owner, the operator, or the superintendent in charge of the mine. The duties of the mine foreman are prescribed by the act, and the owner or operator of the mine cannot interfere with them. He is especially to "visit and examine every working place in the mine at least once every alternate day while the men of such place are or should be at work, and direct that each and every working place is properly secured by props or timber, and that safety in all respects is assured by directing that all loose coal or rock shall be pulled down or secured and that no person shall be permitted to work in an unsafe place unless it be for the purpose of making it secure." The mine foreman is also required to examine, at least once every day, "all slopes, shafts, main roads, ways, signal apparatus, pulleys, and timbering, and see that they are in safe and efficient working condition." After having thus most effectually taken the management of his mining operations out of his hands and committed it to officers of its own creation, whose employment is made compulsory upon him, the statute, in section 8 of article 17, imposes upon the mine owner a liability for the neglect or incompetency of the men whom he is compelled to employ, in these words: "That for any injury to person or property occasioned by any violation of this act or any failure to comply with its provisions by any . . . mine foreman, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured against said owner or operator for any direct damages he may have sustained thereby; and in case of loss of life by reason of such neglect or failure aforesaid a right of action shall accrue to the widow and lineal heirs of the person whose life shall be lost for like recovery of damages for the injury they shall have sustained." This statute, regarded as a whole, is an extraordinary piece of legislation. Through it the lawmakers say to the mine owner: "You cannot be trusted to manage your own business. Left to yourself, you will not properly care for your own employés. We will determine what you shall do. In order to make it certain that our directions are obeyed, we will set a mine foreman over your mines, with authority to direct the manner in which your operations shall be conducted, and what precautions shall be taken for the safety of your employés. You shall take for this position a man whom we certify to as competent. You shall pay him his salary. What he orders done in your mines you shall pay for. If, notwithstanding our certificate, he turns out to be incompetent or untrustworthy, you shall be responsible for his ignorance or negligence." Under the operation of this statute the mine foreman represents the commonwealth. The state insists on his employment by the mine owner, and, in the name of the police power, turns over to him the determination of all questions relating to the comfort and the security of the miners, and invests him with the power to compel compliance with his directions. Incredible as it may seem, obedience on the part of the mine owner does not protect him; but, if the mine foreman fails to do properly what the statute directs him to do, the mine owner is declared to be responsible for all the consequences of the incompetency of the representative of the state. This is a strong case of binding the consequences of the fault or folly of one man upon the shoulders of another. This is worse than taxation without representation. It is civil responsibility without blame, and for the fault of another. The same conclusion may be reached by another road.

It has been long settled that a mining boss or foreman is a fellow servant with the other employés of the same master, engaged in a common business, and that the master is not liable for an injury caused by the negligence of such mining boss. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374; Waddell v. Simon, 112 Pa. 567. The duty of the mine owner is to employ competent bosses or foremen to direct his operations. When he does this he discharges the full measure of his duty to his employes, and he is not liable for an injury arising from the negligence of the foreman. Waddell v. Simson, supra. A vice principal is one to whom an employer delegates the performance of duties which the law imposes on him, and the employer is responsible because the duty is his own. As to the acts of the workmen, and the manner in which they do their work, the duty of the employer is to employ persons who are reasonably competent to do the work assigned them, and, if he finds himself mistaken in regard to their competency, to discharge them, when the mistake is discovered. But he is not responsible for the consequences of their negligence as these may affect each other. Ross v. Walker, 189 Pa. 42. Now, the Act of 1891 undertakes to reverse the settled law upon this subject and declare that the employer shall be responsible for an injury to an employe resulting from the negligence of a fellow workman. Prior to the Act of 1891, the man whose negligence caused the injury was alone liable to respond in damages. He might not always have property out of which a judgment could be collected, but the plaintiff must, in any case, take his chances of the solvency of the defendant against whom his cause of action lies. The Act of 1891 undertakes to furnish a responsible defendant for the injured person to pursue. Passing over the head of the fellow servant at whose hands the injury was received, it fastens on the owner of the property on which the accident happened, and declares him to be the guilty person on whose head the consequences of the accident shall fall. To see the true character of this legislation we must keep both lines of objection in mind. We must remember that the injury complained of is due to the negligence of a fellow workman, for which the master is responsible neither in law nor morals. We must also remember that this fellow workman has been designated by the state, his duties defined and his powers conferred by statute, and his employment made compulsory, under heavy penalties, by the same statute. Finally, we must remember that it is the negligence of this fellow servant, whose competency the state has certified, and whose employment the state has compelled, for which the employer is made liable. The state says: "He is competent. You must employ him. You shall surrender to his control the arrangements for the security of your employes." It then says, in effect: "If we impose upon you by certifying to the competency of an incompetent man, or if the man to whom we commit the conduct of your mines neglects his duty, you shall pay for our mistake and for his negligence." We have no doubt that so much, at least, of section 8 of article 17 of the Act of 1891 as imposes liability on the mine owner for the failure of the foreman to comply with the provisions of the act which compels his employment and defines his duties, is unconstitutional and void.

20 L. R. A.

This disposes of this appeal so far as the Kingston Coal Company is concerned.

But why should the certified mine foreman be relieved from the consequences of his negligence? The jury have found that the injury was due to his want of attention to his proper duties, and his liability is clear, without regard to our mining laws. But the statute required him to examine the roads and ways in use in the mine each day. He knew the flm of rock separating the upper from the lower working was but 8 feet thick, at best. He knew that the supports for this flm were not in line with each other in the upper and lower workings. He knew that layers of the rock were falling off, that the thickness of the floor was reduced under the way on which the accident occurred to about 5 feet, and that, not far away, it had fallen down into the lower working; yet, with all this knowledge, he did nothing, so far as we can learn, to increase the security of the way. Whether his conduct be considered with reference to the statute, or regardless of it, his failure to do what he must have known to be necessary was a neglect of duty such as should render him liable to his fellow servant who has suffered from it. Some difficulty has been suggested, growing out of the pleadings, but the declaration is not before us. We cannot determine, therefore, whether an amendment is necessary in order to sustain the judgment against him.

We are not prepared to hold the Act of 1891 to be unconstitutional as a whole. It relates to all anthracite coal mines, and defines what shall be regarded as such mines. Coal may be taken out of the ground by farm owners for their own use, or it may be taken in such small quantities and for such local purposes as to make the application of the mining laws to the operations so conducted, not only unnecessary, but burdensome to the extent of absolute prohibition. Such limited or incipient operations are not within the mischief to remedy which the mining laws were devised. They are ordinarily conducted for purposes of exploration, or for family supply, and ought not to be classed with operations conducted for the supply of the public. The business of coal mining, like that of insurance or banking, may be defined by the legislature. The definition found in the Act of 1891 seems to us reasonable, to be within the fair limits of a legislative definition, and to exclude only such operations as are too small to make the general regulations provided by the act applicable to them. The ground on which we place our judgment is not, therefore, that the act is local, but that the provisions of it which we have considered are in violation of the bill of rights.

The judgment against the Kingston Coal Company is reversed for reasons that are fatal to a recovery against it.

The judgment against William Jones is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

H. M. LEVY

v.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO*et al.*

(105 Cal. 600.)

Compelling a person to disclose his possession of any property of a decedent's estate, or his knowledge concerning such estate, on penalty of imprisonment for refusal, in proceedings on behalf of the estate, being a remedial, and not a penal, proceeding, is not within the constitutional provisions against making any person a witness against himself in a criminal action, and against unreasonable searches and seizures.

(McFarland and De Haven, JJ., dissent.)

(January 6, 1895.)

NOTE.—Constitutional protection against being forced to furnish evidence to be used against one's self in a civil case.

I. Provisions against self-accusation.

a. Limitation to criminal proceedings.

b. Application to proceedings for penalties and forfeitures.

c. General doctrine as to evidence against one's self.

d. The contrary doctrine.

e. Parties in interest.

II. Unreasonable searches and seizures.

III. Right of trial by jury.

IV. Due process of law.

V. Distinction between civil and criminal or penal proceedings.

I. Provisions against self-accusation.

a. Limitation to criminal proceedings.

Constitutional provisions protecting a witness against being compelled to give evidence against himself extend, as will be seen from the cases set forth below in the latter part of this subdivision, to all evidence which could be used against him whether brought out in a civil or criminal proceeding, and are designed for his protection against such use, and refer, therefore, to the case in which the evidence is thus sought to be used as distinguished from that in which it is sought to be deduced. The term "civil case" as used in the heading of this note applies, therefore, to the case in which the evidence with reference to which constitutional protection is claimed, is sought to be or might be used, and this note does not include those cases which are very numerous, in which the constitutional protection was claimed in a civil action against furnishing evidence which tended to criminate one or render him liable to a criminal prosecution only; but the object of this note is to show what constitutional protection one has against being compelled to give evidence in any case which can be used against him in a civil case.

The provision of the Federal Constitution (Fifth Amendment), that no one shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, expressly limits the privilege to criminal cases, and the constitutions of a number of the states, notably New York, California, and Georgia, contain substantially the same provision, and those of a large number of the other states contain the same limitation though expressed in different language. Some of the constitutions, however, as, for example, those of Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Hampshire, and Virginia, provide that no person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself or to testify against himself. But, even under such provisions, the right to protection against giving evidence against one's self has been limited to criminal cases by a decided preponderance of authority.

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to stop further proceedings for the examination of petitioner on oath concerning property alleged to have belonged to the estate of Morris Hoefflich, deceased, and which petitioner was alleged to have concealed and disposed of. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Byron Waters, I. B. L. Brandt, and Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for petitioner:

Sections 1459 and 1460 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which these proceedings were had, are unconstitutional.

Const. art. 1, §§ 18, 19; U. S. Const. 4th and 5th Amendments.

These sections provide for a penalty.

Andrews v. Jones, 8 Blackf. 444; Taylor v. Sandiford, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 13, 5 L. ed. 884; Astley v. Weldon, 2 Bos. & P. 346; United shire, and Virginia, provide that no person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself or to testify against himself. But, even under such provisions, the right to protection against giving evidence against one's self has been limited to criminal cases by a decided preponderance of authority.

This rule was expressly laid down in Judge of Probate v. Green, 1 How. (Mass.) 146 (1834).

And in Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9 (1830), it was held that a witness is not exempted from being compelled to produce a document in his possession under a subpoena duces tecum in a case in which the party calling him has a right to use it, or from examination, in a matter pertinent to the issue, by the provision of the Massachusetts bill of rights that no subject shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself, when his answers will not expose him to criminal prosecution or tend to subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, although they may otherwise adversely affect his pecuniary interests.

And the seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself within the spirit and meaning of the constitutional provision. Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 745 (1885).

So, in Devoll v. Brownell, 5 Pick. 448 (1827), it was held that one against whom an action was brought as trustee of another, in which a bill of sale from the latter to the former was disclosed, was bound to answer questions put to him in order to prove that the bill of sale was fraudulent as against creditors and that he had secreted the property, though he might thereby charge himself, the court saying that the constitutional provision that no subject shall be compelled to furnish evidence against himself does not relate to questions of property.

And in Keith v. Woombell, 8 Pick. 211 (1829), the court granted a motion for an order directing the defendant to leave the bond, for the possession of which the action was brought, with the clerk of the court for the inspection of the plaintiff, which was opposed upon the ground that by the constitution a subject could not be compelled to furnish evidence against himself, saying that had reference to criminal cases, and that the plaintiff, claiming an interest in the bond, was entitled to see it.

And in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816 (1891), it was said that the constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself, should not have a different inter-

States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 611, 26 L. ed. 249; Century Dict. 4868; 2 Burrill, Law Dict. 286; 2 Stephen, Com. 159-162; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1818-1826; Black, Law Dict. 884; San Luis Obispo County v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. 245; United States v. Mathews, 23 Fed. Rep. 74; United States v. Ulrici, 8 Dill. 532; People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 863; Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 482; Rapalje & Lawrence, Law Dict. 945; Sidebottom v. Adkins, 5 Week. Rep. 743; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 860, 21 L. R. A. 751.

In no case or proceeding, the object of which is to procure evidence against a person, to enforce a penalty or secure a forfeiture of his goods or chattels, can the defendant or respondent be compelled to be a witness against himself.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1819, 1484, 1509; 1 Pom. Eq. § 203; Poindexter v. Davis, 6 Gratt. 491; Currier v. Concord R. Corp. 48 N. H. 321; Livingston v. Harris, 3 Paige, 534.

Mr. Henry E. Highton, for respondents:
Sections 1455-1461, are analogous in extent and object to the power exercised by courts of chancery upon bills of discovery.

Mesmer v. Jenkins, 61 Cal. 151; Selectmen of Boston v. Boylston, 4 Mass. 318; Fletcher v. Holmes, 40 Me. 364.

The question of title to property is not involved.

Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269; Re Oury, 25 Hun. 321; Re Knittel, 5 Dem. 371.

The sections are not penal, but remedial in nature.

Jahns v. Nolting, 29 Cal. 507.

The sections are not in conflict with any constitutional provision.

Re Strouse, 1 Sawy. 605; Re Meador, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 317.

As to the power of the legislature to make such order prima facie evidence of the right of the administrator to the property, or even to provide that the mere bringing of an action by the administrator to recover the possession thereof, shall be prima facie evidence of his right thereto, there can be no doubt.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 451, 452; How- pretation from that declaring that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, the manifest purpose of all of the provisions being to prohibit the compelling of testimony of a self-implicating kind, and that the privilege is limited to criminal matters.

So, in Thurston v. Clark (Cal.) 40 Pac. Rep. 435 (1895), it was said that the constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself applies to all cases in which the action prosecuted is, not to establish, recover, or redress private and civil rights, but to try to punish persons charged with the commission of public offenses.

And in People v. Kelly, 12 Abb. Pr. 150 (1861), it was said that the constitutional exemption applies only when the trial or matter under investigation is criminal, and the statement was repeated in the decision on appeal in the same case, 24 N. Y. 74 (1861).

And in People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427 (1887), and People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74 (1861), it was said that if a witness objects to a question on the ground that an answer would criminate himself, he must allege in substance that his answer, if repeated as his admission on his own trial, would tend to prove him guilty of a criminal offense.

People v. Kelly, supra, and People v. Sharp, supra, together with Higdon v. Heard, and Wilkins v. Malone, set forth in infra, I. b., Application to proceedings for penalties and forfeitures, are said, in United States v. James, 60 Fed. Rep. 257, 26 L. R. A. 418 (1894), to have been expressly overruled by Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra, so far as they hold that the privilege is confined to evidence given in a criminal prosecution. See also, as to that question, cases set forth in a subsequent portion of this subdivision.

In Re Nickell, 47 Kan. 734 (1892), however, it was said that the language of section 10 of the Kansas Bill of Rights, that no person shall be a witness against himself, is, if anything, stronger than that of the Federal Constitution, and does not limit the right to criminal cases.

But the privilege is not confined to evidence given or required in criminal cases, but extends to all evidence called for in any trial, whether civil or criminal, which could be subsequently used against the witness.

This was directly held in Cullen v. Com., 24 Gratt. 624 (1873), of the Virginia constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled to give evidence against himself.

13 L. R. A.

And in Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153 (1860), it was held that Ind. Const., art. 4, § 14, providing that no person in any criminal prosecution shall be compelled to testify against himself, extends literally to criminal prosecutions only, and not to civil actions, but its spirit and intent protect a person from a compulsory disclosure in a civil suit of facts tending to criminate him whenever his answer could be given in evidence against him in a subsequent criminal prosecution.

And in Drake v. State, 75 Ga. 413 (1895), Ga. Const., art. 1, § 1, par. 6, providing that no person shall be compelled to give testimony tending in any manner to criminate himself, was held to mean that when a person is sworn as a witness in a case he shall not be compelled to testify to facts that may tend to criminate him.

So in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 143 U. S. 567, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 316 (1891), it was said that the object of the provision of the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, was to insure that a person should not be compelled when acting as a witness in any investigation to give testimony which might tend to show that he had committed a crime. The privilege is as broad as the mischief against which it seeks to guard.

And in United States v. James, 60 Fed. Rep. 257, 26 L. R. A. 418 (1894), it is said that "since the Counselman Case, supra, it is admitted law that every person is protected by the Fifth Amendment against self-disclosure in any proceeding, civil or criminal, of such of his own acts as would subject either the act or any connected act to the danger of incrimination."

And in Emery's Case, 107 Mass. 172, 9 Am. Rep. 22 (1871), it was said that the provision of the Massachusetts declaration of rights that no subject shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself extends to all investigations of an inquisitorial nature instituted for the purpose of discovering crime or the perpetrators of crime by putting suspected parties upon their examination in respect thereto in any manner, although not in the course of any pending prosecution; and that any disclosure which would be capable of being used against the person making it as a confession of crime, or an admission of facts tending to prove the commission of an offense by him, in any prosecution then pending, or that might be brought against him therefor, is an accusation of himself within the meaning thereof.

ard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262; State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195.

Van Fleet, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Morris Hoefflich died at the city and county of San Francisco in May, 1891, and Solomon Hoefflich was by the superior court of said city and county appointed administrator of his estate. Thereafter, on the — day of June, 1893, the administrator filed in said superior court a petition in the matter of said estate, averring, in substance, that it had come to his knowledge that said deceased was at and prior to his death a partner with one H. M. Levy, or engaged with said Levy jointly in a large number of transactions in stocks and mines in California and Nevada, and in other property, "the exact nature and extent of which transactions, and of the real and personal estate resulting therefrom, can be ascertained by an examination of the said H. M. Levy and other witnesses under oath, and by the production and examination of books of account, correspondence, checks, deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, and other writings and documents now in the exclusive possession of said H. M. Levy;" and also by the examination of other named persons, and documents, etc., in their possession. The petition further averred that said Levy has concealed, conveyed away, and disposed of moneys and property of said deceased, and has in his possession and within his knowledge deeds and other documents and writings "which contain evidences of and tend to disclose the right, title, interest, and claim of said deceased to real and personal property,"—portions of such property being particularly described. The prayer was that said Levy be cited to appear before said court and undergo an examination under oath, together with such witnesses as might be then produced, touching all the matters set forth in the petition, "and especially touching his possession and knowledge of any and

So, in Polindexter v. Davis, 6 Gratt. 481 (1850), it was held that the rule that a party is not bound to answer interrogatories which may subject him to a penalty or forfeiture is not confined to cases brought for the purpose of enforcing a penalty or forfeiture, but extends also to cases in which the discovery would expose the party to some subsequent action or suit tending to the like result.

And in Ex parte Clarke, 108 Cal. 369 (1894), an insolvent debtor was held to be entitled to the immunity of Cal. Const., art. 1, § 13, providing that no person can be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, in a civil proceeding to examine him with reference to property which should have been turned over to the assignee and alleged to have been disposed of by him, when the facts alleged, if true, would render him guilty of a crime.

So Pennsylvania Act of January 11, 1879, authorizing the plaintiff in an execution, upon filing an affidavit that he believes the defendant owns property which he fraudulently conceals, and refuses to apply to the payment of his debts, to examine him on oath as to his property, conflicts with the Pennsylvania constitutional provision that no one shall be obliged to give evidence which may criminate him, as its design is to compel the debtor to reveal that which is made a misdemeanor by the Criminal Act of 1860. Horstman v. Kaufman, 97 Pa. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 302 (1881).

And champerty is an indictable offense and therefore a party to a champertous agreement, whether a party to the suit or not, cannot be compelled as a witness to make disclosures concerning the agreement which would tend to expose him to punishment or which might be used against him on a prosecution therefor. Douglass v. Wood, 1 Swan, 393 (1852).

So in Emery's Case, supra, the provision of the Massachusetts declaration of rights that no subject shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself was held to apply to investigations ordered and conducted by the legislature or either of its branches.

b. Applications to proceedings for penalties and forfeitures.

At common law no person could be compelled to testify against himself, or compelled to answer any question which would have a tendency to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture, or form a link in a chain of evidence for that purpose as well as to criminate him. Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 265 (1853); Benjamin v. Hathaway, 3 Conn. 538 (1821).

* 9 L. R. A.

And a court of chancery will not compel a person to discover what may subject him to a penalty or forfeiture or to a loss in the nature of a forfeiture. Northrop v. Hatch, 6 Conn. 261 (1827); Vanderveer v. Holcomb, 17 N. J. Eq. 91 (1864); Higdon v. Heard, supra.

Or form a link in a chain of evidence for that purpose. Higdon v. Heard, supra.

So the common-law doctrine of protection against compulsory disclosures which will tend to subject the witness to a penalty or forfeiture is also asserted without placing it upon constitutional grounds, in State v. Talbot, 73 Mo. 347 (1881); Lister v. Boker, 6 Blackf. 439 (1843); Polindexter v. Davis, 6 Gratt. 481 (1850).

And in Johnson v. Donaldson, 18 Blatchf. 287 (1880), it was held that the defendant in an action to recover penalties and for the forfeiture of plates for the violation of a copyright under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4905, cannot be compelled by subpoena duces tecum to produce his books of account and plates to be used in evidence against him, though the statute provides that no discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding shall be used against him in any criminal proceeding for the enforcement of a penalty or forfeiture, the proceeding in which it was sought being itself one for a penalty or forfeiture.

And in Re Dickinson, 58 How. Pr. 290 (1879), it was held that a county treasurer subpoenaed before a committee of the board of supervisors to answer interrogatories concerning moneys in his hands, pursuant to New York Laws of 1868, chap. 130, § 3, cannot be compelled to answer incriminating questions, though it is provided by section 9 thereof that such testimony shall not be used against him in the trial of any indictment or criminal prosecution, as it might be used in a proceeding for his removal for delinquency under the Act of 1877, which is not a criminal proceeding but a proceeding for the forfeiture of the office.

And when a note is transferred by the payee, and an action is brought upon it by the holder against the maker, and the payee is called as a witness by the maker for the purpose of showing that the note was usurious, he is privileged from answering questions designed to show the consideration for the note or any payment thereon to him, as under the statutes making the taking of usury a misdemeanor and imposing a penalty therefor the tendency of his answers might be to subject him to the penalty or an indictment therefor. Burns v. Kempshall, 24 Wend. 300 (1840), affirmed, Kempshall v. Burns, 4 Hill, 468 (1842).

all deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, or other writings, which contain evidences of or tend to disclose the right, title, and interest or claim of the decedent, Morris Hoeflich, to any real or personal estate, or any claim or demand whatsoever;" and that said Levy be required to produce all said deeds, conveyances, and other writings, books of account, etc., for inspection and examination. In response to a citation issued upon said petition, said Levy appeared and demurred, which demurrer being overruled, he filed a verified answer specifically denying all the material averments of the petition; denied that he had any property in which the deceased was interested, as a partner or otherwise, or that he had any documents or writings relating to any such property. He also filed written objections to any further proceedings in the matter of said examination; but the demurrer and the objections were overruled, and a day was set by the court for the examination. Thereupon said Levy filed his petition here, setting up these facts, upon which he makes this application for a writ of prohibition directed to said court, and the Honorable J. V. Coffey, judge thereof, commanding said respondents to refrain and desist from further proceeding with said contemplated examination. An alternative writ was issued, in response to which respondents have demurred and answered, and the matter has since been argued and submitted.

The proceedings in the superior court which are called into question by this application for prohibition were admittedly taken under and in pursuance of sections 1459 and 1460 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and these sections are as follows:

"Section 1459. If an executor, administrator, or other person interested in the estate of a decedent complains to the superior court, or a judge thereof, on oath, that any person is suspected to have concealed, embezzled, smuggled, conveyed away, or disposed of any moneys, goods, or chattels of

So the Minnesota statutory provision that a witness shall not be required to answer questions which will have a tendency to accuse himself of any crime or misdemeanor or expose him to any penalty or forfeiture is but a declaration of the law as it previously existed. State v. Bilansky, 8 Minn. 246 (1859).

And the same doctrine has been declared upon constitutional grounds and the constitutional provision held to apply to penalties and forfeitures.

Thus, in Livingston v. Harris, 3 Paige, 584 (1832), it was held to be inconsistent with the spirit of the constitution to compel a party to be a witness against himself in a case when the effect of the disclosure which he is required to make will tend to subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, and he may, in his answer in a proceeding for discovery, object to such matters.

And in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 20 L. ed. 746 (1885), and Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Intern. Com. Rep. 818 (1891), proceedings for penalties and forfeitures were spoken of as of a quasi criminal nature within the meaning of the provision of the Federal Constitution.

And that a witness is privileged from testifying, under the provision of the New York constitution that no one shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, to matters which may subject him to a penalty as well as to matters which may tend to criminate him, was held in Cloyes v. Thayer, 8 Hill, 564 (1842).

And the payee in a promissory note which has been transferred is privileged thereunder from testifying when called upon in an action brought upon the note by the holder against the maker to prove that it was given upon a usurious consideration, though the note was made prior to the enactment of the New York Act of May 15, 1887, making the taking of usury a misdemeanor and imposing a penalty therefor. Ibid.

So a witness or party called as a witness may not only object to testifying to the main fact which would subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, but may also refuse to disclose any one of a series of facts which together would expose him to such penalty or forfeiture. Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. 88 (1847), 8 Denio, 593, affirming Bank of Salina v. Henry, 2 Denio, 155.

Thus, a witness who is the debtor of a bank is privileged, under the provision of the New York constitution, against being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, from answering questions propounded to him, any of which would have formed a link in a chain of evidence tending to show that he had discounted the note upon which the action was brought, in violation of 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat., § 23, concerning the discounting of notes by officers of corporations, imposing as a penalty therefor the forfeiture of the debt and twice its amount. Ibid.
29 L. R. A.

And the New York Act of 1867, authorizing the calling an officer of a corporation to prove usury in the discount of a note, and excusing him from criminal prosecution therefor, does not deprive such witness of his constitutional exemption from being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, when under the law he might be subjected to a penalty or forfeiture therefor distinct and separate from the question of usury. Ibid.

But the offense created by the provisions of that act making the taking of usury a misdemeanor is not consummated until the usury is actually received and a mere agreement to receive it does not render the party indictable and does not bring him within the protection of the constitutional provision. Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hall, 583 (1843).

So the defendants in a bill in equity for a discovery are not bound to disclose any matters in their answer which will expose them to penalties, and the provisions of New Hampshire Act of July 5, 1867, requiring such discovery, is in conflict with the provision of the constitution of that state that no person shall be compelled to accuse himself of crime or furnish evidence against himself. Currier v. Concord R. Corp., 48 N. H. 321 (1869).

And when a charge of misconduct is made against an officer, whether amounting to an indictable offense, or only to his discredit as such officer, which might furnish grounds for his removal or impeachment, he is protected by the 5th Amendment of the Federal Constitution against being compelled to be a witness against himself. United States v. Collins, 1 Woods, C. C. 499 (1873).

See also, as to disclosures which might be used in proceedings for removal of an officer. Re Dickinson, 58 How. Pr. 260 (1879), set forth, supra.

And in Trammell v. Thomas, 1 Harr. & McH. 251 (1797), it was held neither the sheriff nor his deputies can be compelled to give evidence tending to show that they had not given notice of an execution served by them in accordance with the return thereof made by them. But the decision was not placed on constitutional grounds.

the decedent, or has in his possession or knowledge any deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, or other writings, which contain evidences of or tend to disclose the right, title, interest, or claim of the decedent to any real or personal estate, or any claim or demand, or any lost will, the said court or judge may cite such person to appear before such court, and may examine him on oath upon the matter of such complaint. If such person is not in the county where the decedent dies, or where letters have been granted, he may be cited and examined either before the superior court of the county where he is found, or before the superior court of the county where the decedent dies, or where letters have been granted. But if, in the latter case, he appears and is found innocent, his necessary expenses must be allowed him out of the estate.

"Section 1460. If the person so cited refuses to appear and submit to an examination, or to answer such interrogatories as may be put to him touching the matters of the complaint, the court may, by warrant for that purpose, commit him to the county jail, there to remain in close custody until he submits to the order of the court, or is discharged according to law. If, upon such examination, it appears that he has concealed, embezzled, smuggled, conveyed away, or disposed of any moneys, goods, or chattels of the decedent, or that he has in his possession or knowledge any deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, or other writings containing evidences of or tending to disclose the right, title, interest, or claim of the decedent to any real or personal estate, claim, or demand, or any lost will of the decedent, the court may make an order requiring such person to disclose his knowledge thereof to the executor or administrator, and may commit him to the county jail, there to remain until the order is complied with, or he is discharged according to law; and all such interrogatories and answers must be in writ-

And in Williams v. Lowndes, 1 Hall, 579 (1829), the question whether a deputy who makes a levy can be compelled to testify as to the identity of the execution in an action against the sheriff for a false return was raised but not decided.

The Indiana constitutional provision that no person in any criminal prosecution shall be compelled to testify against himself, however, has been held to apply to criminal prosecutions only, and not to extend to mere penalties and forfeitures. Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 158 (1860).

c. General doctrine as to evidence against one's self.

This subdivision is made up principally, if not entirely, from cases decided upon general principles of evidence without reference to constitutional provisions against self-accusation and which might therefore be regarded as not strictly within the scope of the note. But in view of the universal holding that the constitutional provisions apply only when the evidence sought would tend to subject the witness to a criminal prosecution or a penalty or forfeiture, they have been included with the design of showing the limits of the constitutional rule and what rules govern in civil cases.

By these cases the general doctrine is established by a preponderance of authority that the privilege of a witness to refuse to answer pertinent questions extends only to those the answers to which might criminate him or expose him to punishment. Ex parte Boscowitz, 84 Ala. 468 (1887); Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166, 28 Am. Rep. 754 (1876); Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 608 (1887); Jones v. Lanier, 2 Dev. L. 480 (1880); Baird v. Cochran, 4 Serg. & R. 397 (1818); Re Doran, 2 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 497 (1846); Robinson v. Neal, 5 T. B. Mon. 218 (1827); Miller v. Creyon, 2 Brev. 108 (1806); Zollcoffer v. Turney, 6 Yerg. 297 (1834); Lowney v. Perham, 20 Me. 226 (1841); Stewart v. Turner, 3 Edw. Ch. 468 (1841); Byass v. Sullivan, 21 How. Pr. 50 (1860); Byass v. Smith, 4 Bosw. 679 (1860).

Or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. Baird v. Cochran and Re Doran, supra; Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. 88 (1847); Re Kip, 1 Paige, 601 (1829); Jones v. Lanier and Lowney v. Perham, supra.

Or something in the nature of a forfeiture of his estate or interest. Henry v. Bank of Salina and Re Kip, supra.

And that a witness may be compelled to give testimony pertinent to the issue which may tend to subject him to a pecuniary loss. Alexander v. Knox, 7 Ala. 508 (1845); Lowney v. Perham, 20 Me. 226 (1841); Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 306 (1829); Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115 (1823).
29 J. R. A.

Or a civil liability. Re Strouse, 1 Sawy. 605 (1871); Re Danforth, 1 Pa. L. J. 31 (1870); Naylor v. Semmes, 4 Gill & J. 278 (1832); Judge of Probate v. Green, 1 How. (Miss.) 146 (1834); Hemphill v. McBride, 13 Smedes & M. 620 (1849).

Or which will establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt recoverable in a civil action. Zollcoffer v. Turney, 6 Yerg. 297 (1834); Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. 88 (1847); Burnett v. Phalon, 11 Abb. Pr. 157, 19 How. Pr. 530 (1860); Stewart v. Turner, 3 Edw. Ch. 468 (1841); Hays v. Richardson, supra; Copp v. Upham, 3 N. H. 159 (1826).

Or is otherwise subject to a civil suit. Henry v. Bank of Salina, Stewart v. Turner, Burnett v. Phalon, and Jones v. Lanier, supra; Taney v. Kemp, 4 Harr. & J. 348, 7 Am. Dec. 678 (1818); Alexander v. Knox, 7 Ala. 508 (1845); Gorham v. Carroll, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 221 (1823); Com. v. Thurston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 68 (1831); Planters' Bank v. George, 6 Mart. (La.) 670, 12 Am. Dec. 487 (1819); Copp v. Upham, supra.

Or which may be used against him in a civil suit. Re Kip, 1 Paige, 601 (1829).

And he cannot be excused on the ground that the verdict may be used as evidence against him in some other civil proceeding then pending or which might thereafter be instituted. Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 306 (1829).

Or because his testimony might injuriously affect his own interests. Miller v. Creyon, 2 Brev. 108 (1806); Robinson v. Neal, 5 T. B. Mon. 218 (1827); Baird v. Cochran, 4 Serg. & R. 397 (1818); Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121 (1844); Stoddert v. Manning, 3 Harr. & G. 147 (1823); French v. Price, 24 Pick. 18 (1833); Com. v. Willard, 23 Pick. 476 (1833); Harper v. Burrow, 6 Ired. L. 30 (1845).

A witness who is not a party is not privileged, and cannot be excused from testifying upon the ground that he has an interest in the matter in controversy which he may be in danger of prejudicing by his testimony. Robinson v. Neal, supra; Black v. Crouch, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 226 (1823); Conover v. Bail, 6 T. B. Mon. 167 (1827).

No interest short of being the real party will excuse him from giving testimony. Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121 (1844).

Thus, the plaintiff in an action for seduction may be compelled to testify as to alleged previous acts of unchastity with others, where fornication is not punishable except civilly. Love v. Masoner, 6 Bart. 24, 28 Am. Rep. 523 (1873).

And the plaintiff, in an action for debauching and enticing away his wife, may be compelled to testify on examination as a witness before trial with reference to allegations in the answer that the wife was ing signed by the party examined, and filed in the court. The order for such disclosure made upon such examination shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the executor or administrator to such property in any action brought for the recovery thereof; and any judgment recovered therein must be for double the value of the property as assessed by the court or jury, or for return of the property and damages in addition thereto, equal to the value of such property. In addition to the examination of the party, witnesses may be produced and examined on either side."

Petitioner contends that these provisions of the code are unconstitutional and void, and that the proceeding in the superior court is, therefore, without warrant of law. His position is that they are obnoxious to several features of the constitution of the state, and more particularly to section 8 of article 1, which provides that "no person shall . . .

be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself;" and to section 19 of the same article, which provides that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated." These two provisions of the constitution are of well-understood significance; they involve like principles, and, in considering the objection made, may be regarded as one. The argument of petitioner is that the sections of the code referred to are distinctly penal in character, and contemplate a proceeding which is in its essential nature criminal, within the meaning of the above provisions of the constitution; that, being a criminal proceeding, petitioner is protected by the constitution from being compelled to testify against himself, or submit his books and papers in evidence.

There is no question that, if petitioner's premises are correct, his conclusion follows compelled to leave him by reason of his cruel and inhuman treatment and immoral conduct in bringing a lewd woman into his home for immoral purposes. Taylor v. Jennings, 7 Robt. 581 (1867).

And a railway conductor, charged with receiving money for fares of passengers for which he has not accounted, may be required to state the condition of his property at the commencement and close of his service, to be weighed with the other evidence in the case, unless the court can see that it would furnish a link in a chain of circumstances tending to accuse him of crime. State v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200 (1865).

And one who purchased intoxicating liquor may be required to testify thereto on an indictment for the illegal sale thereof when the buying is not made a criminal act. Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 806 (1837); Com. v. Willard, 22 Pick. 477 (1838); State v. Rand, 51 N. H. 361, 12 Am. Rep. 127 (1871).

Nor can a witness refuse to give testimony against the defendant in an action because the defendant is his debtor, and his testimony by establishing the plaintiff's claim would diminish the funds out of which his claim might be satisfied. United States v. Grundy, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 342, 2 L. ed. 461 (1806).

So, one of several coheirs of lands descended from an intestate may be called as a witness by the defendant in an action brought for the recovery thereof, and required to testify against the other coheirs where he is not a party to the suit. Nass v. Vanswearingen, 7 Serg. & R. 102 (1821).

And a person called as a witness for the plaintiff cannot refuse to testify upon the ground that he will be required to disclose facts which will show that he was a partner in the transaction out of which the cause of action arose, and that he is equally liable with the defendant to the plaintiff. Zollcoffer v. Turney, 6 Yer. 297 (1834).

And an attorney employed by parties served, who entered an appearance for all the defendants including parties not served, is a competent witness in a subsequent action for contribution brought by those served against those not served, and the fact that his evidence may disclose matter which will support a civil action against him is no excuse for not testifying. Cox v. Hill, 3 Ohio, 412 (1828).

And the payees in several notes given by an agent for the purchase of goods for the purposes of a voyage are competent witnesses, and may be compelled to testify in an action brought by one of the vendors for the use of himself and other vendors, against the persons interested in the voyage, in behalf of the defendants, as to whether or not the vendors had knowledge that other persons besides the agent were interested in the purchase. French v. Price, 24 Pick. 18 (1838).

So a witness in a bankruptcy proceeding may be compelled to answer a question in the regular line of the investigation concerning transactions with the bankrupt, though the examination may establish a liability on his part to the bankrupt's estate. Re Stuyvesant Bank, 6 Ben. 83 (1873).

And a witness who is assignee of certain claims due from the bankrupt cannot refuse to testify before the register in the bankruptcy proceeding on the ground that the consideration did not come from the bankrupt or his estate, and that to answer would be revealing his private business to his prejudice in another case. Re Traak, 7 Ben. 6 (1873).

And the wife of a bankrupt, summoned as a witness in a bankruptcy proceeding, may be required to produce a letter from her half-brother accompanying a gift of money with which a house contracted for by her husband was in part paid for. Re Schonberg, 7 Ben. 211 (1874).

Neither can a witness be excused from testifying against a sheriff, on a motion against him, on the ground that he is one of his sureties, where he is not a party on the record. Garay v. Frost, 5 Ala. 636 (1843).

Nor can the security of a defaulting sheriff into whose hands the sheriff's books have fallen withhold them, on a bill for a discovery, upon the ground that the disclosure might subject him to suits, but will be compelled to produce them. Hawkins v. Sumter, 4 Desaus. Eq. 108 (1810).

And a security on the bond of a deceased insolvent sheriff, who has obtained possession of the sheriff's books, may be compelled to produce them in evidence by subpoena duces tecum in an action between third persons, though he is apprehensive of danger to himself from their disclosure. Ibid.

So a stockholder in a bank may be compelled to testify in behalf of the plaintiff in an action against the bank, though his evidence may injuriously affect his interests as such stockholder. Dictum in City Bank v. Bateman, 7 Harr. & J. 104 (1826).

And a witness, who is an officer of a corporation, cannot refuse to furnish documentary evidence in a judicial proceeding, on the ground that it might criminate the corporation under the interstate commerce law, as corporations are not liable criminally or exposed to penalties or forfeitures thereunder. Re Penaley, 44 Fed. Rep. 371, 3 Intern. Com. Rep. 333 (1900).

necessarily. But his construction of the provisions in question cannot be sustained. These provisions have received a construction at the hands of this court directly at variance with that put upon them by petitioner. Sections 1458-1461 of the Code of Civil Procedure were, prior to the adoption of the codes, a part of the old Probate Act, as sections 116-119; they are a part of the same article, and relate to the same subject, which is expressed in the title as "Embezzlement and surrender of property of the estate." In the case of Jahns v. Notting, 29 Cal. 507, this court had occasion to construe section 116 of the Probate Act (now section 1458, Code Civ. Proc.) upon the very feature now involved. That was an action by an administrator to recover property belonging to the estate of his decedent, which he alleged had been embezzled by defendant and converted to his own use. The lower court held that the action was brought under section 116 of the Probate Act, which alone gave plaintiff a remedy for the wrong; that the statute was penal in its nature, and that the plaintiff was bound to prove the embezzlement as alleged, or fail in his action. Judgment having gone against him, the plaintiff appealed, and in disposing of that question the court said: "The position that section 116 affords the exclusive remedy for embezzling and alienating the effects of the deceased, intermediate the death of the deceased and the grant of administration, cannot be maintained, unless that section can be held to be a penal statute. The distinctions between penal and remedial statutes are not always clearly marked, nor are the authorities quite harmonious where statutes very similar in their purpose and general terms have been under review. A penal statute is one that imposes a penalty or creates a forfeiture as the punishment for the neglect of some duty, or the commission of some wrong,

And the plaintiff in an action for breach of covenant of warranty of title to land, the breach consisting of the taking of the timber therefrom, who has testified in his own behalf that without the timber it was worth but 10 cents per acre, may be asked on cross-examination if he has not been offered $1 per acre for it, as tending to show the bias of the witness. Clark v. Zeigler, 85 Ala. 154 (1897).

And in Ragland v. Wickware, 4 J. J. Marsh. 580 (1880), which was an action against a sheriff for an alleged illegal seizure, a person who had previously warranted the title of the property seized was held to be compellable to testify, but the decision was placed upon the ground that he would not be liable on his warranty.

The refusal of the court below, however, to compel a witness to answer, who refuses on the ground that it might subject him to a civil liability, is not a ground for reversal on appeal, where the answer would have been irrelevant or inadmissible. Naylor v. Seemee, 4 Gill & J. 273 (1822).

And even if a witness is to be regarded as privileged from answering questions against his interest, the privilege would extend only to refusing to answer particular questions, and would not justify a refusal to testify at all. Judge of Probate v. Green, 1 How. (Miss.) 146 (1884); Hemphill v. McBride, 12 Smedes & M. 620 (1849).

d. The contrary doctrine.

The contrary doctrine, that a witness cannot be compelled to testify against his own interests, has been adopted, and seems to remain the rule of conduct in Connecticut.

This was held in Storrs v. Wetmore, Kirby (Conn.) 208 (1787); Starr v. Tracey, 2 Root, 528 (1797); and Benjamin v. Hathaway, 3 Conn. 623 (1821).

And in Benjamin v. Hathaway, supra, it was held that a sheriff could be compelled to give evidence for the purpose of falsifying his return, the sheriff being liable by statute for a false return, the court saying that in its opinion the result would be the same if the effect of the testimony were merely to subject the witness in debt.

And in Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408, 10 Am. Dec. 156 (1822), holding a certificate of the good character of another, given several years before by a witness who testified on the trial that his character was below the common level, was admissible in evidence, the court said that if there had been any inconsistency between the certificate and the evidence the witness should have claimed his privilege of exemption from testifying in disparagement of himself, but that the evidence was not subject to objection by the party seeking to impeach such person's character.

But a witness is not privileged from testifying where he voluntarily acquired an interest after the interest of the party in his testimony was acquired; but he cannot be compelled to divulge matters coming to his knowledge after he became interested. Simons v. Payne, 2 Root, 406 (1796).

And one who executes a promissory note in behalf of another, and afterwards gives bond conditioned that his principal will prosecute an appeal from a judgment on the note, cannot refuse to testify in behalf of the payee of the note as to its execution on the ground that it would be against his interest, as he voluntarily assumed that interest after the payee acquired an interest in his testimony, and did not acquire it in the common course of business for his own profit. Phelps v. Riley, 3 Conn. 206 (1820).

So there are also a number of cases from other states and jurisdictions, mostly of an early date, holding, either directly or by implication, substantially the same rule as the Connecticut cases. But though not expressly mentioned, it would seem that all, or nearly all, of them must be regarded as overruled by subsequent inconsistent decisions.

Thus, in Bank of United States v. Washington, 8 Cranch, C. C. 295 (1823), it was held that a book-keeper of a bank cannot be compelled to answer a question, in an action by the bank for an overdraft paid by mistake, the answer to which if given might render him liable for the loss.

And in Re Hill, 6 Ct. Cl. 88 (1870), it was held that a witness should not be required to answer a question which in his opinion relates to another suit in which he is claimant, and not to the suit on trial, unless assurance is given to the court that it is intended to elicit testimony relevant to the issue.

But see United States v. Grundy, Re Stuyvesant Bank, Re Trask, and Re Schonberg, set forth supra in the preceding subdivision.

So in Appleton v. Boyd, 7 Mass. 181 (1810), the court refused to sustain an objection to the refusal of the court below to compel a person who was interested in the event of the suit to testify therein against his interests.

But see Massachusetts cases set forth supra in the preceding subdivision.

So in Bell's Case, 1 Browne (Pa.) 376 (1811), it was held that a witness should not be compelled to answer a question which might affect him civilly, as well as those which might tend to criminate him.

And in Long v. Ballie, 4 Serg. & R. 222 (1818), it was held that a witness cannot be excused from the ground of forfeiture as declared in the 12th section of the Act of 1874, on which the information is based, consists of certain acts of fraud committed against the public revenue in relation to imported merchandise, which are made criminal by the statute, and it is declared that the offender shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or be imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both; and, in addition to such fine such merchandise shall be forfeited. These are the penalties affixed to the criminal acts, the forfeiture sought by this suit being one of them. If an indictment had been presented against the claimants, upon conviction the forfeiture of the goods could have been included in the judgment. If the government prosecutor elects to waive an indictment, and to file a civil information against the claimants—that is, civil in form—can he by this device take from the proceeding its criminal aspect and deprive the claimants of their immunities as citizens, and extort from them a production of their private papers, or, as an alternative, a confession of guilt? This cannot be. The information, though technically a civil proceeding, is in substance and effect a criminal one. . . . As, therefore, suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred by the commission of offenses against the law are of this quasi-criminal nature, we think that they are within the reason of criminal proceedings for all the purposes of the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution, and of that portion of the Fifth Amendment which declares that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. . . .”

The difference in character between the proceeding under discussion there and the proceeding complained of here by petitioner was, however, recognized in the same opinion in the following language (page 624, 116 U. S., and 749, 29 L. ed.): “The entry upon premises, made by a sheriff or other officer of the law, for the purpose of seizing goods and chattels by virtue of a judicial writ, such as an attachment, a sequestration, or an execution, is not within the prohibition of the Fourth or Fifth Amendment, or any other clause of the Constitution; nor is the examination of a defendant under oath after an ineffectual execution, for the purpose of discovering secreted property or credits, to be applied to the payment of a judgment against him, obnoxious to those amendments. But, when examined with care, it is manifest that there is a total unlikeness of these official acts and proceedings to that which is now under consideration. In the case of stolen goods, the owner from whom they were stolen is entitled to their possession, and in the case of excisable or dutiable articles, the government has an that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

And in Re Platt & Boyd, 7 Ben. 261 (1874), it was held that the Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, § 2, authorizing the entry into any place or premises where any invoices, books, or papers are deposited relating to merchandise with respect to which fraud upon the revenues is alleged to have been committed, and the seizure, examination, and retention thereof, is a provision in aid of the due enforcement of the revenue laws and not repugnant to the provision of the Federal Constitution that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

V. Distinction between civil and criminal or penal proceedings.

Constitutional prohibitions against compelling a person to be a witness against himself and against unreasonable searches and seizures having been held to be applicable to penal and criminal proceedings only, it becomes necessary, when the question arises, to determine the character of the proceeding in which the evidence is sought or designed to be used, the availability of the constitutional prohibition depending upon whether it is remedial or penal in its nature.

This was the question upon which the principal case turned, and the distinction there drawn, that compulsory disclosures may be required where the proceeding is purely remedial and the penalty, if any, is not imposed as a punishment for a public wrong, but as a redress for a private grievance, but not where the primary object of the penalty or forfeiture is punishment for a violation of duty or a public wrong and to deter others from offending in a like manner, seems to accord with the authorities on the subject.

Thus, a proceeding to forfeit a person's goods for an offense against the laws, though civil in form, and whether in rem or in personam, is a criminal case within the meaning of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments to the Federal Constitution prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746 (1885).

In that case the rule was applied to a proceeding to establish a forfeiture, pursuant to the Act of Congress of June 22, 1874, § 12, of goods alleged to have been fraudulently imported without payment of duties in which an order was made requiring the claimant of the goods to produce certain invoices for inspection and introduction in evidence, which was held to be erroneous and illegal. Ibid.

And the Act of Congress of June 22, 1874, authorizing courts of the United States in revenue cases, on motion of the government attorney, to require the defendant or claimant to produce in court his private books, invoices, and papers, or else the allegations of the attorney to be taken as confessed, is unconstitutional and void as applied to suits for penalties or to establish a forfeiture of the party's goods, as being repugnant to those provisions. Ibid., overruling United States v. Three Tons of Coal, 6 Biss. 379 (1875); United States v. Dettillery No. Twenty-Eight, 6 Biss. 483 (1875); United States v. Mason, 6 Biss. 368 (1875),—as to this point.

It is also to be observed that Re Platt & Boyd and United States v. Hughes, set forth infra, and Stockwell v. United States, set forth supra, under Unreasonable searches and seizures, are also overruled by Boyd v. United States, supra, so far as they uphold the compulsory production of papers in proceedings for a penalty or forfeiture.

So, an investigation by a grand jury as to whether there has been a violation of the interstate commerce act is a criminal case within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 143 U. S. 567, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Intern. Com. Rep. 816 (1891).

And an action for a penalty under the Contract Labor Law of 1886, § 2, providing that such penalties interest in them for the payment of the duties thereon, and until such duties are paid, has a right to keep them under observation, or to pursue and drag them from concealment; and in the case of goods seized on attachment or execution, the creditor is entitled to their seizure in satisfaction of his debt; and the examination of a defendant under oath to obtain a discovery of concealed property or credits is a proceeding merely civil to effect the ends of justice, and is no more than what the court of chancery would direct on a bill for discovery." In the Counselman Case, which was a case growing out of the refusal of Counselman to testify before a grand jury upon an investigation of alleged violations of "An act to regulate commerce," on the ground that his answers might tend to criminate him, the court held it was within the principles announced in the Boyd Case, and reaffirmed those principles. The case of Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. ed. 1150, is another case falling strictly within the principles of Boyd v. United States.

These considerations dispose of the main objection of petitioner. The other objections to the constitutionality of the statute are, in our judgment, without merit. Nor is the objection tenable that the proceeding in the probate court involves passing upon the title to property, and is, on that ground, without the court's jurisdiction. Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269; Re Curry, 25 Hun, 321.

Writ denied.

We concur: Fitzgerald, J.; Harrison, J.; Garoutte, J.; Beatty, Ch. J.

McFarland, J.:

I dissent. This is an original petition here by H. M. Levy for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, department No. 9, and Hon. J. V. Coffey, judge thereof, commanding said court and said Coffey to refrain from further prosecuting a certain proceeding instituted in said court against said petitioner. An alternative writ was issued, and on the return day the respondent demurred and answered, and the matter was then submitted.

It appears that the administration of the estate of one Morris Hoefflich, deceased, is pending in the court of respondent, sitting as a probate court, and that one Solomon Hoefflich is administrator of said estate. On the — day of June, 1893, the said Solomon Hoefflich, as such administrator, filed in said court, in the matter of said estate, a certain writing, or petition, the contents of which are substantially these: It is therein averred that, from information derived from persons may be sued for as debts of like amount are now recovered, though civil in form is criminal in nature, and one in which the defendant is entitled to protection under the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. ed. 1150 (1893).

So, a summary proceeding under Cal. Pen. Code, § 772, for the removal of a sheriff from office is a criminal proceeding in which the defendant has constitutional protection against being compelled to be a witness against himself, removal from office being a punishment for wrongdoing. Thurston v. Clark (Cal.) 40 Pac. Rep. 485 (1895).

And an inquisitorial examination under oath of a United States marshal who had assisted in selecting and making up a list of jurors for the trial of a criminal case, had upon a challenge to the panel of jurors, whose official conduct was impeached by the challenge and who is charged with misconduct which might amount to an indictable offense or furnish grounds for his removal or impeachment, infringes the spirit if not the letter of the provision of the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, and is repugnant to the principles of personal liberty embodied in the common law. United States v. Collins, 1 Woods, C. C. 499 (1873).

And in Jackson v. Humphrey, 1 Johns. 498 (1806), it was said that a public officer would not be bound to answer any questions impeaching the integrity of his conduct as such.

So a proceeding for contempt against a person charged with inducing witnesses to absent themselves and avoid process is one in which the person charged cannot be required to testify in proof of the charge as he would be thereby required to criminate himself, the contempt being a statutory crime. Nickell, 47 Kan. 734 (1892).

And a person accused of contempt of court cannot be compelled to submit to examination as a witness on the hearing of an order to show cause why he should not be punished therefor, under Cal. Const. art. 1, § 13 providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, contempt of court being a public offense. Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 390, 21 L. R. A. 751 (1893).

The Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, § 2, authorizing the entry into any place and premises where any invoices, books, or papers are deposited relating to merchandise with respect to which fraud upon the revenue is alleged to have been committed, and the seizure, examination, and retention thereof, however, is a provision in aid of the due enforcement of the revenue laws and not repugnant to the Fourth Amendment to the Federal Constitution providing that the right of the people to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated. Re Platt & Boyd, 7 Ben. 261 (1874).

And proceedings under the Act of Congress of June 30, 1864, as amended by the Act of July 13, 1866, to compel the production of books and the giving of evidence before the assessor concerning assessments under the internal revenue acts, are civil and not criminal proceedings, and do not contravene the provision of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Federal Constitution protecting the people against unreasonable searches and seizures, and being compelled in a criminal case to be witnesses against themselves. Re Strouse, 1 Sawy. 605 (1871).

And the proceedings provided for by the Act of Congress of 1863, § 49, empowering supervisors of internal revenue to examine premises and issue summons requiring persons to appear before them and testify under oath and produce books and papers, etc., for the purpose of the prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds with relation to the collection of taxes, and the Act of July, 1866, § 2, providing the mode of compelling obedience thereto, are civil and not criminal proceedings, and not within the prohibition of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Federal Constitution, and such acts are not unconstitutional. Re Meador, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 317 (1890).

So, in United States v. Hughes, 13 Blatchf. 538 (1875), it was held that the discovery of evidence contemplated by the provision of U. S. Rev. Stat.

whose names said administrator is unwilling to disclose, he has ascertained that the said deceased, Morris Hoefflich, prior to and down to the time of his death, "was either a full partner with the said H. M. Levy, or engaged with him jointly in a large number of transactions" in stocks and mines in California and Nevada, and in other property, "the exact nature and extent of which transactions, and of the real and personal estate resulting therefrom, can be ascertained by an examination of the said H. M. Levy and other witnesses under oath, and by the production and examination of books of account, correspondence checks, deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, and other writings and documents now in the exclusive possession of said H. M. Levy;" and also by examination of other named persons and documents, etc., in their possession. It is also averred that said Hoefflich, deceased, before his death represented to a number of persons, whose names the administrator is unwilling to disclose, "that he was in partnership and had large joint interests with said H. M. Levy;" and that the fact that he made such representation "confirms and strengthens the information otherwise received by your petitioner, and the conviction produced thereby." It is also averred in general terms that said Levy has concealed, conveyed away, and disposed of moneys, etc., of the said deceased, and has in his possession and within his knowledge deeds and other documents and writings "which contain evidences of and tend to disclose the right, title, interest, and claim of the said decedent to real and personal property," portions of said property being particularly described. The foregoing are, in brief, the material averments of said petition; and it was prayed therein that said Levy be cited to appear before said probate court and undergo an examination under oath as to all the matters set forth in said petition, and subject all his documents, writings, and papers to inspection and examination. A citation was issued according to the prayer of the petition to said Levy, who appeared and demurred to the petition; and, the demurrer having been overruled, he filed a lengthy written verified answer, in which he specifically denied all the material averments of said petition, and denied that he had any property in which the said decedent was interested, either as a partner or otherwise, or that he had any documents or writings of the character alleged in said petition. He also filed written objections to any further proceeding in the matter of said petition and citation; but the court overruled the objections, and set a day for the examination. Whereupon the said Levy filed here the pres-

§ 860, that no discovery or evidence obtained by means of any judicial proceeding from any party or witness shall be given in evidence or used against him for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture, is of a personal nature to which the party can make oath, and not such as may be derived from an examination of books and papers seized under a warrant issued in a proceeding for forfeiture for violation of revenue laws.

But see Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 20 L. ed. 746 (1885), set forth supra in I. a., Limitation to criminal proceedings, and in II., Unreasonable searches and seizures.

And in Re Meador, supra, it was said that persons who applied for, obtained, and accepted a license under the revenue law subsequent to the enactment of the Act of Congress of 1868, § 49, empowering the supervisors of revenue to examine premises and issue summons requiring persons to appear before them and testify under oath and produce books and papers, etc., for the purpose of prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds with relation to the collection of taxes, impliedly contracted to be governed by existing provisions of law affecting the business licensed, and cannot afterwards impugn the constitutional-ity of that act or refuse to obey its provisions.

But see Boyd v. United States, supra, in which a somewhat similar provision was permitted to be questioned under similar circumstances.

So the vendor of an infringing device is not rendered incompetent to prove its purchase and use by persons to whom he has sold it in a suit for infringement to which he is not a party, by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4919, 4921, empowering the court in its discretion to impose additional damages against an infringer as violating the constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, on the ground that he may, under such sections, subject himself to penalties and forfeitures in an accounting with the complainant. Masoth v. Johnston, 50 Fed. Rep. 612 (1893).

And a proceeding in which a county treasurer is subpoenaed before a committee appointed by a board of supervisors to answer interrogatories concerning moneys in his hands pursuant to New York Laws of 1853, chap. 190, § 3, is not a criminal case within the provision of the New York Constitution, art. 1, § 6, that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself. Re Dickinson, 58 How. Pr. 260 (1879).

So, in People v. Board of Police Comrs., 32 N. Y. S. R. 824 (1890), it was held that a police officer charged with conduct unbecoming an officer in that he engaged in an altercation with another officer, cannot refuse to testify as the first witness on the investigation upon the ground that he cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, as the investigation was not a criminal proceeding.

Daniels, J., dissented from this determination, however, on the ground that the proceeding was one for the forfeiture of an office, but the decision was affirmed by the court of appeals in 123 N. Y. 512.

And it would appear that the prohibition would apply only to violations of public law, and not to violations of city ordinances.

Thus, in Greeley v. Hamman, 12 Colo. 99 (1888), in which the question was whether or not the city had a right to appeal, it was held that a prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance is a civil and not a criminal action, within Colo. Code, § 699, defining crimes and misdemeanors to consist of violations of public law, though punishable by fine and imprisonment, when not punishable by general statute.

And it was also held that the phrases "criminal prosecution," "criminal case," etc., in the Colorado Constitution do not refer to prosecutions for acts which were not criminal at the time of its adoption, or which have not since been declared criminal by statute. Greeley v. Hamman, supra.

See also, as to distinction between remedial and penal proceedings, infra, I. a and b. F. H. B.

ent petition for a writ of prohibition, setting up all the foregoing facts, and praying that the respondents be restrained from proceeding with said examination; and he contends that said proposed examination is beyond the jurisdiction of said court, and that certain provisions of the code of civil procedure, upon which he contends the proceeding is based, are unconstitutional and void.

The proceeding sought to be prohibited, if valid at all, must rest for its validity upon sections 1459 and 1460 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Our general law of procedure is averse to proceedings which are in their character inquisitorial. The only provision in the code of civil procedure in the nature of a bill of discovery, other than said sections 1459 and 1460, is contained in section 1000, which provides that "any court in which an action is pending, or a judge thereof may, upon notice, order either party to give to the other, within a specified time, an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy of entries of accounts in any book, or of any document or paper in his possession, or under his control, containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense thereto;" and the proceeding here in question is certainly not under that section. Of course, the probate court would have no jurisdiction over any action to determine conflicting rights of property between the estate of Hoefflich and the petitioner herein, H. M. Levy. Moreover, no such action is pending.

Sections 1459 and 1460, above referred to, are as follows:

"Section 1459. If any executor, administrator, or other person interested in the estate of a decedent, complains to the superior court or a judge thereof, on oath, that any person is suspected to have concealed, embezzled, smuggled, conveyed away, or disposed of any moneys, goods, or chattels of the decedent, or has in his possession or knowledge any deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, or other writings, which contain evidences of or tend to disclose the right, title, interest, or claim of the decedent to any real or personal estate, or any claim or demand, or any lost will, the said court or judge may cite such person to appear before such court, and may examine him on oath upon the matter of such complaint. If such person is not in the county where the decedent dies, or where letters have been granted, he may be cited and examined either before the superior court of the county where he is found, or before the superior court of the county where the decedent dies, or where letters have been granted. But if, in the latter case, he appears and is found innocent, his necessary expenses must be allowed him out of the estate.

"Section 1460. If the person so cited refuses to appear and submit to an examination, or to answer such interrogatories as may be put to him touching the matters of the complaint, the court may, by warrant for that purpose, commit him to the county jail, there to remain in close custody until he submits to the order of the court, or is discharged according to law. If, upon such examination, it appears that he has concealed, embezzled, smuggled, conveyed away, or disposed of any moneys, goods, or chattels of the decedent, or that he has in his possession or knowledge any deeds, conveyances, bonds, contracts, or other writings containing evidences of or tending to disclose the right, title, interest, or claim of the decedent to any real or personal estate, claim, or demand, or any lost will of the decedent, the court may make an order requiring such person to disclose his knowledge thereof to the executor or administrator, and may commit him to the county jail, there to remain until the order is complied with or he is discharged according to law; and all such interrogatories and answers must be in writing, signed by the party examined, and filed in the court. The order of such disclosure made upon such examination shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the executor or administrator to such property in any action brought for the recovery thereof; and any judgment recovered therein must be for double the value of the property as assessed by the court, or jury, or for return of the property and damages in addition thereto, equal to the value of such property. In addition to the examination of the party, witnesses may be produced and examined on either side."

It is contended by petitioner herein that these provisions are in contravention of section 13 of article 1 of the State Constitution, which provides that "no person shall . . . be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself;" and of section 19 of the same article, which provides that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated." He also contends that they contravene section 11 of said article, which provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," and section 25 of article 4, which provides that no special law shall be passed "regulating the practice of courts of justice," for the reason that they give special privileges to administrators over other litigants. It is also contended that the probate court could not make the orders sought here to be restrained without passing upon rights of property between the estate of Hoefflich and said Levy, which it has no jurisdiction to do.

I shall not discuss any of the above positions taken by petitioner, except the first two. The two provisions that a person shall not be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, and shall be secure against unreasonable seizures and searches, are so akin to each other that they are both covered by those judicial decisions and constitutional inhibitions which have established the personal rights and liberties of Englishmen and Americans. A compulsory production of a man's private papers is, in effect, compelling him to be a witness against himself. It will be sufficient, however, in this case, to particularly consider only the first of these two provisions, although the second is necessarily involved. And, basing our decision on that provision, I am of the opinion that upon the principles announced, and the decisions made by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 816; and Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. ed. 1150,—the contention of petitioner must be sustained, and that the writ of prohibition should issue as prayed for. If the proceeding in the probate court sought here to be restrained were, in form, a "criminal case," there could be no plausible contention that, in view of section 18 of article 1 of the state Constitution, the petitioner could be compelled to be a witness against himself. But in the Boyd Case it was held that the Fourth and Fifth Amendments to the Federal Constitution—which are similar to said sections 18 and 19 of our state Constitution—applied to a proceeding to recover a penalty or forfeiture, although the proceeding was not criminal in form. That was a suit to forfeit Boyd's property for an alleged violation of a revenue law, and the court held that to compel him to produce books and papers as evidence against him was a violation of said amendments. The court says that suits for penalties and forfeitures "are within the reason of criminal proceedings for all the purposes of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, and of that provision of the Fifth Amendment which declares that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." The court further says that "illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure," and that "this can only be obviated by adhering to the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed. A close and literal construction deprives them of half their efficacy, and leads to gradual deprivation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than substance." Afterwards the same court, in Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra, expressly approved the decision in the Boyd Case, and declared that in the Boyd Case it was held that a statute which authorized a court to require a party to produce his private papers in court was "unconstitutional and void, as applied to a suit for a penalty or to establish a forfeiture of the goods of the party, because it was repugnant to the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Constitution;" and, furthermore, that "it is an ancient principle of the law of evidence that a witness shall not be compelled, in any proceeding, to make disclosures or to give testimony which will tend to criminate him, or to subject him to fines, penalties, or forfeitures." But the principle was still more directly decided in the late case of Lees v. United States, supra. That was a civil action brought by the United States to recover a penalty of $1,000 for the violation of an act of congress prohibiting the importation of aliens under contracts for labor. The circuit court compelled Lees, one of the defendants, to become a witness for the government, against his objection that the suit was in the nature of a criminal proceeding, and that he could not be compelled to testify; and on a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court the judgment was reversed. The Supreme Court, by Mr. Justice Brewer, said: "This, though an action civil in form, is unquestionably criminal in its nature, and in such a case a defendant cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. It is unnecessary to do more than to refer to the case of Boyd v. United States, supra. The question was fully and elaborately considered . . . in that case. And within the rule there laid down it was error to compel the defendant to give testimony in behalf of the government."

It is quite clear that said sections 1459 and 1460 include a "penalty" within the meaning of the authorities above noticed. Indeed the whole scope of the proceeding which is their purpose to authorize is, in its nature, quasi criminal. It is founded upon the fact that the party to be examined "is suspected" of being guilty either of the embezzlement or smuggling, or of the fraudulent concealment and secret and unlawful disposition of property of another. Certain things are to be done if he "is found innocent." But, if the contrary is found, then an order for disclosure is to be made, which he must obey or be sent to jail. And then it is provided that such order for disclosure shall be prima facie evidence of the right of the administrator to the property involved in any action brought for the recovery of such property; and that "any judgment recovered therein must be for double the value of the property as assessed by the court or jury, or for return of the property, and damages in addition thereto equal to the value of such property." It is thus sought to compel the party examined to testify, and to produce his private papers for the purpose of furnishing evidence upon which may be based an order that will make a prima facie case against him in an action for a penalty which may be of the most grave character. If he be defeated in such action, although he may have defended it with the utmost good faith, and under an honest claim of right, the judgment against him will not be, as in ordinary civil actions, for the value of the property or its return with the usual incidental damages, but, in addition to that, the judgment "must be" for a second full value of the property as a penalty, and cases might easily arise where the amount of such penalty would greatly exceed the highest fine provided as punishment for a crime by any section of the penal code. I am satisfied, therefore, that the said sections of the code are within the inhibition of the constitutional provision of said section 13 of the Constitution of the state. And, under the rule and the authorities above cited, a person in the position of the petitioner cannot be compelled to give testimony or produce papers which would tend to make a case against him, or furnish data or links of evidence favorable to such case. I have just noticed the recent case of United States v. James, reported in 60 Fed. Rep. 257, 26 L. R. A. 418, in which Judge Grosscup of the United States district court, northern district of Illinois, in a very interesting opinion, discusses the subject here under review at great length. In that case the learned judge holds that a person cannot be compelled to testify or produce documents that may tend to criminate him, although there be a statute providing that he shall not be prosecuted or punished for the matter about which his testimony is sought. He holds that the purpose of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments was not confined to the protection of a witness against "law-inflicted pains and penalties only," but that the purpose was "to make the secrets of memory, so far as they brought one's former acts within the definitions of crime, inviolate as against judicial probe or disclosure;" and that "the privilege of silence, against a criminal accusation, guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment, was meant to extend to all the consequences of disclosure." This doctrine is perhaps extreme. It may be that a statute exempting a witness from prosecution and from any exposure to penalties or forfeitures for the acts or things about which he is called upon to testify might remove him from behind the constitutional shield. I have noticed the James Case, however, because it is the latest judicial expression upon the general subject, and because the opinion discusses very fully the personal rights of individuals under English and American institutions. Of course, if our views hereinbefore expressed, and the authorities therein cited, are correct, the petitioner herein can invoke these constitutional principles equally with one who is a party to an action which is strictly in form criminal.

If the administrator of the estate of Hoeflich, deceased, believes, from information which he has, that said estate has a just cause of action against the petitioner herein, he has the privilege of bringing an action against said petitioner in the proper court; and when said action is pending he may avail himself, like other litigants, of the provisions of section 1000 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have an inspection of such books, documents, and papers in the possession of said petitioner as the court may deem proper, and may also examine said petitioner as a witness in the case. I think that a peremptory writ of prohibition should issue as prayed for in the petition.

I concur: De Haven, J.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

NORFOLK & WESTERN R. CO., Plff. in Err.,

H. W. WHEELER, Admr., etc., of George De Board, Deceased.

(.....Va.....)

A railroad company is not liable for injuries to a licensee by the sliding of a bank along the top of which was a footpath which he was using, in consequence of the removal of a boulder to prevent its falling on the tracks, unless the person doing the work knew that such removal left the path unsafe and failed to use reasonable precautions to avoid injury to persons likely to use it, or to notify them of the danger.

(July 18, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Smyth County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bolling & Stanley, for plaintiff in error:

Deceased was on private property, and in assuming to himself the right to go upon it he relieved the owner thereof from any care or responsibility in his behalf.

Finlayson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 1 Dill. 579; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 7 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112; McClaren v. Indianapolis & V.

NOTE.—For general subject of liability for negligence in respect to grounds beside frequented path, see note to Lepnick v. Gaddis (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 686.

29 L. R. A.

R. Co. 88 Ind. 819; Palmer v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. 113 Ind. 350; Carley v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 98 Pa. 498; Whart. Neg. pp. 851, 852.

He was not a licensee in the true sense of the word, and if he could be considered as such in any sense, on account of the continued use of the path, it could be only as a bare or naked licensee, to whom the defendant owed no duty, and who went upon its lands at his own peril.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. pp. 26, 57; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 321, 50 Am. Rep. 784; Reardon v. Thompson, 149 Mass. 267; Whart. Neg. p. 851; 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 383, 361, § 8; Hogan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 59 Wis. 189; Central Railroad v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 207; Parker v. Portland Pub. Co. 69 Me. 178, 81 Am. Rep. 262; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 61 et seq., and note; Cahill v. Layton, 57 Wis. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 46; Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. v. Bourke, 10 Ill. App. 474; Metcalfe v. Cunard S. S. Co. 147 Mass. 66; Heinlein v. Boston & P. R. Co. 147 Mass. 136; Faris v. Hoberg, 184 Ind. 269.

The mere fact that people have frequently trespassed upon a railroad track, with no effort by the company to stop them, will not create any right in the public.

Central Railroad v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 207.

Messrs. Cole & Bell, for defendant in error:

The court's instruction was a full, clear, and accurate definition of a licensee.

Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 667; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Carper, 88 Va. 556; Graves v. Thomas, 95 Ind. 361, 48 Am. Rep. 737.

If the jury say by their verdict that one thing was the cause of the fall, and counsel contend that it was not that thing, but that it was some other thing, the contention of the latter will not be considered or noticed, unless they can show an utter failure of all evidence supporting the finding of the jury.

Va. Code 1887, § 8484; Barton, Law Pr. 1st ed. p. 221, § 84, and cases there cited.

Cardwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the circuit court of Smyth county. The action was brought by the defendant in error to recover of the plaintiff in error damages for alleged injuries to defendant in error's decedent, caused by the negligence of the plaintiff in error; and the case, briefly stated, is as follows: George De Board, at the time of the accident from which this suit arose, occupied a blacksmith shop on a 3-acre lot of ground lying on the south side of plaintiff in error's line of railroad, about $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles west of Marion station, and adjacent to a private crossing called Hull's Crossing. De Board, together with the other occupants of this 3 acres of land, and perhaps other persons in the neighborhood, has been in the habit for a number of years of using a path which crossed this lot of ground and ran along the edge of the railroad embankment or cut a short distance to Hull's crossing; De Board using the path chiefly to go over and get water from a spring on the north side of the railroad. In the afternoon of December 6, 1892, De Board was found in the ditch at the bottom of the railroad embankment or cut, just under where the path ran along on the edge of the embankment, and near the side and at the end of the cross-ties of the company's railroad, so much injured that he could not stand alone, and was carried to the house of his son-in-law, the plaintiff in this case, where he, from his injuries, died, as alleged, some time in the following January. This suit was brought by his personal representative at the first March rules, 1893, and the declaration filed charges that De Board's death was caused by the careless and negligent action of the plaintiff in error, through its agents or employes, in removing rock and earth from underneath the path in question, leaving the surface of the path unsupported, and thus making a trap or pit-fall for any one passing over or along the path, whereby De Board, in passing along the path, which he had been doing for a number of years past, broke through and fell upon the company's railroad track below, and received the injuries from which he afterwards died. At the trial of the case the court below instructed the jury as follows: "No. 1. The jury are the triors of the facts as to whether or not George De Board was a licensee on the defendant's right of way. If the jury believe from the evidence that the deceased, George De Board, when he received his injuries, was traveling along the footpath or way over the defendant's land, which had been long used as a walk way, leading to a crossing over defendant's track, by himself and certain other individuals, occupants of an adjoining lot or close, or by the general public, with the knowledge of the defendant company, and without any objection on its part, then the jury must find that said George De Board was not a trespasser while traveling said path, but that he was a licensee, and not wrongfully traveling said path." "No. 2. The court further instructs the jury that, if they find that George De Board was traveling said path as such licensee, no duty was imposed upon the defendant company to keep the said path in good order and repair, and the said George De Board traveled thereon at his peril. But if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant company did carelessly and negligently make an excavation beneath said pathway, not open to the common observation of persons walking along said path, and no notice or warning had been given to said De Board, and that said De Board, while walking along said path or way with due caution and care, was injured and killed by reason of said excavation, then the said defendant company is liable to answer therefor in damages. But if the jury believe from the evidence that the supposed excavation complained of was open to the common observation of those traveling along said pathway, and that said De Board, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have observed the same, and that he carelessly and negligently stepped into said excavation, then he was chargeable with contributory negligence, and is not entitled to recover." "No. 3. And the court instructs the jury that, if they find for the plaintiff, in assessing the damages they are not limited to the actual loss of service of deceased, George De Board, but they may assess such sum as to them may seem fair and just, looking to all the circumstances of the case, not exceeding the amount claimed in the declaration."

We are of opinion that these instructions fairly expound the law applicable to the case; but the question to be determined here is, Does the evidence in the case sustain the verdict of the jury in favor of the defendant in error, assessing his damages at $505? Though the jury might have been warranted in finding, from all the circumstances surrounding the case, that De Board was a licensee upon the plaintiff in error's property at the time of his injury, plaintiff in error could not be held liable in damages for the injuries he sustained, unless the evidence showed that the agents or employes of plaintiff in error, having charge of the repairs to its railroad track at this point, knew of the dangerous condition in which the path in question was left after the removal of the rock and earth, as alleged in the declaration. The evidence in the case shows that the section hands of the railroad company, a few days prior to the injury of De Board, had taken out a rock immediately west (about one foot west) of where persons usually traveling this path step over a fence which ran to the railroad embankment at that point, because the rock was loose and dangerous, and was liable to fall into the track and cause the wreck of trains,—the person who took out the rock, testifying for the defendant in error, stating that he had been over the path once or twice; that he knew something of the rock; that he took it out, but did not meddle with the path after taking the rock out; that the rock was loose, and thrown down with little or no exertion, and fell and rolled on the railroad track, and rested against the rail. The evidence for defendant in error further shows that the rock, before it was taken down, was visible above the ground for three or four inches, and dipped south under the path, and had often been sat upon by one of the witnesses, and that any one going along the path, who took the trouble to look, could have seen the rock; that from the top of the bank on which the path ran to the point in the ditch below where the plaintiff's intestate was found, in a "perpendicular line, was about 7 feet, being measured to the top of the cross-ties." This is all the evidence that even tends to show that the employes of the railroad company had any sort of knowledge that the path in question was left in a dangerous condition after this rock had been removed from the bank as stated, and it can only be questioned that it was entirely proper that this rock should have been removed. There could be no carelessness or negligence on the part of the plaintiff in error, under the circumstances surrounding the removal of this rock, for which it could be held liable in damages to defendant in error, unless it be shown by satisfactory proof that the section hands, or employes, of the company, when they removed the rock, knew that the path was left in an unsafe condition, and failed to restore it to its original state, or use reasonable precaution to avoid injury to those likely to pass along the path, or notify such persons of the danger; and as the evidence in this case does not, in our opinion, sufficiently show that the employes of the plaintiff in error had knowledge of the dangerous condition of this path after the removal of the rock, the verdict of the jury is without sufficient evidence to sustain it.

It was therefore error in the circuit court of Smyth county to overrule the motion made by plaintiff in error for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence; and for this error its judgment must be reversed, and this cause remanded for a new trial, to be had in accordance with this opinion.

LYNCHBURG NATIONAL BANK, Pf.
in Err.,

SCOTT BROTHERS et al.

(.....Va.....)

Usury forming part of the face of a renewal note discounted in the regular course

NOTE.—As to effect on notes in hands of bona fide holders, of a statute declaring the notes void, see note to Vorels v. Nussbaum (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 45.

For general rules as to rights of bona fide holders, see note to Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf (N. Y.) 10 L. R. A. 674.

29 L. R. A.

of business at the legal rate, without notice and before maturity, is not an available defense under a statute changing the law making usurious contracts "void," so that they shall be "deemed to be for an illegal consideration" as to the interest

(July 11, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Washington County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Honaker & Hutton and White & Penn., for plaintiff in error:

The change in the act from "void" to "be deemed to be for an illegal consideration" puts a negotiable instrument in the hands of an innocent holder on the same footing with innocent holders of negotiable paper, when the illegality arises from any other cause than the statute.

A purchaser or holder of a negotiable instrument, who has taken it, bona fide, for a valuable consideration, in the ordinary course of business, when it was not overdue, without notice of its dishonor, and without notice of the facts which impeach its validity, as between antecedent parties, has a title unaffected by those facts.

Dan. Neg. Inst. § 769; 1 Barton, Law Pr. p. 552; Story, Prom. Notes, 8d ed. § 192; 8 Kent, Com. p. 100, note 4; Norris v. Langley, 19 N. H. 428; Concess v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828; Johnson v. Meeker, 1 Wis. 436; Chitty, Bills & Notes, 11th Am. ed. *81, 95; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, p. 279; Glenn v. Farmers' Bank, 70 N. C. 191; Paton v. Coit, 5 Mich. 505, 72 Am. Dec. 58; Hay v. Ayling, 16 Q. B. 423; Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615; Pickaway County Bank v. Prather, 19 Ohio St. 497; Oates v. First Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 239, 25 L. ed. 530; Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 432; Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 388, 5 L. ed. 631.

Independently of the fact that the plaintiff bank is protected as an innocent holder of the note sued on, the circuit court erred in holding that the usurious interest paid the Bank of Abingdon by Scott Brothers (the makers) could be credited upon the principal of the debt in the hands of the plaintiff.

Moseley v. Brown, 76 Va. 428; Clarkson v. Garland, 1 Leigh, 162; Spengler v. Snapp, 5 Leigh, 505; 8 Minor, Inst. 350, Money had and received; Astley v. Reynolds, 2 Strange, 915; Smith v. Bromley, 3 Dougl. 697; Fitzroy v. Gwilliam, 1 T. R. 158.

The purpose and effect of the statute, from its very terms, are only to give the borrower the right at law to recover back the excess beyond the legal interest paid, in any case, from the person paying the same, and to limit the right of that recovery to one year from the date of such payment; and this remedy is exclusive.

Matthews v. Paine, 47 Ark. 54; Presbrey v. Thomas, 1 D. C. App. 171; Carter v. Carusi, 112 U. S. 473, 28 L. ed. 820; Hinman v. Good-year, 56 Conn. 210; Pixley v. Ingram, 58 Hun, 98; Cummings v. Knight, 65 N. H. 202; Wood, Limitation of Actions, p. 287, § 163; Barnet v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 98 U. S. 555, 25 L. ed. 212;

Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 388; Driesbach v. National Bank, 104 U. S. 52, 26 L. ed. 658; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196; Cook v. Lillo, 108 U. S. 792, 26 L. ed. 466; Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 197, 28 L. ed. 399.

Mr. Daniel Trigg for defendants in error.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit at law instituted in the circuit court of Washington county, in December, 1898, by the Lynchburg National Bank against Scott Bros., upon a negotiable note for $1,000, bearing date June 3, 1893, executed by Scott Bros., and payable four months after date to S. L. Scott, at the Bank of Abingdon, Va., indorsed by S. L. Scott and the Bank of Abingdon, and discounted by the Lynchburg National Bank. The note sued on is the last of a series of renewals of a similar note discounted by the Bank of Abingdon, December 17, 1888, at a usurious rate of interest, the usurious interest paid said bank aggregating the sum of $506.38. The plaintiff bank discounted the note sued on before maturity, in the due course of business, at 6 per cent interest, without notice of any fact connected with its history, or of any illegality which affected it in the hands of antecedent parties. Before the maturity of the note sued on, the Bank of Abingdon made a general deed of assignment for the benefit of all of its creditors. Among the defenses set up by the defendants Scott Bros. was that of usury, and all questions of law and fact were, by agreement, submitted to the court, which gave judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $1,002.25, the principal of said note, and charges of protest, subject to a credit of $506.38, with interest on the balance from the date of said judgment. Objections to the rulings of the circuit court adverse to the plaintiff being regularly saved by bills of exceptions, application was made to this court for a writ of error, which was granted.

In the petition the plaintiff assigns four grounds of error, all raising questions of far more than ordinary interest. In the view, however, taken of the case by this court, it becomes unnecessary to consider but one; and that is, Can the defendants Scott Bros., in this action, avail themselves of the defense of usury against the plaintiff bank, a bona fide holder of the note sued on, for value, and without notice of any taint of usury, and received in the due course of business, before maturity, and at a legal rate of discount?

The Statute of Virginia (Code, § 2818) provides as follows: "All contracts and assurances, made directly or indirectly for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing at a greater rate of interest than is allowed by the preceding section, shall be deemed to be for an illegal consideration, as to the excess beyond the principal amount so loaned or forborne." This section of the Code is in the words of the Act, as passed March 24, 1874, and has been the law in Virginia since that date. By the terms of the statute which was in force in this state prior to April 1, 1873, all contracts and assurances for the loan or forbearance of money founded upon a usurious consideration were declared to be void.

The question to be considered is the effect, as to negotiable instruments, of this change in the statute, declaring that such contracts shall be deemed to be for an illegal consideration instead of void, as formerly.

These are not meaningless words, and it cannot be doubted that the legislature had some wise purpose in adopting the one rather than the other.

The purchaser or holder of a negotiable instrument, who has taken it bona fide, for a valuable consideration, in the ordinary course of business, when it was not overdue, without notice of its dishonor, and without notice of facts which impeach its validity as between antecedent parties, has a title unaffected by those facts, and may recover on the instrument, although it may be without any legal validity, as between the antecedent parties. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. p. 576, § 769.

I believe the foregoing strong statement of the favor with which negotiable instruments are regarded by the law is universally accepted as sound. So far as I have been able to examine the authorities, there is but one exception to the rule just laid down, and that is when the statute renders such instruments void. The law extends this peculiar protection to negotiable instruments because it would seriously embarrass mercantile transactions to expose the trader to the consequences of having the bill or note passed to him impeached for some covert defect. The same author says: "When the statute merely declares, expressly or by implication, that the consideration shall be deemed illegal, the bill or note founded upon such consideration shall be valid in the hands of the bona fide holder without notice, but the burden of proof will be upon the plaintiff, when the illegal consideration appears, to show that he is a bona fide holder without notice." In sections 807 and 808 the same author says: "In many localities negotiable instruments executed upon gaming or usurious considerations are upon the same footing as those executed for other illegal considerations—that is, void between the parties, but valid in the hands of a bona fide holder.

And that when the instrument was executed upon an illegal consideration, especially if illegal by statute (but not absolutely avoiding the instrument), it throws upon the holder the burden of proving bona fide ownership for value. . . . And in all cases where the statute does not declare the instrument void, bona fide ownership for value being proved, the holder is entitled to recover."

Story, Prom. Notes, 8d ed. § 192, says: "The same doctrine will generally apply to all cases of a bona fide holder for value, without notice, before it becomes due, where the original note, or the indorsement thereof, is founded on an illegal consideration; and this upon the same general ground of public policy, without any distinction between a case of illegality founded in moral crime or turpitude, which is malum in se, and a case founded in the positive prohibition of a statute, which is malum prohibitum; for, in each case, the innocent holder is, or may be, otherwise exposed to the most ruinous consequences, and the circulation of negotiable instruments would be materially obstructed, if not totally stopped. The only exception is, where the statute creating the prohibition has at the same time, either expressly or by necessary implication, made the instrument absolutely void in the hands of every holder, whether he has such notice or not."

In note 4 to Kent's Commentaries, 11th ed., vol. 3, p. 100, it is said: "If a note is not declared void by statute, mere illegality in its consideration will not affect the rights of a bona fide holder for value;" citing Norris v. Langley, 19 N. H. 423; Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828; Johnson v. Meeker, 1 Wis. 486.

The principles in the foregoing text-books are sustained by the following adjudicated cases: Glenn v. Farmers' Bank, 70 N. C. 191; Paton v. Coit, 5 Mich. 505, 72 Am. Dec. 58; Hay v. Ayling, 16 Q. B. 423; Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615; Oates v. First Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 239, 249, 250, 25 L. ed. 580, 584, 585; Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 482.

In the case of Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 828, cited in note 4 to Kent's Commentaries, supra, Judge Poland says: "The English statutes against usury and gaming, not only impose a penalty for such illegal acts, but expressly declare that all notes, bills, bonds, and other securities given upon such illegal considerations shall be utterly void. All the cases that have been cited, and all that can be, so far as we know, both English and American, upon this subject, turn upon this very distinction and difference between these statutes. In those cases in which the legislature has declared that the illegality of the contract or consideration shall make the security, whether bill or note, void, the defendant may insist on such illegality, though the plaintiff or such other party between him and the defendant, took the bill or note bona fide, and gave a valuable consideration for it. But unless it has been so expressly declared by the legislature, illegality of consideration would be no defense in an action at the suit of a bona fide holder for value, without notice of the illegality."

"If a statute declares a security void," says Judge Rodman in the case of Glenn v. Farmers' Bank, 70 N. C. 191, "then it is void in whosoever hands it may come. If, however, a negotiable security be founded on an illegal consideration (and it is immaterial whether it be illegal at common law or by statute), and no statute says it shall be void, the security is good in the hands of an innocent holder, or of any one claiming through him.

"The case of Hay v. Ayling, above cited, is a notable illustration of the difference.

"Gaming securities were declared void by 9 Anne, chap. 14, § 1, and it was held that they were void in the hands of a bona fide innocent indorsee. The Act of 5 & 6 Wm. IV., chap. 41, § 1, modified the Act of Anne, and declared they should be illegal. The court held that after that act they could be recovered on by an innocent holder."

29 L. R. A.

Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Fletcher v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 388, 5 L. ed. 631, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, says: "The statutes of usury of the states, as well as of England, contain an express provision that usurious contracts shall be utterly void; and without such an enactment the contract would be valid, at least, in respect to persons who were strangers to the usury."

In Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615, Chief Justice Savage said: "Wherever the statutes declare notes void, they are, and must be so, in the hands of every holder; but where they are adjudged by the court to be so, for failure, or the illegality of the consideration, they are void only in the hands of the original parties, or those who are chargeable with, or have had notice of the consideration."

In Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 482, Mitchell, J., says: "The authorities justify the statement that a defendant may insist upon the illegality of the contract or consideration, notwithstanding the note is in the hands of an innocent holder for value, in all those cases in which he can point to an express declaration of the legislature that the illegality insisted upon shall make the security, whether contract, bill, or note, void. But unless the legislature has so declared, then, no matter how illegal or immoral the consideration may be, a commercial note in the hands of an innocent holder for value will be held valid and enforceable;" citing a number of authorities.

This court, in Branch v. Banking Fund Comrs., 80 Va. 427, 56 Am. Rep. 596, says that a note in the hands of the maker, before delivery, is not property, nor the subject of ownership as such; that it must be issued or delivered by the maker before any one can become the bona fide holder of it. This view is not in conflict with the position taken here, where the question being considered is the difference between contracts declared by the statute to be void, and those declared to be for an illegal consideration, and where the note sued on was issued and delivered by the maker. Nor are the authorities quoted to sustain the conclusion here reached in conflict with the view expressed in 80 Va. 427, 56 Am. Rep. 596.

If the word "illegal" were construed to mean "void," as contended for by the learned counsel for the appellees, the change in the statute would be meaningless. A glance at the history of the statute makes it clear that the legislature had an object in its change. The revisers of the Code of 1849 recommended that what is now section 2818 should be adopted by the legislature. The legislature, however, refused to adopt the report of the revisers, and the law still declared all usurious contracts void, until the law was modified, and declared they should be void only as to the interest in excess of 6 per cent per annum, but the Legislature of 1874 declared that it should be deemed to be for an illegal consideration, as to the excess beyond the principal sum loaned or forborne. Commercial paper has ever been regarded with favor by the law, and, in view of its growing importance and its universal convenience in the affairs of men, it is not strange that the lawmaker, in the interest of a wise public policy, should desire to exempt such paper, in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, and without notice, from the hazard and uncertainty to which it was subjected by the law under a statute which declared the usurious contract void. But, whatever may have been the motive of the legislature in making this change, it is the duty of the court to enforce the law as it is made. And it is perfectly clear, upon reason and authority, that, no matter how illegal the consideration may be, a negotiable note in the hands of a bona fide holder, for value, without notice, will be held valid and enforceable.

If the maker of a negotiable note contests the right of one who has acquired it by indorsement, for value, before maturity, and without notice of any defense, to recover of him the amount of the note, he must, to prevail, be able to show a statute that in express terms, or by necessary implication, declares the note to be void.

The agreed statement of facts in this case shows that the plaintiff in error discounted the note sued on before maturity, and in the due course of business, at 6 per cent interest; that the plaintiff in error had no notice or knowledge when it discounted the note that it was a renewal of any other note, or that it had ever theretofore been discounted by the Bank of Abindgon, or that any one had at any time received from the defendants in error usurious interest thereon.

The Statute (sec. 2818) declaring that all usurious contracts shall be deemed to be for an illegal consideration as to the interest, instead of void, as formerly, it follows from what has been said that the defendants in error could not avail themselves of the defense of usury, to defeat the plaintiff bank of its recovery of the note sued on, or any part thereof.

The judgment of the Circuit Court being in conflict with this opinion, it must be reversed and set aside, and this court will enter such judgment as the said circuit court ought to have entered.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

• Henry H. SCHUFELDT et al., Respts.,

v.

J. Francis SMITH et al., Appts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A deed of trust by an insolvent corporation is not void as matter of law from the fact that the directors vote themselves preferences in payment of debts.

2. Directors of an insolvent corporation, who vote themselves preferences over other creditors, must show that all their secured claims are honest and justly due them.

(July 9, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Buchanan County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to set aside a trust deed executed by James Walsh Mercantile Company for the benefit of creditors. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Huston & Parrish, S. S. Brown, and H. K. White, for appellants:

A corporation in the transaction of its business, though embarrassed, can convey its assets by way of deed of trust, making a preference among its creditors.

2 Kent, Com. 281, 315, note g; Cook, Corp. 2d ed. 691; Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. 11th ed. 187; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. 358; 2 Potter, Corp. 695; Burrill, Assignm. 5th ed. 64; St. Louis City & County v. Alexander, 23 Mo. 488; Kitchen v. St. Louis, E. C. & N. R. Co. 69 Mo. 224; Shockley v. Fisher, 75 Mo. 498; Foster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 79; Larrabee v. Franklin Bank, 114 Mo. 592; Alberger v. National Bank of Commerce, 128 Mo. 318; LaGrange Butter Tub Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 123 Mo. 154; Callin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 233; Savory Bank v. Bates, 8 Conn. 505; Pondeville Co. v. Clark, 25 Conn. 97; Smith v. Skeerry, 47 Conn. 47; Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 885; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743; Pond v. Framingham & L. R. Co. 130 Mass. 94; Olney v. Conanticut Land Co. 16 R. I. 597, 5 L. R. A. 361; DeRuyter v. St. Peter's Church Trustees, 8 Barb. Ch. 119, approved in 3 N. Y. 238; Hoyt v. Sheldon, 8 Bosw. 267; Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190, 8 N. Y. 1; Lane v. Wheelwright, 69 Hun, 180; Brooker v. Brooklyn Trust Co. 50 N. Y. S. R. 630; Vail v. Jameson, 41 N. J. Eq. 648; Bergen v. Porpoise Fishing Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 397; Scoll v. East Cape May Beach Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 717; Dana v. Bank of United States, 5 Watts & S. 223; Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 385, 26 Am. Dec. 75; State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 205, 26 Am. Dec. 561; Burr v. McDonald, 3 Gratt. 315; Planters' Bank v. Whittle, 78 Va. 787; Ruffner Bros. v. Welton Coal & Salt Co. 36 W. Va. 244; Dabney v. Bank of State of S. C. 3 S. C. N. S. 124; Baring v. Dabney, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 1, 23 L. ed. 90; Carey v. Giles, 10 Ga. 9; Globe Iron Roofing & C. Co. v. Thacker, 87 Ala. 458; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D.

NOTE.—For preferences by insolvent corporations, see note to Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 22 L. R. A. 802. 29 L. R. A.

Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439; Arthur v. Commercial & R. Bank, 9 Smedes & M. 894, 48 Am. Dec. 719; Ex parte Conway, 4 Ark. 302; Ringo v. Biscoe, 13 Ark. 563; Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562; Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 632; United States Bank v. Huth, 4 B. Mon. 423; Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush, 678; Hopkins v. Gallatin Turnp. Co. 4 Humph. 403; Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 577; Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Town v. Bank of River Raisin, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 530; Covert v. Rogers, 38 Mich. 863, 81 Am. Rep. 319; Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co. 55 Mich. 387; Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; Bank of Montreal v. J. E. Potts Salt & L. Co. 90 Mich. 345; Hills v. Stockwell & D. Furniture Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 432; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697, 59 Am. Rep. 461; Warfield v. Marshall County Canning Co. 72 Iowa, 666; Rollins v. Shaver Wagon & C. Co. 80 Iowa, 380; Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470; Poole v. West Point Butter & C. Assn. 30 Fed. Rep. 513; Milroy v. Enger, 80 Fed. Rep. 544; Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. Rep. 148; Hays v. Citizens' Bank, 51 Kan. 535; Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 33 L. ed. 721; George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co. v. McGroarty, 136 U. S. 237, 34 L. ed. 346; Re Patent File Co. L. R. 6 Ch. 88; Re Wincham Shipbuilding B. & S. Co. L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 322.

The fact that one of the claims preferred was guaranteed by the president of the corporation, and that another was the property of the estate of a decedent of which the president of the corporation was administrator, will not invalidate the deed in any respect.

St. Louis City & County v. Alexander, 23 Mo. 483; Foster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 79; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Hallam v. Indiana Hotel Co. 56 Iowa, 179; Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Wasson, 48 Iowa, 336; Bank of Montreal v. J. E. Potts Salt & L. Co. 90 Mich. 345; Ex parte Conway, 4 Ark. 302; Ringo v. Biscoe, 13 Ark. 563; Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562; Planters' Bank v. Whittle, 78 Va. 739; Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470; Cadlin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 233; Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 41 N. J. Eq. 635; Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425; Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 385; Ashhurst's App. 60 Pa. 290; Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Claghorn, 1 Speers, Eq. 545; Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 266, 22 L. R. A. 817; Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 680; Hills v. Stockwell & D. Furniture Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 432; McCracken v. Robinson, 57 Fed. Rep. 875; Taylor County Ct. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 161.

Walsh's vote as director was not necessary to order the deed of trust. Two of the directors, Byrne and McGuire, constituted a quorum, and their votes in favor of the deed of trust made it the act of the corporation, even if Walsh's vote in its favor be excluded.

Foster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. supra; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 718; Buell v. Buckingham, supra.

Even if a single director's interest in the claims, one of which he held as administrator and another of which he had indorsed, rendered the deed invalid as to those claims, the deed remains good as to the others.

Jones, Chat. Mortg. 336; Hardcastle v. Fisher, 24 Mo. 70; Foster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 79; Morris v. Lindauer, 54 Fed. Rep. 23, 6 U. S. App. 510; Cohn v. Ward, 32 W. Va. 39; Riggan v. Wolf, 53 Ark. 537.

Messrs. Vinton Pike, Stauber & Crandall, Willard P. Hall, and Dowe, Johnson & Rusk, for respondents:

The directors of an insolvent corporation cannot be made preferred creditors for unsecured debts. This rule is universal where the vote of the preferred director or directors is necessary to the giving of the preference.

Suddath v. Gallagher, 126 Mo. 398; Bridgens v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 66 Fed. Rep. 9; La Grange Butter Tub Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 122 Mo. 154; Hill v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 119 Mo. 9; Roan v. Winn, 93 Mo. 508; Foster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 79; Williams v. Jackson County Patrons of Husbandry, 23 Mo. App. 182; Adams v. Kehler Mill Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 433; Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 204, 45 Fed. Rep. 7; Mallory v. Mallory Wheeler Co. 61 Conn. 131; Olney v. Conanieut Land Co. 16 R. I. 597, 5 L. R. A. 361; Hopkins's App. 90 Pa. 69; Richards v. New Hampshire Ins. Co. 43 N. H. 263; Sicardi v. Keystone Oil Co. 149 Pa. 148; Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624; Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618; Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. 96 Ala. 357; Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 577; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162; Roseboom v. Whittaker, 132 Ill. 81; Peterson v. Brabrook Tailoring Co. 150 Ill. 290; Hays v. Citizens' Bank, 51 Kan. 535; Howe v. Sanford Fork & T. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 231; Bosworth v. Jacksonville Nat. Bank, 64 Fed. Rep. 615; Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 63 Fed. Rep. 497; Gaslight Imp. Co. v. Terrell, L. R. 10 Eq. 168; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639; Thompson v. Huron Lumber Co. 4 Wash. 600; Hill v. Pioneer Lumber Co. 113 N. C. 173, 21 L. R. A. 560; Chamberlain v. Pacific Wool-Growing Co. 54 Cal. 103; Blalock v. Kernersville Mfg. Co. 110 N. C. 99; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 787, par. 3; 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 123; Gluck & Becker, Receivers, § 49; Wait, Insol. Corp. § 162; Lamb v. Laughlin, 25 W. Va. 300; Wait, Fraud, Conv. § 470.

A corporation is insolvent within the rule as to preferring creditors when its assets are insufficient to pay its debts, and it has ceased to do business, or is in the act of taking a step which will practically incapacitate it for conducting the corporate enterprise.

Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618; Dodge v. Martin, 17 Fed. Rep. 660; 11 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 168, 172; Morse, Banks & Banking, § 662; Gluck & Becker, Receivers, §§ 14, 49; Reid v. Lloyd, 52 Mo. App. 232; State v. Koontz, 33 Mo. 323; Eddy v. Baldwin, 32 Mo. 369; Buchanan v. Smith, 33 U. S. 16 Wall. 277, 21 L. ed. 230.

Directors are charged with knowledge as to the solvency of their corporation.

McDaniel v. Harvey, 51 Mo. App. 198; Hop- kind's App. 90 Pa. 69; Sicardi v. Keystone Oil Co. 149 Pa. 148; Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624; Corey v. Wadsworth, supra; Jones v. Arkansas Mechanical & Agri. Co. 38 Ark. 25.

The execution of a conveyance of all its property by a corporation is a confession of insolvency.

Kellog v. Richardson, 19 Fed. Rep. 71; Oliver-Finne Grocer Co. v. Miller, 53 Mo. App. 107; Walton v. First Nat. Bank, 18 Colo. 265, 5 L. R. A. 765; Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co. 45 Fed. Rep. 18; Morse, Banks & Banking, § 622.

Inasmuch as the directors were preferred in the deed of trust, they were disqualified by their self-interest from acting and making such preference as trustees of the corporation. The deed of trust is therefore void in toto on account of the disqualification of the directors to act as trustees of the corporation in a matter in which they were personally interested.

Suddath v. Gallagher, 126 Mo. 393; Bridgens v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 66 Fed. Rep. 9; Roan v. Winn, 93 Mo. 508; Foster v. Mullanphy Planting Mill Co. 92 Mo. 79; Williams v. Jackson Country Patrons of Husbandry, 23 Mo. App. 132; Adams v. Kehlor Mill. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 438; Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 204, 45 Fed. Rep. 7; Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190.

When the corporation became insolvent its assets became ipso facto a trust fund in the hands of its directors for the benefit of its creditors, and the directors were disqualified from dealing with this fund for their own benefit or advantage. It therefore follows that the attempt on the part of the directors to authorize the execution by the corporation of the deed of trust in which certain debts of the directors were attempted to be preferred was void.

Munson v. Syracuse, G. & C. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 73; Lamb v. Laughlin, 25 W. Va. 300; Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 63 Fed. Rep. 496; Bradley v. Farwell, Holmes, C. C. 433; Adams v. Kehlor Mill. Co. supra; Ward v. Davidson, 89 Mo. 445.

Macfarlane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit is to set aside a certain deed of trust, executed on the 18th day of March, 1893, by the James Walsh Mercantile Company, a business corporation, to defendant J. Francis Smith, as trustee, to secure its creditors in the order therein named. The deed was executed in pursuance of this resolution of the board of directors: "Whereas, this corporation is unable to meet its obligations as they fall due, though its assets are much more than its liabilities: Resolved, that, in order to more economically dispose of such portion of its assets as may be necessary to pay its debts than could be done if legal proceedings should be instituted, the corporation convey all its property, real, personal, and mixed, to J. Francis Smith, as trustee, with powers of sale and collection, and that such trustee pay: First, costs of the trust; second, debts preferred by the state laws of Missouri; third, obligations for borrowed money not secured by collateral; fourth, balance due on notes for borrowed money secured by collateral after application of collateral and their proceeds, and notes of other parties discounted by the company, after due attempt to collect from makers; fifth, other indebtedness of the company not disputed." The deed of trust was drawn in accordance with the resolution. The creditors of the various classes, with the amounts due each, were specified, and directions were given the trustee to pay the debts in the order named.

The debts of the third class as specified in the mortgage aggregated about $35,000, and those of the fourth class about $58,000. The fifth class of creditors secured were the general mercantile creditors of the corporation. The debts of this class aggregated about $30,000. Creditors of this class prosecute this suit. Pending the suit, defendant Smith was appointed receiver. The face value of the assets amounted to about $300,000, but, on account of depreciation, it was thought by the receiver that not more than $100,000 could be realized on them. There would be, therefore, but little, if anything, to apply on the fifth class of debts. Under the deed of trust, power of sale was given the trustee, as also authority to collect the debts due the company. It was charged in the petition "that certain of the indebtedness in preferred classes 3 and 4 is the individual indebtedness of the officers and directors of said corporation, and was contracted for the purpose of protecting the individual liability of said officers and directors." Defendant Smith, by answer, admitted the execution and delivery of the deed of trust, and that, by virtue of the powers thereby conferred, he took into his possession all the property so assigned to him, with a view of administering the same. The other allegations of the petition were in substance denied. The only evidence offered on the trial was directed to the question of the solvency of the corporation at the time the deed of trust was made. The records of the corporation showed that James Walsh was its president. Charles McGinn, vice-president, and John F. Byrne, secretary. It also appears that these were the only directors who passed the resolution. The deed of trust was signed by James Walsh, as president, and attested by John F. Byrne, as secretary. One note placed in class 3, as described in the deed of trust, was dated January 25, 1893, and was executed by the former firm of James Walsh & Co. in the sum of $12,000, payable to Ferdinand Lutz, of St. Joseph, Missouri, payment of which has been assumed by said party of the first part. Another note of the same character, dated in 1899, for $2,000, was also described in the deed of trust. In the same class were two notes made by the corporation to James Walsh, as administrator of the Conrad estate. It was not shown by evidence that the creditor James Walsh was the same person as James Walsh the president and director of the corporation; nor was any evidence offered explanatory of the assumption by the corporation of the note of James Walsh & Co. The case was argued by counsel on both sides, and the identity of James Walsh in each capacity has been assumed. No evidence was offered tending to prove actual bad faith, either in the execution of the deed, or in creating the debts secured by it. The court found that on the 18th day of March, 1893 (the date of the deed of trust), the defendant James Walsh Mercantile Company was insolvent, and from that date "ceased to be a going concern." Upon this finding a decree was entered setting aside the deed of trust, from which defendants appealed.

Most of the questions involved in this record have in some recent cases in this court been given careful and exhaustive consideration. The investigations given the subject have been more labored and thorough on account of apparent want of harmony in some of the previous decisions of this court, as well as on account of the diversity of opinion in other jurisdictions. The conclusions reached by each of the divisions, which received the concurrence of all the members, may be briefly given in the language of the syllabus prepared by the judge who wrote one of the opinions, as follows: "A corporation in failing circumstances may prefer one creditor to another, in discharging its obligations, if such preference is made in good faith while the property of the company remains in its possession, unaffected by liens or any process of law. Mere insolvency of a corporation does not of itself transform its assets into a trust fund for the equal benefit of all its creditors." Alberger v. National Bank of Commerce, 123 Mo. 313; Slavens v. John R. Cook Drug Co. (Mo.) 30 S. W. Rep. 1025; Waggoner-Gates Mill Co. v. Ziegler-Zales Commission Co. (Mo.) (not yet officially reported) 31 S. W. Rep. 28. In the case last cited, which was decided by division 2 of this court, it was also held that preference in the same circumstances may be given to a creditor of a corporation who is secured by the indorsement of some of its directors. It would seem to follow logically from these decisions that a preference may be made to a director for a debt directly due him from the corporation, unless it would be defeated by his own act in voting himself the preference.

But it is insisted with much earnestness, and argued with great ability, that the directors had no power to bind the corporation to an agreement made with themselves, and in which they had a personal interest, and that, therefore, the resolution of the board of directors authorizing preferences to be given the members thereof, over other creditors, and the deed of trust executed in pursuance thereof, were absolutely void. This contention must rest upon one of two theories,—either that the directors of a corporation are trustees for its creditors, and its assets constitute a trust fund which they must apply ratably toward the satisfaction of all the debts, or that such a transaction is, upon its face, constructively fraudulent. As has been seen, the so called "trust-fund theory," as applied to a corporation, while dominion over its property is retained, is not recognized in this state as being sound. Nothing additional need be said on that subject. The board of directors are undoubtedly trustees for the corporation and stockholders, and, when acting for them, are bound to exercise the utmost good faith. Any attempt in dealing with its property or affairs to secure themselves personal advantages over other stockholders should at least be subject to the most rigorous scrutiny. Hill v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 119 Mo. 19, and cases cited.

But it cannot be said, as a correct proposition of law, that officers of a corporation cannot themselves and in their own names contract with it. To so hold would virtually deny to corporations the credit upon which so much of the business of the country is transacted, and which is so essential to success. If the stockholders and officers of corporations are not permitted to advance money to them, or to indorse for them, without subjecting themselves to such disadvantages, they would be deprived of their most valuable source of credit. A corporation naturally looks to those interested in its affairs for accommodations. If directors can lend the corporation money, or indorse for it, they should certainly have the same right to collect the debts or secure themselves as is accorded to other creditors. The cases cited abundantly show that a corporation, so long as it has control of its property, though insolvent, may, when acting honestly, prefer one creditor to another. A mortgage, then, giving such preference, is not constructively fraudulent. Neither the corporation nor the other stockholders are injured by the preference given. To defeat them, actual fraud should be shown. The honest debts all stand, and should stand, on equal footing. All the creditors should have equal rights to enter in the race of diligence. The fact that the race may be unequal should not deprive the winner of his reward. An individual debtor can prefer his family, his neighbors, and his friends. If the preferred debt is honest, the preference cannot be impeached, though the wife of the debtor secure the advantage. Hart v. Leete, 104 Mo. 338; Riley v. Vaughan, 116 Mo. 176. No reason can be seen why a corporation may not also prefer its friends. There is no more equity in allowing an individual debtor to prefer his creditor, wife, or children than in allowing a corporation to prefer its stockholders and officers. To permit equities to control would defeat all preferences. While the owner of property retains the power of its disposal he may apply it to the payment of any honest debt, is the rule upon which the right to make preferences among creditors rests. The rule should apply as well to corporations as to individuals, and any change should be made by the legislature, and not by the courts. If the debt is an honest one, and the corporation had the power to contract it, it has the right to pay or secure it, and no fraud can be imputed to it from the fact that it is paid or secured in preference to another. "It may be conceded," said Judge Taft in a recent case, "that the trust relation justifies and requires courts of equity to subject preferences by an insolvent corporation of its own directors to the closest scrutiny, and of showing beyond question that he had a bona fide debt; but we do not see why, if a corporation may prefer one creditor over another, it may not prefer a director who is a bona fide creditor. Preferences are not based on any equitable principle. They go by favor. And, as one individual may prefer among his creditors his friends and relations, so a corporation may prefer its friends." Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 286, 22 L. R. A. 817. See also Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562, and cases cited.

We do not think, therefore, that the deed of trust is constructively fraudulent for the reason that it gives preferences to a director of the corporation. When the right of the corporation to give preferences to any of its creditors is conceded, the logical conclusion follows that it can give them to any creditor who holds an honest debt against it, though he be an officer or stockholder. This conclusion is in accord with the declaration of Sherwood, J., in a recent case. He says: "A corporation, within the scope of the purposes for which it was incorporated, may do any act in furtherance of these purposes which an individual in similar circumstances might do, and, though insolvent, may prefer some creditors to others, even though such creditors are among the directors of the corporation." Poster v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 87. While the directors of a corporation do not sustain the strict relation of trustees for its creditors, yet their duties to them and their relation to the corporation itself are such as impose upon them some of the obligations of trustees. In dealing with the corporation, they deal with themselves. They determine the liability of the corporation to themselves. They should therefore be required, in case they give themselves a preference over other creditors, to show that all their secured debts are fair, honest, and justly due them. This burden properly rests upon them. From this record it appears that the invalidity of the deed of trust in question was declared to result from the mere insolvency of the corporation at the time it was executed. The question of the bona fides of the debts of directors, who were given preferences, was not gone into on the trial. The act of the directors in voting themselves preferences would make the deed of trust prima facie fraudulent in fact but not conclusively so as a matter of law. The court evidently did not decide the case upon the presumption of fact that the deed was fraudulent, which it might have indulged.

We therefore reverse the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial.

Brace, P. J., and Barclay and Robinson, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Wyoming, ex rel.
Isaac CHANDLER,

v.

N. D. McDONALD, Warden of the Penitentiary.

(.....Wyo.....)

A statute is not an ex post facto law because it abrogates the provision existing when an offense was committed, that the accused may secure a change of magistrate or place of preliminary examination upon his affidavit of belief of the prejudice of the magistrate before whom he is brought for examination.

(October 25, 1895.)

APPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the release of relator from defendant's custody to which he had been committed after conviction of assault and battery with intent to kill. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles F. Tew, for plaintiff:

The repeal and re-enactment is an ex post facto law as to this case if it alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage or robs him of a substantial right.

7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 526; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Gervey v. People, 6 Colo. 559, 45 Am. Rep. 531.

Under the information system of criminal procedure the presentment stands in the place and stead of the presentment by a grand jury.

Re Wright, 8 Wyo. 497, 18 L. R. A. 748; Yous v. People, 84 Mich. 236; White v. State, 28 Neb. 341.

Such presentment by a magistrate, under the information system or by a grand jury under the grand jury system is necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the trial court.

White v. State, supra; People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280; People v. Smith, 25 Mich. 49; State v. Sorenson, 84 Wis. 30; Ex parte Bai, 121 U. S. 1, 30 L. ed. 849; Ex parte Lange, 35 U. S. 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 875; Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S. 18, 23 L. ed. 787; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. ed. 89.

The right to a change of venue at a preliminary examination under the information system is to a defendant an important and substantial right.

State v. Sorenson, supra.

Mr. Benjamin F. Fowler, for defendant:

A law which operates as a mere change of criminal procedure, without affecting any substantial right of the accused, is not ex post facto, as applied to crimes committed before it took effect.

Cooley. Const. Lim. p. 329; State v. Manning, 14 Tex. 402; State v. Clarkson, 59 Mo.

NOTE.—On the subject of ex post facto laws, see also Anderson v. O'Donnell (S. C.) 1 L. R. A. 632, and note; State v. Cooker (S. C.) 3 L. R. A. 181, and note; Re Tyson (Colo.) 6 L. R. A. 472; Ex parte Larkins (Okla.) 11 L. R. A. 412; Re Wright (Wyo.) 18 L. R. A. 748; Com. v. Graves (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 256; People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 23 L. R. A. 880; Boyd v. Mills (Kan.) 25 L. R. A. 420; French v. Deane (Colo.) 24 L. R. A. 337.
29 L. R. A.

149; State v. Williams, 2 Rich. L. 418, 45 Am. Dec. 741; People v. Phelps, 5 Wend. 9; Rand v. Com. 9 Gratt. 738; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. p. 581; Re Wright, 3 Wyo. 478, 18 L. R. A. 748.

A law is not unconstitutional which precludes a defendant in a criminal case from taking advantage of variances which do not prejudice him.

Com. v. Hall, 97 Mass. 570.

Nor is a law unconstitutional which reduces the number of the prisoner's peremptory challenges.

Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664.

A law is not unconstitutional which, though passed after the commission of the offense, authorizes a change of venue to another county of the judicial districts.

Gut v. Minnesota, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 85, 19 L. ed. 573. See also Holt v. State, 2 Tex. 868; 1 Kent, Com. 408; Calder v. Bull, 8 U. S. 8 Dall. 388, 1 L. ed. 649; Strong v. State, 1 Blackf. 198; Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 138, 8 L. ed. 178; State v. Cooler, 30 S. C. 105; Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. 28.

A defendant on trial for a criminal offense has no vested right in the manner of procedure established by law at the time of the commission of the alleged crime.

Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 825; State v. Manning, 14 Tex. 402; State v. Ryan, 18 Minn. 370; Walton v. Com. 16 B. Mon. 16; Warren v. Com. 37 Pa. 45.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner for the writ of habeas corpus, Isaac Chandler, was convicted in the district court for Laramie county of the crime of assault and battery with the intent to kill and murder, and on the 7th day of June, A. D. 1895, was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of fourteen years. He applies for the writ of habeas corpus, alleging that his imprisonment is unlawful, because the justice of the peace before whom he was examined on said charge refused to grant him, upon his sworn application therefor alleging the prejudice of the magistrate, an examination before some other justice of the peace of the county wherein the offense was alleged to have been committed. The time fixed in the information or complaint before the justice of the peace, when the offense was committed was January 3, 1895. At the time of the commission of the offense, as alleged in the complaint, the statute (section 8441 of the Revised Statutes of Wyoming, as amended by chapter 17 of the Session Laws of 1890) provided, among other things, that if, upon the return of the process, or the appearance of the parties in any civil cause or proceeding "or upon any criminal examination," either party, his agent, or attorney shall make affidavit that, from prejudice, bias, or other cause, he believes that the justice of the peace before whom the cause is pending will not decide impartially in the matter, the said justice shall transfer said suit and all papers appertaining thereto to some other justice of the peace of the same or adjoining precinct against whom no such objection has been raised, who may thereupon proceed to hear and determine the same in the same manner as it would have been lawful for the justice before whom the cause or proceeding was commenced to have done. This last-mentioned act was repealed, and section 8441 of the Revised Statutes, amended thereby, was re-enacted, in such manner as to remove all reference to criminal proceedings or criminal examinations, by chapter 84 of the Session Laws of 1895, which by its terms took immediate effect, and which became a law upon the approval of the governor, February 18, 1895, two days before the complaint was made before the justice of the peace, and before the preliminary examination of the petitioner. The petitioner, at his preliminary examination, notwithstanding the repealing statute, filed his affidavit and motion before the examining magistrate, the affidavit alleging that the "affiant has been reliably informed and verily believes that there exists in the mind of H. Glascke [the magistrate] a prejudice against said defendant such as would preclude said Glascke from giving said defendant a fair and impartial hearing or examination," and, further, "that said affiant has been informed and verily believes that there exists in the mind of L. E. Stone, a justice of the peace of Cheyenne precinct, in Laramie county, Wyoming, and in the mind of one Charles Carlstrum, of Pine Bluffs precinct, in said county and state, and a justice of the peace within and for said precinct, a prejudice such as would preclude both said L. E. Stone and said Carlstrum from giving said defendant a fair and impartial examination in said matter." The objection was therefore made to three justices of the peace of the county wherein the offense was alleged to be committed by this affidavit. The justice of the peace refused the application for change of venue, doubtless because of the passage of the repealing statute taking away the right of a defendant in a criminal cause or proceeding to a change of venue in a preliminary examination. The attention of the district court was called to this matter by a plea in abatement before the trial and by a motion in arrest of judgment, both of which were overruled by the trial court.

The petitioner claims that the statute (Session Laws 1895, chap. 84), in repealing or attempting to repeal, without a saving clause, the prior statute providing for a change of venue in a preliminary examination before a justice of the peace in criminal cases, is ex post facto, and void as to him, as the offense with which he was charged was alleged to have been committed January 3, 1895, and that the Act of February 18, 1895, could not deprive him of the right to object by affidavit to the justice of the peace before whom he was brought to be examined on said charge, upon the grounds mentioned in the statute in force at the time of the alleged commission of the offense. He contends that, notwithstanding the repeal of the statute providing for a change of venue in preliminary examinations, he was entitled to it, when he applied therefor, under the law as it existed at the time of the commission of the offense alleged; that the jurisdiction of the justice as an examining tribunal or court of inquiry was defeated after the application for change of venue had been made; that the magistrate was without jurisdiction to proceed with the examination; that, as the subsequent proceedings of the magistrate were void, the accused had no preliminary examination; and that, therefore, as the statute then provided for such an examination in trials upon information of the prosecuting attorney, and where the accused had not been indicted by a grand jury, the district court was without jurisdiction to try the defendant, and that all its proceedings, resulting in the conviction and sentence of the petitioner, are wholly void. The relator insists that he has been deprived of a substantial right by the repealing statute, that of the right to object to the examining magistrate upon the belief of the petitioner of his bias and prejudice, and to secure, by merely filing an affidavit stating such belief, a change of place of trial or in the personnel of the examining tribunal.

It is doubtful if the record discloses sufficient facts to enable us to determine whether or not the offense with which the petitioner is charged occurred prior to the passage of the Statute of February 18th, which took away the right to a change of the place of the examination or in the examining magistrate. We do not have before us, in this proceeding, the record of the district court, sufficient to show when the alleged offense was committed. The allegation in the information, filed before the examining magistrate on the 20th of February, 1895, alleges that the offense occurred on the 3d day of January of that year, but this is not conclusive upon the prosecution, and, under a familiar rule of criminal law, the prosecution may lay one day in the information and prove that the offense was committed upon any day prior to the filing of the accusation. The offense may, then, have occurred, for aught we know to the contrary, on the 19th or 20th day of February, 1895, and after the passage of the challenged act of the legislature became a law by the signature of the governor, in which event, the contention of the petitioner would amount to nothing. However, we have determined to decide this proceeding upon the question involved in the briefs of counsel, and to consider only the validity of the statute which it is claimed took away the right of the petitioner in the examining court to secure a change of magistrate or place of trial, and treating the date of the commission of the offense to be prior to the enactment of the challenged statute.

There is no doubt that the statute as it originally stood was liable to great abuse, and it is no wonder that the legislature sought to repeal it. In the case at bar, the relator objected to three magistrates of the county, and it would seem that he could have objected to all but one, and thus have chosen his magistrate, or, for that matter, to all of the magistrates in the county, and thus have forced the prosecution to resort to a grand jury to secure an indictment; for, as the act stood in its primitive simplicity, it provided that, if the affidavit be filed that from prejudice, bias, or other cause the defendant believes that the justice will not decide im-partially in the matter, the proceeding shall be transferred to some other justice of the same or adjoining precinct "against whom no such objection has been raised." It will be seen, therefore, that the relator under the provisions of this statute was quite modest, as he objected to but three justices of the peace, when he might have filed his affidavit against every one in the county, if he "believed" that they were all prejudiced against him. It is asserted that the petitioner was deprived of a substantial right by the repealing statute, and, that being so, deprived of a substantial protection afforded to him by the law existing at the time of the commission of the offense, that of the right upon information and belief to object to one, three, or any number of examining magistrates of the county, including the one before whom he was brought for examination. Nothing appears in the record that the magistrate was biased or prejudiced against the accused; nothing but the bare allegation that the defendant believed that there existed in the mind of the magistrate a prejudice against the relator which would preclude the magistrate from giving the defendant a fair and impartial hearing and examination. It does not appear that the magistrate was prejudiced, but merely that the defendant was reliably informed and verily believed such to be the case. An affidavit is classed as the lowest grade of proof known in courts of justice, and an affidavit upon information and belief may well be termed the lowest grade of the lowest grade of proof. A fair and impartial jury, as we must consider them to be, and a judge not objected to, sat in the trial court wherein the defendant was convicted of the felony charged against him, and such must have been the atrocious nature of the felonious assault that was proven that the judge felt compelled to sentence the defendant to the full extent of the law. We are now asked to set aside the trial, and perhaps discharge the defendant from custody and all future punishment, because he has been deprived of the benefit of this statute. If his rights have been invaded, either as secured to him by constitutional or statutory law, this duty must be fearlessly done, but this must be clear to warrant the exercise of such a power.

The development of the law relating to the guaranty of the Federal Constitution that "no state shall pass an ex post facto law" (art. 1, § 10) is remarkable. It has sprung from definitions in decisions wherein such definitions are the clearest dicta, and it will be somewhat interesting to trace the federal decisions to the present time, and to ascertain what the views of the national tribunal of last resort have been and are for the definition and classification of ex post facto laws. The rule established by that great tribunal should be followed, as the determination of what is or what is not an ex post facto law is necessarily, under the guaranty of the Federal Constitution, a federal question, as well as a question arising under the provisions of our state constitution. In the case of Calder v. Bull, 3 U. S. 8 Dall. 390, 1 L. ed. 650, Mr. Justice Chase defined what he considered as post facto laws as follows. "(1) Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action.

(2) Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was, when committed. (3) Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed. (4) Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense, in order to convict the offender." These views were not adopted by the majority of the court in that case, and were, indeed, mere dicta, as the act of the legislature of the state of Connecticut, setting aside a decree of a court of probate and granting a new hearing before the same court, with liberty of appeal, was held not to be an ex post facto law, within the meaning of section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, as that article had reference only to crimes, and this was the main question decided. But the court really adopts this definition in Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall., at page 325, 18 L. ed. 368, where, in the language of Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the majority, it is said: "By an ex post facto law is meant one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed, or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed, or changes the rules of evidence by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required." Mr. Justice Miller dissented in this case, and in the case of Ex parte Garland, Petitioner, following (71 U. S. 4 Wall. 390, 18 L. ed. 874), and says of the case of Calder v. Bull, supra: "The first case on the subject is that of Calder v. Bull, and it is the one in which the doctrine concerning ex post facto laws is most fully expounded." He further states that the court, in that case (Calder v. Bull), divides all laws which come within the meaning of that clause into four classes, and then names the classifications made by Mr. Justice Chase, quoted fully, supra. In the celebrated case of Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 228, 27 L. ed. 508, in which the court apparently assumed by a bare majority a new position, Mr. Justice Miller says, of the definition given by Mr. Justice Chase, in Calder v. Bull: "But it is not to be supposed that the opinion in that case undertook to define, by way of exclusion, all the cases to which the constitutional provision would be applicable." This learned jurist adopts, as supplementary to the views of Mr. Justice Chase, the language of Mr. Justice Washington, in United States v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 366, Fed. Cas. No. 15,285, that an ex post facto law is one, "in short, which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage," the words herein quoted being italicized in the opinion of the majority of the court, and 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 171, 3 L. ed. 189, is cited as showing that the case of United States v. Hall was affirmed, but the opinion on affirmance makes no reference to ex post facto laws, and the case was disposed of on other grounds. The opinion in the case in 6 Cranch was delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, and if the case had rested upon the invalidity of the law, such a matter would hardly have escaped the attention of that great jurist. In the Kring Case, the following language is used in the majority opinion: "Can the law with regard to bail, to indictments, to grand juries, to the trial jury, all be changed to the disadvantage of the prisoner by state legislation after the offense was committed, and such legislation not held to be ex post facto because it relates to procedure, as it does according to Mr. Bishop? And can any substantial right which the law gave the defendant at the time to which his guilt relates be taken away from him by ex post facto legislation, because, in the use of a modern phrase, it is called a law of procedure? We think it cannot." Upon these excerpts last quoted have been built up many hopes of convicted criminals, but we think this language is dictum, and it has so been held by other state courts than this. Lybarger v. State, 2 Wash. 552; Re Wright, 8 Wyo. 478, 18 L. R. A. 748. In the majority opinion in Ex parte Medley, 134 U. S., at page 171, 33 L. ed. 640, written by Justice Miller, the court goes further, and defines an ex post facto law to be, among other things, one "which alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage," leaving out, evidently unintentionally, the important qualifying words, used in almost every other case in the Federal Supreme Court on this subject, "in relation to the crime and its consequences."

We think that these cases have not been followed by the great tribunal in which they were rendered, and that what may be termed extreme terms used in them have not been crystallized into law. The cases where this sweeping language has been employed have been those where the punishment has been increased, either by restoring the death penalty, where the accused has once been acquitted of a capital offense, or where the punishment has been increased, or where some legislative act, in relation to the crime or its consequences, has imposed a greater degree of punishment than that inflicted at the time it was committed. The definitions of an ex post facto law have sprung from the dicta of jurists, adopted by the court, but, however apt or exact as to the case under consideration, can hardly be said to have been accepted as legal definitions or axioms. A review of the cases in the Federal Supreme Court will establish this fact. In the case of Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262, a law of the territory of Utah was challenged as ex post facto, which repealed a statute providing that "persons against whom judgment has been rendered upon a conviction for felony, unless pardoned by the governor, or such judgment has been reversed on appeal, shall not be witnesses," after the commission of the crime of one accused of murder; but the court held unanimously that the repealing act merely enlarged the class of persons who might be competent to testify, and was not ex post facto. It was said that such statutory alterations "only remove existing restrictions upon the competency of certain classes of persons as witnesses, relate to modes of procedure only, in which no one can be said to have a vested right, and which the state, upon grounds of public policy, may regulate at pleasure." And the testimony of one who was convicted of the crime of murder was held to be rightfully admitted by the trial court against the defendant, although the law making such testimony incompetent was repealed after the offense was committed, leaving the statute in such shape as to make such testimony competent. The case of Holden v. Minnesota, 137 U. S. 483, 34 L. ed. 784, is distinguished from Ex parte Medley, supra. But in a comparatively recent case (Cook v. United States, 138 U. S. 157-183, 34 L. ed. 906-913), the court says: "It is said that the construction we place upon the 2d section of article 3 makes it obnoxious to the ex post facto clause of the Constitution. In support of this position reference is made to Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 231, 27 L. ed. 506, where it was declared that any statute passed after the commission of an offense, which, 'in relation to that offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage,' is an ex post facto law. This principle has no application to the present case. The Act of 1839 does not touch the offense nor change the punishment therefor. It only includes the place of the commission of the alleged offense within a particular judicial district, and subjects the accused to trial in that district rather than in the court of some other judicial district established by the government against whose laws the offense was committed. This does not alter the situation of the defendants in respect to their offense or its consequences. 'An ex post facto law,' this court said, in Gut v. Minnesota, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 35-38, 19 L. ed. 573, 574, 'does not involve, in any of its definitions, a change of the place of trial of an alleged offense after its commission.' " See Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485.

This résumé of the authoritative federal decisions, however conflicting they may seem, or however unsatisfactory they may be in defining what is and what is not an ex post facto law, shows, we think, that the court has not established as law the broad definitions laid down in the Kring and Medley Cases, but that the definition of Mr. Justice Washington, quoted in Kring v. Missouri, may be relied upon, that a law which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage, is an ex post facto law, as this formula evidently comprehends and is the sum of all the definitions.

The state courts have strongly leaned to the position that a mere change in procedure is not an ex post facto law, and to the doctrine that an act, to be denounced as unconstitutional in this respect, must make punishable that which was not punishable at the time the act was committed, or which aggravates the punishment, or operates to the disadvantage of the accused in relation to the crime or its punishment. Laws have been held constitutional which, after the commission of an offense, decrease the number of a jury in trials for misdemeanors (State v. Cortor, 83 La. Ann. 1314); which provide that, in all questions affecting the credibility of a witness, his general moral character may be given in evidence (Robinson v. State, 84 Ind. 453); which authorize the punishment of a person for an offense previously committed, and as to which all prosecution and punishment were barred at its passage, according to pre-existing statutes of limitation (State v. Morn, 42 N. J. L. 208); which reduce the number of peremptory challenges allowed the accused (Douling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664; Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 311); which change the manner of summoning a jury (Perry v. Com. 3 Gratt. 632); which allow amendments to pending indictments (State v. Manning, 14 Tex. 402); which prevent the defendant from taking advantage of variances in the indictment (Com. v. Hall, 97 Mass. 570); which give the state seven peremptory challenges (State v. Ryan, 13 Minn. 370 [Gil. 343]; Walston v. Com. 16 B. Mon. 16, 40); requiring the jury, instead of the court, to fix the punishment (Holt v. State, 2 Tex. 363); making the court, instead of the jury, judges of the law (Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 236, 57 Am. Rep. 825); changing the place of trial after the commission of the offense (State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 [Gil. 315]); clothing justices of the peace with jurisdiction over crimes previously committed (State v. Welch, 65 Vt. 50); dividing a county into judicial districts (Potter v. State, 42 Ark. 29); repealing a law providing for preliminary examinations after indictment found (Jones v. Com. 86 Va. 661); changing method of prosecution from indictment to information by prosecuting attorney (People v. Campbell, 59 Cal. 243, 43 Am. Rep. 257; Lybarger v. State, 3 Wash. 553; Re Wright, 3 Wyo. 478, 13 L. R. A. 749).

By our statute taking away the right of the accused to object, by an affidavit made upon information or belief, to the examining magistrate, after the commission of felony, the petitioner was not deprived of any substantial right or protection, as it is within the power of the legislature to change the form and method of procedure in any manner which, in relation to the crime or its consequences, does not alter the situation of the accused to his disadvantage, and the situation of the prisoner was not so changed by the statute challenged by him. It cannot be seriously contended that all who may have committed criminal offenses prior to the date of the statute repealing the law providing that the defendant may, upon his own statement upon information and belief, secure a change of place of trial, shall have the right for years to come (as we have no statute of limitations relating to crimes or misdemeanors) to be considered as pardoned by the legislature, or as entitled to the right under a repealed statute to object to the magistrate before whom they are brought upon complaint and warrant to answer a criminal charge of which the magistrate has not full jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine. True, in one case, the right of a change of venue in preliminary examinations is said to be a substantial and important right, of which the accused cannot be deprived except by his own act (State v. Sorenson, 84 Wis.

27); but this is a right given under a statute already existing. If the statute had been repealed, it is doubtful if the Wisconsin court would hold, in face of all the authorities, that the right to a change of place of trial, being a method of procedure, in which no one has a vested right, cannot be taken away by a statute after the commission of the offense. Cook v. United States, 188 U. S. 188, 34 L. ed. 913; Gut v. Minnesota, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 88, 19 L. ed. 574; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 589, 28 L. ed. 268. The right to a change of place of trial, or a change of judge, in case where the magistrate or judge is disqualified by prejudice, or where there cannot be a fair trial owing to the prejudice in the community against the accused, always existed at common law, but the venue was never changed upon the mere opinion or belief of the party applying therefor at common law, as the rule was that facts and circumstances must appear satisfying the court. 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 70, 71.

By no accepted definition of an ex post facto law is this statute, which sweeps away the provision that the accused may secure a change of magistrate or place of preliminary examination in a criminal case upon his affidavit of belief of the prejudice of the magistrate before whom he has been brought for such examination, an ex post facto law. It does not make criminal what before its enactment was innocent; it does not inflict greater punishment than was attached to the crime when committed; it does not alter the rules of evidence, and direct that less or different testimony may be received than required at the time of the commission of the offense; and it does not alter, in relation to the crime or its consequences, the situation of the accused to his disadvantage. If we go further, and add other means invented in some of the cases for the detection of an ex post facto law, it does not deprive him of any substantial or vested right provided by law at the time of the guilty act for his protection. It is necessary, in the administration of justice, that one accused of crime should have a fair trial before an impartial and unprejudiced judge and jury, and even an examination on the initial or preliminary inquiry before an impartial and unprejudiced magistrate. Nowhere does the record show that the petitioner has been shorn of any of these substantial rights and privileges; for, if the examining tribunal, the court of inquiry, was prejudiced against him, we have no knowledge of that fact from the record, and it is not even asserted that the allegations of the defendant, upon information and belief, made in his affidavit, alleging such prejudice before the examining magistrate were true. It merely appears that he believes them to be true, and this is insufficient under the statute in force at the time that he was complained against at the preliminary examination. Endless confusion would result from a decision by us that the legislature had no right to make new regulations as to methods of procedure in the courts of justice, or to remove and repeal old rules that may be found to be a temptation to perjury or liable to abuse, and which in no way affect the right of the accused to a fair and impartial hearing, either in the examining or in the trial court.

The writ is disallowed, and the petition for the writ is dismissed. In accordance with the provisions of the habeas corpus act, the clerk of this court will return the petition for the writ to the petitioner, or the person applying for the writ, with a certified copy of this opinion containing the reasons of this court for disallowing and refusing the writ.

Conaway and Potter, JJ., concur.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

SAN DIEGO WATER CO., Appl.,

v.

SAN DIEGO FLUME CO., Resp't.

(.....Cal.....)

1. A prayer of a complaint for damages for breach of a contract and for specific performance of the same, based upon the same facts, does not render the complaint obnoxious to the objection that it joins several causes of action without separately stating them.
2. Trustees appointed by parties to a contract to manage the details of the business done thereunder are not necessary parties to an action thereon.
3. A contract between corporations organized to distribute and furnish

NOTE.—The general subject of monopolies and combinations by corporations will be found treated to a considerable extent in the note to People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. (Ill.) 8 L. R. A. 497.

For right of one corporation to hold the stock of another, see note to Buckeye Marble & T. Co. v. Harvey (Tenn.) 13 L. R. A. 532.

29 L. R. A.

water to consumers in a county and city, for co-operation in supplying water to the city, is not ultra vires because one officer of each corporation is appointed a trustee and they together given general charge of the operation of the works, and of keeping the accounts of receipts and expenses, with a limited power of determining what shall be charged to the account of operating expenses, and with other powers and duties simply executive and such as could not be discharged by any board of directors otherwise than through an agent.

4. The appointment by a corporation, by its board of directors, of another corporation to act as its sole agent in the sale of water within a city, to be distributed by means of plants of both corporations, is not in violation of Civ. Code, § 354, subdvs. 5, 6, where the agency, although exclusive, is not unlimited or unrestricted.

5. A contract between corporations organized to distribute and furnish water to consumers in a county and city, one of which owns a supply of water and a pipe line ending at the city limits, and the other a distributing plant within the city, for co-operation in supplying water to the city and providing a method of determining the price of water, is not in violation of public policy as a combination to create a monopoly, since the California constitution reserves to municipal corporations the power of regulating water rates.

(August 26, 1885.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Diego County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the furnishing of water to the City of San Diego and for damages for its breach. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Works & Works, for appellant:

As to the extent to which a corporation may go, in making contracts, without bringing itself within the prohibitory rules,—

See Ellerman v. Chicago Junction R. & U. S. Y. Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 217; Union Water Co. v. Murphy's Flat Fluming Co. 22 Cal. 621; Sutro Tunnel Co. v. Segregated Belcher Min. Co. 19 Nev. 121; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L. R. A. 456; 1 Wood, Railway Law, pp. 491-499; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 258; Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 189 U. S. 79, 35 L. ed. 97; Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 241; Central Shade Roller Co. v. Cushman, 148 Mass. 853; State v. Hancock, 35 N. J. L. 587; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 87 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300; Sussex R. Co. v. Morris & E. R. Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 13.

If the corporation has derived any benefit from the execution, or partial execution, of the contract, it can be compelled to perform on its part, to the extent, and up to the time, such contract had been acted upon.

Kelsey v. National Bank, 69 Pa. 426; 1 Wood, Railway Law, pp. 491-502; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. supra; Witter v. Grand Rapids Flouring Mill Co. 78 Wis. 543; Heims Brewing Co. v. Flannery, 137 Ill. 309; Holmes v. Willard, 125 N. Y. 75, 11 L. R. A. 170; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Co. 66 N. H. —, 9 L. R. A. 659, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 819; State Board of Agriculture v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 47 Ind. 407, 17 Am. Rep. 702; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 413, 8 Am. Rep. 656; Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Transp. Co. 88 Pa. 160; Main v. Casserly, 67 Cal. 127.

In Heims Brewing Co. v. Flannery, supra, it is said: "The defense of ultra vires cannot avail the defendant. Even admitting that entering into said contract was in excess of the defendant's corporate powers, yet, having entered into said contract and enjoyed its benefits, it should be estopped to appeal to the limitations imposed by its charter for the purpose of escaping payment of the stipulated consideration."

See also Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Co. and Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Transp. Co. supra.

This was not a copartnership contract.

Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 74; Wheeler v. Farmer, 88 Cal. 208; Stuart v. Adams, 89 Cal. 867; Smith v. Schultz, 89 Cal. 526; Loomis v. Marshall, 12 Conn. 69, 80 Am. Dec. 596; Keiser v. State, 58 Ind. 379; Boyce v. Brady, 61 29 L. R. A.

Ind. 432; Harvey v. Childs, 28 Ohio St. 519, 22 Am. Rep. 887; 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 845.

Messrs. McDonald & McDonald, for respondent:

Enough appears upon the face of the complaint to show that said contracts were and are void because beyond the powers of the respective corporations and against the public policy of the state.

The primary object of the two corporations in entering into those contracts was to control the water supply, and thereby enhance the price of water in the city of San Diego, and to create and maintain a monopoly of the water business of said city. This rendered the contracts void.

Spelling, Trusts & Monopolies, §§ 82, 106-109; Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co. 68 N. Y. 559, 28 Am. Rep. 190; Ford v. Gregson, 7 Mont. 89; Santa Clara Valley Mill & L. Co. v. Hays, 78 Cal. 387.

A corporation can exercise no other powers than such as are specifically granted, or such as are necessary for carrying into effect the powers granted.

Vandall v. South San Francisco Dock Co. 40 Cal. 88; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 816; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. 180 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 887; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 189 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55.

The authority of every agent of a corporation is derived, directly or indirectly, from the agreement of the shareholders as expressed in their charter or articles of incorporation.

The board of directors cannot depart from the company's chartered purposes under any circumstances.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 514.

Whatever tends to injustice or oppression, restraint of liberty, commerce, and natural or legal right; whatever tends to the obstruction of justice, or to the violation of a statute; and whatever is against good morals,—when made the object of a contract is against public policy, and, therefore, void, and not susceptible of enforcement.

9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 880. See also Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 2; Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 117; Dial v. Hair, 18 Ala. 800, 54 Am. Dec. 179; Smith v. Johnson, 37 Ala. 636; Damrell v. Meyer, 40 Cal. 170; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354; Alpers v. Hunt, 86 Cal. 78, 9 L. R. A. 433; Griddle v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110; Mitchell v. Chene, 84 Cal. 409.

The state has declared all water appropriated for the purposes of sale, rental, or distribution to be charged with a public use, and has indicated the policy of the state to the prevention of monopolies so far as furnishing light and water to cities and their inhabitants is concerned.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209; People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 180 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497; McCrary v. Beaudry, 67 Cal. 120.

The franchises of a corporation are privileges granted and held in personal trust by it, and cannot be transferred, either by forced sale or by voluntary assignment, except by permission of the legislature, and when that permission is granted the mode of transfer pointed out is the measure of the power; and any attempt on the part of the corporation to divest itself of its franchise and thus disable itself from performing its duties to the public, without legislative authority is ultra vires and void.

Wood v. Truckee Turnp. Co. 24 Cal. 474; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. 180 U. S. 1, 82 L. ed. 887; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55; Pennycania R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 290, 30 L. ed. 83; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97; Randolph v. Larned, 27 N. J. Eq. 557; Troy & B. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 107; Fanning v. Osborne, 102 N. Y. 441; Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Coal Valley Min. Co. 68 Ill. 489; Richardson v. Sibbey, 11 Allen, 65, 87 Am. Dec. 700; Mid-dlesex R. Co. v. Boston & C. R. Co. 115 Mass. 347; Stewart's App. 56 Pa. 413; Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 700; Ray, Contractual Limitations, pp. 273, 278.

This agreement is also ultra vires and illegal, for the reason that it undertakes to constitute the parties partners in the business of furnishing water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 421; 2 Beach, Corp. § 848; Ray, Contractual Limitations, § 56; People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 38, 54 Hun, 855, 5 L. R. A. 386; Mallory v. Hanau Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 598; Pearce v. Madison & I. R. Co. and Peru & I. R. Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 441, 16 L. ed. 184; Burke v. Concord Railroad, 61 N. H. 160; Quinn v. Quinn, 81 Cal. 14.

This agreement is contrary to public policy, for the reason that it is a combination between the parties for the purpose of creating a monopoly for the sale of water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants.

Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110; Santa Clara Valley Mill & L. Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387; Ray, Contractual Limitations, pp. 212, 213, 284, 288, and cases cited; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 457.

The general rule that contracts in partial restraint of trade are not invalid does not apply to corporations engaged in a public business in which the public are interested.

Chicago Gas Light & Coke Co. v. People's Gas Light & Coke Co. 121 Ill. 530; People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 180 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 180 U. S. 896, 82 L. ed. 979; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co. 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 527; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55; Miner's Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 88 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300.

When the illegal purpose is disclosed, whether the shelter be under form of partnership of individuals or of corporations, the grasp of a court of equity will be equally powerful to control the trust.

Ray, Contractual Limitations, pp. 284, 279; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97; People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 38.

These corporations not having had the power to enter into this agreement, it is void in toto, and the defendant may avail itself of the plea of ultra vires.

Miner's Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., and Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., supra.

Haynes, Ch. J., filed the following opinion:

Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered, from which judgment it appeals. The only questions to be considered, therefore, are those presented by the demurrer.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that both the parties to this action are corporations organized and existing under the laws of this state for the purpose of distributing, selling, and furnishing water to consumers in the county and city of San Diego; that the plaintiff is the owner of a complete distributing plant for furnishing water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants; that the defendant is the owner of water rights, reservoirs, and a supply of water outside of said city, from which the water is conducted by flumes and pipes to the city boundary, where, during all the times mentioned in the complaint, they were and are connected with the water mains and pipes of the plaintiff; that the defendant was not and is not the owner of any water pipes within the city, and was unable to distribute or furnish its water to the city or its inhabitants. Under these circumstances, the parties to this action executed two written agreements, both bearing date November 6, 1890, which are referred to as Exhibits A and B, respectively, but which constitute one contract. By the first, the flume company appoints the water company its sole agent for the exclusive sale of its water within the corporate limits of the city, as then or thereafter established, excepting the peninsula of San Diego; but all sales made by the water company "shall be subject to the approval of the party of the first part [the flume company], and no sales shall be made without the consent of the party of the first part." It was further provided that said appointment should continue and be in force during the continuance of the other contract of the same date, namely, twenty years. The other contract—Exhibit B—is very long, but for the purpose of disposing of the questions made upon this appeal may be greatly condensed. By this agreement E. S. Babcock and J. W. Sefton, the former the president of the plaintiff corporation, and the latter the president of the defendant, were appointed trustees, to whom were given the control of the properties of these corporations, respectively, "so far as the same may be confined to the corporate limits of the city of San Diego," to operate and control the same for the use and benefit of the respective parties thereto. These trustees were selected and named, one by each corporation, and each was to hold said office of trustee at the pleasure of the party naming him, who should also appoint his successor, and the compensation of each should be fixed and paid by the party appointing him; that "the use, operation, and control of these properties by the said trustees shall be for the purpose of furnishing the water supply to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants, the profits arising therefrom to be subject to the control and use of the parties hereto, as hereinafter mentioned; said parties hereto agreeing to combine their joint endeavor for the advancement of their respective interests under this trust, subject to the conditions as hereinafter mentioned." The water company agreed to furnish its entire plant, and the flume company agreed to deliver at the city limits a sufficient quantity of good water for the supply of the city and its inhabitants, to be used by the trustees for that exclusive purpose. The trustees were to keep three separate accounts, one designated as the "operating account," another as "first-division account," and the third, as "second-division account." The second and third accounts were for the purpose of distributing the profits between the respective corporations. The agreement stated, in a general way, what should be charged to operating expenses, and except as provided, and excluding certain specified matters, the trustees were empowered to determine what should constitute a proper charge to that account. It was also provided that the flume company might use the water company's system of pipes for conducting water to parties outside the city limits, the compensation therefor to be fixed by the trustees.

The complaint further alleged that the parties thereto entered upon the performance of said agreement, that the plaintiff in all things carried out and performed the same on its part, that plaintiff and defendant and their said trustees failed to agree as to the proper basis of division of the accounts between them, and especially as to the amount to be expended for the extension of plaintiff's plant, and have been unable to agree upon a settlement of their said accounts; alleged plaintiff's willingness to settle and adjust the same, but that defendant made said differences an excuse for not furnishing the water required by the contract, and had wholly failed since May 2, 1892, to comply with said contract, though plaintiff had demanded in writing such performance; alleged that upon a true and just accounting there was due to it from defendant the sum of about $50,000, but that if the court should find otherwise, and that it was indebted to the defendant, it thereby offered to pay the same; that, by the defendant's failure to comply with its said contract, plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $100,000; that, acting under said contract, plaintiff contracted with the city of San Diego to supply it with water for the term of twenty years at a reasonable profit, but that defendant, after furnishing water for said purpose for about a year, failed and refused to longer furnish the same, whereby plaintiff sustained special damage in the sum of $100,000.

The prayer is for an accounting, for damages, and for a specific performance of the contract, and for general relief.

The demurrer was upon several grounds, viz.: (1) For want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that two alleged causes of action for damages are joined with an alleged cause of action for specific performance, without separately stating said several causes of action; (3) for defect of parties, in that Babcock and Sefton, the trustees, are not made parties; and (4) that the complaint is uncertain, in that several causes of action are joined without being separately stated and numbered.

The second and fourth grounds of demurrer go to the joinder of several causes of action without being separately stated. Different causes of action are not stated, however. Both legal and equitable relief is sought, but the right to such relief is based upon the same facts. Pom. Rem. § 452. Nor is the third ground of demurrer well taken. The trustees were simply the agents or instruments of the parties to the contract, and had no interest in the controversy in any legal sense.

Whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is the principal question in the case. Respondent contends "that enough appears upon the face of the complaint to show that said contracts were void, because beyond the powers of the respective corporations, and against the public policy of the state." The questions here presented were discussed by counsel in another action between the same parties, but that case went off upon another point, and no opinion was expressed upon them. San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. 100 Cal. 48.

It is contended that the contract in question was ultra vires, because under it the management of the affairs of the two corporations were taken from their respective boards of directors and transferred to two trustees, each of whom is a stranger to the corporation appointing the other. This statement of the effect of the contract is too broad. When analyzed, the powers of the trustees are very limited. By that part of the contract called "Exhibit A," the plaintiff, as a corporation, was appointed the agent of the defendant corporation for the sale of water within the city of San Diego; but all sales were subject to the approval of the defendant, and no sales could be made without its consent. The trustees were not given any power or authority over the sale of the water. They were given the general charge of operating the works of the plaintiff in distributing the water furnished by the defendant, and of keeping the accounts of receipts and expenses, with a limited power of determining what should be charged to the account of operating expenses; and, with that exception, their whole powers and duties were executory, and such as could not be discharged by any board of directors otherwise than through an agent. Nor is it material whether these agents were or were not connected with either corporation. They derived their authority from the agreement, and, as they were named in the agreement, each corporation acted upon and consented to the appointment of both. It is not contended that two corporations may not enter into contracts with each other. Their power to do so dependa, however, upon the character of the contract, examined in the light of their characters and of public policy. So far as the subject-matter of the contract is concerned, it relates to the sale and distribution of water, and to that extent, at least, it relates to the very purpose of the organization of each of these corporations, and is therefore presumably within their power. It is contended, however, in support of the demurrer, "that, under the power conferred by subdivisions 5 and 8 of section 854 of the Civil Code, the defendant, by its board of directors, was only authorized to appoint such agents and enter into such contracts as were essential to the transaction of its ordinary affairs; and that any attempt to make the plaintiff its exclusive agent for the sale of water was illegal and beyond the powers of the corporation." The statement that plaintiff is made "the exclusive agent" of the defendant for the sale of water is too broad. Such agency is confined to the corporate limits of the city of San Diego, within which the plaintiff alone had the means of distributing water to consumers. The agency, however, while exclusive, was not unlimited or unrestricted; but all sales of water were to be subject to the approval of the defendant, and no sale could be made without its consent. It is not suggested that the plaintiff corporation could not legally become an agent as to matters consistent with or in furtherance of the objects of its organization, nor that the defendant, within similar limitations, could not appoint an agent; but the real question involved lies back of and beyond these objections, which go only to the instrumentalities used to carry out the ultimate purpose of the parties in making the contract in question, viz., that the contract is against public policy, and therefore void.

It is urged that "both corporations were formed for the purpose, among other things, of furnishing water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants, and are, therefore, quasi public corporations;" and that "the agreement is contrary to public policy, for the reason that it is a combination between the parties for the purpose of creating a monopoly for the sale of water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants." That the contract is consistent with the purpose of the organization of each of these corporations, viz., "to furnish the city of San Diego and its inhabitants with water," is too clear for discussion. The question is therefore narrowed down to this: Does the agreement create a monopoly, or in any manner injuriously affect the interests of the city or its inhabitants? "Monopoly" signifies the sole power of dealing in a particular thing, or doing a particular thing, either generally or in a particular place. A monopoly is usually, though not necessarily, harmful or injurious to public interest, though, as that term is generally used, injury to the public is implied, and competition is therefore regarded as favorable to the public interest. But there is a competition which tends to monopoly by driving out all but the stronger competitor, when prices are again increased so as not only to yield a profit upon the original investment, but to recoup the losses incurred in breaking down competitors; or, where the competitors are of equal strength and tenacity of purpose, it may result in the destruction of the public service by the collapse of all of them. At and before the date of the contract in question, the plaintiff was the owner of a pumping plant, and of a system of mains and pipes for the distribution of water to the city of San Diego and its inhabitants, and was engaged in supplying them with water. The defendant was the owner of a reservoir supplied with water, together with flumes and pipes by which the water was conveyed to the borders of the city; but it owned no distributing plant by which it could dispose of its water within the city. To enable it to do so, it must either purchase plaintiff's distributing plant, or construct a distributing system of mains and pipes of its own, or sell its water within the city by or through the plaintiff, under some agreement for that purpose. It is not suggested that one distributing plant is not sufficient for all the wants of the city and its inhabitants, and certainly we cannot assume that it is not. Some agreement of the character here in question which would effectuate the evident intention of the parties would appear to be to the best interest of both corporations; and if the city and its inhabitants can be properly served through one distributing system, at reasonable rates, it is obviously to its best interest that its streets should not be subjected to the burden of laying and keeping in repair an additional system of mains and pipes. So far as the parties to this contract are concerned, the restraint is only partial. It is confined; to the city of San Diego, or rather to that part of it which did not include the peninsula; and this, we think, was upon a sufficient consideration, and not an unreasonable restriction as between the parties. See Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. 417. Nor does it injuriously affect the city or its inhabitants. Our constitution provides that "the use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the state, in the manner to be prescribed by law;" and it further provides that the rate or compensation to be collected for the use of water supplied to any city or town or its inhabitants shall be fixed annually by the governing body of the city and county, or city, or town, and any person or corporation collecting water rates "otherwise than as so established" shall forfeit the franchises and waterworks of such person or corporation to the city, etc. Const. art. 14, § 1. In Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco City & County, 83 Cal. 286, 6 L. R. A. 756, it was held that, when the constitution provides for the fixing of rates or compensation for the use of water, it means reasonable rates and just compensation; that the power of regulating rates is not a power of confiscation, or to take the property of the water company without just compensation.

Under the constitution, and the construction thus given its provisions, we fail to perceive how the agreement in question can create a monopoly, or in any manner increase the rate or compensation to be paid by the city or its inhabitants for the water supplied. Indeed, it is evident that water can be supplied more cheaply through one distributing plant than through two; and the governing body of the city, in whom is vested the power to fix the water rates, is bound to take that fact into consideration, as well as all other facts which will enable it to fix "reasonable rates" and award a "just compensation." In Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1129, it is said that the same rule which applies to traffic arrangements between competing railroads applies also to telegraph, water, and gas companies; and, in relation to traffic arrangements between competing roads, it is said, at section 1181: "It is certainly not true that all agreements or combinations restricting competition are illegal at common law. . . . Even if there were such a rule as has been claimed, applicable to competition in trade, the principle and policy of the rule would not be applicable to traffic arrangements designed merely to prevent ruinous competition and 'wars' among railroad companies. The main objection which has been urged against combinations restraining competition in trade, namely, that such combinations tend to produce monopolies and cause extortion, has no application to combinations among railroad companies, for railroad companies are prohibited by law, irrespective of any combination, to charge more than reasonable rates. . . . Public policy clearly does not demand that railroad companies operating competing lines shall engage in strife causing their financial ruin." With even greater force may it be said in this case that public policy does not condemn nor prohibit an arrangement intended to prevent a competition between these corporations which would inevitably result in the financial ruin of one or both of them, and which could not in any event benefit the city or its inhabitants.

The contention that the agreement in question creates a partnership between these corporations is without force. It does not appear that it covers all of the business of either party, though the whole of the business of each relates to the sale of water. In a partnership, each partner has authority to represent all the partners, and to bind them by his acts so far as they relate to the partnership business. Here the agency is not of that character, but is expressly limited. It simply provides a mode of determining the compensation the defendant shall receive for the water furnished by it to the plaintiff,—an arrangement made necessary by the fact that neither of the parties nor both, combined, could determine the rate at which the water could be sold to consumers, nor accurately fix the cost of distribution, nor the quantity of water required.

The judgment should be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: Vandief, C.; Belcher, C.
29 L. R. A.

See also 35 L. R. A. 209.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

PEOPLE'S HOME SAVINGS BANK

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, (Department No. 4).

(104 Cal. 642.)

1. A by-law providing that no proxy shall be voted by any one who is not a stockholder of the corporation is invalid under Civ. Code, § 312, providing generally that stockholders may be represented by proxies.
2. The substitution of an attorney for a corporation in a proceeding to restrain a receiver cannot be prevented by the prior attorney on the ground of disqualification by reason of his relations to the receivers, so long as the parties do not object.

NOTE.—Right to vote by proxy in private corporations.

- I. At common law.
- II. Under statutes and by-laws.
 - a. Statutes.
 - b. By-laws.
- III. Form of proxy.
- IV. When and for what purpose a proxy may be used.
- V. Rejection of proxy by inspectors.
- VI. Revocation of proxy.
- VII. Directors voting by proxy.
- VIII. Miscellaneous matters.

I. At common law.

It must be regarded as entirely settled that there is no common-law right of voting by proxy on shares of stock in a corporation. While there is no attempt in this note to make a collection of the statutes of the different states on the subject, it may be said that in most of the states enactments have been made giving the right of shareholders to be represented by proxies. For many years these provisions in the state of New York were limited in their scope and were different for different classes of corporations, but by the Corporation Law of 1882 a sweeping provision is made authorizing the use of proxies in all private corporations except religious corporations. The statutes of the different states generally provide now for such proxy voting. A collection of them is made in Thompson on Corporations, vol. 1, § 738.

That proxies could not be used at common law by a member of a corporation unless some specific provision enabled him to do so, is declared in Harben v. Phillips, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 14, 48 L. T. N. S. 334, 31 Week. Rep. 173.

The proposition that the right of voting by proxy is not a general right, and that the party who claims it must show a special authority for that purpose, is affirmed in People v. Twaddell, 18 Hun. 427.

So, it is held in Pennsylvania that in the absence of any express authority to vote by proxy, given either by the charter of the corporation or by any by-law, the stockholders cannot vote by proxy. Com. v. Bringham, 103 Pa. 124, 49 Am. Rep. 112;

(December 3, 1894.)

APPPLICATION for a substitution of another attorney in place of those representing petitioner in a proceeding to obtain a writ of prohibition requiring the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco to abstain from continuing to take jurisdiction in a proceeding to annul the petitioner's charter. Application granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Durst, with Mr. James Alva Watt, in propria persona, in support of the application:

The code gives to stockholders the absolute right, not merely of voting their stock in person, but of voting it by proxy.

Civil Code, §§ 307-312.

Wilson v. American Academy of Music, 43 Leg. Int. 88, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 280.

While the right to vote by proxy is declared not necessarily to arise in the case because the use of the proxies did not change the result, the court in Phillips v. Wickham, 1 Paige, 500, expressed the opinion that the right of voting by proxy is not a general right, and that the party who claims it must show a special authority for that purpose, declaring that the only case in which it is allowable, at common law, is by the peers of England, and that is said to be in virtue of special permission of the king. The court proceeds to say: "It is possible that it might be delegated in some cases by the by-laws of a corporation, where express authority was given to make such by-laws, regulating the manner of voting. I am not aware of any other case in which the right was ever claimed; and the express power which is generally given to the stockholders of monied and other private corporations is opposed to the claims in this case, where there is no express or implied power contained in the act."

Without proceeding to collect here all the citations to cases in which the same doctrine is recognized, if not expressly declared, and which are set forth in detail under the subsequent headings of this note, it may be said that the doctrine above stated is fully established without conflict of the decisions. It is universally conceded that the right to vote by proxy in private corporations must depend on express authority of statute or by-law.

II. Under statutes and by-laws.

a. Statutes.

When statutes expressly authorize voting by proxy, as is now quite generally the case, there is no question as to the right, except so far as it may arise in construing the statute. The validity of such statutes is unquestioned.

Where the charter of a corporation expressly gives power to vote in person or by lawful proxy, a stockholder is bound by the vote cast by his duly constituted proxy, whether it is cast in his interest or not. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92.

The main case of PEOPLE'S HOME SAV. BANK v. SAN FRANCISCO CITY & COUNTY SUPER. CT. cites as an authority the case of Re Lighthall Mfg. Co., 47 Hun, 253, which held that under a statute providing in general terms that the election shall be made by such stockholders as attend either in person or by proxy, a by-law providing that proxies can be held and voted upon only by persons who are stockholders is void, because it restricts the right which the statute gives.

See a somewhat similar decision in Re White v. New York State Agri. Soc. 45 Hun, 580, infra, III.

The right to vote by proxy, expressly given by the act of incorporation, is involved in the case of Monseaux v. Urquhart, 19 La. Ann. 482, in which the test was respecting other requisites of the right to vote.

29 L. R. A.

The code gives to corporations the power of regulating by the by-laws the mode of voting by proxy.

Civil Code, § 803.

It does not confer power by by-law to abridge or restrict the statutory right of voting by proxy.

By-laws must not be in violation of the provisions of the charter or general laws under which the corporation was formed, nor can the substantial rights of a shareholder be abridged thereby.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 487; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 707, note 2, and cases cited.

The right to vote at a meeting cannot be taken away or restricted.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 496; 17 Am. & Eng.

But, expressing an opinion without deciding that stockholders cannot vote by proxy in ordinary cases, it is decided in Brown v. Com., 8 Grant, Cas. 209, that, where the charter declares that "each person being present at the election" shall be entitled to vote, without making any provision for proxies, proxy voting cannot be allowed.

Although the statutes provide for certain regulations of elections of corporations, and designate the mode of voting by proxy, this does not defeat the jurisdiction of equity to issue an injunction against voting certain shares of stock. Webb v. Ridgely, 38 Md. 384. But the ground of the injunction in this case does not appear to have been connected with the use of proxies, but rather the evasion of the statute limiting the number of votes to be cast by any stockholder by means of a colorable transfer of shares without consideration.

On a motion for a preliminary injunction made in a federal court sitting in one state to prevent voting by proxy at a corporate election in another state, on which it was contended that voting by proxy could be authorized only by express statute, the court refused to interfere on that ground, but acted on the presumption that the officers conducting the election would recognize and be governed by the laws of the state in which the election was held. Woodruff v. Dubuque & S. O. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 91.

b. By-laws.

In deciding that stockholders might by by-law provide for the right to vote by proxy in the absence of any statute to the contrary, it is said in Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 7 L. R. A. 357: "When the methods of voting are not fixed by general law, the corporations may make the law for themselves, subject to the qualification that such laws and regulations as they make shall not conflict with the laws of the state or of the United States." The court again says also: "They had the power to refuse to receive votes unless offered by the voters in person, but, upon consideration, they decided that votes might be cast by proxy. This also was a reasonable regulation, uniform in its application, works no wrong to any shareholder, and conflicts with no law of the commonwealth. It is therefore a valid and binding law, made by the shareholders for their own government."

But the power of a corporation to authorize by by-law the practice of voting by proxy is expressly denied in Taylor v. Griswold, 14 N. J. L. 222, 27 Am. Dec. 83, in the absence of express authority by statute to enact such by-laws. It is declared that the right to make such a by-law is not incident to a corporation, as it is not essential or even apparently necessary to carry into effect its objects, and it is further decided that charter authority to make by-laws, provided they be not repugnant to that act nor to the constitution and laws of the state, is not sufficient to authorize a by-law permitting proxies. The court disapproves of the Encyclop. Law, p. 45; Brewster v. Hartley, 87 Cal. 24, 99 Am. Dec. 237.

Where there is no conflict between the interests of two parties, although on different sides, an attorney may appear for both without professional impropriety.

Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 2d ed. § 120 a, p. 256.

Sometimes in chancery suits he may appear for different parties, some of whom are plaintiffs and some defendants.

Id. 2d ed. § 271, p. 548.

So for plaintiff and intervenor.

Deering v. Hurt (Tex.) 2 S. W. Rep. 43; Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 2d ed. § 120 a, p. 256.

The solicitor of the complainant in a chancery cause may, without impropriety, draw and file answers for any of the defendants who admit the allegations of the bill and make no defense.

Cargile v. Ragan, 65 Ala. 287; Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 2d ed. § 120 a, p. 256.

In the case at bar the petitioner desiring to dismiss, what impropriety is there in the attorney for respondent appearing for them to make such dismissal? No other parties are before the court. It is only where, in the same action, or in a different action, where the same matter comes necessarily into controversy, that an attorney without breach of professional obligation cannot appear at the same or at different times, for different parties.

Herriek v. Ostley, 30 How. Pr. 206; Re Cowdery, 69 Cal. 32, 58 Am. Rep. 545; People v. Spencer, 66 Cal. 128, and other authorities cited.

Connecticut case of State v. Tudor, 5 Day, 329, 5 Am. Dec. 163, which, it says, stands alone. The clause of the charter prohibiting by-laws repugnant to the law of the land is held to prohibit a by-law of this kind on the ground that such a by-law is repugnant to the common law as part of the law of the land, under which all votes were required to be given in person. After an elaborate opinion in this case the court says: "Finally, the by-law in question is not authorized by the charter; is inconsistent with the popular spirit and design of the institution; is not essential or necessary to effect the object the legislature had in view; is contrary to the great principles and policy of our laws; and is not even for the apparent good of the company itself. It is therefore void."

But it is this New Jersey case, rather than the Connecticut case, which stands alone. We have found no other case which denies the validity of by-laws authorizing proxies.

In the Connecticut case just mentioned, State v. Tudor, 5 Day, 329, 5 Am. Dec. 163, the court holds that such a by-law is a reasonable one and in the absence of any statute to the contrary is valid, although at common law votes by members of a corporation could be given only in person. So, under the act of incorporation of a benevolent society providing for an election of trustees, directors, or managers, in such manner as may be specified in its by-laws, a by-law authorizing members to vote either in person or by proxy is held valid in People v. Crossley, 69 Ill. 195. A constitutional provision that the general assembly shall provide that in all elections for directors or managers of incorporated companies every stockholder shall have the right to vote in person or by proxy for the number of shares owned by him, either for as many persons as are to be elected or to cumulate said shares is said to be a constitutional expression in favor of voting by proxy in private corporations, whether or not it applies to corporations of this character, and therefore it cannot be said that the by-law is inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the state.

Such a by-law is also held valid in Wilson v. American Academy of Music, 48 Leg. Int. 86, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 230.

III. Form of proxy.

Inspectors of election cannot reject a vote offered by proxy when proxies are authorized by statute, merely because the written proxy was not acknowledged or proved. Re Election of Directors of St. Lawrence S. R. Co. 44 N. J. L. 529. In this case the court said: "A stockholder who desires to exercise his right to vote on his stock by proxy is undoubtedly bound to furnish his agent with such written evidence of the latter's right to act for him as will reasonably assure the inspectors that the agent is acting by the authority of his principal. But the power of attorney need not be in any prescribed form, nor be executed with any particular formality. It is sufficient that it appear on its face to confer the requisite authority, and that it be free from all reasonable grounds of suspicion of its genuineness and authenticity; and the court, in reviewing the proceedings at an election, must be satisfied that the inspectors had reasonable grounds for rejecting the proxy."

But a provision in articles of association that a proxy "shall be attested by one or more witnesses" is held to be mandatory and not merely directory, and a resolution of the company changing the form of proxies, which was fixed by another, by leaving out the words respecting attestation, was held insufficient to change this requirement. Harben v. Phillips, L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 14, 48 L. T. N. S. 384, 31 Week. Rep. 173.

A proxy is not invalid because it varies from the form prescribed by articles of association merely by describing the person giving the proxy as a "proprietor of shares" instead of describing him as a "member." Re Indian Zedone Co. L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 70, 58 L. J. Ch. 463, 50 L. T. N. S. 547, 30 Week. Rep. 481.

The fact that the day of the month is left blank in a proxy, which is otherwise regular in form, does not make it insufficient. Re Townshend, 48 N. Y. S. R. 135.

A proxy purporting to be given by a cashier without even alluding to the bank which owned the stock is held insufficient in Re Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 19 Wend. 135. The court says the bank should have been named as principal and the proxy sealed with its corporate seal, if it had power to delegate the right to vote on the stock. Such right is denied in this case on the ground that the stock did not stand in the name of the bank on the transfer books.

Another defect in the above case was that it was given by a person named as cashier, while the stock stood in the name of a former cashier on the books of the corporation, and therefore the statutory provision that stock could be voted only in the name standing on the transfer books, either in person or by proxy, would permit the use of a proxy only when it was given by that person whose name appeared on the books.

At a meeting of creditors who were entitled to vote by person or proxy on a scheme of arrangement or compromise of the affairs of a corporation under the English Joint-Stock Companies Arrangement Act of 1870, where Australian creditors were present by proxy or agent, but his proxy papers were not in England, it was ordered by the court that the particulars of the proxies might be communicated by telegraph to the official receiver for use at such meeting. On appeal from such order it was held to be valid, and that it was not necessary to have the proxy papers produced at the meeting. This was based on section 3 of such Act giving the

Where the same matter is not necessarily in litigation, although collaterally involved, the attorney may appear.

Musselman v. Barker, 26 Neb. 737.

Messrs. Delmas & Shortridge, contra.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The present proceeding is a motion for a substitution of attorneys in the above entitled cause. Mr. James Alva Watt, claiming authority to represent the petitioner, makes the motion. The solution of the question here presented is dependent upon the following state of facts: One E. H. Knight, a creditor, commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, Department No. 4, against the petitioner, People's Home Savings Bank, and its directors, for the purpose of enforcing his demand, and asked that the board of directors be enjoined from the further transaction of business; that they be removed from office; that a receiver be appointed; and that the bank corporation be thrown into liquidation. Certain allegations of plaintiff's complaint, charging fraud of the board of directors in the administration of the business of the corporation, and insolvency of the bank, form the basis for the relief prayed for. In this action, John F. Sheehan was by the court appointed receiver to take possession of the assets of the corporation, etc., and he retained James Alva Watt as his attorney and legal adviser in carrying on the business of the receivership. Thereafter, the petitioner in the above-entitled cause, to wit, the People's Home Savings Bank, made an applicacourt power to order that the meeting of the creditors be summoned in such manner as the court shall direct as well as a provision in the Act of 1862, § 81, providing that the court may direct such meetings to be held and conducted in such manner as the court directs for the purpose of ascertaining the wishes of the creditors. Re English S. & A. Chartered Bank [1893] 3 Ch. 385.

Such proxies not having been stamped, but being subject to the 10s. stamp under clause 6 of the Stamp Act of 1891, § 80, which did not expressly provide when the stamp should be affixed, it was held that section 15 applied, providing that in case of instruments executed abroad they might be stamped within thirty days after their receipt in the united kingdom. Ibid.

The fact that the name of the person who was to be agent was specified in the instruments of proxy was held no objection in this case; neither was it any objection that there was no special day named in the proxy paper. Ibid.

Where objection to voting by proxy is based solely on the claim that it is not lawful to vote in that manner, it will be presumed by the court that the proxies were in valid form and properly executed. People v. Crossley, 60 Ill. 195.

A resolution of the New York State Agricultural Society to the effect that no proxy shall be voted unless shown, within itself, that it was specifically intended to be used at the meeting at which it is offered, is held to be void because repugnant to the statute, where its charter provided that members should be entitled to vote at all elections for officers by proxy. Re White v. New York State Agri. Soc. 45 Hun. 580.

IV. When and for what purpose a proxy may be used.

The extent of the right of a proxy to vote is considered in Foreyth v. Brown, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 537, 38 W. N. C. 72, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 765, where it is held that persons holding proxies can vote on motions to take a ballot or to adjourn, and do all which a stockholder may do which is necessary to a full and free exercise of the stockholder's right to vote at such meeting.

A proxy given by stockholders of a railroad company for the purpose of voting upon the question of an issue of bonds was held entirely insufficient to authorize a vote for the issue of bonds to be secured by a third mortgage upon the property of the company, since a proxy is nothing more than a power of attorney which must be governed by the rules applicable to that class of instruments. Marie v. Garrison (by Dwight, referee) 13 Abb. N. C. 210.

Proxies authorizing a vote on the single question of the increase of capital stock are held insufficient to give any validity to votes thereon for the disposal of capital stock. Re Wheeler, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 361.

29 L. R. A.

A proxy is a delegation of an authority for a particular purpose; and, although not defined on the face of it, it will be held to be for the election then in contemplation, and for no other. Where proxies were given in contemplation of an election for the post of surgeon in an infirmary, but the contemplated election was not proceeded with, and the matter dropped, the proxies were not valid at an election several months afterward, which was not resolved upon until about six weeks after the matter had been dropped. Howard v. Hill, 5 B. R. & Corp. L. J. 255.

Under a provision in the articles of association of a company that a poll may be taken if demanded by "shareholders qualified to vote" who hold a certain number of shares, persons holding proxies cannot be regarded as shareholders qualified to vote, for the purpose of demanding a poll. Queen v. Government Stock Invest. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 442, 47 L. J. Q. B. 478, 39 L. T. N. S. 220.

The proxies cannot be used upon a show of hands at a general meeting of a company, where its articles of association allow voting by proxy, but a poll must be taken for the purpose. Re Caloric Engine & S. F. Signals Co. 52 L. T. N. S. 846.

But the case of Re Caloric Engine & S. F. Signals Co. supra, is not followed in Re Bidwell Bros. [1893] 1 Ch. 603, 41 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 530, in which it is said by Vaughan Williams, J.: "I have come to the conclusion that the votes of the members who were present only by proxy ought to be taken into consideration, even though no poll was demanded." In respect to the former case he says: "I do not know what the particular articles in that case were, and the question does not seem to have been argued at any great length." In the latter case the articles expressly said that votes may be given either personally or by proxy, and this is held to justify voting by proxy whether a poll is demanded or not. This conclusion is also fortified by reference to the decision in Reg. v. Government Stock Invest. Co., supra, which denies the right of proxies to demand a poll.

In counting votes by proxy when the vote is taken under a provision requiring a three-fourths majority of the number present personally or by proxy, it is held in Re Bidwell Bros., supra, that each person present by proxy must vote as one person only, as if actually present, and not according to the number of shares held.

Under an act of incorporation of a bank which to protect small shareholders made a scale of the number of votes proportioned to the number of shares held, and limited the number of votes in any event to sixty, where a firm had bought more than 2,000 shares and transferred them to divers persons unknown, taking in return a power of attorney to vote the shares at their own discretion, it was held that this was an attempt to operate a fraud upon the statute, and an injunction against tion to this court for a writ of prohibition, asking that the proceedings of the superior court in the matter of the appointment of the receiver be annulled as being in excess of its jurisdiction. This application was made to the court by the petitioner through its regularly appointed attorneys, Messrs. Delmas & Shortridge. Thereafter, a motion for a substitution of James Alva Watt as attorney for petitioner in the above-entitled cause, to act in the place and stead of Messrs. Delmas & Shortridge, was made. This motion was based upon a showing by affidavits to the effect that subsequent to the inception of the prohibition proceeding the directorate of the petitioner corporation had been changed at an election held by the stockholders, and that the corporation petitioner, by its new board of directors, appointed said Watt attorney for the corporation in the above-entitled cause, and revoked the authority of Messrs. Delmas & Shortridge to act for it in any litigation then pending. The legality of Watt's appointment as attorney for the bank depends upon the validity of the election of the board of directors appointing him, and the only serious question presented as to the validity of such election involves the right of a person not a stockholder to participate in the election by virtue of his position as a proxy of a bona fide stockholder, and to this question we shall direct our attention.

While it is provided by section 819 of the Civil Code that stockholders of corporations voting under these powers of attorney was sustained. Campell v. Poultney, 6 Gill & J. 94, 26 Am. Dec. 559.

V. Rejection of proxy by inspectors.

The rejection of votes by proxy because the persons holding the proxies would not submit to a sort of inquisitorial examination on oath, which the inspectors under a by-law of the company claimed the right to require when votes were challenged, was held irregular and reprehensible where the act of incorporation gave each stockholder one vote on each share which had been held in his own name at least fourteen days prior to the time of voting. People v. Kip, 4 Cow. 382, note.

The genuineness of proxies offered to be voted upon is a question which the inspectors of election have no power to pass upon if the proxies are regular in form and apparently executed by stockholders, but if the proxies are invalid for any reason not apparent upon their face, redress must be sought from the courts after the election, if the use of the proxies has worked any detriment. Re Cecil, 36 How. Pr. 477.

The declaration by the president of a corporation presiding at a meeting that neither of the proxies which have been given for certain stock should vote upon it, is insufficient to give the proxy who is entitled to vote any cause to attack the vote actually taken, if he did not offer to vote, as he will be held to have acquiesced in the vote actually taken. State v. Chute, 34 Minn. 125.

VI. Revocation of proxy.

A stockholder who has given a proxy for a valuable consideration may revoke it on a discovery that it is about to be used for a fraudulent purpose, even if such purpose is not invalid as against public policy. Reed v. Bank of Newburgh, 6 Paige, 387.

An irrevocable power of attorney to vote upon stock is regarded in Brown v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 5 Blatchf. 525, as differing very little from a mere proxy, and it is held not contrary to public policy.

Under N. Y. Laws 1882, chap. 887, § 20, which expressly provides that no stockholder shall sell his vote, or issue a proxy to vote upon any stock for any sum of money, or anything of value, a proxy coupled with an interest cannot be given, and another section provides that every proxy shall be revocable at the pleasure of the person executing it. Re Germicide Co., 65 Hun, 606.

VII. Directors voting by proxy.

The right of a director to vote at a meeting of the board of directors by proxy, when this is not authorized by the by-laws or the general laws, is emphatically denied in Perry v. Tuscaloosa Cotton Seed Oil Mill Co., 98 Ala. 364.

A proxy authorizing a person to vote for stockholders at a stockholders' meeting cannot give him authority to vote for them at a directors' meeting. Craig Medicine Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 29 L. R. A.

59 Hun, 561. This was a peculiar case in which only four persons constituted the corporation, and three of them gave to the fourth a proxy, authorizing him to vote for them at the first meeting of the stockholders on account of the fact that it was inconvenient for them to attend the meeting. As the corporation was to be organized in another state the person holding the proxy went to such state and was the only person present at the stockholders' meeting, at which he proceeded to elect directors. Following that election he, as one of the directors and holding the proxies which had been given him by the other members of the corporation, proceeded to organize the board of directors and elect president, treasurer, and secretary. The court said: "The proxy or power of attorney put in evidence did not give . . . the right to vote in the name of the directors who should be chosen at the stockholders' meeting; and if it did it would have been utterly void."

A letter from one of the directors of a corporation to another authorizing the latter to act for the former in any matters relating to the company cannot make the latter count as two in determining whether there is a quorum of the directors present or not. The court says an absent director could not confer all his powers on another director who was present, the absent director not being told what was going to be done and not having consulted about it on hearing the reasons pro and con. Re Portuguese C. C. Co., 60 L. T. N. S. 587.

A director of a company is not bound by the vote of his proxy, even at a shareholders' meeting attempting to bind the company and make the shareholders liable for an obligation outside of the deed of settlement of the company. In reply to the claim that the deed enables the managing directors to attend and vote by proxy, it was said by Parke, B., "but only for purposes within the scope of the deed, which this is not." Brown v. Byers, 18 Mees. & W. 252, 16 L. J. Exch. 112. This was a case of bills accepted by a resident director of the company without authority and which the general meeting of the shareholders resolved was a part of the indebtedness of the company. The distinction between voting as shareholders and as directors is not mentioned in the case.

Proxies given to directors of a corporation for voting on shares of stock at a stockholders' meeting do not necessarily create a trust for the corporation itself. The court says: "Whether it does or not depends upon whether what is done in this behalf is done with corporate funds for the corporation." Woodruff v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 91.

Where trustees are appointed to meet and elect a minister for the parish, being charged with the duty of judging of the qualifications of candidates, they cannot delegate that judgment to others, and a proxy given by a trustee is invalid; even if it specifies the persons for whom the vote is to be given, since this is determining the matter without may be represented at all elections by proxies, yet the by-law of the petitioner bank provides that no proxy shall be voted by any one not a stockholder of the corporation; and it is upon the validity of such by-law that the merits of this case hinge. It is suggested in argument of counsel that all banking corporations have a by-law of similar import; but, notwithstanding this general practice, we have arrived at the conclusion, after careful consideration, that the making of such a law is without the power of the corporation. Corporations have no power to create by-laws that are unreasonable in their practical application, or that are violative of the statute of the state; and we think this by-law an infringement upon the statute, and a most substantial limitation upon the rights of stockholders granted by section 812 of the Civil Code. That section is broad in its terms, and when it says that a stockholder in a corporation may appoint a proxy—an attorney in fact—to represent him at elections held by the corporation, in the absence of limitations in the law, it must be held that the statute gives him the right to name an attorney in fact of his own selection. Any other construction would entirely nullify all benefits intended to be conferred by its provisions. To declare that, though the statute in general terms gives all stockholders of corporations the right to vote by proxy, yet the corporation, by its by-laws, has the power to say who that proxy shall be, is to give the bearing the other trustees on the question. Atty-Gen. v. Scott, 1 Ves. Sr. 418.

An objection to the purchase of property by a school corporation on the ground that the vote in favor of the purchase was carried only by counting a vote of one of the directors by proxy, is held not to constitute sufficient ground for an injunction against the purchase, even if the corporation could avoid the purchase on this account. Dudley v. Kentucky High School, 9 Bush, 576.

While the cases immediately preceding are not cases about directors of a private corporation, they are mentioned as analogous, but without an attempt to annotate the general question of the right of members of public boards to act by representatives or proxies. The principles above stated are nevertheless so obvious that there would seem to be little ground for a contrary decision.

The effect of proxies of subordinate lodges on a vote in a grand lodge of Masons is discussed in Smith v. Smith, 3 Desaus. Eq. 587, where it is held that proxies granted for ordinary purposes would not bind them to action attempting to destroy the organization. This seems to involve merely the powers of delegates in such bodies as distinguished from the matter of proxy voting in corporations generally.

VIII. Miscellaneous matters.

Voting by proxy is involved in the case of State v. McDaniel, 22 Ohio St. 354, but the right to vote was discussed with reference to the title to the property, and not to the mode of voting.

In a case where stock had been pledged, although the pledgee, in whose name it stands on the corporate records, has a right to vote the stock at a meeting to elect directors, it is held that a court of equity may, in a proper case, compel him to give the pledgor a proxy. Re Argus Printing Co. 1 N. Dak. 434, 12 L. R. A. 781.

And a mortgagee of stock or his trustees was required in Vowell v. Thompson, 3 Oranch, C. C. 428, to give a power of attorney to the mortgagor for voting upon the stock until it should be sold under the mortgage or deed of trust. This was done by bill in equity.

The case of Vowell v. Thompson, supra, is cited as authority in Hoppin v. Buffum, 9 R. I. 512, 11 Am. Rep. 291, but in the latter case it was held that acquiescence in the control of the stock and the voting thereon by the record owner until the votes are counted, or are being counted, would prevent an attack upon the result of the election.

The right of a pledgee to vote on stock hypothecated is declared also in Ex parte Willcocks, 7 Cow. 403, 17 Am. Dec. 825, but this case does not seem to involve any question of proxy; and the right of the pledgee or pledgee to vote on pledged stock is not considered in this note except so far as it is connected with the question of proxies.

A proxy may be given by a corporation as well as by any other shareholder, when a corporation is the owner of shares in another company. Re Indian Zoedone Co. L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 70, 63 L. J. Ch. 468, 50 L. T. N. S. 547, 32 Week. Rep. 451.

An agreement between stockholders, which, among other things, provides that none of the signers shall vote by proxy, is held to be void as against public policy, in Feber v. Bush, 36 Hun, 641.

Parol evidence of the contents of proxies is admitted without search for the instruments, in order to prove that the stockholder had acted as such, where it was proved that the written proxies after being used had been thrown away as useless. Haywood & P. Pl. Road Co. v. Bryan, 6 Jones, L. 82.

A proxy was admitted in evidence in Harger v. McCullough, 2 Denio, 119, together with the affidavit of the maker that the stock had not been hypothecated, for the purpose of showing that he was the owner of the stock at the time he gave the proxy.

The right of a trustee of stock to vote upon it in the choice of directors was sustained in Re Barker, 6 Wend. 509, but this was on the ground that he was the legal owner of the stock and the trust was not regarded as in the nature of a proxy.

An agreement that a large number of shares of stock should be held in a block with a view to control the management of a corporation is involved in the case of Clarke v. Central R. & Bkg. Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 335, 15 L. R. A. 683, in which the court in substance says it is difficult to perceive how the instrument differs from an ordinary proxy. The court decides that proxy for voting stock of a corporation, made by the holder of the stock while enjoined from voting it directly on the ground of public policy, cannot carry the right to vote it. With the above case is a note on voting trusts of corporate stock.

Where stockholders, who were widely separated, deposited their stock in the hands of a person whose vote was to be directed by a committee appointed by themselves and subject to their control, it was held to be a mere arrangement of convenience from which each could recede at any time and demand the return of his stock, and therefore was not objectionable on grounds of public policy. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. State, 49 Ohio St. 683, affirming State v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 6 Ohio C. Ct. 415.

The right of one railroad company to vote the stock of another company, either by itself or by other persons acting in its interest, is denied in Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Woods, 88 Ala. 680, 7 L. R. A. 606; but this case did not involve any question of proxies, but the decision is based on the rule that one corporation cannot acquire a majority of the stock of another and by voting thereon govern and control the management of the latter.

R. A. R.

corporation full power to throttle the statute. The stockholders of many of our corporations are limited in number, and the case would undoubtedly often arise where the absent stockholder, desirous of being represented at an election, would be unable to find a friend among them in whom to trust his interests. The statute contemplates no such conditions, and neither says nor intended to say that such a stockholder would be deprived of his right to vote by proxy. If you may limit by by-law the right of holding a proxy to stockholders, you may limit it to directors, or the president, or the secretary, and thus the interests in control would have the power to compel the minority interests, if unable to be present in person, to be represented by the very interests to which they are opposed, and to reinstate in office the very men whose election they desire to defeat. The principle of cumulative voting has been authorized and approved in the interests of minority representation, yet this by-law squarely strikes at this principle which has been so carefully fostered. The substantial rights of a stockholder under the law cannot be taken from him, or even abridged, by the by-laws. The right to vote by proxy is a most substantial right, and this by-law handicaps this right out of all usefulness.

While no authority for or against the principles we have here declared was cited by counsel upon the elaborate argument of the case, we had no doubt at the time that they rested upon solid grounds, and since the submission of the cause our investigation has brought to light a recent case fully in line with all that we have said upon the question. The principle here involved was the sole question there involved, and in an opinion covering the entire ground the court there said: "It has not restricted the right of the stockholder to select any person whom he may consider to be advisable for that object to vote under his authority upon his shares as a stockholder. In this respect the largest liberty has been secured and provided for the stockholders, and, being entirely unrestrained by the legislature, this privilege was maintained by the authority of the law. Without having so declared expressly, the clear implication of the section is that it was not intended to impose any restriction whatever upon the stockholder as to the person he should be at liberty to select to act under his proxy; and, the statute having in this manner created this right in as general a manner as it did, the trustees of the corporation were not at liberty to restrict it or declare by their by-laws that it should not be so used." Re Lighthall Mfg. Co. 47 Hun, 258. Section 803 of the Civil Code provides: "A corporation may by its by-laws, where no other provision is especially made, provide for: . . . (8) The mode of voting by proxy." This provision does not give the corporation power to pass the by-law here assailed. It refers to the preliminary requirements to be followed in order that the proxy may be entitled to vote, as that the authorization must be in writing, properly witnessed, acknowledged, filed with the records, etc. In creating this provision it was not in the mind of the legislature to curtail the right of voting by proxy, but rather that such right might be exercised by stockholders within any reasonable restrictions which the corporation deemed proper to incorporate into their by-laws. The statute gives to the corporation the power to regulate the exercise of the right, but no power to either qualify or limit the right, and certainly no power to so shackle the right as to result in its nullification.

As a second ground of opposition to the granting of the motion for substitution, it is insisted that James Alva Watt, by reason of his relations to the respondent as attorney, is disqualified to represent the petitioner in the prohibition proceeding. We attach but little importance to this contention, and do not deem it necessary to enter into a discussion of the questions, namely: (1) Are the interests of the receiver and the bank antagonistic? or (2) Is Watt attorney for the respondent in the above-entitled cause? The conclusion we have arrived at upon the preceding question discussed declares the business relations theretofore existing between the bank and its attorneys, Messrs. Delmas & Shortridge, were severed by virtue of the action of the newly and legally elected board of directors, and, such being the case, the attorneys opposing this motion stand before us as strangers to the proceeding, having no interest or standing in the litigation; and we are unable to see that it is of any concern to them who represents the various parties in this proceeding. As to Mr. Watt's conduct in the litigation, all that he has done has been open and upon the record. There has been no concealment, no imposition practiced upon the court, but, upon the contrary, all that has been done in the past, and all that he proposes to do in the future, he has done and proposes to do under a claim of right, supported by the law. These things being so, until some party to the litigation objects, we will not investigate. If all parties to the litigation are satisfied, we know of no proper party to object. We might suggest, in conclusion, that Mr. Watt states in open court that he desires to be substituted as attorney for the petitioner bank, in order that he may dismiss the prohibition proceeding. The bank retains him as its attorney to dismiss the proceeding, and there is no reason why it has not the right so to do. Such a dismissal in no aspect of the case prejudices the interests of the respondents, and the bank, the petitioner, has the right to dismiss its petition if it deem such the proper course.

The motion for a substitution as prayed for is granted.

We concur: Beatty, Ch. J.; McFarland, J.; Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Robert HARE, Plef. in Err.,

v.

E. W. MURPHY.

(.....Neb.....)

*Where real estate encumbered by a mortgage is sold and conveyed, and there is inserted in the deed a clause which states that the grantee assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt, and the deed is accepted by the purchaser of the land with knowledge that it contains the clause; or where the purchaser of land agrees, as a part of the consideration for the sale of the property to him, to assume and pay a mortgage indebtedness existing against the land,—he becomes personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt. And this is true whether his immediate grantor was so liable or not; and the liability thus created may be enforced by the mortgagee or his assigns, as it was for his or their use and benefit that such promise was made.

(September 18, 1886.)

ERROR to the District Court for Lincoln County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to enforce payment of a mortgage debt by an assignee of the mortgaged property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. S. Howell, for plaintiff in error:

A deed containing an assumption clause found of record is presumptive evidence of the liability of the grantee.

Tracy v. Reed, 38 Fed. Rep. 69, 2 L. R. A. 778; Heil v. Redden, 45 Kan. 562.

A purchase of real estate expressly subject to encumbrance makes the property a fund for the discharge of the encumbrance.

George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706; Kruger v. Adams & French Harvester Co. 18 Neb. 100; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 833.

The acceptance of a deed containing a clause of the kind herein mentioned binds the grantee to the performance of the conditions thereof, and this is equally true if made by an agent.

Jones, Mortg. § 752; Bishop v. Douglass, 25 Wis. 696; Taylor v. Whitmore, 35 Mich. 97; Fairchild v. Lynch, 10 Jones & S. 265.

And where the grantee in a deed instructs another to have the deed recorded, he thereby makes him his agent, and is bound by the terms of the deed.

Adams v. Ryan, 61 Iowa, 783.

The deed was left for several weeks after the alleged discovery of the assumption clause, and until after the plaintiff had purchased the notes and mortgage, relying upon the clause in the deed, thereby becoming an innocent pur-

*Headnote by HARRISON, J.

NOTE.—The above case is against the doctrine hitherto asserted in some courts, that a vendee who assumes payment of a mortgage on the property will not be liable, unless his grantor was liable. For cases on this subject, see note to Jefferson v. Asch (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 237, especially the part beginning on p. 275.

29 L. R. A.

chaser, and defendant was then estopped to set up his defense. Innocent purchasers will be protected.

Hayden v. Snow, 9 Bls. 511; Jones, Mortg. § 764; New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Montgomery, 95 U. S. 16, 24 L. ed. 846; Carpenter v. Longan, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 271, 21 L. ed. 814; Kilmer v. Smith, 77 N. Y. 226, 83 Am. Rep. 613; Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Urbana Ins. Co. 18 Ohio, 220; Hayden v. Drury, 3 Fed. Rep. 782; Pierce v. Faunce, 47 Me. 507.

A grantee cannot be released from his liability incurred by assuming a mortgage as against a purchaser of a mortgage who may have relied upon the contract of assumption as it appears of record.

Jones, Mortg. § 764.

Where one of two innocent parties must suffer a loss by reason of the fraud of another, the loss must fall upon the one whose acts furnished the means for the commission of the fraud.

Dinsmore v. Stimbirt, 12 Neb. 438.

Where one person makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third person, the third person may maintain an action on it.

Shamp v. Meyer, 20 Neb. 227; Keedle v. Flack, 27 Neb. 840; Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 80; Dean v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540, 47 Am. Rep. 467; Bay v. Williams, 113 Ill. 91, 54 Am. Rep. 209.

Messrs. Grimes & Wilcox and T. C. Patterson, for defendant in error:

To create a personal liability on the part of a grantee in a deed to pay a prior mortgage or lien on the premises conveyed, the covenant or words used therein must clearly import that the obligation was intended by the grantor, and knowingly assumed by the grantee.

Holcomb v. Thompson, 50 Kan. 598; Lewis v. Day, 68 Iowa, 575.

A grantee is not liable on a covenant to assume and pay a mortgage, if inserted in the deed without his knowledge, and without intent of parties.

Kilmer v. Smith, 77 N. Y. 226, 83 Am. Rep. 613; Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; Dey Ermand v. Chamberlin, 88 N. Y. 658.

The plaintiff stands in the same position as either Schuster, Sproul, or Callender would stand, and defendant is entitled to the same defense against plaintiff as he would have against either Schuster, Sproul, or Callender.

Trimble v. Strother, 25 Ohio St. 378; Brewer v. Maurer, 28 Ohio St. 554, 43 Am. Rep. 436.

A person for whose benefit a promise is made cannot maintain an action to enforce the promise, when the promise is void between the promisor and promisee, because of want or failure of consideration, or fraud.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 838, note 1; Dunning v. Leavitt, 85 N. Y. 30, 39 Am. Rep. 617.

A grantee is not liable to his grantor, unless his grantor is compelled to pay the debt assumed.

Ayers v. Dizon, 78 N. Y. 818.

To make the promise of a grantee to pay a mortgage on land conveyed to him available to the mortgagee, it must be made to a person personally liable for the mortgage debt.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 841, note 2, and cases there cited; 1 Jones, Mortg. 2d ed. §§ 760, 762; Wise v. Fuller, 39 N. J. Eq. 257; Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 446, 4 L. ed. 769.

The person to whom the covenant is given is not a debtor to the one who seeks its benefits.

King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 465, 4 L. ed. 1052; Meech v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 191, 44 Am. Rep. 225; Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 281, 25 Am. Rep. 195; 15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 888, note 1; Brown v. Stillman, 43 Minn. 126; Nelson v. Rogers, 47 Minn. 103; Stoer v. Tompkins, 34 Neb. 467; Reeves v. Wilcox, 35 Neb. 779.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, as assignee and owner of two promissory notes, and a mortgage on certain real estate, given to secure their payment, instituted this action against the defendant, to whom the real estate had been sold by the grantee or party purchasing from the mortgagor, to recover the amount due upon the notes and mortgage, basing the suit upon a clause in the conveyance of the lands to defendant, by which, it is claimed, defendant assumed and agreed on his part to pay the mortgage indebtedness. The petition in the case recites that on December 26, 1889, D. A. Spraul executed and delivered to Maggie Callender two promissory notes, each in the amount of $250, and a mortgage, to secure their payment, on tracts of land therein described, and situate in Logan county; the conveyance by the mortgagor, on the succeeding day, to William L. Schuster, and the sale and conveyance of the lands again on the 31st day of December, 1889, by Schuster to the defendant, E. W. Murphy, and his agreement, as a part of the consideration or purchase price of the property, to pay the indebtedness shown by the notes and mortgage; and that, pursuant to such promise, and evidencing it, there was inserted in the deed of the lands by Schuster to defendant a clause in which it was stated that the real estate was encumbered, and that the purchaser assumed and agreed to pay the encumbrance. It also states the purchase of the notes and mortgage by the plaintiff, and their transfer and assignment to him, and nonpayment, etc., and closes with a prayer for judgment. The answer contained a denial of any assumption of or agreement by defendant to pay the mortgage indebtedness; a statement that defendant never received or accepted the conveyance or deed described in plaintiff's petition, and that no deed of the lands had ever been delivered to him; that he never entered into or had possession of the premises described in the petition; that a deed, a copy of which was attached to the petition, was caused to be recorded in Logan county by some person unknown to defendant, and without his knowledge or consent; that there was no consideration in the purchase of the lands, or the "equity" of the vendor, Schuster, therein, for an assumption or agreement on his part to pay the amount of the encumbrances or mortgages; and, further, that his grantor, Schuster, had not assumed the payment of the encumbrances, and no liability existed against such grantor for their payment. The reply of plaintiff was, in the main, a general denial of the allegations of the defendant's answer, and also stated that the deed of the lands executed by Schuster, and to defendant, as grantee, was filed for record in the office of the county clerk of Logan county on or about January 2, 1890. That on or about the 7th day of January, 1890, the plaintiff, in the course of some business affairs or settlement between him and another party, was offered the notes and mortgage, the basis of this action, and their purchase by him was solicited. That he made, or caused to be made, an examination of the lands, and the titles to the same, and thus discovered of record the conveyance to the defendant, and the clause asserting the assumption and agreement of the defendant to pay the notes and mortgages; and also investigated, or caused inquiries to be made, with reference to the financial standing or circumstances of the defendant, and ascertained that he was solvent; and that plaintiff, in the purchase of the notes and mortgage, was influenced by, and relied upon, the responsibility assumed by and of the defendant for their payment, and, had it not been for the clause in the deed to defendant, which, in terms, bound him to such payment, plaintiff would not have purchased the notes and mortgage, and that such purchase was consummated March 1, 1890. That, very soon after the deed in question was recorded, the defendant had knowledge thereof, and of its contents and recitals, and possessed such knowledge at the time of its execution, and for more than thirty days prior to the date of plaintiff's purchase of the notes and mortgage, and permitted it to remain of record without any effort to have the same annulled or reformed. There was a trial of the issues to the court and a jury, and, at the close of the testimony, the trial judge instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendant, which instruction was complied with by the jury, and, after motion for new trial heard and overruled, judgment was rendered; and the plaintiff brings the case here by petition in error.

Counsel for the parties in the briefs filed agree in the statement that the trial judge was moved to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant by the following considerations: That the petition did not allege, and the evidence failed to show, that defendant's grantor was in any manner, or to any extent, connected with the mortgage debt, or liable or bound for the payment of it; that the rule of law applicable and governing in such cases is that a mortgage indebtedness assumption clause in a deed, or an agreement by the purchaser of lands to pay encumbrances existing against their lands, will not become operative, or is of no validity, and cannot be enforced by the mortgagee, unless it further appears that the grantor in the conveyance, or the person to whom the promise is made, was personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt. In adopting this view of the law, we think the learned judge who presided during the trial in the district court erred. It is undoubtedly supported by decisions—many of which are cited by counsel for defendant in their brief—of courts of last resort, the opinions of which, as authority, rank among the very highest, and are entitled to great weight; but we do not think best to follow them. It is an established rule of law that, where one makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third person, such third person can maintain an action upon the promise, though the consideration does not move directly from him. Shamp v. Meyer, 20 Neb. 228; Sample v. Hale, 34 Neb. 220; Barnett v. Pratt, 37 Neb. 849; Doll v. Crume, 41 Neb. 655. And in Reedle v. Flack, 27 Neb. 836,—a case in which the right of a mortgagee to enforce such a promise as the one in the case at bar was in controversy,—the rule just quoted was applied, and held to be the basis of the mortgagee's right to recover. Where a party purchaser of lands agrees, as a part of the contract of purchase, to assume and pay a mortgage debt existing against the lands, the promise so to do is for the benefit of the owner and holder of the debt, and may be enforced by such party. The purchase price of the lands is the consideration moving between the purchaser and his grantor, and it is immaterial, and of no consequence, to the grantee, that his grantor may or may not be personally liable or bound for the payment of the mortgage debt; and, by such promise, the promisor becomes personally liable to the mortgagee or assigns for the mortgage debt, regardless of whether his grantor was so liable or not. Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 78; Dean v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540, 47 Am. Rep. 467; Boy v. Williams, 112 Ill. 91, 54 Am. Rep. 209.

There were some issues of fact in regard to which the evidence was conflicting, and which, if the view of the law with reference to the liability of a grantee who assumes and agrees to pay a mortgage debt which we have announced herein as the correct one had been taken, should, and doubtless would, have been submitted, under proper instructions, to the jury for their consideration and determination.

It follows that the judgment of the District Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

PAXTON & HERSHEY IRRIGATING CANAL & LAND CO., App't.,

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' IRRIGATION & LAND CO.,

(.....Neb.....)

*1. The provision of section 11, article 3 of the Constitution, viz.: "No bill shall *Headnotes by POST, J.

NOTE.—The general subject of public uses for which property may be taken by eminent domain is considered at some length in notes to Pittsburgh, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works (W. Va.) 3 L. R. A. 680; Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. Co.

contain more than one subject, and the same shall be clearly expressed in the title,"—is intended to prevent surreptitious legislation, and not to prohibit comprehensive titles.

2. The term "irrigation," as employed in the title of the Act of March 27, 1889, viz.: "An act to provide for water rights and irrigation, and to regulate the use of water for agricultural and manufacturing purposes," etc.,—is used in its popular sense, and implies the means of conducting water to the land to be supplied. The provision therein for the acquiring by irrigating companies of the right of way for canals and ditches—accordingly, Held, to be within said title, and not to conflict with section 11, article 3 of the Constitution.

3. To the legislature, and not to the courts, has been committed the power to determine when the exigencies of the public demand the taking of private property; the limit of judicial interference being the duty to declare void acts clearly in conflict with the constitution.

4. There is no arbitrary standard by which to determine whether the purpose to which property is appropriated possesses the element of public utility. "Public use," in a constitutional sense, may be confined to the inhabitants of a restricted locality or neighborhood, but the use must be common, and not to a particular individual.

5. The use of water for the purpose of irrigating, contemplated by the Act of March 27, 1889, known as the "Rayner Irrigating Law," is a "public use," within the meaning of the constitution.

6. Section 3 of article 2 of the Rayner Irrigating Law confers upon irrigating companies organized under the laws of this state power to acquire the right of way for necessary canals, reservoirs, etc., by condemnation.

7. The word "if," in the first line of the section last above mentioned, is evidently an interpolation, having no relation to the body of the section, without sensible meaning, and should accordingly be disregarded in giving effect to the provisions of the act.

8. The provision of section 3, article 1, of the Irrigation Law of 1889, viz.: "No tract of land shall be crossed by more than one ditch," etc.,—Held, to include lands owned by corporations as well as natural persons.

9. A proviso which would operate to limit the application of an enacting clause, general in its terms, will be strictly construed, and includes no case not within the letter of the exception.

10. The Irrigation Law of 1889 does not confer upon one irrigating company any right to connect with the ditches of another, or take water therefrom without the consent of the proprietor.

11. What is meant by the exception contained in section 3, article 1, of the Act above mentioned is that no tract of land shall, without the consent of the owner, be burdened with two or more ditches, for the watering of the same territory. The question is not whether the first ditch may be so enlarged or extended as to answer the purpose for which the second is designed,

(Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 786; also in the case of Wisconsin Water Co. v. Winans (Wis.) 20 L. R. A. 62.

For flowage of lands as public use, see Turner v. Nye (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 487, and note.

As to private roads, see Latah County v. Peterson (Idaho) 16 L. R. A. 61, and note.

but whether it may, as constructed, be made to supply the lands within reach of both.

(October 1, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court for Lincoln County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enjoin defendant from appropriating a right of way for an irrigating canal. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank T. Ransom and T. Fulton Gantt for appellant.

Messrs. T. C. Patterson and Grimes & Wilcox, for appellee:

So far as the act declares irrigation to be a public use, and provides for the condemnation of right of way for canals that are projected and built, as the defendant's is, for the purpose of supplying water to the public for irrigation, it clearly comes within the constitutional power and duty of the legislature to legislate for the public welfare.

Re Madera Irrigation Dist. Bonds, 92 Cal. 296, 14 L. R. A. 755; Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 598; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Lindsay Irrigation Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 677; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 425; Oury v. Goodwin (Ariz.) 26 Pac. Rep. 876; Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 924; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 118 U. S. 16, 28 L. ed. 892.

If the public interest can in any way be promoted by the taking of private property, it must rest in the wisdom of the legislature to determine whether the benefit to the public will be of sufficient importance to render it expedient for them to exercise the right of eminent domain, and to authorize an interference with the private rights of individuals for that purpose.

2 Kent, Com. 840; Stockton & V. R. Co. v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 147; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540.

To make the use public it need not be for the benefit of the whole public, or state, or any large portion of it. It may be for the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but the use and benefit must be in common, not to a particular individual or estate.

Welton v. Dickson, 38 Neb. 767, 22 L. R. A. 496; Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54; Pocantico Water Works Co. v. Bird, 130 N. Y. 249; Lewis, Em. Dom. chap. 7; State v. Morris Aqueduct Props. 46 N. J. L. 495; Wayland v. Middlesex County Comrs. 4 Gray, 500; St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 659; Re New Rochelle Water Co.'s Application, 46 Hun, 525; Stamford Water Co. v. Stanley, 39 Hun, 424; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 524; Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 672.

Section 8, article 1, of the Irrigation Act does not apply to cases between rival canal companies who may also be land owners, but is for the benefit of the land owners only.

San Luis Land, C. & I. Co. v. Kendrickworth Canal Co. 8 Colo. App. 244.

Plaintiff's canal is completed. It does not extend beyond the lands owned by plaintiff, and does not run through any lands that can be watered from it except the plaintiff's own land. No public duty can be imposed upon it.

Downing v. More, 12 Colo. 316.

The true test of the appropriation of water is the successful application thereof to the beneficial use designated.

Thomas v. Guiraud, 6 Colo. 580; Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 18 Colo. 111, 4 L. R. A. 767; Dick v. Caldwell, 14 Nev. 167; Simpson v. Williams, 18 Nev. 432; Farmers' Independent Ditch Co. v. Agricultural Ditch Co. 8 Colo. App. 255.

The North Platte canal was taxed to its full capacity to supply its customers to whom it was under contract to furnish water, and that being the case its customers would be entitled to an injunction to stop it from selling or contracting to sell water beyond its ability to deliver.

Clifford v. Larrien (Ariz.) 11 Pac. Rep. 397; Wyatt v. Larimer & W. Irrig. Co. 18 Colo. 298; Cole v. Logan, 24 Or. 304.

The finding as to the necessity of taking private property is conclusive, and not subject to be reviewed or questioned by another court.

Knoblauch v. Minneapolis, 58 Minn. 321; Barrett v. Kemp (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 77; Cherry v. Matthews, 25 Or. 484; Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 538; Waterloo Water Co. v. Hozie, 89 Iowa, 317.

Post, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the district court for Lincoln county dismissing the action of the plaintiff company whereby it seeks to prevent the appropriation by the defendant of a right of way through its lands for an irrigating canal. In the petition it is in substance alleged that the plaintiff company is the owner of 10,000 acres of land, bounded by the North Platte river, in Lincoln county, and also of an irrigating canal known as the "Paxton & Hershey Ditch," situated on its said lands and on the lands of other adjoining proprietors; that upon its said land, and nearly parallel with the ditch above mentioned, is an irrigating canal known as the "North Platte Irrigating & Land Company's Ditch," and herein referred to as the "North Platte Ditch;" and that in the vicinity of the plaintiff's lands sought to be watered by the defendant's proposed canal is an irrigating canal known as the "Cody & Dillon Ditch." The plaintiff, it is alleged, has constructed a large number of laterals from its said canal, which it is proposed by the defendant company to cross, thus necessitating the construction and maintaining of many bridges, flumes, and conduits, and otherwise needlessly harassing it in the use and enjoyment of its said property. The defendant company, which is organized for the purpose of building and maintaining ditches, canals, aqueducts, and reservoirs for the storage and conveyance of water, and of selling water to consumers for irrigating, power, and other useful purposes, prior to the commencement of this action, entered upon the plaintiff's said land, and located and staked out a ditch thereon 4½ miles in length, and is taking steps to condemn a right of way therefor, but that the three ditches above described afford ample facilities for the irrigation of all of the land sought to be supplied by the defendant company, and that water sufficient to supply the defendant's wants can be furnished from the ditches already constructed, should connection be made therewith, at less expense than by the construction and maintaining of the proposed ditch through the plaintiff's land to the source of supply,—the North Platte river. The answer, so far as it is deemed necessary to notice it, consists of an allegation that the defendant is engaged in the construction of an irrigating canal some 20 miles in length, for the purpose of supplying with water from the North Platte river certain territory not within the reach of either of the canals already constructed; a denial that the plaintiff's canal is capable of supplying the lands which the defendant proposes to water; and an allegation that the water supplied by said canal is barely sufficient for the irrigation of the plaintiff's own land. Accompanying the pleadings is the following map, showing the location of the proposed ditch, as well as those already completed, and which is essential to a perfect understanding of the questions at issue.

The district court, upon entering the decree complained of, submitted the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

"First. The plaintiff is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of this state for the following purposes: To construct, own, operate, and maintain a canal or canals, ditch or ditches, for irrigation purposes; to purchase, acquire, own, sell, and convey all real estate that may be necessary for such purposes, and to acquire, own, sell, and convey real estate in connection with carrying on an irrigating business, and to acquire, own, sell, and convey real estate for other purposes deemed advisable or advantageous to the corporation and its interests, and to cultivate and improve such lands as shall be owned by the corporation; to furnish, sell or rent water for irrigation of lands which shall be owned by said corporation and within its area, and other lands within reach of any canal or canals which shall be owned, operated, or controlled by the corporation, owning live stock, and raising the same in connection with the land held or controlled by this corporation. Second. The plaintiff is the owner of about 7,000 acres of land located on and adjacent to the banks of the North Platte river, in Lincoln county, Neb., as alleged in its petition, and is the owner of an irrigating canal running across its said lands, and the lands of others for a distance of about 10 miles, which canal is finished and constructed for the purpose of irrigating the land under the said ditch, and for the purposes set forth in the articles of incorporation of the plaintiff. Third. The defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of this state for the following purposes, among others: The building and maintaining of canals, ditches, and aqueducts, and reservoirs for the storage and conveyance of water, and the selling of such water to consumers for irrigation, agricultural, power, and other useful purposes. Fourth. The plaintiff is the owner of the tract of land proposed to be crossed by the proposed canal of the defendant, and which lies under the plaintiff's ditch, and which is proposed to be crossed by defendant's ditch for a distance of $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles. Fifth. All of the land of the plaintiff across which the defendant proposes to construct its canal for a distance of $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles can be irrigated from and by plaintiff's canal, and it is not proposed by the defendant to water or irrigate any of plaintiff's said land within said $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles. Sixth. That the defendant corporation is the owner of no land to be watered by its proposed ditch, but that the object of said corporation is for the purpose of constructing and operating a canal or ditch for irrigation purposes for the lands lying contiguous under said ditch for other parties to hire. Seventh. That, at the points where it is alleged that the defendant's ditch crosses the lands of the plaintiff, it is necessary for the defendant to run said ditch across said lands in order to get water out of the North Platte river, with necessary fall in accordance with the surveyed route of its ditch; that, in the territory covered by the ditch of the plaintiff, it is not the object nor the purpose of the defendant's ditch to irrigate said land, but lands lying below and beyond the territory of the plaintiff's ditch. Eighth. There are about 40,000 acres of land between the North and South Platte rivers, and in this territory the evidence shows that the North Platte Ditch Company has a ditch about 20 miles long running through the middle portion of the peninsula formed by the two rivers. The plaintiff's ditch is also constructed in this peninsula, and is in length about 10 miles. The Cody & Dillon ditch is also in this peninsula, and is about 6 miles in length. A great amount of evidence has been taken to show the capacity of these several ditches for watering the land in the peninsula, including the land proposed to be watered by the defendant's ditch. The location of these several ditches in the peninsula, their dimensions, and their capacity appear from the evidence and the maps introduced in evidence; but the court does not find nor pass upon the evidence relating to the question as to whether or not this water could be supplied by the defendant's constructing their ditch up and to the plaintiff's ditch, and receiving water therefrom, for the reason that there is no provision in the act contemplating that it should be obligatory upon the defendant to so do. Ninth. The court further finds that the defendant's proposed ditch will cross the lands of the plaintiff through which plaintiff's ditch has already been built, which lands are also irrigated from plaintiff's ditch. Tenth. The court further finds that the plaintiff has not given its written consent to cross the lands owned by it proposed to be crossed by the defendant with its said proposed canal, and objects to its appropriation of its lands for the purpose of constructing the defendant's said ditch over the same.

"Conclusions of law: First. That section 2034, Consol. Stat. (Irrigation Law of 1889, § 3, art. 1), is not applicable to the facts in this case, for the reason that the defendant's contemplated ditch is not being constructed for the purpose of irrigating the lands crossed by the plaintiff's ditch, nor the lands lying under the plaintiff's ditch, but for the purpose of irrigating lands beyond and below the plaintiff's ditch. Second. That the defendant is entitled to cross the lands of the plaintiff for the purpose of constructing its said ditch on complying with the necessary requirements of law for said purpose."

It will be observed from the foregoing statement and opinion that the defendant's claim to a right of way for its canal through the plaintiff's land is founded upon the provisions of the Act of March 27, 1889, known as the "Rayner Irrigating Law," entitled "An act to provide for water rights and irrigation, and to regulate the right to the use of water for agricultural and manufacturing purposes, and to repeal sections 158 and 159 of chapter 16, Compiled Statutes of 1889, entitled Corporations."

The first contention on this appeal is that the provision for the acquiring by corporations of the right of way for irrigating ditches in the exercise of the power of eminent domain is foreign to the title of the act mentioned, and accordingly violative of section 11, article 3, of the Constitution, viz.: "No bill shall contain more than one subject, and the same shall be clearly expressed in the title." The object of the foregoing provision has been declared, not to prohibit comprehensive titles, but to prevent surreptitious legislation, by advising representatives of the nature and purpose of the measures they are called upon to support or oppose. Kansas City & O. R. Co. v. Frey, 30 Neb. 790; Re White, 33 Neb. 818; Trumble v. Trumble, 37 Neb. 840; South Omaha v. Taxpayers' League, 42 Neb. 671. It is said in White's Case, supra, that the legislature has the right to choose the title to any act passed by it; and, although that chosen may not be the most appropriate, the act will not be held void unless clearly in conflict with the constitution. When tested by that rule, we cannot doubt that the provision assailed is germane to the title of the act, and within the evident purpose thereof, viz., the utilizing of the public waters in the further development of the agricultural resources of the state. The word "irrigation," as employed in the title of the act under consideration, is apparently used in its popular sense, and denotes the application of water to land for the production of crops. Platte Water Co. v. Northern Colorado Irrigation Co. 12 Colo. 536. The use of water for the purpose of irrigation clearly implies the means of conducting it to the land to which it is applied; and any plan such as contemplated by the Act of 1889, which omits provision for the enforced access by the public to the source of supply, is necessarily partial and ineffective.

2. The act, in so far as it makes provision for the acquiring of the right of way for irrigating canals by condemnation, is also vigorously assailed on the ground that it contemplates the taking of property for private use only, and is therefore in conflict with section 21 of the Bill of Rights, viz.: "The property of no one shall be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation therefor." This provision has been held to prohibit, by implication, the taking of private property for private use, of any character whatever, without the consent of the owner. Jenal v. Green Island Draining Co. 12 Neb. 163; Wellton v. Dickson, 38 Neb. 767, 22 L. R. A. 496. In the last-mentioned case it was held, following Coster v. Tide Water Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 54, that the want of power in the legislature to transfer to one person the property of another does not necessarily depend upon constitutional restrictions, but upon the fact that such authority is in no sense an incident to the powers conferred upon the lawmaking branch of the government. We are thus, for the first time, confronted with the question whether the use contemplated by the statute is a public one, in a constitutional sense, or whether it is a mere private use, and accordingly within the prohibition mentioned. In this connection it should be observed that to the legislature, and not to the courts, has been committed the power to determine when the exigencies of the public demand the taking of property for public uses, the limit of judicial interference being the duty to declare void acts clearly violative of the fundamental law of the state. There is no arbitrary standard by which to determine whether the purpose to which property is appropriated possesses the elements of public utility. It has been said by an eminent jurist that "the use required need not be the use or benefit of the whole public or state, or any large portion of it. It may be for the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but the use and benefit must be in common, and not to particular individuals or estates." See Chancellor Zabriskie in Coster v. Tide Water Co. supra. Again, it has been said that "the use is public when it promotes the interests of a considerable portion of the community, although it may not benefit the community at large." Kinney, Irrigation, 94. See also Black's Pom. Water Rights, § 174; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 804; Lindsay Irrigation Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 676; Oury v. Goodwin (Ariz.) 26 Pac. Rep. 876; Umatilla Irrigation Co. v. Barnhart, 22 Or. 389; Forster v. Park Comrs. 183 Mass. 321; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229; Pocantico Water Works Co. v. Bird, 180 N. Y. 249. In the last-mentioned case we observe the following pertinent language: "The term 'public use,' as used in connection with the right of eminent domain, is not easily defined. . . . It is doubtless true that in order to make the use public, a duty must devolve upon the persons or corporation holding the property to furnish the public with the use intended. The term implies 'the use of many' or 'by the public,' but it may be limited to the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but the use must be common and not for a particular individual." It has been said that if, by any reasonable construction, a designated use may be held to be public in a constitutional sense, the will of the legislature should prevail over any mere doubt of the court (Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540; Re Madera Irrigation Dist. Bonds, 92 Cal. 809, 14 L. R. A. 755; Coster v. Tide Water Co. supra), which, however, is but the application of a fundamental principle of our system, viz., the independence of each department of the government within its own domain. It should be remembered, too, that the essential features of the Rayner irrigating law appear in the legislation of the several Pacific states, notably of California, whose constitutional provisions on the subject do not differ substantially from ours, and where it had long previous to its adoption by us received a definite construction adverse to the contention of the plaintiff herein. See Luz v. Haggin, supra. The legislature must therefore have intended to adopt, not the statute alone, but the construction placed upon it in the state of California. Such is the well-established rule. Bohnan v. State, 18 Neb. 57, 58 Am. Rep. 791. But any examination of this subject is necessarily incomplete which omits mention of the recent case of Bradley v. Fallbrook Irrigation Dist., 68 Fed. Rep. 948, holding that assessments under the provisions of the district irrigation law of that state contemplate the taking of property for mere private purposes, and are accordingly within the prohibition of the United States Constitution. It is unnecessary, however, at this time, to examine the reasoning upon which that case rests, since it is therein declared inapplicable to the ordinary use of water for irrigating purposes in the arid regions of California, and therefore in harmony with Luz v. Haggin and later cases, in which the same doctrine is asserted by that court. The varying conditions of society are constantly presenting new subjects of "public utility," which is but another name for "public necessity;" hence the force of Chancellor Vroom's remark in Scudler v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 28 Am. Dec. 756, that what shall be deemed a public use depends somewhat on the situation and wants of the community for the time being. Nor were the conditions surrounding the people of the Pacific states when the foundation was laid for the body of their laws upon the subject materially different from those which to-day confront the western half of our own state. We behold what was but yesterday the public domain occupied to the western limit of the "Rain Belt," so called, and settlers eagerly seeking for homes in the semiarid region beyond. We behold thousands of acres of fertile land in the valleys of the Platte, the Loups, the Elkhorn, and the Republican rivers practically worthless under existing conditions for the purpose of agriculture, but which by application of the waters of those streams may be made most productive, thus not only supporting the rapidly increasing population of that region, but adding largely to the wealth and material prosperity of the state. That an undertaking so important can be successfully prosecuted alone through the agency of the state none can doubt. The reclamation of a region so vast, equal in extent to more than one state of the Union, is surely a legitimate function of government; and the exercise of the reserved power of the state in the promotion of an enterprise so beneficial is not even in the technical sense violative of the restrictive features of the constitution.

8. It is next argued that authority to appropriate land for right of way purposes is by the Law of 1889 conferred upon property owners only, and, it being admitted that the defendant company is not the owner of any of the lands lying under its ditch, it is not within the provisions of the act.

The purpose of sections 1-4 of article 2, to which we are referred in support of that contention, was apparently to confer upon individuals and corporations the right of way in certain cases through the premises of adjoining proprietors. It is, however, unnecessary to examine the provisions mentioned, since the plaintiff's argument is based upon an apparent misconception of the defendant's claim, which is under the provisions of sections 8 and 9 of article 2, viz.:

"Sec. 8. If any corporation organized under the laws of this state for the purpose of constructing and operating canals for irrigating or water-power purposes, or both, may acquire a right of way over or upon any land for the necessary construction of such canal, including dams, reservoirs, and all necessary adjuncts to said canals in the same manner as provided for persons and companies in this act, and such persons, canal companies, and corporations shall have the same power to occupy state lands with their said canals as is given to railroad corporations by section 105, chapter 16, of the Compiled Statutes of 1887, and such corporations shall also have power to borrow money and to mortgage all their property and franchises in the same manner and for the same purposes as railroad companies.

"Sec. 9. Canals constructed for irrigating or water-power purposes, or both, are hereby declared to be works of internal improvement, and all laws applicable to works of internal improvement are hereby declared to be applicable to such canals."

The first word of section 8, as it appears above, is evidently an interpolation, having no relation to the body of the section, without sensible meaning, and should accordingly be disregarded in giving effect to the provisions of the act. Stone v. Yeovil, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 701; United States v. Stern, 5 Blatchf. 512, Fed. Cas. No. 16,889; State v. Beasley, 5 Mo. 91; State v. Acuff, 6 Mo. 55. A careful reading of the two sections last named, with the word "if" eliminated from section 8, leaves no room to doubt that the defendant company is within the terms of the act, and that the plaintiff's claim to the contrary is without merit.

4. It is by the plaintiff further argued that it is within the exception contained in section 8, article 1, as follows: "No tract of land shall be crossed by more than one ditch, canal, or lateral without the written consent and agreement of the owner thereof, if the first ditch, canal, or lateral can be made to answer the purpose for which the second is desired or intended." The evidence relating to this branch of the case is quite voluminous, although the district court, as appears from its findings and conclusions of law, held the foregoing exception not applicable to the facts, without determining the question of the capacity of the ditches already constructed. On behalf of the defendant it is contended, in effect, that the exception of the statute applies to owners and proprietors other than irrigating companies, which corporations, it is argued, are not in terms or by implication included therein. The case of San Luis Land, C. & I. Co. v. Kenilworth Canal Co., 3 Colo. App. 244, it is conceded, tends to sustain that contention. Referring to the Colorado statute, which provides that no tract or parcel of improved or occupied land shall be burdened with two or more ditches, etc., it is said in the case cited: "We are wholly unable to understand how it can be urged that the defendant company has any right under the provisions of these sections. They clearly and in unmistakable language apply to the right of the owner of the lands to assert that his property shall not be burdened with more than one irrigating ditch, provided that one ditch be of sufficient capacity to carry water for the purposes contemplated by the act." We are, however, unable to accept that case as an authoritative interpretation of our statute. The term "no tract of land," as employed, without qualifications, must be held to include the property of corporations as well as natural persons; and such would have been the construction had the statute read "the land of no person shall be crossed," etc. Wales v. Muscatine, 4 Iowa, 804; Ricker v. American Loan & T. Co. 140 Mass. 346; Norris v. State, 25 Ohio St. 217, 18 Am. Rep. 291. But we reach the same conclusion as the district court,—presumably by the same course of reasoning,—by which the sections are transposed; section 8 of article 2 being regarded as the enacting clause, and section 3 of article 1 as a proviso exempting the exceptional cases therein contemplated from the operation of the act. According to settled rules of construction, a proviso which would operate to limit the application of an enacting clause general in its terms will be strictly construed, and includes no case not within the letter of the exception. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 186; United States v. Dickson, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 165, 10 L. ed. 698; Roberts v. Yarbore, 41 Tex. 450; Epps v. Epps, 17 Ill. App. 196. Referring again to the proviso involved, we are first impressed with the fact that the primary object thereof is the protection of land owners, rather than the proprietors of irrigating ditches. True, both characters may, as in this instance, be united in one person or corporation, but such cases are exceptions, and apparently not within the contemplation of the legislature. It is, in the second place, noticeable that the act is silent respecting the terms and conditions upon which one irrigating company may make use of the canal or ditch of another; nor is the proprietor of such a ditch in terms required to supply water upon any terms to a rival corporation. It was at the consultation suggested that it is within the power of a court of equity to prescribe the conditions upon which one irrigating company may connect with the ditch of another; but that assertion rests, to say the least, upon doubtful grounds. Conceding irrigating companies, as quasi public corporations, to be subject to the strict obligations of common carriers, it does not follow that they may by the courts be compelled to enter into particular agreements, or assume particular relations, however just and equitable, towards each other. That subject has recently engaged the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States, by which the power to prescribe terms for the interchange of business by connecting carriers is declared to be legislative rather than judicial in character, notwithstanding the provisions of the interstate commerce act. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 115 U. S. 587, 29 L. ed. 499; Rappan Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. S. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 559, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 768. See also Beach, Priv. Corp. 839; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 567, 3 L. R. A. 289, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351;

Shelbyville R. Co. v. Louisville, O. & L. R. Co. 83 Ky. 541.

The precise limits within which courts of equity will interfere in such cases in order to regulate or enforce the reciprocal obligations of corporations is a question foreign to the present controversy, although the authorities cited serve to illustrate the difficulties attending the interpretation placed upon the statute by counsel for plaintiff. We are, after a careful analysis of the language of the exception, unable to say that it contemplates the connecting of different canals, or that it imposes upon one irrigating company any duty to supply water for use by the patrons of another. What the statute implies is that no tract of land shall, without the consent of the owner, be burdened with two or more ditches for the watering of the same territory. The question is not whether the first ditch may be so enlarged or extended as to answer the purpose for which the second is designed, but whether it may as constructed be made to supply the lands within reach of both. That the purpose of the defendant is to water lands which cannot be accommodated by the plaintiff, but which, in the language of the district court, "lie below and beyond its ditch" as now constructed, is clearly established by the proofs, and apparent from an inspection of the foregoing map. Nor can the fact that the plaintiff concedes the defendant's right to connect with its ditch, and offers to supply the latter with water on terms confessedly reasonable, be regarded as material, since, as we have seen, the law imposes upon the plaintiff no such duty. It follows without further elaboration that the decree of the District Court is right, and must be affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Rudolph MUNZER et al.

v.

Henry STERN, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Fraud in the purchase of goods is waived by the seller's entering into a compromise agreement with the purchaser by which the latter returns a portion of the goods and agrees to pay for the balance on terms satisfactory to the seller.
2. Sellers of goods to one who purchased with intent to defraud, who have been induced to leave a portion in possession of the buyer under a compromise agreement entered into by the latter with the intent to defraud, may rescind the agreement and retake the goods.
3. A tender back of what he obtained by the compromise is not necessary to justify its rescission, where one from whom goods were fraudulently purchased regained a portion of them under a compromise agreement which left the remainder in the buyer's possession, but which was entered into by the buyer with intent to defraud the seller of the property.
4. Evidence of a conversation which occurred in defendant's absence is not rendered admissible against him by the fact that it would tend to contradict statements made by defendant's counsel in his opening statement to the jury.

(May 28, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kalamazoo County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover possession of certain cloaks which were alleged to have been procured from plaintiffs by fraud. Reversed.

Statement by Grant, J.:

A firm by the name of Livingston & Block was engaged in the dry goods and retail cloak business in the city of Kalamazoo. In the summer of 1893 plaintiffs sold to this firm cloaks of the value of $3,728.50 shipping the same in July or August. About August 29 the plaintiffs learned that Livingston & Block had purchased a much larger amount of goods than formerly, and that they had been shipping goods away. Munzer thereupon went to Kalamazoo, interviewed Livingston & Block, at first tried to obtain payment, although the purchase price was not due until January following, by informing Livingston & Block that they were in need of money and offering a large discount for cash payment, and falling in this charged them with shipping away goods, and demanded a return of at least a part of the goods which plaintiff had sold to them. Livingston & Block admitted to Munzer that they had shipped away goods, but none purchased of the plaintiffs, and there is no evidence that at that time they had done so. Livingston & Block refused to surrender any of the goods, and Munzer returned to Chicago, leaving the matter in charge of plaintiff's attorneys, Osborn and Mills. Mr. Mills shortly thereafter interviewed Livingston & Block, and testified that he informed them of plaintiff's claim, that they had purchased more goods than usual and had shipped goods away, and that Mr. Block denied having shipped away any goods. At the second interview Mr. Mills informed Livingston & Block that he was instructed to replevin the goods, and should do so at once unless a compromise was effected, whereupon a proposition was made which was submitted to plaintiffs by their attorneys, assented to by them, and, on September 2, 1893, incorporated into the following contract:

"Whereas, R. Munzer & Company, of Chicago, Illinois, has heretofore sold and shipped to Livingston & Block, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, two bills of cloaks, one amounting to $71 and one to $2,657.50, said bills being dated December 1, 1893, due in thirty days with 7 per cent discount if paid in ten days and six per cent discount if paid in thirty days; and whereas a misunderstanding has arisen between the parties in regard to said bills of cloaks; and whereas, it is desired by all parties to settle said differences amicably: Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed between the parties that said Livingston & Block shall return to said R. Munzer & Co. $1,600 worth of said cloaks, and that the same shall be received by R. Munzer & Co. in payment of said bills to that amount, and that said Livingston & Block shall keep the balance of said cloaks and shall pay for the same upon the terms of the original sale; that is to say, they shall pay for the same on January 1, 1894, and by so doing said Livingston & Block have a discount of 6 per cent, and if said Livingston & Block so desire they may pay for said cloaks on December 10, 1893, less a discount of 7 per cent. The cloaks that are to be reshipped to R. Munzer & Co. are to be shipped this day, and in consideration of the foregoing said R. Munzer & Co. are not to bother said Livingston & Block in the possession of the cloaks retained by them, or to bring suit for the recovery thereof, until the bill for the same becomes due, as herein agreed."

NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see Sisson v. Hill (R. L.) 21 L. R. A. 203, and note.
29 L. R. A.

Livingston & Block reshipped the goods according to this contract. On September 18, Livingston & Block executed a chattel mortgage on the entire stock to the defendant Stern as trustee, to secure certain alleged creditors, most of whom were relatives of either Livingston or Block. Between that date and the close of the month fifteen replevin suits were brought against Stern by the creditors of Livingston & Block to recover goods claimed to have been purchased fraudulently. Plaintiffs also brought this suit of replevin and recovered $649 worth of their goods out of $1,128.50. Verdict and judgment were for the plaintiffs.

Messrs. Howard & Roos and Bondeman & Adams, for plaintiff in error:

When no questions are asked, no false pretenses, no artifice resorted to, silence is not fraud.

Cobbey, Replevin, § 268; Norwich Union F. Ins. Soc. v. Gorton, 124 Ind. 217; Strobridge Lithographing Co. v. Randall, 78 Mich. 195; King v. Williams, 71 Iowa, 74; Morgan v. Joy, 121 Mo. 677; Ham v. Hamilton, 29 Ga. 40; Soule v. Holdridge, 17 Ind. 236; Adams v. Sage, 28 N. Y. 103; Horne Ins. Co. of New York v. Howard, 111 Ind. 544; Cates v. Bales, 78 Ind. 285.

A party cannot affirm and avoid a contract at the same time. If it is void for fraud, then it must be wholly void, and before plaintiffs can take the position that it is void they must deliver or tender back what they have received under it and place the other parties in the same position as they were before.

Town v. Waldo, 62 Vt. 118; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 268; Crippen v. Hope, 88 Mich. 344; Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co. 67 Mich. 688; Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Howard, and Cates v. Bales, supra; Merrill v. Wilson, 66 Mich. 243; Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40, 98 Am. Dec. 208; Dunks v. Fuller, 32 Mich. 242; Wylie v. Gamble, 95 Mich. 564.

29 L. R. A.

Messrs. Osborn, Mills & Master, for defendants in error:

The plaintiffs were not required to tender back to the defendant or Livingston & Block the goods they had received from Livingston & Block before commencing this suit.

Stevens v. Austin, 1 Met. 557; Pearse v. Pettis, 47 Barb. 276; Frost v. Lowry, 15 Ohio, 300.

Impossible and unreasonable things which do not tend to the accomplishment of equity in the particular transaction are not required, and when it appears that the value of the goods replevined does not exceed the goods to which the plaintiffs are entitled, no tender back before suit is essential.

Sloans v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 59; Schofield v. Shiffer, Id. 65.

In cases in which the judgment sought will substantially restore the party to the situation he was in when the agreement was made, no tender back before suit is required.

Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270, 25 L. R. A. 37; 1 Bigelow, Fr. 428; Smith v. Salomon, 7 Daly, 216; Pearse v. Pettis, supra.

Exceptional circumstances excuse a tender back upon rescission.

Smith v. Holyoke, 112 Mass. 517; Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 26; Smith v. Salomon, supra; Montgomery v. Pickering, 116 Mass. 237.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The defendant requested the court to direct a verdict for the defendant, for the reason that under the evidence the plaintiffs were fully advised of the circumstances and conditions surrounding the case, and entered into the compromise agreement with full knowledge of the facts. The court instructed the jury that the plaintiffs by this agreement waived every right to bring suit in replevin because of any claim on their part that the goods were fraudulently purchased, and that they could not repudiate the agreement unless they had shown that the plaintiffs or their agents were misled into making such agreement by reason of some fraud practiced by Livingston & Block; and that they must show that some active fraud was perpetrated to induce them to enter into said agreement.

We think the instruction was correct. If the jury believed the evidence on the part of the plaintiffs, which of course they did, they were justified in reaching the conclusion that this compromise agreement was not entered into in good faith by Livingston & Block; that they were then hopelessly insolvent; that they had purchased at a time when business was depressed, nearly five times the usual amount of their purchases; that they did this without intending to pay for them; that they themselves, without the knowledge of their clerks, secretly packed and shipped a large amount of goods to fictitious consignees, and that they sold goods at cost less a discount of from 10 to 18 per cent, and that some were shipped in the original packages. There was other evidence upon this point which it is unnecessary to state. These things were done within a few days after the receipt of the goods. Plaintiffs had the right to assume that this agreement was made with a view to the continuance of their business, whereas the evidence on plaintiff's part tends strongly to show that they had no such intention. There was evidence to sustain the finding, not only that they purchased these goods and others with intent to defraud, but also that they entered into this agreement with intent to retain the goods mentioned therein for the like purpose. In such case the plaintiffs were justified in rescinding the contract and re-taking the goods.

2. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to offer to return the goods obtained by the agreement before bringing replevin for the remainder. Such action would be an idle ceremony not required by the law. Neither does the law require a party to tender back or surrender that to which he is entitled. Defendants had paid nothing. Their purchase was fraudulent. Both the original purchase and the compromise agreement were tainted with fraud. By retaking the remainder of the goods the plaintiffs placed themselves in the situation in which they were before the perpetration of the fraud, and this was their clear legal right.

The general rule requiring the surrender, or offer to surrender, what has been received, upon the rescission of a contract voidable for fraud, is not one of universal application, and has many exceptions. It does not require unreasonable or impossible things to be done. Sloans v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 59-65; Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270, 25 L. R. A. 37; Pearce v. Pettis, 47 Barb. 276; Smith v. Salomon, 7 Daly, 316; Montgomery v. Pickering, 118 Mass. 227.

The rule has no application to the present case.

3. The only remaining question arises upon the admissibility of evidence. Mr.

Mills was permitted to testify to a conversation between himself, Mr. Munzer, and one Einstein, who represented a New York firm who had sold goods to Livingston & Block. Livingston & Block were not present, and, among other things, Mr. Mills testified to a statement made by Einstein of a conversation he had with a gentleman, whose name was not given, upon a street-car in New York, that he had sold Livingston & Block a large bill of goods, and that Mr. Einstein further said that he ascertained that they had purchased several thousand dollars more than they had gotten of him. It is attempted to support its admission upon the opening statement to the jury of counsel for defendant that they would show that Mr. Munzer was the sole cause of all the difficulty in which Livingston & Block were involved, and that he had written to various creditors for the express purpose of breaking up their business. It was furthermore insisted that this conversation was substantially told to Livingston & Block by Mr. Mills. The admission of the testimony cannot be justified under any rule of evidence. The opening statement of counsel did not make it competent. It was hearsay. Testimony is not admissible to rebut a statement made by counsel which there is no evidence to sustain. We do not find that the most damaging statements in this conversation were repeated to Livingston & Block by Mr. Mills. The record states that the defendant introduced evidence tending to controvert that given by the plaintiffs. We do not, therefore, feel at liberty to hold that this was error without prejudice.

For this reason judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Hooker, J., did not sit.

The other Justices concurred.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

Town of DELL RAPIDS, Appt.,

v.

Margaret IRVING, Resp't.

(.....S. Dak.)

*1. The provisions of section 1302, Comp. Laws, imposing upon township supervisors the duty of assessing the damages sustained by the owner of land by reason of the laying out, altering, or discontinuing of any road,—the right to an appeal and a jury trial being given to the party who feels aggrieved by any such determination or award of damages made by such supervisors (Comp. Laws, § 1324),—are not in conflict with the provisions of section 13, article 6, of the state Constitution, which reads as follows: "Private property shall not be taken for public use, or damaged, without just compensation as determined by a jury, which shall be paid as soon as it can be ascertained and before possession is taken."

2. The purpose of the provisions of the constitution evidently is to secure to a party whose property is taken or damaged for public use the right to a jury trial upon the question of damages, and that right is secured by giving to the party whose land is so taken or damaged the right to an appeal to a court in which such a jury trial may be had.

3. The term "municipal corporation," as used in chapter 94, Laws 1891, does not include townships organized under the laws of this state.

4. The term "other corporations" does not include townships organized under the laws of this state.

5. Chapter 94, Laws 1891, was designed to affect "municipal" and "other corporations" referred to in section 13, article 17, of the Constitution only, and has no application to quasi corporations organized under the laws

*Headnotes by CONSON, P. J.

NOTE.—In connection with the above case on the question as to the nature of a town as a municipal corporation, see also Floyd v. Perrin (S. C.) 2 L. R. A. 242, and Brownell v. Greenwich (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 685.

29 L. R. A.

of this state for political and governmental purposes.

(August 2, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Minnehaha County allowing damages to defendant in a proceeding to lay out a road over her property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry Robertson and Palmer, Preston & Rogde, for appellant;

If the provisions of chapter 112, Laws of 1883, were repealed by chapter 94 of Laws of 1891, then the circuit court was without jurisdiction, and could only dismiss the appeal, but could not render a judgment.

The provisions of chapter 94, Laws of 1891, were not intended to, and do not, apply to actions of township boards. Nor is any provision of the constitution in the way of township supervisors proceeding under chapter 112, Laws of 1883.

The judgment is against law.

Civil townships (quasi corporations only) are not embraced within any of the classes enumerated in section 1 of the Laws of 1891.

Messrs. R. W. Hobart and Bailey & Voorhees, for respondent;

The provisions of the territorial statute in regard to the awarding of damages by boards of supervisors is in conflict with the provisions of the constitution, and, even if they had been constitutional, they were repealed by the enactment of chapter 94, Laws of 1891.

Corsen, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment rendered by the circuit court in favor of the defendant upon an appeal from an order of the board of town supervisors of the town of Dell Rapids, laying out a highway over the land of the defendant. The appeal from the order to the circuit court seems to have been taken upon the ground that said board refused to assess any damages in favor of the defendant, and in her notice of appeal she claims $800 damages.

The appellant contends that the judgment of the circuit court is erroneous, in that it reverses and sets aside the proceedings of the board of supervisors when, under the theory of the case adopted by the court, a judgment dismissing the appeal, only, should have been entered; but as both parties seem to desire a decision upon the more important questions presented, namely, whether or not the provisions of the compiled laws relating to the subject of assessing damages in laying out town roads are in conflict with the state constitution, or have been repealed by chapter 94, Laws 1891, we express no opinion as to the form of the judgment.

When the case was called for trial in the circuit court the counsel for the defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence, "for the reason that the statute under which the proceedings in this action have been attempted to be had is in violation of the provisions of the constitution of the state of South Dakota, and especially in violation of the provisions of the bill of rights, and also in that the statute has been repealed by chapter 94 of the Laws of South Dakota of 1891." The motion was granted, and the court directed a verdict for the defendant.

Two questions are presented by the record for our determination: First. Are the provisions of the compiled laws relating to the assessment of damages in proceedings for laying out town roads in conflict with section 18, article 6, of the state Constitution? Second. Are the provisions relating to the assessment of damages contained in the compiled laws repealed by the provisions of chapter 94, Laws 1891?

Section 18, article 6, of the Constitution reads as follows: "Private property shall not be taken for public use, or damaged, without just compensation as determined by a jury, which shall be paid as soon as it can be ascertained and before possession is taken. No benefit which may accrue to the owners as the result of an improvement made by any private corporation shall be considered in fixing the compensation for property taken or damaged. The fee of land taken for railroad tracks or other highways shall remain in such owners, subject to the use for which it is taken." It is contended by the respondent, in support of the judgment of the circuit court, that by the terms of that section damages can only be assessed by a jury, and that the provisions of section 1802, Comp. Laws, providing for assessing damages, is in conflict with said section of the constitution. But we are of the opinion that there is no conflict between the provisions of the compiled laws and the provision of the constitution. The object of the constitutional provision evidently is to secure to parties whose property is taken for public use the right to a jury trial upon the question of damages. This we think is secured to them by providing for an appeal to the proper court in which a jury trial can be had. Comp. Laws, § 1824. If the parties agree upon the amount of damages to be awarded, or the party is satisfied with the amount awarded by the town supervisors, there would be no necessity for a jury trial. If, however, the parties cannot agree, or the party is dissatisfied with the award made by the supervisors, he can by an appeal secure a trial by a jury upon the question of damages. This right of an appeal and a jury trial carries into effect the constitutional provision. Hence we discover no conflict between the provisions of the statutes and the constitution.

We cannot agree with counsel for respondent that the damages must in all cases be assessed by a jury, and that no highway can be laid out over the land of a private party until the damages are assessed, notwithstanding the party may be satisfied with the amount awarded by the town board of supervisors, or be satisfied with the amount that the board may be willing to allow. To so hold would require a very strict construction of the constitutional provision, and would not, in our opinion, carry out the evident intention of the framers of that instrument, which seems to have been to secure to the party such right if he desired to avail himself of it. That such was the design of the constitution is quite evident from the subsequent section upon this subject under the title of "Corporations." Section 18, article 17, reads as follows: "Municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured or destroyed, by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements, which compensation shall be paid or secured before such taking, injury, or destruction. The legislature is hereby prohibited from depriving any person of an appeal from any preliminary assessment of damages against any such corporation or individuals made by viewers or otherwise, and the amount of such damages in all cases of appeal shall, on the demand of either party, be determined by a jury as in other civil cases." It will be observed that this section clearly contemplates that damages in the first instance may be assessed by "viewers or otherwise," as the legislature is "prohibited from depriving any person of an appeal from any preliminary assessment by viewers or otherwise." A constitution, like a statute, is to be read as one instrument, and all its provisions may be considered in ascertaining the intention of its framers as to any provisions it contains.

It is further contended by the respondent that, assuming the provisions of the compiled laws relating to the assessment of damages are constitutional, the provisions of chapter 94, Laws 1891, have in effect repealed the provisions relating to damages, and that all proceedings to assess the amount of damages must be had under the provisions of the latter act. But we are unable to agree with the counsel in this contention. The Act of 1891 seems to have been intended to carry into effect the provision of section 18, article 17, heretofore given. The first section of the Act of 1891, chapter 94, reads as follows: "In all cases when municipal or other corporations, or individuals, invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use or damaging the same in making, constructing, or repairing any work or improvement allowed by law, shall determine to exercise such privilege, it shall be the duty of such corporation or individual to file a petition in the circuit court of the county in which the property to be taken or damaged is situated, praying that the just compensation to be made for such property may be ascertained by a jury." As has before been stated, this section of the constitution is found in the article entitled "Corporations," and, as will be observed, it only applies to "municipal or other corporations" and individuals invested with the privilege of taking property for public use. Unless, therefore, towns organized under the laws of this state are included within the terms "municipal or other corporations," the Law of 1891 does not apply to them. Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, defines a municipal corporation as follows: "The incorporation by the authority of the government of the inhabitants of a particular place or district, and authorizing them, in their corporate capacity, to exercise subordinate specified powers of legislation and regulation with respect to their local and internal concerns. The power of local government is the distinguishing feature of municipal corporations proper, and is used with us in the strict and proper sense just mentioned." Dill. Mun. Corp. § 20. In the American & English Encyclopædia of Law a municipal corporation proper is thus defined: "A municipal corporation proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality of its people. The primary idea is an agency to regulate and administer the internal concerns of the locality in matters peculiar to the place incorporated and not common to the state or people at large. Cities and incorporated villages, either created by special charter or organized under a general act, are the principal examples of municipal corporations proper." Quasi corporations are thus defined: "Involuntary quasi corporations, such as counties, towns, and school districts, are created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large for the purposes of political organization and civil administration in matters of finance, of education, of provision for the poor, of military organization, of the means of travel and transportation, and for the general administration of justice. They are not bodies corporate and politic with the general power of corporations, but are mere political subdivisions of the state, having the powers expressly granted to them, and such implied powers as are necessary to enable them to perform their duties, and no more. They are denominated in the books, and known to the law, as quasi corporations rather than as corporations proper. They possess some corporate functions and attributes, but are primarily political subdivisions—agencies in the administration of civil government—and their corporate functions are granted to enable them more readily to perform their public duties." 15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 954, 955. From the numerous cases cited we select the following in which the subject is very fully discussed: Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 85; Fourth School-Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 193; Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 802; Bailey v. Lawrence County (S. Dak.) 59 N. W. Rep. 219; Heller v. Stremmel, 52 Mo. 309; State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 453.

We are of the opinion that the framers of our constitution intended, by the term "municipal corporations," to use it in its restricted sense, as applicable only to incorporated cities, towns, or villages invested with the power of local legislation. This is quite apparent from other sections of the constitution. Article 9, entitled "County and Township Organizations," requires the legislature to provide by general law for organizing the counties into townships but nowhere in that article are townships designated as municipal corporations. Article 10 is entitled "Municipal Corporations," and requires the legislature to pre-vide by general law for the organization and classification of municipal corporations, and provides that such classes shall not exceed four. This article seems to be limited to municipal corporations proper. In article 18 it is provided that "neither the state nor any county, township, or municipal'ty shall loan or give its credit," etc. It will be observed that the term "township" is here used in connection with the term "municipality," thus clearly indicating that, in the minds of the framers of the constitution, "municipality" did not include a township. The term "town" seems to be sometimes used in the constitution in a somewhat different sense, but, when so used, clearly indicates that the town referred to is an incorporated town. Thus, section 28, article 5, contains the following clause: "The legislature shall have power to provide for creating such police magistrates for cities and towns as may be deemed from time to time necessary, who shall have jurisdiction of all cases arising under the ordinances of such cities or towns." The use of the term "ordinances" clearly indicates a regularly incorporated town, as townships as organized under the laws of this state are not authorized to adopt ordinances. Section 778, Comp. Laws, provides that "whenever any incorporated village or town which is laid out into streets is included within the limits of any organized township," etc. It will be noticed that the legislature here makes a distinction between an incorporated town and an organized township, clearly indicating that a distinction is made by the legislature between an incorporated town and an organized township. At an early day the territorial legislature passed a law providing for the incorporation of towns. Comp. Laws, §§ 1022-1188, inclusive. By these provisions a board of trustees with power to enact ordinances was provided for. This law being in force when the constitution was adopted, we may fairly presume that when the framers of the constitution speak of towns, ordinances, etc., in connection with the term "incorporated towns, cities, and villages," they have reference to towns incorporated under the provisions of this law which are municipalities, and when they speak of organized towns or townships they refer to those towns which embrace a portion of the state organized into townships for political and governmental purposes. In Bailey v. Lawrence County (S. Dak.) 59 N. W. Rep. 219, the distinction between quasi corporations and municipal corporations was fully considered. In the case of Norton v. Peck, 3 Wis. 714, in construing a similar provision in the constitution of that state, the court held that, although towns were bodies corporate, they were not included in the term "municipal corporations." This decision was cited with approval by the same court in Eaton v. Manitowoc County Supra, 44 Wis. 429. In that case the court says: "Whether towns are 'municipal corporations,' in a strict legal sense, is a question which the lamented Chief Justice Whiton, in Norton v. Peck, 3 Wis. 714, says 'is not of easy solution;' but, in construing the meaning of this designation in the statute considered in that case, it was held that 'municipal corporations,' as used in the constitution of this state, do not embrace towns. Towns are often called, in common parlance, and sometimes unguardedly in statutes, 'municipal corporations,' in connection with counties, cities, and villages; but, when so called, it is in the sense of mere corporations or quasi corporations, or of corporations sub modo, only, and not in the sense of municipalities proper. These words, when used in our own statutes, must be received in their strict and constitutional sense, unless it was clearly the intention of the legislature, in a given statute, that they should have a more extended signification. No such intention seems to be apparent in the proviso of section 1, chapter 112, Laws 1887, in the use of the words 'counties or municipal corporations;' and this language should not be construed to embrace towns and school districts, but rather to exclude them." Van Antwerp v. Dell Rapids Twp. 3 S. Dak. 805; same case on rehearing, 59 N. W. Rep. 209. It will also be observed that section 1 of chapter 94 of the Laws of 1891, while it follows quite closely the language of the first clause of section 18, article 17, of the Constitution, has omitted the term "highways." This omission is significant, and seems to indicate an intention on the part of the legislature to exclude township highway proceedings from the provisions of the act. It will hardly be contended that, if towns are not included within the term "municipal corporations," they are included within the term "other corporations," as they are not strictly corporations in any sense but quasi corporations. There being nothing in the provisions of the Laws of 1891 requiring us to give an extended or enlarged meaning to the term "municipal corporation," we feel at liberty to give to it its restricted construction, and as applicable only to incorporated towns, cities, or villages invested with legislative powers for the benefit of its inhabitants. Giving to the term "municipal corporations" this construction, there would seem to be no conflict between the provisions of the compiled laws relating to the assessment of damages and the Laws of 1891. The court, in holding that the Laws of 1891 repealed the statutory provisions then existing upon the subject of laying out township highways and assessing damages for the property taken, was in error. As the proceedings, so far as the record discloses, seem to have been regular, and the appeal properly taken, the evidence relating to damages should have been admitted.

29 L. R. A.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and a new trial ordered.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the First Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1895, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARIES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

The constitutional right to acquire and possess property is held to preclude a statute imposing liability on a person for acts of others over whom he has no control, and this is applied to the Pennsylvania statute attempting to make a mine owner liable for negligence of a certified foreman whom the statute compels him to employ without the right to control him. (Pa.) 807.

Constitutional rights of persons are held to be infringed by a statute prohibiting the employment of females in factories or workshops more than eight hours per day or forty-eight hours per week. (Ill.) 79.

The statutory attempts to restrict contracts between master and servant are increased by a Missouri statute making it unlawful to impose, as a condition of employment, that employes should not belong to labor unions. (Mo.) 257.

A statute allowing attorneys' fees in an action for wages, if not paid within three days after demand in writing, is condemned as an unconstitutional denial of the equal protection of the laws to the class of citizens who would be defendants in such cases. (Ohio) 836.

Health.

A resolution of a state board of health that no pigpen shall be built within 100 feet of any street or inhabited house is held unreasonable and invalid. (Vt.) 578.

Destruction of bedding used by a person who had scarlet fever is held to be within the lawful authority of sanitary inspectors, and to give the owner no right to compensation. (Ga.) 808.

Vaccination.

The constitutionality of a statute requiring vaccination of pupils as a condition of attendance on public schools is sustained in a Connecticut case. (Conn.) 251.

Eminent domain.

Condemnation of land for irrigating ditches is held to be for a public purpose. (Neb.) 558.

Interstate commerce.

The validity of a statute requiring fire screens on vessels burning wood is sustained against the objections that it interferes with interstate commerce and imposes an unreasonable burden. (Mich.) 468.

See also Licenses; Taxation, infra.

Licenses.

A state statute requiring a license to sell patent rights is held to be a clear infringement of the rights of the patentee under federal law. (Ky.) 786.

Requiring a license fee of transient merchants is held not to discriminate against non-residents, but a charge of $250 per month, or $25 per day for shorter periods, is held to be excessive, amounting to a tax rather than an exercise of police power. (Iowa) 734.

An attempt to impose a municipal license tax on the right to operate a branch railroad in a city, where such road was part of an interstate line, is held to be a tax on interstate commerce as much as if the main line, and not the branch, was in question. (Cal.) 827.

An ordinance requiring a license to hawk and peddle is sustained in case of one selling and delivering chairs from house to house, although the chairs had been imported into the state and the title remained in the nonresident owner on conditional sales by the peddler. (Ind.) 531.

A license fee imposed by a city on street cars is held enforceable by penalty. (Colo.) 606.

Taxation.

A school is denied to be a purely public charity, so as to be free from taxation, where tuition is paid for all pupils, and the manager conducts it as a business enterprise, paying one eighth of the gross receipts from tuition for the use of the property, although the corporation out of other funds pays the tuition for a few pupils. (Pa.) 600.

Exemption of public property does not extend to private property leased for a public market. (Minn.) 777.

The exemption of property from taxation is held to be beyond the power of a town in the absence of constitutional legislative authority, but an omission of property by mistake of law is held not to defeat the assessment. (R. I.) 526.

The power of a city to tax the franchise of a bridge company whose bridge spans a river between states is sustained, although the company has privileges granted it by the adjoining state and by congress; and such a tax does not interfere with interstate commerce. (Ky.) 78.

Taxation in the town in which the land lies, of land under water of a dam, is sustained according to the enhanced value for furnishing power, although the power is used in another town. (N. H.) 57.

The meaning of the word "railroad" is held to extend to a street railroad, as used in a Florida statute providing for sales of railroad property for taxes. The question is regarded as one depending entirely on the text and general intent of the statute. (Fla.) 507.

The doctrine that debts due from a foreign corporation cannot be deducted from the amount of its investments to be taxed is limited in a New York case by holding that the unpaid part of the purchase money for property bought in the state is to be deducted in determining the sums invested there. (N. Y.) 398.

A railroad bridge used exclusively for railroad purposes, and leased forever to a railroad company, subject to the termination of the lease for default, is not assessable as railroad property when owned by a bridge company. (Ill.) 69.

Real estate of a partner is held subject to the lien of a tax on the personal property of the partnership. (Iowa) 278.

Local assessments.

A sale of a railroad freight-house and a portion of its track and right of way, although at the terminus, is held to be invalid as a mode of collecting a local assessment. (Mich.) 195.

Officers.

The certificate of eligibility to the office of county court clerk, required by the Kentucky constitution, is held to be sufficient when obtained after election but before the term of office begins. (Ky.) 708.

The contention that appointment to office is a function essentially executive is held to be contrary to the positive terms of the Indiana constitution giving the legislative assembly control of the appointment of some officers; and the joining of state auditor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney-general with the governor as a board to choose prison directors, is held valid under a provision making the executive department include the administrative. (Ind.) 118.

Elections.

The constitutionality of a statute requiring official ballots is sustained in Massachusetts, although it makes such ballots compulsory in city elections, but optional in town elections. (Mass.) 668.

The Michigan ballot law, allowing a candidate to have his name appear on the official ballot but once, although he may be nominated on different party tickets, is held constitutional notwithstanding the fact that voters of one party, unlike those of another, may be compelled to mark the ballot more than once in order to vote for all their candidates, and be unable to have all their candidates on their own ticket. (Mich.) 880.

29 L. R. A.

A blurred spot or erasure on a ballot, innocently made with intent to correct a mistake, is held not to defeat the vote, but it is otherwise with a blurred spot made for the purpose of identifying the ballot. (Nev.) 781.

Various marks to distinguish ballots are considered in a California case, which also holds that the election is invalidated by the violation of the statute in respect to the time of opening the polls and the removal of the ballot box from them. (Cal.) 678.

Lack of an official stamp upon ballots, or lack of an initial which an election officer should have placed upon them, is held not to defeat the counting of such ballots after they have been cast in good faith. (Wash.) 670.

Counties.

The relation of counties to municipalities therein in respect to the use of county funds is touched upon in a Florida case, which holds that a statute providing that one half the funds raised by county taxes for highways and bridges shall be turned over to municipal authorities for city streets is not unconstitutional as diverting the funds from county purposes. (Fla.) 416.

Municipalities.

The right to contest the validity of annexation to a city is denied in a suit for injunction against taxes, on the ground of acquiescence, as well as the inability to raise that question in a private action. (Wash.) 445.

The attempt of the mayor to adjourn one of the branches of the general council of the city when they cannot agree on an adjournment is held invalid. (Ky.) 110.

The attempt by an ordinance to limit the price of gas to private consumers is held invalid in the absence of legislative authority, at least where this was not imposed as a condition of consent to the use of streets. (Kan.) 898.

The right of a city to shut off water from a consumer to coerce payment of an old claim is denied after the acceptance of rates and the furnishing of water for a later period. (Me.) 376.

The invalidity of a contract between a city and a corporation in which any city officer is interested is held not to defeat the liability of the city for gas furnished by a company of which the mayor was president, where this was not done under a contract, but the company was compelled by law to furnish it. (Cal.) 463.

The constitutional prohibition against donations by municipal corporations to private corporations is applied to defeat a statute giving to certain charities a portion of the fees received from licenses. (Ill.) 798.

The right of a municipality to make its bonds payable in gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness is denied under a statute providing for payment in gold coin or lawful money of the United States. (Cal.) 512.

Highways.

A very clear statement of the law respecting the proper use of streets and rights of abutting owners is found in an Oregon case, which denies that an approach to a bridge of a private corporation can be made, to the damage of an abutting owner, without compensation. (Or.) 86.

Vacating a portion of a city thoroughfare across railroad tracks, and erecting a viaduct on one side of the location so as to shut off land cornering on the vacated portion from access, so far as to destroy its former availability for business purposes, are held to give the owner a right to damages. (Ill.) 568.

A city ordinance exacting rent from a telegraph company for the use of the streets for poles and wires is held invalid where the statutes authorized telegraph lines without any provision for making compensation to cities. (Miss.) 770.

A novel statute making the driver of live stock over a highway on a hillside liable for damage to the banks or by rolling rocks into the highway is upheld as constitutional. (Utah) 97.

A constitutional provision against poll taxes is held in Maryland not to apply to compulsory work in repairing highways, with a privilege of commuting or furnishing a substitute. (Md.) 404.

The use of a bicycle on a sidewalk along a turnpike is held to be subject to the penalty of the Pennsylvania act against riding or driving a horse or other animal on a sidewalk, when construed with the Act of April 23, 1889, extending the same privileges and restrictions to the use of the bicycle as are prescribed for persons using carriages drawn by horses. (Pa.) 365.

Railway crossings.

A street railway track in a highway, which is laid across a railroad crossing, is held to be a part of the public use of the street for which the railroad company cannot claim compensation. (Ill.) 485.

The right to make a grade crossing at the intersection of a street railway and a steam railroad is sustained under a special statute, notwithstanding general statutes to a different effect. (Conn.) 867.

State boundary.

A shallow lake having no current at ordinary stages of the water, but connected with the Mississippi river, is held not to be a part of the boundary of Iowa so as to be excluded from the operation of the state against the use of seines in the waters of the state. (Iowa) 390.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The fact that a contract made by letters and telegrams was intended to be put into a formal writing is held not to prevent the contract from being completed without such writing. (N.Y.) 481.

A city is held liable for the paving of a street when assessments prove invalid, although the paving was done under a contract which required the contractor to accept the assessments in payment, whether they were collectible or not. (C. C. App. 3d C.) 401.

Validity of contracts.

A contract for the purchase of property, made by a city through an officer who receives a commission from the other party, is held invalid and subject to repudiation by the city on discovering the facts. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 188.

See also supra, I. Municipalities, and infra, III.

A stipulation against liability for negligence is sustained in a lease by a railroad company providing that the lessor shall not be liable for any damages caused by fire. Such an agreement is held not to be void as against public policy. (Cal.) 751.

A similar provision in such a lease is held in another case to be ineffectual as against an agent of the lessee whose property was on the premises, where he was a stranger to the lease. (Cal.) 755.

Failure to obtain a license is held not to prevent a broker from recovering commissions, where the ordinance requiring a license imposes a penalty for such failure, and the object of it is simply to enforce payment of a tax. (S. C.) 315.

A contract by the owners of mines, furnaces, and a railroad therefrom, to give all their traffic to a connecting railroad which had aided in developing the business, is sustained in a 29 L. R. A.

Pennsylvania case, against the contention that it was in violation of the constitution of the state, and that it was ultra vires. (Pa.) 428.

The invalidity of an agreement for a divorce is held not to defeat the recovery by the wife of the consideration of a contract for release of her dower rights, which she has performed, and after which she has resumed marital relations with her husband, although the agreements were contemporaneous. (Pa.) 292.

Negotiable paper.

Corporate bonds secured by mortgage payable to bearer are held to be negotiable so far as to sustain an action by the holder in his own name, although the statute as to negotiable paper applies in terms only to promissory notes. (R. I.) 108.

Refusing to adopt the doctrine of other courts, the court of appeals of Kentucky adheres to the doctrine that a subsequent promise without consideration will not prevent the release of the indorser for lack of notice. (Ky.) 805.

A payee's guaranty of attorneys' fees if the note has to be collected by law is sustained so as to bind him for such fees in case of the dishonor of the note and the expenditure of the fees. (Ga.) 616.

Writing one's name on the back of a note to which he is not a party is held in Minnesota to be open to explanation by parol evidence, but, when done in accordance with a parol contract of guaranty, to be sufficient to justify writing a guaranty over the name, and thus satisfy the statute of frauds. (Minn.) 612.

Bona fide holders of a negotiable note are held unaffected by usury in the note, where the statute declares that usurious contracts shall be deemed to "be for an illegal consideration." (Va.) 827.

Taking interest in advance on a negotiable note at the highest rate allowed by the constitution is held not to constitute usury, although the note is running for one year. (Ark.) 761.

Banks.

The doctrine that a bank to which paper is sent by another bank, with which it is deposited for collection, will be regarded as the agent of the owner, and not of the sending bank, is applied to a case in which worthless drafts were received and credited as proceeds of the collection before knowledge of the insolvency of the drawer of them. This was held to leave the depositor still liable for the loss. (Ill.) 794.

Insurance.

Insurance on a butcher shop and contents, and a smoke-house and contents, is held to cover smoked meats in a storage room to which they are taken from the smoke-house as fast as cured. (Pa.) 55.

Insurance on a building with personal property therein is held not to be forfeited as to personal property by lack of title to the real property, which defeats the insurance as to that. (Tex.) 706.

Carriers.

A ticket bearing a prior date is not invalid on the day of sale because it states that it is good only within one day of date of sale. (Iowa) 178.

The relation of carrier and passenger is held not to exist between a street railway company and a person struck by the sudden switching of a street car which he had signaled and was waiting for. (Conn.) 297.

Assuming mortgage.

Personal liability of a purchaser of land for a mortgage upon it which he assumes and agrees to pay is sustained in a Nebraska case, although the grantor may not have been liable on the mortgage. (Neb.) 851.

Hotel.

The responsibility of a hotel keeper to a regular boarder, as distinguished from a transient guest, is shown in a decision denying liability for the theft by a night clerk of money from the hotel safe. (Mich.) 92.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Forfeiture of the charter of a waterworks company is enforced on account of its failure to supply to a city pure, wholesome, deep-well water in accordance with the requirements of its charter. (Ala.) 743.

The duty of a railroad company to operate a ferry which has become unprofitable, but which constitutes an extension of its road, is held to be enforceable by suit in court. (Mass.) 169.

Officers of a corporation are compelled to account for salaries voted and paid, where it was done largely for the purpose of depriving the stockholders of the results of litigation brought by them if successful, although it was nominally and partly to pay for services rendered. (R. I.) 100.

Preferences to directors of a corporation are sustained in a Missouri case, when their debts were honestly and justly due. As to this see note, 23 L. R. A. 802. (Mo.) 830.

An agreement between corporations to co-operate in furnishing water to a city is sustained, although they appointed an officer of each as trustee to carry on the business. (Cal.) 839.

See also supra, II., Validity of contracts.

Promoters.

Promoters of a corporation are discussed at much length in a case which denies the enforcement of a mortgage received by them on the property of a corporation. (Md.) 282.

Fraud of promoters in inducing a person to subscribe to a corporation, where he has carried out his contract and united with others in forming the corporation, is held to be no defense to an assessment on the stock, but to give a remedy only against the wrongdoers. (Mich.) 63.

Proxies.

A by-law restricting proxies to stockholders is held invalid where a statute provides generally for proxies. (Cal.) 844.

De facto.

Failure to comply with the statutory requirements of L. R. A.

quirement expressly made a condition of corporate existence is held to prevent a company from being a de facto corporation, but it leaves it the privileges as well as liabilities of a partnership. (Colo.) 143.

Foreign company.

Contrary to many other authorities, it is held in Arkansas that an unauthorized foreign insurance company, though guilty of a misdemeanor in issuing a policy and subject to a penalty therefor, may enforce its claim for a premium due under the contract. (Ark.) 712.

Public corporations.

A state university is held to be a corporation subject to quo warranto, and an invalid attempt to charge a library fee for the use of the library by students is defeated by such writ. (Kan.) 378.

The claim that a state agricultural society was a public corporation, such that it could not be held liable for negligence in the management of a horse race whereby a person was injured, is denied, although it was required to report to the state and received state aid. (Minn.) 708.

Building and loan associations.

The powers of a building and loan association under the Indiana statutes are held to include assessments to equalize the members at the winding up of the association. (Ind.) 177.

A forfeiture of the stock of a member of a building and loan association is held lawful, although it leaves a mortgage given by him in force for the full amount of principal and interest, without deduction of any payments made by him on his stock. (Ala.) 120.

But the claim that membership in a building and loan association and the loan to a member are distinct contracts, and that the stock of a member and payments made thereon may be forfeited without applying any previous payment on the mortgage when that is foreclosed, is denied in a case which holds that a rigid provision of the contract allowing forfeiture of stock on default will not be given this effect. (Neb.) 188.

(DOMESTIC RELATIONS. FIDUCIARIES. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.)

Monthly payments of shares of stock in a building and loan association are held in a South Carolina case to be applicable to a mortgage given for a loan, where the shares were pledged as collateral and the interest and dues consolidated. (S. C.) 127.

A mortgage given to a building association, containing a stipulation for payment of assessments on the members, is held to cover assessments for shortages in the assets after the appointment of a receiver. (Ohio) 184.

Labor union.

A statute protecting a labor union in the use of its labels is sustained in case of a label on cigars. (Mo.) 200.

Church.

The constitutional law of a church organization is extensively discussed in a case which involves the split of the Evangelical Association. It is held, among other things, that the secession of the majority leaves the minority as the rightful church, but that less than a quorum of an annual conference cannot take any action which will be binding on the absent majority, even after subsequent ratification by the highest tribunal of the denomination. (Pa.) 476.

Partnership.

The assumption of individual debts by a partnership is held to convert them into firm debts, which may share equally with other firm debts in case of dissolution. (Mo.) 681.

An agreement by one member of a law firm in a private transaction to collect a chose in action without charge is held not binding on his partner so as to make the property of the latter liable to attachment for the failure of the other to pay over the money collected. (Ga.) 496.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

A divorced wife is denied the right to recover from her former husband for necessities furnished their children in her custody under the divorce decree, which made no order for their maintenance. (Or.) 678.

The right of action for alienation of a husband's affections and depriving the wife of his society is sustained in Iowa. (Iowa) 150.

V. FIDUCIARIES.

Compound interest is charged upon an executor for money of the estate which he had used, in a case which extensively reviews the question. (Mont.) 623.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Fraud.

The rule that a misrepresentation honestly made with reason to believe it true will not create a liability for fraud is applied to a case in which the president of the corporation omits from a statement of its assets and liabilities any mention of a claim then in litigation, which he did not believe to be valid. (N. Y.) 860.

Libel.

Falsely publishing that a person would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay is held to be libelous. (Md.) 59.

A pleading is held libelous when defamatory allegations therein are wholly irrelevant, gratuitous, and immaterial. (Minn.) 158.

Wrongs to or by passengers.

An accidental blow by a railroad employé, received by a passenger but which was aimed in play at another employé, is held not to make the railroad company liable, as it was not within the line of employment. (Ala.) 729.

Theft by a sleeping-car employé of the property of a passenger in a sleeping car, including such money as she had a right to carry, is held to make the sleeping-car company liable. (Ga.) 498.

The liability of a carrier for illegal arrest of a passenger, which a conductor causes to be made, is sustained where the arrest was made without a warrant while the passenger was quietly seated in a car. (Kan.) 465.

29 L. R. A.

Profanity of a passenger on a street car is held to justify his ejection therefrom. (Me.) 580.

Negligence.

Licenseses walking on a path upon a railroad right of way are denied a remedy against the railroad company for injuries caused by the sliding of the bank on which the path ran, in consequence of the removal of a boulder which was in danger of falling upon the track. (Va.) 825.

The negligence of a child nine years old in climbing over the coupling of a car when a train is standing at a crossing is held to be a question for the jury, together with the question of negligence on the part of the trainmen in starting the train. (Ohio) 757.

Negligence of a bandman walking close to an electric railway track while playing his instrument is held to be a question for the jury, like the question of the motorman's negligence when the bandman is struck by a car. (Mich.) 287.

The duty of a railroad company to signal the approach of a train at a crossing is held not to extend to a private crossing, or to persons driving parallel to the railroad without using or intending to use a crossing. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 695.

Negligence of master or servant.

A railroad company which requires employés to be engaged on duty nineteen hours per day without time for food is held responsible for an accident by the backing of a train insufficiently manned while part of the crew were temporarily absent for food. (Ind.) 104.

The law of fellow servants is discussed at length in a case which denies that a foreman or boss of a railroad gang is an alter ego whether he has authority to discharge the men or not. (Mich.) 321.

The doctrine of fellow servants is discussed in a Nebraska case, which holds that consociation in the same department or line of employment is necessary to that relation. (Neb.) 137.

A cable street railway is held not to be a railroad within the meaning of a statute abolishing the fellow-servant doctrine in case of railroads. (Minn.) 208.

Explosion of gas.

Liability for an explosion of natural gas during transportation is held under the Ohio statute to be independent of the question of negligence. (Ohio) 337.

Negligence in conducting natural gas through leaking pipes on the surface of the ground and across a highway is found in a case where the chief contention was as to contributory negligence. (Ind.) 343.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.

See also supra, I., Health; Highways.

The value of permanent improvements and repairs made by a coparcener, although he cannot compel contribution therefor, may be allowed him out of the proceeds of the property when sold for a division of interests because it was unsusceptible of partition. (W. Va.) 449.

Permitting another person to have his name and occupation painted on a wagon in his possession is held to estop the owner to assert title as against an innocent purchaser from the possessor. (Pa.) 607.

Assigning forged copy of mortgage.

An assignee of a mortgage and indorsee of forged copies of notes secured thereby is held not to have so good a title to the mortgage as a subsequent assignee of a forged copy of the mortgage who was a bona fide purchaser of the genuine notes before their maturity. (Ohio) 317.

Records.

Failure to index a mortgage on the records is held not to be fatal to its validity, in the absence of any statute making the indexing a part of the recording. (S. C.) 772.

Quitclaim deed; notice.

The effect of possession as notice is involved in some degree in a case where a woman in possession under an unrecorded deed giving her only a life estate concealed and afterwards destroyed the deed, and gave her vendee a later quitclaim deed from the person holding the record title. The latter is held to be protected by the records. (Mo.) 39.

The effect of a quitclaim deed to sustain the claim of a bona fide purchaser is discussed in differing opinions in a case in which the grantee was charged with notice by reason of his relations to the grantor, who had acted as his agent. (S. Dak.) 33.

Inheritance.

Descent of property to an heir who killed his ancestor to obtain the inheritance is permitted in Pennsylvania. One consideration is the constitutional provision against attainder. (Pa.) 145.

That half-blood brothers and sisters are included in the general words "brothers and sisters" is held in an Indiana case, which also supports the right of descendants of such of them as are deceased to take by representation. (Ind.) 541.

39 L. R. A.

Trust.

Funds in the hands of a receiver of a consignee are held not chargeable with a trust on account of goods, where the consignee dissipated the proceeds of the goods sent in paying current expenses of the business. (Or.) 664.

Tenancy.

The occupancy of part of a schoolhouse by a teacher is held to be that of an employé rather than a tenant, but his holding over without right is held to make him a tenant at sufferance. (Mich.) 576.

Easement.

An implied easement of light is held not to arise on the purchase of a strip of land 40 feet wide on which a building stands 11 feet from the boundary. (Conn.) 582.

An unusual instance of an easement by prescription is found in a Massachusetts case, which holds that the liability of a servient estate to pay a portion of the expense of repairs to a dam which supplies its water power is established by long-continued and regular payment of such contributions. (Mass.) 500.

Lien.

Funds in the hands of a receiver of a bank are held not to be chargeable with an equitable lien in favor of a depositor of money for a special purpose, where the bank was permitted to use the money in the course of regular business. (Or.) 667.

The lien of a judgment for damages under the Illinois dramshop act is held inferior to that of a pre-existing mortgage on the premises. (Ill.) 571.

The lien of a judgment against a railroad company is held to be unaffected by foreclosure to which the judgment creditor is not made a party, but when judgments were obtained pending foreclosure they are held to be subject thereto on the ground that the pendency of the suit is constructive notice. (Ohio) 458.

Tradename.

The use of the letters "U. S." on the windows of a dental office, in connection with the words "dental rooms," is held to be unlawful, when another person has adopted them as a tradename, and the attempt is to mislead the public. (R. I.) 524.

Boundary.

The low-water mark bounding land on a navigable lake is held to be the ordinary low-water mark, and not the point to which the water recedes in an exceptionally dry season. (Vt.) 589.

See also supra, I., State boundary.

The boundary of premises described by metes and bounds, which is identical with the line of navigability of water on which they front, is held to extend to the middle of the stream where the grantor was the owner to that extent. (Ohio) 52.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

An order to restore and operate a passenger train that had been discontinued, made by the Kansas railroad commissioners, is held not final or conclusive, and mandamus to enforce it is denied. (Kan.) 444.

Jury.

An appeal with a right to a jury trial in the proper court is held to be a sufficient compliance with the constitutional right to a jury in a condemnation proceeding. (S. Dak.) 861.

Injunction.

An injunction against slander of title to property is denied in a Florida case, which declares it to be well settled that such relief cannot be granted; but see 16 L. R. A. 242, note. (Fla.) 66.

Choice of remedy.

Enforcement of a chattel mortgage upon exempt property is held not to be defeated by a prior judgment for the mortgage debt, with an attempt to enforce it by levy upon the exempt property. (Ill.) 803.

Action by shipper.

A shipper of goods subject to payment of a draft against the bill of lading, who guarantees payment of freight, is held entitled to sue the carrier for damages to the goods, although when first notified of the injury he refused to give directions as to their disposition on the ground that he no longer had title, where the carrier had not been prejudiced thereby. (Va.) 578.

Action for nuisance.

The doctrine that a private action cannot be maintained for a purely public nuisance is limited, in case of the obstruction of navigation, by a decision that a grievance which is not common to the whole public may sustain such an action, although it is a common misfortune of a number or even of a class of persons. (N. C.) 700.

Rescission.

Tendering back what was obtained on a compromise where goods had been purchased by fraud is held not necessary to justify a rescission of the compromise and a retaking of the goods. (Mich.) 859.

Nonresidents.

The right of nonresidents to enforce their claims is held the same as that of citizens of the state, under the Tennessee statutes, provided that the nonresidents have exhausted their remedies in their own state. (Tenn.) 164.

A nonresident's shares of stock in a foreign corporation are held not subject to attachment, although the corporation does business and has officers in the state. (R. I.) 429.

Judgment.

A distinction between the effect of a judgment for a special assessment as against the property, and as against the owner, is sharply 39 L. R. A.

made in a case holding that such judgment does not preclude the owner, who did not appear or defend, from bringing an action for damages to the property in making the improvement on which the assessment was based. (Minn.) 778.

A judgment of another state, made payable in United States gold coin, is enforced as for the nominal amount in lawful money, in a case in which it is declared upon without describing the clause as to payment in coin. Such a judgment is held to be an obligation to pay in money, or an amount of gold ascertainable by count of coins. (Ill.) 598.

As to attorneys' liens and right to set off judgments, it is held, reviewing conflicting decisions, that the more equitable rule is to make the set-off of independent judgments subject to such liens. (Tenn.) 705.

Levy on railroad.

The enforcement of a judgment against a railroad company by levy on a portion only of its property is denied in a Minnesota case as against mortgagees of the whole property, on the ground that the remedy of creditors must be by proceeding against the property as an entirety. (Minn.) 212.

Priority of state.

A state or municipality is denied any right to priority or preference in payment from an insolvent's estate after a general assignment for creditors passing title to the property. (Wyo.) 226.

Notice by mail.

The constitutional guaranty of due process of law is held to be complied with in a scire facias to revive a judgment by notice to a resident of the state, who cannot be found, served by mail as well as by publication. (Ill.) 782.

Limitation of actions.

Garnishment of funds in the hands of a resident to enforce the claim of one nonresident against another is held within a provision that the statute of limitations shall not aid a person absent from the state when the cause of action accrues, so long as the absence continues. (Md.) 273.

Pleading.

The sufficiency of a pleading charging negligence in allowing natural gas to escape, from which an explosion resulted, is denied, where no agency causing the explosion is alleged on the part of the defendant. (Ind.) 855.

Evidence.

A receipt is held to be only a hearsay declaration and inadmissible as against strangers, on the question of the payment of money. (Neb.) 737.

Presumptions.

Setting a house on fire by sparks from a fire pot placed on the roof by workmen raises a presumption of their negligence. (Pa.) 254.

The maxim res ipsa loquitur is denied application against the person conducting a public exhibition of horse racing, in case of an injury to a spectator by a runaway horse. (Ill.) 492.

A presumption of negligence is held to arise from an unexplained explosion in a nitro-glycerine factory, and the subject of presumptions as to accidents is fully reviewed in the case. (Cal.) 718.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

The nature of ex post facto laws is examined very fully in a case which holds that a statute is not ex post facto because it abrogates a provision for change of magistrate or place of examination on account of the prejudice of the magistrate. (Wyo.) 884.

The constitutional provisions against making one a witness against himself in a criminal action, and against searches and seizures, are held not applicable to an examination of a person to compel discovery of assets of a decedent's estate. (Cal.) 811.

The right to place a gun where it will be discharged and kill any person attempting to force open the door of a building is held, on a review of the conflicting doctrines, to be a question for the jury. (Wash.) 154.

Without denying the doctrine that grossly obscene publications may be omitted from an indictment, it is held that where only parts of a book are indecent these must be so described as to be capable of identification, unless they are set out according to their tenor. (Mass.) 61.

After suspension of sentence, the power of the court over the accused is not lost by ordering him to pay costs or committing him for refusal to do so, since the requirement to pay costs is not part of his sentence. (N. C.) 260.

Proof of guilty knowledge is held necessary to convict a person for having cigars for sale with counterfeit trade union labels on them. (Mo.) 200.

A common carrier receiving twelve barrels of lobsters for shipment is held not punishable for having short lobsters in possession, where there was no intent to violate the statute. (Me.) 714.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Bailment; conversion of coin by bailee, see CONTRACTS.

Liability of bailee for wrongful appropriation by his servant of thing bailed; in general; where servant has no duty in respect to thing bailed; where servant's duties give him some control of thing bailed; goods not in possession of master; effect of statute; ratification; special contract 98

Bridges. See TAXES.

Building and loan associations; right to apply payments made on stock in a building and loan association upon a mortgage given for a loan by the same member; associations not protected by law; payments not pro facto a reduction of the mortgage; right of third persons to require the application: (a) surety for borrower; (b) purchaser at sheriff's sale; (c) creditors or assignees; (d) second mortgagees; associations on the terminating plan; rule under changed conception of loan association; right to a credit of profits; forfeiture; insolvency or abandonment of scheme; change of rules; right of third person to resist application; effect of special agreement 120

Liability of advanced member of building and loan association to assessment for losses;—decisions proceeding on the partnership theory; the original loan association theory; effect of rules or provisions in mortgage; change of rules; liability as members after release of mortgage; statutory provisions 177

Cigar Makers' Union. See TRADE-MARKS.

Coin. See JUDGMENT.

Constitutional law. See also POLL TAXES.

Due process in seizure and production of papers 819

Contracts; sufficiency of contract by offer and acceptance without execution of contemplated formal instrument;—general statements of the law; suggestion of formal contract; understanding that there is to be a formal contract; where some terms unsettled; where the execution of a formal contract is one of the terms of the agreement; agreement to execute formal contract may be binding; where it appears that the contract when finished should be a formal one; failure to execute draft of contract; estoppel; illustrations of proposals for formal contract; intention to have formal contract as evidence 481

Special contracts and obligations to make payment in gold or silver;—(I.) before legal tender act; (II.) application of legal tender act to specific contracts for coin: (a) decisions before Bronson v. Rodes: (1) denying effect to such contracts; (2) supporting such contracts; (3) in equity cases; (4) effect of state statutes; (b) doctrine of Bronson v. Rodes and later cases: (1) federal cases; (2) state decisions generally; (3) alternative provisions; coin or equivalent; (4) municipal and state contracts; (III.) implied contracts or obligations imposed by law: (a) in general; (b) bailment and conversion of coin; (c) bank deposits; (d) accounting for trusts; (e) other actions for damages 812

Corporations. See also STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Right to vote by proxy in private corporations;—(I.) at common law; (II.) under statutes and by-laws: (a) statutes; (b) by-laws; (III.) form of proxy; (IV.) when and for what purpose a proxy may be used; (V.) rejection of proxy by inspectors; (VI.) revocation of proxy; (VII.) directors voting by proxy; (VIII.) miscellaneous matters 844

Costs; as to payment in coin 808

Criminal law; constitutional protection against being forced to furnish evidence to be used against one's self in a civil case: (I.) provisions against self-accusation: (a) limitation to criminal proceedings; (b) application to proceedings for penalties and forfeitures; (c) general doctrine as to evidence against one's self; (d) the contrary doctrine; (e) parties in interest; (II.) unreasonable searches and seizures; (III.) right of trial by jury; (IV.) due process of law; (V.) distinction between civil and criminal or penal proceedings 811

Crimination of self. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Descent and distribution; among kindred of the half blood:—(I.) the common-law doctrine; (II.) in the United States; (III.) meaning of the words: (a) in general; (b) ancestor; (c) blood; (d) brothers and sisters; (IV.) no distinction between the whole and half blood; (V.) in the case of ancestral estates; (VI.) when the statute not express; (VII.) cases wherein the whole blood is preferred; (VIII.) when half blood preferred to remote relative of the whole blood; (IX.) when half blood take half portions; (X.) shifting descents; (XI.) equitable conversion 841

Discovery; as affected by constitutional provision against self-crimination 811

Dynamite. See EXPLOSION.

Eminent domain; right of a railroad company to compensation for laying street railway across railroad track on a street crossing 486

Evidence. See also CRIMINAL LAW.
 Burden of proof and evidence generally in respect to negligence in escape and explosion of gas 848
 Receipt as evidence of payment as against third parties:—(I.) ordinary receipts: (a) not admissible; (b) admissible; (II.) receipts in deeds 787

Executors; liability of, for compound interest 622

Explosion; liability for explosion of gas 887
 Negligence in the manufacture and storage of gun-powder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, and other explosives:—(I.) general doctrine; (II.) the effect of city ordinances; (III.) negligence in the manufacture; (IV.) negligence in the storage 718

Forfeiture; of payments to loan association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.
 Compulsory evidence against one's self in case of 813

Gas; liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas:—(I.) general doctrine governing such actions; (II.) legislative and municipal control; (III.) evidence: (a) in general; (b) burden of proof; (c) expert testimony; (d) sufficient to establish negligence; (e) insufficient to establish negligence; (IV.) contributory negligence; (V.) questions for and instructions to the jury; (VI.) effect of contributing causes; (VII.) effect of negligence of third persons; (VIII.) act of fellow servant; (IX.) the question of notice; (X.) as between landlord and tenant; (XI.) rights of the owner of the reversion; (XII.) effect of, upon insurance; (XIII.) gas generated by accident; (XIV.) right of action over 887

Gold; contract to pay in, see CONTRACTS.

Gunpowder. See EXPLOSION.

Homicide; by means of spring gun, trap, or other dangerous instrument killing trespasser 154

Insolvency. See also PARTNERSHIP.
 Priority of state or United States in payment from assets of a debtor:—(I.) scope of note generally; (II.) priority of United States: (a) upon what based; (b) constitutionality of provisions for; (c) superiority over state laws; (d) construction and scope of: (1) generally; (2) who are debtors of the United States; (3) what debts are within the statute; (4) what constitutes insolvency; (5) sufficiency of assignment to confer priority; (6) sufficiency of attachment to confer priority; (e) when and to what it attaches; (f) nature and extent; (g) marshaling assets; (h) liability of assignee or representative; (i) subrogation of sureties; (j) what amounts to a divestiture of the right; (k) how asserted; (III.) priority of the states: (a) upon what based; (b) constitutionality of provisions for; (c) nature and extent; (d) to what indebtedness it applies; (e) subrogation of surety making payment; (f) when it attaches and how divested; (IV.) priority of claims for taxes 228

Interest; liability of executors, trustees, etc., for compound interest: (I.) origin, growth, and general statement of the doctrine; (II.) principle of the allowance; (III.) option to take interest or profits; (IV.) grounds for allowance: (a) generally; (b) misconduct or gross delinquency generally; (c) use and admixture of trust fund; (d) failure or refusal to account; (e) neglect to invest; (f) improper investment; (g) unnecessarily calling in investment; (h) neglect in winding up or paying over; (i) nonperformance of trusts for accumulation; (j) neglect or violation of duty imposed by statute; (k) interest or profits made; (l) interest or profits which might have been made; (V.) who are chargeable; (VI.) jurisdiction to allow; (VII.) how computed: (a) method of computing generally; (b) upon what computed; (c) when allowance should commence; (d) rate per cent and length of rests; (e) termination of allowance; (VIII.) what sufficient to release from accountability; (IX.) effect of allowance on compensation; (X.) effect of allowance on costs 60

Lawfulness of taking in advance:—(I.) in discounts; (a) in general; (b) by persons other than banks; (c) on instruments other than bills and notes; (II.) in periodical payments; (III.) for what length of time allowed 70

Joint tenants; liability of cotenants for improvements and repairs:—(I.) improvements: (a) liability at common law; (b) liability in assumpsit for improvements; (c) rule in equity; (d) lien for improvements; (e) interest on improvements; (f) position of grantees of cotenant's share; (II.) repairs: (a) general doctrine; (b) liability in assumpsit; (c) necessity of a demand and notice; (d) lien for repairs 40

Judgment; form of judgment and procedure in case of liability to make payment in coin:—(I.) form of judgment; (a) on contracts to pay coin; (b) on contracts for coin or equivalent; (c) for coin converted or misapplied; (d) for damages in other cases; (e) for obligations created by law; (f) for costs; (II.) pleadings and procedure 50

Labels. See TRADE-MARKS.

Landlord and tenant; negligence of, in respect to gas 50

Marshaling; of assets as affecting priority of state or United States 228

Master and servant. See also RAILMENT.
 Negligence of fellow servant causing explosion 50

Money. See JUDGMENT.

Negligence. See EXPLOSION; GAS.

Nitro-glycerine. See EXPLOSION.

Partnership; assumption by a partnership of individual debts of the partners:—(I.) the general rule; (II.) the question of insolvency; (III.) the question of fraud; (IV.) assumption held sufficient; (V.) insufficient assumption; (VI.) by mortgage of firm property; (VII.) by new firm of debts of old firm; (VIII.) assumption of debt originally incurred for firm benefit 60

- Patents; power of state to restrict and regulate the sale or enjoyment of patent rights:—(I.) as to sales: (a) sales of patent rights; (b) sales of patented articles; (II.) police regulation of other business in which patents are used; (III.) restricting right of action for infringement; (IV.) taxation of patent rights 785
- Penalties; compulsory evidence against one's self in case of 813
- Poll taxes; poll taxes:—(I.) what are poll taxes; (II.) power to impose; (III.) restrictions and limitations; (IV.) the restriction and equation of the North Carolina constitution; (V.) upon what imposed; (VI.) place of taxation; (VII.) the levy and collection; (VIII.) disposition; (IX.) payment of poll taxes as a qualification of electors 404
- Proxy. See CORPORATIONS.
- Quitclaim. See REAL PROPERTY.
- Railroads. See EMINENT DOMAIN.
- Real property; the effect of a quitclaim deed in an otherwise perfect record title:—as to latent equities; purchaser with notice; other rulings; distinction between conveyance of land and of mere interest; doctrine of United States Supreme Court; where not protected; where entitled to protection; the Iowa doctrine; necessity of care; remote quitclaim in chain of title 38
- Receipt. See EVIDENCE.
- Records. See REAL PROPERTY.
- Searches; to compel one to furnish evidence against himself 813
- Seizure; to obtain evidence 813
- State institutions; nature of incorporated institutions belonging to the state:—(I.) in general: (a) banks; (b) educational institutions; (c) other state institutions; (II.) liabilities of such institutions; (III.) directors, trustees, and officers: (a) in general; (b) personal liability 373
- States. See also PATENTS.
Priority in respect to payment from assets of debtor 236
- Street railways. See EMINENT DOMAIN.
- Subrogation; of sureties as affected by priority of United States or of state 240, 243
Of person paying tax 233
- Taxes. See also POLL TAXES.
Jurisdiction as to taxation of bridge over river forming boundary of a state or its divisions:—general rule; statutory rule; effect on commerce; capital stock 69
Priority of claims for taxes against the assets of a debtor:—(I.) scope of note; (II.) upon what based; (III.) constitutionality and construction of provisions for; (IV.) what is included in the right: (a) taxes generally; (b) claims against collectors; (V.) nature and extent of priority; (VI.) subrogation of person paying the tax; (VII.) what amounts to a divestiture of the right; (VIII.) enforcement of the right 273
- Trade-marks; protection of trade-union labels or trade-marks:—(I.) in general; (II.) contents of label; (III.) effect of statutes 300
- Trade unions. See TRADE-MARKS.
- Trespass; liability for killing or injuring trespassers by means of spring guns, traps, and other dangerous instruments:—(I.) the general doctrine of liability; (II.) liable as for homicide; (III.) when considered as a nuisance; (IV.) the property owner's or the trespasser's act; (V.) the question of notice; (VI.) the act held legal; (VII.) English cases 154
- Trial; right to jury as affected by compulsory evidence against one's self 819
- Trusts; liability of trustees for compound interest 623
- United States; priority in respect to payment from assets of debtor 236
- Voters and elections; payment of poll taxes as a qualification of electors 414

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT. See FERRIES, 4.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also CASE.

Trustees appointed by parties to a contract to manage the details of the business done thereunder are not necessary parties to an action thereon. San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.) 839

AFFIDAVIT. See JUDGMENT, 5; WRIT AND PROCESS.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES. See also HORSE RACING, 2.

Annual contributions by the state to a state agricultural society which is required to report to the state are not sufficient to make it a public corporation for the sole purpose of discharging a governmental function, on account of which it will be exempt from liability to persons injured by its negligence. Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (Minn.) 708

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. A general exception "to these findings of fact and conclusions of law, and to each of them," is not sufficient to raise any question for review by the supreme court in Washington. Moyer v. Van de Vanter (Wash.) 870

2. A bill of exceptions, embodying the charge, and, immediately following it, stating that one of the counsel said, "The defendant excepts," with the ground of exception, including a refusal to charge as requested and exceptions to the charge as delivered,—sufficiently shows that exceptions to the charge were seasonably taken. Findlay v. Ports (C. C. App. 6th C.) 188

3. Forty days after the expiration of the trial term may be allowed by the court at such term for filing a bill of exceptions. Id.

4. A deposition attached to a bill of exceptions only by placing it between the pasteboard back and the stenographer's report, although held with sufficient tenacity to retain its place, but not marked as an exhibit or identified by the trial judge or the stenographer or any one else, will not be treated as part of the bill of exceptions. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (Ohio) 757

5. Nothing but the amount is in question, on appeal, where the plaintiffs asked permission to pay the amount due, and the defendants asked that they be required to pay the amount due. Randall v. National Bldg. Loan & P. Union (Neb.) 183

6. Only errors of which the appellant complains can be considered on appeal. Dennis v. Caughlin (Nev.) 781

7. The question of the rate at which executor's commissions should be computed cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Re Bickor's Estate (Mont.) 632

8. The New York court of appeals will not reverse a determination of a matter of fact which is supported by some evidence, in case of a certiorari to review an assessment for taxes. People, Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co. v. Barker (N. Y.) 203

9. A general verdict in a case where there are several material issues tried cannot be upheld if the jury are given an erroneous charge upon any one of them. Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.) 208

10. Comment upon the testimony by the court, to the effect that there is nothing to show that lumber was set on fire by sparks from a boat, when there is no attempt to prove any other cause of the fire and several witnesses have sworn to seeing sparks from the boat falling upon the lumber, although the court allowed the case to go to the jury,—requires reversal of a judgment on a verdict for the defendant. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

11. Sustaining a demurrer to one paragraph of an answer is not cause for reversal, if the appellant could avail himself of the same defense under the paragraph remaining. Wohlford v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Assn. (Ind.) 177

12. A decision will not be reversed merely because a seemingly pertinent question was excluded, if it is not shown what the party proposed to prove. Hickman v. Green (Mo.) 89

13. A judgment upon a verdict for a lump sum of damages and interest will not be modified to exclude the interest, which is found to be erroneous, but a reversal is necessary. King v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 755

14. Any clerical mistake in the amount for which a judgment is entered in the Illinois appellate court may be corrected in the supreme court, where there is sufficient in the record and on the face of the judgment itself to show the correct amount. Belford v. Woodward (Ill.) 598

15. Variance in a suit upon a judgment alleged to be simply for a sum of money, in that the judgment proved is payable in gold coin, does not constitute cause for reversal, where the judgment recovered thereon contains no direction for payment in any particular kind of money. Belford v. Woodward (Ill.) 598.

16. The cost of bringing up superfluous matter will be taxed against the party at whose instance it was added to the brief of evidence. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin (Ga.) 498

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; remission of excess in judgment.

755

APPROACH. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

APPROPRIATIONS. See also STATUTES, 10.

1. Factory inspectors provided for in Ill. Act June 17, 1898, are state officers or officers of the government, within the provision of Ill. Const. art. 4, § 16, providing that bills making appropriations for the pay of members and officers of the general assembly and for the salaries of the officers of the government shall contain no provisions on any other subject. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

2. A statute regulating factories and providing for the appointment of factory inspectors is not invalidated by the inclusion within it of an appropriation for the salaries of such inspectors, under Ill. Const. art. 4, § 16, declaring that appropriation bills for the salaries of government officers shall contain no provision on any other subject, as such appropriation is merely subordinate to the main purpose of regulating factories. Id.

ARREST. See CARRIERS, 8.

ASSAULT. See CARRIERS, 7.

ASSESSMENT. See BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 8-6; JUDGMENT, 6; JUDICIAL SALE, 1.

ATTACHMENT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1, 2.

1. That a nonresident creditor has exhausted his remedy against his debtor in the state of his residence, so as to be enabled to take advantage of Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 5040, permitting him to subject property in Tennessee to the payment of his claim, is shown by the fact that the property of the debtor in the state of his residence has been placed in the possession of a receiver under a statute forbidding interference with it. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Mathewell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.) 164

2. A nonresident's shares of stock in a foreign corporation cannot be reached by attachment in a state where the corporation is doing business, although its officers are also in such state. Ireland v. Globe Milling & R. Co. (R. I.) 429

8. Property of one partner in a law firm cannot be attached for failure of his copartner to account for money collected under contract made by the latter in the firm name, but in his 29 L. R. A.

own purely personal transaction and without the knowledge of the other partner that the firm would make such collection free of charge. Davis v. Dodson (Ga.) 494

ATTAINDER. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 1.

ATTORNEY GENERAL. See QUO WARRANTO, 8.

ATTORNEYS. See also ATTACHMENT, 3; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. It is not within the scope of the business of a law partnership to collect choses in action without charging for services rendered in so doing,—especially by virtue of an agreement made by one member as part of an individual transaction for his own benefit only. Davis v. Dodson (Ga.) 496

2. The substitution of an attorney for a corporation, in a proceeding to restrain a receiver, cannot be prevented by the prior attorney on the ground of disqualification by reason of his relations to the receiver, so long as the parties do not object. People's Home Sav. Bank v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 844

ATTORNEYS' FEES. See BILLS AND NOTES, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 28.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys' fees; constitutionality of provision for. 867

BAILMENT. See CARRIERS; INNKEEPERS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bailment; conversion of coin by bailee, see CONTRACTS.

Liability of bailee for wrongful appropriation of thing bailed:—in general; where servant has no duty in respect to thing bailed; where servant's duties give him some control of thing bailed; goods not in possession of master; effect of statute; ratification; special contract. 93

BANKS.

1. A bank with which a draft is deposited for collection discharges its duty by transmitting it in due season to a suitable agent at the residence of the drawee, with necessary instructions, and is not liable for loss occasioned by the negligence or default of the latter, as such collecting agent becomes the agent of the holder of the draft, and not of the bank with which it is deposited for collection. Waterloo Milling Co. v. Kuenster (Ill.) 794

2. Worthless drafts received by a bank with which paper was deposited for collection, from a collecting bank to which the paper was sent, and thereupon credited to the depositor, without knowledge of the insolvency of the collecting agent, do not change the rule that the depositor must bear the loss, since the rights of the parties are the same as if the worthless drafts had been deposited by him. Id.

8. The retention of worthless drafts after knowledge of the insolvency of the drawer, by a bank which has received them as proceeds of paper forwarded for collection and credited to the depositor before learning of such insolvency, and the subsequent proof of a claim on the drafts by the bank in its own name, and the receipt of a dividend thereon from the receiver of the drawer,—do not relieve the depositor from liability to the bank for the loss sustained on the balance of the drafts. Id.

4. No equitable lien exists upon funds of a bank in the hands of a receiver, in favor of one who deposited money in the bank for a special purpose, if the bank was permitted to use the money in the course of its regular business, so that no part of it can be identified in the receiver's hands. Muhlenberg v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. (Or.) 667

5. Public moneys placed by general deposit in a bank do not establish a trust in the estate of the banker on his insolvency, except so far as they can be traced into some specific fund or property. State v. Foster (Wyo.) 226

6. Money remaining in the vaults of a bank and on deposit by it in other banks when the banker becomes insolvent will be held to constitute part of a trust fund of greater amount, which had been received by the banker; but it is otherwise with commercial paper representing loans made by him before assignment. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; liability as to collections. 795

BICYCLES. See also INFORMERS.

1. One riding a bicycle on a sidewalk or footway incurs the penalty provided by Pa. Act May 7, 1889, against driving any horse or any other animal upon such walk, by virtue of the Act of April 23, 1889, declaring that bicycles and persons using them are entitled to the same rights and subject to the same restrictions as are prescribed in case of persons using carriages drawn by horses. Com. v. Forrest (Pa.) 865

2. The fact that a sidewalk was on land appropriated by a turnpike company, and had been constructed and kept up by the turnpike company, aided by contributions from village residents, does not exempt it from the provisions of Pa. Act 1889 prohibiting the use of such walks by persons riding bicycles. Id.

3. The consent of a turnpike company to the use by bicyclers of a sidewalk established alongside the highway and on land appropriated by the company cannot make such use lawful under Pa. Act 1889 prohibiting the use of bicycles on sidewalks. Id.

4. The unlawful use of a sidewalk by bicyclers for a time without complaint cannot avail as a defense to the prosecution of a person for such offense. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bicycles; as carriages; riding on sidewalk. 865

BILLS AND NOTES. See also BONDS, 3; CONTRACTS, 2, 3, 9; MORTGAGE, 1, 2; PLEADING, 4; USURY, 1.

1. A subsequent promise to pay will not bind an indorser who has been released by lack 29 L. R. A.

of notice, unless supported by a consideration. Seebree Deposit Bank v. Moreland (Ky.) 305

2. A failure of the holder of a promissory note to present for payment, or to give notice of nonpayment, discharges the indorser from liability. Patillo v. Alexander (Ga.) 616

3. A guaranty of attorneys' fees "up to 10 per cent, if this note has to be collected by law, on its prompt payment," without other indorsement, made for the purpose and in the course of negotiation, makes the payee liable as an indorser with a superadded liability for such reasonable sums, not exceeding 10 per cent, as might be expended for attorney's fees by the holder in the collection of the note. Id.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1.

BONDS. See also INTEREST, 2; MORTGAGE, 3, 4.

1. Corporate bonds secured by mortgage and payable to bearer are so far negotiable that the holder may maintain an action thereon in his own name. American Nat. Bank v. American Wood Paper Co. (R. I.) 108

2. That a statute giving a title by delivery and a right of action to the holder of negotiable paper in terms applied only to promissory notes will not prevent the courts from recognizing corporate bonds as negotiable. Id.

3. That a bond is payable ten years after date or sooner after five years does not destroy its negotiability. Id.

4. A holder of corporate bonds secured by mortgage is not given a present right of action for the principal of the bonds upon default in payment of interest, by the fact that the mortgage provides that upon default the holder of one third of the amount of bonds may require a sale of the property, and the "bonds shall forthwith become due and payable." Id.

5. Municipal bonds cannot be made payable "in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness," where a statute provides that such bonds shall be payable "in gold coin or lawful money of the United States." Skinner v. Santa Rosa (Cal.) 512

6. The terms and conditions of municipal bonds, which the statute requires to be stated in a notice of election, including those as to rate of interest and the tax levy required for payment thereof, must substantially follow those stated in such notice. Id.

BOUNDARIES.

1. A body of water having well-defined shores and no current, lying entirely in the state of Iowa $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile from the main channel of the Mississippi river, and forming no part of that river for the purposes of navigation, is within the provisions of Iowa Acts 28 Gen. Assem. chap. 34, against the use of seines in the waters of that state, and is not within the exception of boundary waters, over which the state has not exclusive jurisdiction. State v. Haug (Iowa) 390

2. A conveyance of land situated upon a navigable stream, the description being by courses and distances from a fixed monument, and establishing a boundary line coincident with the line of navigation, conveys the grantor's title as far as the thread of the stream. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Platt (Ohio) 53

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Boundaries; by low-water mark	589
Of state by river.	890
On navigable waters.	53

BRIDGES. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 8; TAXES, 7, 11, 12; NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BROKERS. See also EVIDENCE, 23.

1. The right of a broker to commissions on a contract the signature of which he has procured is not affected by the fact that, as agent for the buyer, he subsequently seeks to procure from the seller some modification of the terms of sale. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (S. C.) 215

2. The recovery of commissions by a broker is not prevented by failure to procure a license under an ordinance imposing a penalty for such failure, where the object of the ordinance is simply to enforce payment of a tax. Id.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. See also RECEIVERS, 2.

1. The members of a building association, both borrowers and nonborrowers, must assist in bearing its losses. Eversmann v. Schmitt (Ohio) 184

2. A borrowing member of a building association is not entitled to cancelation of the mortgage given to secure the loan, until the dues paid and the dividends declared and not paid equal the par value of his shares. Id.

3. A borrowing member of a building association whose mortgage stipulates for the payment of such "assessments" as may be levied on him as a member is liable for a pro rata assessment on the members, made by a receiver in insolvency of the association. Id.

4. An assessment on stock in a building and loan association, for the purpose of covering losses and equalizing the members, so that they may all go out at the final close on an equal footing, is within the liabilities of a member upon a note and mortgage which include a provision for the payment, not only of installments of dues, but of any fees or assessments. Wohlford v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. (Ind.) 177

5. An assessment to cover losses and equalize members is properly made by the board of directors of a building and loan association, instead of by the association as a whole, under a statutory provision that the business of the association shall be managed by a board of directors. Id.

6. A formal acceptance in writing of the provisions of Ind. Act 1885, which expressly grants to building and loan associations power to make assessments or stock calls to cover losses, is not necessary in order that such an association may exercise the enlarged powers granted by that statute, including the power to make an assessment to cover losses and thereby equalize members, so that all at the close may go out on an equal footing. Id.

7. Forfeiture of stock in a building and loan association for failure to make required payments, if it is authorized by the contract of the parties, the rules and regulations and by laws of the association, and the statute under which it is created, cannot be relieved against; and the mortgage given by such member may be foreclosed for the full amount of his original loan, with interest, without any abatement for the value of the stock or for payments made by him thereon. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Anniston Loan & T. Co. (Ala.) 120 But see contra below.

8. The application upon a mortgage to a building and loan association, of payments made by the mortgagor upon his shares of stock in the association, which were declared forfeited after default, must be allowed on foreclosure of the mortgage, notwithstanding a rigid provision in his contract that his membership and all sums theretofore paid should be forfeited in case of default; and a claim that the loan and membership are separate and distinct contracts cannot be sustained after the termination of the membership and the maturity of the loan by an election to foreclose. Randall v. National Bldg. L. & P. Union (Neb.) 133

9. The monthly payments for subscriptions to the shares of a building and loan association, which have been pledged as collateral security for a loan secured by mortgage, in which interest and dues are consolidated, should be applied upon the mortgage in determining whether that has been paid, when the association is in the hands of a receiver. Buis v. Bryan (S. C.) 127

10. Stock payments by a borrowing member of a building and loan association are not ipso facto credits upon his indebtedness, so as to reduce pro tanto the amount due on his mortgage, but a borrower may elect to have payments on account of stock applied upon his indebtedness to the association. Randall v. National Bldg. L. & P. Union (Neb.) 133

11. The appointment of a receiver for a building and loan association terminates the contract of a shareholder who is also a borrower and has given a mortgage to secure the loan, so that he is not liable for the monthly dues accruing after such appointment. Buis v. Bryan (S. C.) 127

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Building and loan associations; right to apply payments made on stock in a building and loan association upon a mortgage given for a loan by the same member:—associations not protected by law; payments not ipso facto a reduction of the mortgage; right of third persons to require the application: (a) surety for borrower; (b) purchaser at sheriff's sale; (c) creditors or assignees; (d) second mortgagees; associations on the terminating plan; rule under changed conception of loan association; right to a credit of profits; forfeiture; insolvency or abandonment of scheme; change of rules; right of third person to resist application; effect of special agreement 120

Liability of advanced member of building and loan association to assessment for losses:—decisions proceeding on the partnership theory; the original loan association theory; effect of rules or provisions in mortgage; change of rules; liability as members after release of mortgage; statutory provisions. 177

BURDEN OF PROOF. See EVIDENCE.

BURGLARY. See HOMICIDE.

BY-LAWS. See CORPORATIONS, 9, 10.

CARRIERS. See also CASE; CONTRACTS, 4; DAMAGES, 1, 2; EVIDENCE, 13; FERRIES, 1.

1. The relation of carrier and passenger does not exist between a street-railway company and a person who has given a signal, which is seen and responded to, for a car to stop, but who is struck by the unexpected swinging of the car from its proper track on to a switch track. Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.) 297

2. The use of indecent or profane language in a street car, which constitutes a breach of the peace for which a person may be punished by fine or imprisonment, justifies the conductor in putting the offender off the car. Robinson v. Rockland, T. & O. Street R. Co. (Me.) 530

3. A passenger in a crowded street car in which there are many ladies, who on being requested by the conductor to stop swearing denies his guilt, and when told that he has been profane calls the conductor "a damned liar," says that he would swear as much as he "damned pleased," and that he "would be God damned if he would put him off the car,"—should be ejected from the car even if the conductor was at first in error in charging him with profanity. Id.

4. Failure to pay for a ticket when purchased because of haste to catch a train, and the acceptance of a promise to pay on return, will not defeat the right of the passenger to recover damages for ejection because the ticket bears a prior date. Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 173

5. The clause "continuous passage within one day of date of sale" on a railroad ticket does not make the ticket invalid on the day of sale because it bears a prior date. Id.

6. A railroad company is not liable for injuries received by a passenger from an accidental blow by one of its employes while making a playful attempt to strike another employe, as the act is not within the line of his employment. Goodloe v. Memphis & O. R. Co. (Ala.) 729

7. An unjustifiable assault upon a passenger by a railroad employe who owes him the duty of protection renders the carrier responsible for the injuries caused thereby. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Kan.) 465

8. Illegal arrest without a warrant, and false imprisonment of a passenger, caused by a conductor in charge of the train on which he was riding, while acting in the line of his employment, render the carrier liable. Id.

20 L. R. A.

9. For such a sum of money and such articles as a passenger might for her personal convenience and adornment appropriately carry with her in a sleeping car, if stolen by an employe while the passenger was under his protection, the sleeping-car company is liable. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin (Ga.) 493

10. A common carrier who does not know, or have good reason to know, that barrels received by him for shipment contain short lobsters, is not liable for receiving them, under Me. Laws 1889, chap. 292, § 2, making it unlawful to catch or "possess for any purpose" between specified dates any lobster less than 10½ inches long. State v. Swett (Me.) 714

11. A contract to give all the traffic of certain mines and furnaces and of a railroad therefrom at reasonable rates to another and connecting railroad, which furnishes aid to develop the business, is not ultra vires or in violation of Pa. Const. art. 17, §§ 1, 3, 4, requiring railroads to carry each other's traffic without discrimination, and prohibiting discrimination in transportation for individuals, and prohibiting the consolidation of parallel and competing roads. Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (Pa.) 423

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; effect of ticket; remedy for wrongful expulsion. 173

Liability for assault on passenger. 466

Person waiting for street car as a passenger. 293

Theft of property in sleeping car. 493

Action against, by shipper of goods. 573

CASE.

A shipper of goods may maintain an action on the case against the carrier for their negligent injury, where they were sold and shipped subject to the payment of a draft against the bill of lading, the shipper guaranteeing payment of freight, although, when notified of the injury, he refused to give directions as to their disposition on the ground that he no longer had title, if the carrier did not act upon such claim to his prejudice. Spence v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.) 573

CHAMPERTY. See CLOUD ON TITLE.

CHARITIES. See TAXES, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Charities; what constitute. 604, 726

CHURCH. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CIGAR MAKERS' UNION. See TRADE-MARK, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CITIZEN. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

A deed or other instrument purporting to convey land, that shows upon its face that the grantors therein were out of possession of the land granted at the time of its execution, and that such land at the time was adversely held by another, is void upon its face, as to such adverse occupant, and, as to him, does not create such a cloud upon his title as will authorize the interposition of a court of equity on his behalf for its removal. Royes v. Middleton (Fla.) 66

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cloud; power of equity to remove. 66

COIN. See BONDS, 3; JUDGMENT, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COLLECTION. See BANKS, 1-3.

COLLEGES. See also CORPORATIONS, 1; QUO WARRANTO, 3, 4.

Admission into the Kansas State University is made free by statute, and the board of regents has no power to collect a fee of $5 or any other fee for the use of the library, or to exclude students from the use of the library for the nonpayment of such fee. State, Little, v. Regents of University (Kan.) 878

COMMERCE. See also TAXES, 12.

1. A state statute requiring all vessels using wood for fuel while navigating waters of the state to be provided with suitable fire screens does not conflict with acts of congress or regulations of supervising inspectors, and is not an interference with interstate commerce. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

2. A license tax on the right to operate a branch railroad in a city cannot be imposed by the city, where this branch is part of an interstate line of railroad. San Bernardino v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 827

3. An ordinance imposing a license on hawkers and peddlers does not interfere with interstate commerce in the case of a peddler of chairs imported into the state before his employment begins, even though the sale by him is conditional and the title remains in the foreign owner. South Bend v. Martin (Ind.) 581

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; interstate, as affected by license tax. 827, 532

Game laws as affecting. 715

COMMISSIONERS. See COURTS, 1; MANDAMUS, 2.

COMMISSIONS. See BROKERS.

COMMON LAW. See EVIDENCE, 6.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 5040, providing that residents of other states, having exhausted their remedies there against debtors residing in such states, may subject to the satisfaction of their claims property situated in Tennessee, gives such creditors a remedy to the same extent and in the same manner and with the same priority as a citizen of Tennessee. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.) 164

29 L. R. A.

2. A statute making a judgment confessed by a corporation, after a petition has been filed for its dissolution, void as against the receiver and creditors, is not effective to control the disposition of property attached according to the laws of another state under such judgment. Id.

3. Applications for insurance sent by mail to another state, where they are passed upon and accepted, and in which policies are dated and signed and then mailed to the insured, are governed by the laws of that state, so as to be unaffected by statutes at the residence of the insured prohibiting insurance by unauthorized foreign companies. State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brinkley State & H. Co. (Ark.) 712

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of law; as to insolvency proceedings. 164

CONSIGNOR. See TRUSTS, 2.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also COMMERCE; COURTS, 2; EMINENT DOMAIN; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 3; LICENSE, 3; OFFICERS, 2; SCHOOLS, 1.

1. The provision of the Illinois constitution prohibiting municipalities from making donations to private corporations is self-executing, and operated as paramount law from the adoption of the constitution. Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (Ill.) 798

2. A practical construction of a state constitution for nearly forty years will be conclusive of its meaning when that would otherwise be doubtful. French v. State, Harley (Ind.) 113

3. A constitutional provision on the subject of usury must be presumed to have been adopted with reference to an existing custom which permitted interest to be taken in advance. Bank of Newport v. Cook (Ark.) 761

4. Associating with the governor, the auditor, treasurer, secretary of state, and attorney general, as a board for the purpose of electing prison directors, is not an unconstitutional commingling of executive with administrative officers in violation of the provision separating the powers of government into three departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, but including the administrative in the executive department. French v. State, Harley (Ind.) 113

5. A statute is not an ex post facto law because it abrogates the provision existing when an offense was committed; that the accused may secure a change of magistrate or place of preliminary examination upon his affidavit of belief of the prejudice of the magistrate before whom he is brought for examination. People, Chandler, v. McDonald (Wyo.) 834

6. The courts cannot declare a statute unconstitutional and void solely on the ground of unjust and oppressive provisions, or because it is supposed to violate the natural, social, or political rights of a citizen, unless such injustice is prohibited or such rights guaranteed or protected by the constitution. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

7. The legislature in undertaking to impose an unreasonable and unnecessary burden upon any one citizen or class of citizens transcends the authority entrusted to it by the constitution, although it imposes the same burden upon all other citizens or class of citizens. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

8. The right to make contracts is inherent and inalienable under Ill. Const. art. 2, § 1, declaring that all men are by nature free and independent and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and any attempt to unreasonably abridge it is unconstitutional. Id.

9. While the right to contract may be subject to limitations growing out of the duties which the individual owes to society, the public, or the government, the power of the legislature to limit such right must rest upon some reasonable basis, and cannot be arbitrarily exercised. Id.

10. A statute prohibiting the employment of females in any factory or workshop more than eight hours a day is unconstitutional as a purely arbitrary restriction upon the fundamental right of the citizen to control his or her own time and faculties, and a substitution of the legislative judgment for that of the employer and employé in a matter about which they are competent to agree with each other. Id.

11. The constitutional right to acquire, possess, and protect property prevents making a man liable for the acts and engagements of strangers over whom he has no control. Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. (Pa.) 808

12. The imposition of liability on a mine owner by Pa. Act 1891, art. 17, for the failure of a certified foreman, whom he is compelled to employ, and with whose acts he cannot interfere, and whose duties are prescribed by the act, to comply with those duties, is unconstitutional and void. Id.

Police power.

13. The police power of the state is that power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

14. Statutes passed in pursuance of the police power of the state must not conflict with the constitution, and must have some relation to the end sought to be accomplished; and where their ostensible object is to secure the public comfort, welfare, or safety they must appear to be adapted to that end, and cannot invade the rights of person and property under the guise of a police regulation where they are not such in fact. Id.

15. A statute prohibiting the employment of women in factories or workshops for more than eight hours a day cannot be sustained as a police regulation for the promotion of the public health, on the ground that it is designed to protect women on account of their sex and physique, as sex is no bar under the Illinois constitution or laws to the right to contract, and the mere fact of sex will not justify the exercise of the police power for the purpose of limiting the exercise of such rights by a woman, unless there is some fair, just, and reasonable connection between such limitation and the public health, safety, or welfare; and there is no reasonable ground why a woman should be deprived of the right to determine for herself how many hours during each day she can and may work in an employment conceded to be lawful in itself and suitable for her to engage in, even if the police power can be exercised to prevent injury to the individual engaged in a particular calling. Id.

16. The police power does not extend to a statutory prohibition of the exercise by employers of the right to insist that employes shall not belong to labor unions. State v. Julow (Mo.) 257

Due process.

17. The privilege of contracting is both a liberty and a property right, of which one cannot be deprived without due process of law. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

18. The right to labor or employ labor and make contracts in respect thereto, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, is included in the guaranty of Ill. Const. art. 2, § 2, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Id.

19. A right to insist that employes shall withdraw from or refrain from joining any trade union or labor union, as a condition of employment, or continued employment, is within the constitutional rights of an employer, and protected by the constitutional guaranty of due process of law against a statute which attempts to make it an offense for an employer to impose such conditions. State v. Julow (Mo.) 257

20. Mailing to a resident of the state, as well as publishing, a notice of a proceeding in scire facias to revive a judgment, as provided in 2 Starr & C. (Ill.) Stat. p. 1789, where his residence is stated in the affidavit, which shows that he has gone out of the state or is concealed within it so that process cannot be served on him,—is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement of due process of law. Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 782

21. Requiring every taxable person to bring in an account of his ratable estate to the assessors at a time and place of which he has notice, upon which he may be examined and heard, is sufficient to constitute due process of law in a tax assessment. McTwiggan v. Hunter (R. I.) 526

22. A statute which makes any person who drives a herd of horses, asses, cattle, sheep, goats, or swine over a public highway constructed on a hillside, liable for all damages done by such animals in destroying the banks or rolling rocks into or upon such highway, is not unconstitutional as a denial of equal privileges, immunities, or protection of the laws, or as depriving any person of property without due process of law. Brim v. Jones (Utah) 97

Equality; class legislation.

23. The provision for an attorney's fee in an action for wages, made by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6562a, in case the wages have not been paid within three days after a demand in writing, is an unconstitutional denial of the equal protection of the laws, since the statute imposes the restriction upon one class of citizens only. Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser (Ohio) 886

24. A statute prohibiting the employment of females in any factory or workshop for more than eight hours a day is unconstitutional as partial and discriminating in its character, whether applying only to manufacturers of wearing apparel and like articles, or as applying to manufacturers of all kinds of products. Bitsche v. People (Ill.) 79

25. An ordinance applying to all transient merchants, requiring a license fee, is not unconstitutional as class legislation. Ottumwa v. Zekind (Iowa) 784

26. A statute providing for the protection of trade-marks adopted by associations or unions of workmen is not void as class legislation or as granting special privileges or immunities. State v. Bishop (Mo.) 200

27. A statute restricting the right to discharge laborers because of membership in labor unions is within a constitutional provision against special laws. State v. Julow (Mo.) 257

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also POLL TAXES.

Constitutional law; adopting long-continued construction. 777

Due process in seizure and production of papers. 819

Due process in statute providing for attorney's fees. 887

Due process by special statute. 252

Due process in reviving judgment. 782

Arbitrarily imposing liability. 806

As to creating absolute liability for damages. 98

Police regulations by state as affecting commerce. 468

Extent of police power to interfere with contracts. 81

Ex post facto laws. 884

Function of appointing to office. 118

CONTRACTS. See also BROKERS, 2; CARRIERS, 11; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8-10, 17, 18, 24; SALE.

1. Letters and telegrams which constitute an offer and acceptance of a proposition complete in its terms may constitute a binding contract, although there is an understanding that the agreement shall be expressed in a formal writing, and one of the parties afterwards refuses to sign such an agreement without material modifications. Sanders v. Pottlitzer Bros. Fruit Co. (N. Y.) 481

2. Signing one's name in blank upon the back of a promissory note to which he is not a party, pursuant to an oral agreement to guarantee its payment, although insufficient of itself, will justify the holder to write a contract of guaranty over the signature, and thus satisfy the statute of frauds. Peterson v. Russell (Minn.) 612

3. The extension of the time of payment of a past-due note is a sufficient consideration to support a promise by a guarantor to pay it. Id. 29 L. R. A.

4. Consideration for an agreement by a railroad company and other parties about to construct a railroad from a mine to a furnace, and from the furnace to an established railroad, that they will ship all their products at reasonable rates over the latter railroad, may be found in the purchase by the owner of the old road of a certain quantity of the bonds of the new company at par in order to supply funds for the enterprise. Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (Pa.) 423

5. A contract between corporations organized to distribute and furnish water to consumers in a county and city, one of which owns a supply of water and a pipe line ending at the city limits, and the other a distributing plant within the city, for co-operation in supplying water to the city and providing a method of determining the price of water, is not in violation of public policy as a monopoly for its sale, since the California constitution reserves to municipal corporations the power of regulating water rates. San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.) 839

6. The fact that the mayor of a city is also the president and a stockholder of a gas company which furnishes gas to the city, not by virtue of any contract, but by requirement of law, when he has no authority in the matter of procuring the gas, does not defeat the right to enforce payment from the city, although the charter of the city provides that no officer shall be directly or indirectly interested in any contract, work, or business, or the sale of any article for which payment is to be made from the city treasury, and that all contracts in violation thereof shall be void. Capital Gas Co. v. Young (Cal.) 463

7. A contract for the sale of property to a city through one of its officers, who receives a commission from the other party for effecting it, is illegal and void both at common law and under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6909, declaring it a penal offense for any public officer, agent, servant, or employé to be directly or indirectly interested in any contract for the purchase of any property of the state, county, or municipality. Pindlay v. Ports (C. O. App. 6th C.) 188

8. A provision in a lease of a warehouse owned by a railroad company, that such company shall not be responsible for any damage caused by fire, is not void as against public policy on the ground that the property of the public will thereby be in danger. Stephens v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 751

9. It is not essential to the recovery of an instalment of the amount agreed to be paid in consideration of a release of dower rights, that the plaintiff should have physical possession of a note which the contract contemplated should be given to represent such instalment until the same became due. Irvin v. Irvin (Pa.) 293

10. A contract valid when made cannot be rendered invalid by a general statute subsequently passed. Stephens v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 751

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contracts; sufficiency of contract by offer and acceptance without execution of contemplated formal instrument:—general statements of the law; suggestion of formal contract; understanding that there is to be a formal contract; where some terms unsettled; where the execution of a formal contract is one of the terms of the agreement; agreement to execute formal contract may be binding; where it appears that the contract when finished should be a formal one; failure to execute draft of contract; estoppel; illustrations of proposals for formal contract; intention to have formal contract as evidence. 481

Special contracts and obligations to make payment in gold or silver:—(I.) before legal tender act; (II.) application of legal tender act to specific contracts for coin: (a) decisions before Bronson v. Rodas: (1) denying effect to such contracts; (2) supporting such contracts; (3) in equity cases; (4) effect of state statutes; (b) doctrine of Bronson v. Rodas and later cases: (1) federal cases; (2) state decisions generally; (3) alternative provisions; coin or equivalent; (4) municipal and state contracts; (III.) implied contracts or obligations imposed by law: (a) in general; (b) bailment and conversion of coin; (c) bank deposits; (d) accounting for trust; (e) other actions for damages. 512

Against liability for negligence.	751
By unlicensed broker.	220
By mail.	712
Public policy as to.	424
Validity; when prohibited.	712
Illegality to prevent remedy.	292
Merger in written instrument.	55
Condition of rescission.	860

COPARCENER. See COTENANCY; IMPROVEMENTS; PARTITION.

CORPORATIONS. See also AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES; ATTACHMENT, 2; BONDS, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8; CONTRACTS, 5; FERRIES, 2; FRAUD, 4; INSOLVENCY, 8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8; PARTNERSHIP, 1; QUO WARRANTO, 1, 2; TAXES, 5-14.

1. The Board of Regents of Kansas State University is such a corporation as is subject to the control of the court in an action in the nature of quo warranto. State, Little, v. Regents of University (Kan.) 378

2. Neither a de jure nor a de facto corporation can exist where the articles are not filed in the office of the secretary of state and the fee therefor paid as required by Colo. Sess. Laws 1887, p. 406, which expressly prohibits the exercise of any corporate powers until this is done. Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. (Colo.) 148

3. Promoters of a corporation to whom stock and mortgage bonds are issued nominally in payment for property transferred to the corporation, which was in fact bought of a third person, will not be permitted to jeopardize such third person's collection of the purchase money by enforcing their mortgage without paying for their stock. Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.) 263

4. A promoter of a corporation is affected and bound by any fraud contained in a guaranty to one selling property to the corporation by another promoter that money in his hands shall be applied to placing improvements on the property, for the purpose of securing a waiver of the vendor's lien, so that he cannot acquire a right to a judgment for the price of such improvements which he can enforce against the objection of such vendor. Id.

5. Promoters of a corporation who secure a waiver of the lien of one selling property to the corporation, in favor of a mortgage taken by themselves upon the property, by a fraudulent guaranty that certain money shall be applied to making improvements on the property, which is not done, will not be permitted to enforce their mortgage against his objection. Id.

6. A promoter of a corporation who has not paid his stock subscription will not be permitted to take an assignment of a claim for improvements made on the corporate property, so as to enforce the same in priority to valid mortgages on such property. Id.

7. The appointment by a corporation by its board of directors of another corporation to act as its sole agent in the sale of water within a city, to be distributed by means of plants of both corporations, is not in violation of Cal. Civ. Code, § 854, subd. 5, 8, where the agency, although exclusive, is not unlimited or unrestricted. San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.) 889

8. A contract between corporations organized to distribute and furnish water to consumers in a county and city, for co-operation in supplying water to the city, is not ultra vires because one officer of each corporation is appointed a trustee, and they together are given general charge of the operation of the works and of keeping the accounts of receipts and expenses, with a limited power of determining what shall be charged to the account of operating expenses, and with other powers and duties simply executory and such as could not be discharged by any board of directors otherwise than through an agent. Id.

9. A by-law giving a corporation the first right to purchase stock which is for sale by any of its members is not valid under a statute specifying several subjects upon which by-laws may be enacted, but making no reference to the question of stock transfers. Ireland v. Globe Milling & R. Co. (R. I.) 429

10. A by-law providing that no proxy should be voted by any one who is not a stockholder of the corporation is invalid under Cal. Civ. Code, § 812, providing generally that stockholders may be represented by proxies. People's Home Sav. Bank v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 844

11. Directors of an insolvent corporation, who vote themselves preferences over other creditors, must show that all their secured claims are honest and justly due them. Schufeldt v. Smith (Mo.) 880

12. Officers of a corporation may be compelled to account for all sums withdrawn for salaries, with interest thereon, where they have voted and paid them partly and largely for the purpose of depriving stockholders of the results of a litigation in case they are successful, although they are paid nominally and partly for services rendered to the company. Baton v. Robinson (R. L.) 100

18. Stockholders who are officers of a corporation may be compelled, upon a bill properly framed, to pay directly to other stockholders their share of money which the officers have fraudulently retained as salaries. Id.

14. Fraud of promoters in procuring a subscription to stock of a corporation before its organization is not a defense against an assessment on the stock by the corporation after the subscriber has carried out his contract and united with others in forming the corporation, but his remedy is restricted to an action against the wrongdoers. St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger (Mich.) 63

15. The right of the state to declare the forfeiture to stock of a corporation before its organization is not a defense against an assessment on the stock by the corporation after the subscriber has carried out his contract and united with others in forming the corporation, but his remedy is restricted to an action against the wrongdoers. St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger (Mich.) 63

16. The charter of a waterworks company which supplies river water, instead of pure, wholesome deep-well water as required by its charter and contract, during four droughts in two years, and refuses for a wholly insufficient reason to sink additional wells in order to furnish a proper supply of water, will be annulled, where the only reasons for not annulling are that if the charter is vacated all water supply will cease, and a promise by the company after suit is begun that it will sink the additional wells necessary to afford an adequate supply of water. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Corporations; distinguishing public from private. 798, 708

Compelling operation of franchise by. 169

Ultra vires contracts of. 424, 840

Compensation to directors who have acted wrongfully. 100

Corporations; right to vote by proxy in private corporations:—(I.) at common law; (II.) under statutes and by-laws: (a) statutes; (b) by-laws; (III.) form of proxy; (IV.) when and for what purpose a proxy may be used; (V.) rejection of proxy by inspectors; (VI.) revocation of proxy; (VII.) directors voting by proxy; (VIII.) miscellaneous matters. 844

Issuing stock for property purchased 264

Fraud of promoters in obtaining subscription to stock 63

Fraud in procuring subscriptions to stock. 263

Restricting transfer of stock by by-law. 429

Preference among creditors of. 880

Forfeiture of charter. 743

COSTS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 16.

1. The relator in proceedings in the nature of quo warranto will not be required to give 29 L. R. A.

additional security for costs on the ground that the security given is insolvent where the evidence in support of the motion only shows that according to the tax records of the county the security has only $320 of taxable property. Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.) 743

2. An irregularity in commencing a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation before giving security for costs is waived, where such security is subsequently given, and the respondent files a demurrer and motion to quash and afterwards its pleas, and no motion to dismiss on that ground is made until nearly a year after the commencement of the action, when the case comes on for hearing. Id.

8. The costs of a resale of railroad property after foreclosure cannot be allowed to a judgment creditor who was not made a party to the foreclosure suit, if nothing remains for him out of the proceeds after paying the superior liens, including those set up in the foreclosure suit. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 438

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Costs; as to payment in coin. 593

COTENANTS. See also IMPROVEMENTS, 1; PARTITION.

1. The liability of a joint tenant or tenant in common to account to his cotenants under W. Va. Code, chap. 100, § 14, for receiving more than his just share or proportion of the benefits, does not apply to coparceners. Ward v. Ward (W. Va.) 449

2. A coparcener merely from sole occupation of the premises is not chargeable in favor of other coparceners, unless he excludes them. Id.

8. The right to compel joint tenants, tenants in common or coparceners to contribute to necessary repairs, applies only to mills and houses, and not to fences or other repairs to the property. Id.

4. The right of a joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener to compel others to contribute to necessary repairs, exists only as to future repairs made, after request to assist and refusal. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability of cotenants for improvements and repairs:—(I.) improvements: (a) liability at common law; (b) liability in assumpsit for improvements; (c) rule in equity; (d) lien for improvements; (e) interest on improvements; (f) position of grantees of cotenant's share; (II.) repairs: (a) general doctrine; (b) liability in assumpsit; (c) necessity of a demand and notice; (d) lien for repairs. 449

COUNTERCLAIM. See SET-OFF, ETC.

COUNTERFEIT. See INDICTMENT, ETC., 8; TRADE-MARK, 8.

COUNTIES. See also MANDAMUS, 2.

1. The constitutional provision that money raised by county taxes should not be used for other than county purposes is not violated by

Fla. Acts 1891, chap. 4014, § 17, providing that half the funds raised for county roads and bridges shall be turned over to municipal authorities for town or city streets. Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 416

3. Suit for the refunding of an illegal tax cannot be maintained against the county until the claim has been presented to the board of supervisors, under a statute providing that that board shall direct the treasurer to refund illegal taxes. Bibbins v. Clark (Iowa) 278

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Counties; use of funds for county purposes. 418

COURTS. See also LIS PENDENS.

1. The mere fact that opinions are prepared by the commissioner of the supreme court of Nebraska is no indication that such cases have not been examined by the judges; but all questions of law, and, so far as practicable, questions of fact, are considered by each of the judges and commissioners, and opinions are invariably submitted for examination and criticism by the entire membership of the court. Randall v. National Bldg. L. & P. Union (Neb.) 183

2. It is the province of the courts to determine whether a statute purporting to be an exercise of the police power of the state, but taking away the property of a citizen or interfering with his personal liberty, is an appropriate measure for the promotion of the comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

3. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to a state court, where a stay bond is executed after levy on a judgment, is not interfered with by an action the purpose of which is in effect to vacate the levy. Central Trust Co. v. Moran (Minn.) 212

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; rule as to declaring statutes void. 89-97

COVENANT. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1.

1. The intention of the parties to a covenant respecting real property is the controlling element in determining—at least on a bill of equity—whether or not the covenant shall bind subsequent owners of the property. Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (Pa.) 428

2. An obligation to pay a portion of the expense of the repairs to a dam is not created by a stipulation in a deed that the grantee shall pay a part of the sums which have to be paid for flowage or damages to proprietors of lands above the dam. Whitenton Mfg. Co. v. Staples (Mass.) 500

3. An obligation in the nature of a servitude upon an estate conveyed with a water privilege may be enforced, without any personal obligation of the owner, under a stipulation that the grantee, his heirs and assigns, shall pay a certain part of the sums paid for flowage or damages to the proprietors of land above a reservoir. Id.

29 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Covenants; running with land. 493

CREDITORS' BILL. See also ATTACHMENT, 1.

The satisfaction or discharge of a judgment may be shown as a defense against a creditors' bill to enforce the judgment after revival on scire facias, as well as to defeat the revival. Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 782

CRIMINAL LAW. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 3.

Sentence in a criminal case may lawfully be suspended at the pleasure of the court, and the court's power over an accused is not affected or lost by an order to pay costs, both of himself and a codefendant, or even by committing him for refusal to do so, since the requirement to pay costs is not part of the sentence. State v. Crook (N. C.) 260

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; constitutional protection against being forced to furnish evidence to be used against one's self in a civil case:—(I.) provisions against self-accusation: (a) limitation to criminal proceedings; (b) application to proceedings for penalties and forfeitures; (c) general doctrine as to evidence against one's self; (d) the contrary doctrine; (e) parties in interest; (II.) unreasonable searches and seizures; (III.) right of trial by jury; (IV.) due process of law; (V.) distinction between civil and criminal or penal proceedings. 811

Innocent violation of statute 715

CRIMINATION OF SELF. See CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CROSS-BILL. See PLEADING, 10, 11.

CUSTOM. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3; EVIDENCE, 23, 24.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Custom; as part of contract. 220

DAMAGES.

1. Exemplary damages may be recovered by a passenger for an ejection which was malicious as well as wrongful. Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa) 173

2. A passenger is not called upon to submit to a wrongful ejection for the purpose of economizing the damages to be recovered, but may make any resistance not amounting to a criminal disturbance of the peace. Id.

3. Damages for detention of a boat by obstruction of navigation, where other means of transportation were not provided, will not include the cost of loading and unloading and of damage to the cargo by exposure after unloading. Farmers' Co-Op. Mfg. Co. v. Abemarle & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 700

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; right to make exemplary. 530

DAMS. See COVENANT, 2; EASEMENTS, 1; TAXES, 2.

DECEIT. See FRAUD.

DEED. See also CLOUD ON TITLE; FERRIES, 6; MAXIMS, 1, 2.

The releasee in a quitclaim deed who purchases in good faith and for full consideration will be protected in Connecticut from secret unrecorded encumbrances on the property. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 582

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deed; conveying appurtenances. 53

DEFINITIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18; TAXES, 10, 14.

DELEGATION OF POWER. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 1.

DEPOSITIONS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

1. One killing his ancestor for an estate which would naturally come to him under the statutes of descent and distribution may take it under a constitution prohibiting attainders working corruption of blood and forfeiture of estate, and statutes providing no penalty for murder except death by hanging. Carpenter's Appeal (Pa.) 145

2. Brothers and sisters of the half blood are included in a statutory provision for descent to brothers and sisters, unless a contrary intention appears. Anderson v. Bell (Ind.) 541

3. Inheritance is not confined to brothers and sisters of the half blood to the exclusion of descendants of deceased ones, by a statute which excludes the half-blood kindred from inheriting an estate which came to the intestate by gift, devise, or descent from an ancestor, unless they are of the blood of such ancestor, if there are any of his blood. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Descent and distribution; among kindred of the half blood:—(I.) the common-law doctrine; (II.) in the United States; (III.) meaning of the words: (a) in general; (b) ancestor; (c) blood; (d) brothers and sisters; (IV.) no distinction between the whole and half blood; (V.) in the case of ancestral estates; (VI.) when the statute not express; (VII.) cases wherein the whole blood is preferred; (VIII.) when half blood preferred to remote relative of the whole blood; (IX.) when half blood take half portions; (X.) shifting descents; (XI.) equitable conversion. 541

Right of murderer to inherit. 146

DESCRIPTION. See EASEMENTS, 1.

DISCOUNT. See USURY, 3.

DISCOVERY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Discovery; as affected by constitutional provision against self-crimination. 811
20 L. R. A.

DUE PROCESS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17, 18, 20-22.

DYNAMITE. See EVIDENCE, 16; EXPLOSION, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

EASEMENTS. See also COVENANT, 3.

1. A servitude by prescription charging property with the payment of a portion of the expense of repairs to a dam from which a water power is furnished to the premises is created, where for more than fifty years an annual contribution by the owner of the servient estate has been paid as a duty and collected by the other party as a right. Whittenton Mfr. Co. v. Staples (Mass.) 500

2. A purchaser of a tract of land 40 feet wide and on which is a building 11 feet wide from land retained by the grantor, with a bay window 5 feet from such land, does not obtain by implied grant the right to the light which the building will receive from the unconveyed portion, as against a subsequent purchaser for value of the remaining land. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 583

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easement; when implied. 533

EIGHT HOUR LAW. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10, 15, 24; MASTER AND SERVANT, 1; STATUTES, 8.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS. See RAILROADS, 2; STREET RAILWAYS.

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also INJUNCTION, 3.

1. The use of water for irrigating purposes contemplated by Neb. Act March 27, 1889, is a "public use" for which private property may be condemned without the owner's consent. Paxton & H. Irrig. Co. & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (Neb.) 853

2. Lands owned by corporations as well as by natural persons are included within Neb. Act March 27, 1889, art. 1, § 8, providing that no tract of land shall be crossed by more than one irrigating ditch without the consent of the "owners thereof." Id.

3. Irrigating companies organized under the laws of the state have power to acquire by condemnation the right of way for necessary canals, reservoirs, etc., under Neb. Act March 27, 1889, art. 2, § 8, providing that such corporations may acquire a right of way for such purposes over any land. Id.

4. The right of an owner whose property is condemned for public use, to a jury trial upon the question of damages, guaranteed by S. D. Const. art. 6, § 18, providing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation as determined by a jury, is preserved by the Dakota Compiled Laws relating to the subject of assessing damages, § 1324 of which provides for an appeal and a jury trial if the parties cannot agree or the owner is dissatisfied with the award made by the supervisors. Dell Rapids v. Irving (S. D.) 861

5. The use of a street for other than legitmate street purposes, which constitutes any impairment of or interference with the easements of an abutting owner, is a taking of his property within the meaning of the constitution. Willamette Iron Works Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 88

6. No portion of a public street can lawfully be appropriated to the exclusive and permanent use of a private corporation, under the guise of an exercise of power to alter or change the grade. Id.

7. Any structure on a street, which is subversive of and repugnant to its use and efficiency as a public thoroughfare, is not a legitimate street use, and imposes a new servitude on the rights of abutting owners, for which compensation must be made. Id.

8. A solid structure 80 feet wide erected in the middle of a street 66 feet wide and curving so as to leave on one side a passageway only 8 feet wide, built as an approach to a toll bridge owned by a private corporation, not forming a part of or extension of any public highway, although authorized by the legislature and city authorities, can lawfully be made only on payment of damages to the abutting owner. Id.

9. Erections upon a public street impose no additional servitude where they aid and facilitate its use for the purposes of travel and transportation. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (Ill.) 485

10. The question whether a new method of using a street for public travel results in the imposition of an additional burden upon the fee must be determined by the use which such method makes of the street, and not by the motive power which it employs in such use. Id.

11. The permission to a street-railway company to lay its tracks in a street already appropriated to public use is not a grant of the right to appropriate an additional easement in the soil of the street, but the construction of such road is merely a mode of facilitating existing travel, and of modifying or changing the existing public use, adding an additional mode of conveyance to those already upon the street, and inflicting no damage upon the owner of the fee of the street. Id.

12. A railroad company owning the fee of the street at the point where the street is crossed by its tracks is not entitled to compensation as for an additional burden, upon the construction of street-railway tracks along the street under permission from the city, where its own tracks are not injured. Id.

13. The interest of a street railway company in the street upon which its tracks are laid, although a valuable one, is part of the public easement in the street, accessory and ancillary to the existing right in the public of passing over the street. Id.

14. A railroad company which by city ordinances has acquired a permanent easement in streets crossed by its tracks is not entitled to compensation for the crossing of such tracks by a street railway laid along the street under permission from the city, as such easement is in subordination to the right of the public to pass along the streets, and the propelling of street cars is only a form of the exercise by the public of such right of passage, and does not operate as an infringement upon such easement. Id.

See also RAILROADS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; right of railroad company to compensation for laying street railway across railroad track on a street crossing. 485

What purposes are public for exercise of. 854

ESTOPPEL.

1. A city does not, by an appropriation and payment of its revenue for many years in violation of the constitution, estop itself to assert that it is prohibited in future from making such payment. Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (Ill.) 798

2. Acquiescence for nearly three years in the annexation of one's land to a city will prevent his questioning the validity of the annexation, —at least when the attack is based on mere irregularities and informalities not affecting jurisdiction. Kuhn v. Port Townsend (Wash.) 445

3. The owner of a wagon who permits the name and occupation of another person who is in possession of it to be painted thereon, for the purpose of inducing the public to believe that it belongs to and is used by the latter in his business, cannot assert ownership against an innocent purchaser from the person who had it and whose name was on it. O'Connor v. Clark (Pa.) 607

EVIDENCE.

Judicial notice.

1. Courts may take judicial notice of long-prevailing construction of a statute by executive officers. Blocham v. Consumers' E. L. & Street R. Co. (Fla.) 507

2. The court will take judicial notice that a street-railway company is a common carrier of passengers. Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.) 297

3. It is a matter of common knowledge that natural gas will not explode spontaneously without some agency acting upon it. McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 855

4. It is a matter of common knowledge that race-courses are visited by invited spectators, who drive into the grounds in their own carriages or other vehicles under the control of themselves or their own drivers. Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.) 492

5. The jury must determine the facts in the case from testimony given by witnesses, and not from their own judgment or experience or knowledge. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

Presumptions and burden of proof.

6. In a suit upon a contract made and to be executed in another state, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court will presume that the rules of the common law prevail there. Patillo v. Alexander (Ga.) 616

7. A person seeking to establish title to an office against another in possession of it has the burden of proving his right thereto. Tullman v. Otter (Ky.) 110

8. The burden of proof to show that, notwithstanding a substantial compliance with the California statutes as to the care of ballots, they have been tampered with, or have been exposed under such circumstances that a violation of them might have taken place, resting upon one objecting to their admission as evidence, is not discharged by simply showing that it was possible for a person to have molested them. Tebbe v. Smith (Cal.) 678

9. Funds in the hands of a trustee who has become insolvent, which are less than the amount of the trust funds, are presumed to belong to the trust. State v. Foster (Wyo.) 226

10. The burden is on the seller to show the purchaser's inability to carry out his contract, in order to avoid the payment of the broker's fees, where he accepted him without any misrepresentation or suppression of knowledge by the broker as to the purchaser's financial ability. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (S. C.) 215

11. No presumption that grade crossings expressly authorized by a special statute were intended to be subject to the general law requiring approval of the railroad commissioners can arise from the mere fact that they are numerous, while the general policy of the law has been to restrict such crossings, if the act does not increase the total number, and indicates that they will be temporary because of the possible elevation of the track. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 867

12. The burden of proof is upon a city in an action for the value of property destroyed by it as a nuisance without first condemning the same, to show that its destruction was really necessary to the public health or safety. Savannah v. Mulligan (Ga.) 808

13. An accident to a person waiting for a street car, who is struck by the sudden switching of the car upon a side track, does not make a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the carrier. Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.) 297

14. Negligence of the person conducting a public exhibition of horse racing cannot be presumed from the mere fact that a spectator was injured by a runaway horse while within the place reserved for spectators. Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.) 492

15. The burning of a house through fire set from the sparks of a firepot placed upon its roof by workmen engaged in repairing it will be presumed to have been caused by their negligence. Shafer v. Looock (Pa.) 254

16. An explosion of nitro-glycerine in process of manufacture into dynamite raises a presumption of negligence, in the absence of any explanation of the real cause of the explosion. Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.) 718

17. A plaintiff must be presumed to have caused an explosion of natural gas by his own act, where his complaint against a gas company for the explosion does not charge the company with any negligence except in failing to cut off the supply, and does not make any allegation as to the cause of the explosion. McJahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 335 Documentary.

18. A certificate of the clerk that he has mailed a notice of scire facias addressed to the defendant, which under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 23, § 12, is declared to be evidence, is prima facie evidence that the notice so sent by mail was received. Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 73

19. A recital in a judgment that due proof was made is at least prima facie evidence of that fact. Id.

20. As against strangers thereto a receipt is incompetent evidence of the payment thereby acknowledged, for as against them it is but the hearsay declaration of the party who signed it, made without opportunity for his cross-examination, and independently of his oath. Ellison v. Albright (Neb.) 737

Parol.

21. Parol evidence is admissible to ascertain the intention of the parties, where one who is not a party to a promissory note signs his name upon the back of it. Peterson v. Ruedi (Minn.) 613

22. Evidence of a contemporaneous agreement by a wife to procure a divorce from her husband is inadmissible to defeat recovery by her upon a written agreement valid upon its face for the release of her dower rights in real property of the husband, where she has performed the written agreement upon her part, which of itself constitutes a consideration for the undertaking of the other party, and after such agreement she resumed marital relations with her husband, although such an agreement would be admissible if the action were upon a bond, bill, or note, to prove that the consideration was unlawful. Irvin v. Irvin (Pa.) 293

23. Liability for brokerage upon a contract for the sale of a certain quantity of a commodity, "seller paying brokerage at 10 cents per ton," cannot be reduced by proof of a custom to pay brokerage only on the amount actually delivered. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (S. C.) 215

24. Evidence of custom and usage is not admissible to explain or vary the terms of an express contract, whether written or verbal, unambiguous in its terms, unless to show the meaning of certain terms used in the contract, which by well-established custom or long usage have acquired a meaning different from that which they primarily bear. Id.

Declarations.

25. Evidence of a conversation which occurred in defendant's absence is not rendered admissible against him by the fact that it would tend to contradict statements made by defendant's counsel in his opening statement to the jury. Munser v. Stern (Mich.) 839

26. That both defendants jointly sued for alienating a husband's affections, and who are shown to have acted in concert, were not present at a conversation with one of them respecting an inducement held out to the husband, will not prevent the admission of the evidence of such conversation. Price v. Price (Iowa) 150

27. Evidence of conversations between a husband and his father, and between the latter and the wife's father, may be proved in an action for alienating the husband's affections, in order to show the weight and probable effect of a property inducement held out to him to abandon her. Id.

28. Evidence that a grantor of a part of a tract of land told a grantee that a well nearly on the boundary line, but on the land not conveyed, "belonged to" and "would be sold" with the land conveyed, is inadmissible to show the legal effect of the deed as against a subsequent purchaser of the remaining land. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 582

29. Declarations of the workmen of one employed in repairing a house which is burned during such employment, as to the cause of the fire, are admissible to charge him with liability when made while the fire is in progress. Shafer v. Lacook (Pa.) 254

Relevancy; weight.

30. The right to prove the good character of an accused is properly confined to a few years previous to the crime, without allowing proof of his reputation long before, in boyhood days. State v. Barr (Wash.) 154

31. Evidence that it is practicable to place railings about the top of tenders to increase their capacity, and that this was not done in the case in hand, is admissible on the question of negligence in loading a tender so that coal fell from it and injured the plaintiff. Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson (Neb.) 187

32. Permanent lung trouble need not be specifically alleged to admit proof of it in an action for damages for personal injuries, if the injuries are alleged to be permanent and the evidence shows that the lung trouble would probably result from the injury received. Montgomery v. Lansing City Elec. R. Co. (Mich.) 287

33. An answer under oath has no greater force as evidence than the bill, under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 22, § 20, where the bill waives the oath. Biakerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 783

34. A provision in a judgment for a specific sum of money, with interest, that it be paid in United States gold coin, does not constitute it a variance from a declaration describing the judgment as for a certain number of dollars or for money simply,—especially where the complaint upon which it was rendered describes the note upon which the suit was brought as notes for the payment of so many dollars, and not so many dollars in United States gold coin, and the judgment was one by default. Belford v. Woodward (Ill.) 593

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CRIMINAL LAW.

Evidence; presumption of negligence.

256, 298

Burden of proof as to negligence.

493

Burden of proof and evidence generally in respect to negligence in escape and explosion of gas.

842

Burden of proof as to excessive force.

580

To overthrow written contract.

55

Parol, as to writing.

298, 612

29 L. R. A.

Of repairs after accident.

138

Declarations of employéa.

256

Receipt as evidence of payment as against third parties: (I.) ordinary receipts: (a) not admissible; (b) admissible; (II.) receipts in deeds.

737

EXCEPTION. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1-4.

EXECUTION. See also JUDICIAL SALE, 2.

A levy on a portion of the property of a railroad company is not valid under Minn. Gen. Laws 1888, chap. 56, §§ 1-3, as against mortgagees of the property as to whom the road, rolling-stock, and personal property constitute an entirety, but the remedy of creditors in such a case must be against the property as an entirety. Central Trust Co. v. Moran (Minn.) 219

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also INTEREST, 3; TRUSTS, 1.

1. The mere fact that a debtor to the estate has the legal title to a piece of land does not show that a compromise with him by an executor of a claim due the estate was improper. Re Ricker's Estate (Mont.) 623

2. An executor may lawfully be allowed his commissions on the disbursements of the year on his accounting at the close of the year. Re Ricker's Estate (Mont.) 623

3. Compelling a person to disclose his possession of any property of a decedent's estate, or his knowledge concerning such estate, on penalty of imprisonment for refusal, in proceedings on behalf of the estate, being a remedial, and not a penal, proceeding, is not within the constitutional provisions against making any person a witness against himself in a criminal action, and against unreasonable searches and seizures. Levy v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 811

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors; liability of, for compound interest.

623

EXPLOSION. See also EVIDENCE, 3, 16, 17; GAS, 2.

1. The duty of keeping natural gas under control while it is being transported is imposed by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 8561a, and damages resulting to others without their fault by its explosion while being thus transported by a gas company will make such company liable therefor, although not negligent in regard thereto. Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (Ohio) 837

2. The risk of damages from an explosion in a dynamite factory is not assumed by conveying land for use in that business, and by continuing to carry on business near by after one explosion has occurred. Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.) 718

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Explosion; liability for explosion of gas. 337
Negligence in the manufacture and storage of gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, and other explosives:—(I.) general doctrine; (II.) the effect of city ordinances; (III.) negligence in the manufacture; (IV.) negligence in the storage. 718

FENCE. See RAILROADS, 1.

FERRIES.

1. A railroad company owning a ferry franchise, which runs a ferry as part of its line, cannot, while operating the rest of its line, discontinue the ferry because it is not profitable, and refuse to obey a legislative requirement to operate it. Brownell v. Old Colony R. Co. (Mass.) 169

2. Duty to operate a ferry under a franchise may be specifically enforced by a suit in court authorized by statute; and forfeiture of the charter is not the only remedy. Id.

3. An order by the court to operate a ferry may be, in the first instance, to provide a suitable ferry, without definitely deciding what kind of a ferry is suitable. Id.

4. Acquiescence by the state in the abandonment of a ferry is not shown by mere failure of officers to take action to compel its operation. Id.

5. The enforcement of a penalty due to the state under Mass. Stat. 1894, chap. 892, for failure to operate a ferry, cannot be had in a suit on petition of individuals to compel the operation of the ferry. Id.

6. Special mention of a ferry franchise is not necessary to convey it, in a transfer of a railroad of which the ferry is practically an extension. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ferry; franchise of; duty to operate. 169

FIRE. See also COMMERCE, 1; CONTRACTS, 8; EVIDENCE, 15; TRIAL, 8.

A statute requiring screens "of the best approved kind, shown by experience to be proper and suitable for protection from fire," to be used on vessels burning wood, is not unreasonable and imposes no greater burden than the common-law rule in most states imposes in the case of railroad locomotives. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

FISHERIES. See also BOUNDARIES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fisheries; state regulation of. 715

FORFEITURE. See also BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 7, 8; CORPORATIONS, 15, 16.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Forfeiture; of payments to loan association, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Compulsory evidence against one's self in case of. 818

FRANCHISE. See also CORPORATIONS, 15, 16; FERRIES; TAXES, 8-12.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Franchise; compelling operation of. 169

29 L. R. A.

FRAUD. See also CORPORATIONS, 14; SALE, 4-6.

1. Intentional fraud, as distinguished from mere breach of duty or omission to use due care, is an essential factor in an action for deceit. Kountze v. Kennedy (N. Y.) 360

2. A representation upon which an action for fraud can be based must be false, material, and made knowing it was false, or recklessly made not knowing or caring whether it was true or false. Id.

3. A misrepresentation designed to influence the conduct of another and upon which he acts to his prejudice, if honestly made believing it to be true, cannot create liability to an action for deceit. Id.

4. The omission of a claim then in litigation from a statement of the entire assets and liabilities of a corporation, which is made by the president of the company, but not stated or understood to be made upon his personal knowledge, does not make him liable for fraud and deceit to a person purchasing bonds of the company on the faith of such statement, where the president believed and had reasonable cause to believe that the claim was not valid or enforceable against the company. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; liability for misrepresentations made in good faith. 361

GAME LAWS. See also CARRIERS, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Game laws; innocent violation of. 715

GAS. See also EVIDENCE, 3; EXPLOSION, 1; HIGHWAYS, 1; PLEADING, 6.

1. A company actually using natural gas which flows through a pipe over a highway crossing cannot escape liability for the dangerous condition of poorly jointed and leaking pipes, because the contractor who laid them has not yet formally turned over the plant to the company or fully completed his contract. Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. Leap (Ind.) 343

2. The acts on previous occasions of a person injured by an explosion of natural gas in defective pipes may be taken into account in determining his contributory negligence by showing his experience and knowledge of the danger,—especially when previous disturbances of the pipes are charged to have been the occasion of the explosion. Id.

3. Conducting natural gas at high pressure through poorly jointed pipes with numerous leaks, lying loose upon the ground where the public, including children and other inexperienced persons, daily pass,—especially when it is laid on a public highway in violation of law,—constitutes actionable negligence. Id.

4. An ordinance limiting the price to be charged for gas furnished to private consumers is, in the absence of legislative authority, invalid,—at least as affecting a gas company which has obtained consent to the use of streets without any condition imposed except as to the rates to be charged for public buildings. Re Pryor (Kan.) 396

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gas; liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas:—(I.) general doctrine governing such actions; (II.) legislative and municipal control; (III.) evidence: (a) in general; (b) burden of proof; (c) expert testimony; (d) sufficient to establish negligence; (e) insufficient to establish negligence; (IV.) contributory negligence; (V.) questions for and instructions to the jury; (VI.) effect of contributing causes; (VII.) effect of negligence of third person; (VIII.) act of fellow servant; (IX.) the question of notice; (X.) as between landlord and tenant; (XI.) rights of the owner of the reversion; (XII.) effect of, upon insurance; (XIII.) gas generated by accident; (XIV.) right of action over. 387

GOLD. See also BONDS, 5; JUDGMENT, 1, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gold; contract to pay in, see CONTRACTS.

GOVERNOR.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executive function of appointment. 113

GUARANTY. See CONTRACTS, 3.

GUN. See HOMICIDE.

GUNPOWDER. See EXPLOSION, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

HEALTH. See also NUISANCES, 1.

A resolution of the state board of health without limitation or restriction, that no pig-pen shall be built or maintained within 100 feet of any street or inhabited house, is not a reasonable and legitimate exercise of the power conferred by Vt. Acts 1886, No. 93, § 6, and Vt. Acts 1892, No. 82, § 11, providing that the board shall have authority to promulgate and enforce such regulations for the better preservation of the public health in contagious and epidemic diseases, and regarding the causes which tend to their development and spread, as it shall judge necessary. State v. Speyer (Vt.) 578

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Health; regulations to preserve. 574

HIGHWAYS. See also BICYCLES; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 22; COUNTIES, 1; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5-14; STATUTES, 15; TELEGRAPH.

1. Pipes for natural gas cannot be lawfully laid on the surface of a highway. Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. Leap (Ind.) 842

2. An abutting proprietor is entitled to the use of the street in front of his premises to its full width, as means of ingress and egress and for light and air; and this right is as much property as the soil within the boundaries of his lot. Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 88

3. The vacation of a part of a public street constituting a thoroughfare across a railroad track, and the erection of a viaduct in another place, damages a land owner whose property is left upon a blind court, otherwise than in the same manner as the general public, and entitles him to damages, although his property did not abut upon the vacated portion of the street, but only touched it at one corner. Chicago v. Burcky (Ill.) 563

4. The right of a land owner to damages from the vacation of a portion of a street so as to leave his property upon a blind court is not affected by his subsequent opening of a street which separates his property from the vacated portion of the original street, as his rights are fixed at the time of closing the street. Id.

5. The facts that the tracks of a railroad company are laid across city streets, and its freight and passenger cars are permitted by the city to pass over such streets upon such tracks, give the company no exclusive use of the crossing, but only a use to be enjoyed in common with the public. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (Ill.) 485
See also EMINENT DOMAIN.

6. A constitutional provision against a "levying of taxes by the poll" is not violated by a statute which was substantially in force when the constitution was adopted, compelling able-bodied male residents between twenty and fifty years of age to labor two days at least annually in repairing the roads, with the privilege of furnishing a substitute or paying 75 cents per day instead. Short v. State (Md.) 404

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; vacation of part as injury to abutting owner. 569

Structure injuring abutting owners. 89

Legislative power as to use of. 89-97

HOMICIDE. See also DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; INDIOTMENT, ETC., 2.

The right to fix a loaded gun in a building so that it will be discharged on forcing open the front door, and kill a person attempting to enter is a question of fact or mixed fact and law for the jury. State v. Barr (Wash.) 154

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homicide; by means of spring gun, trap, or other dangerous instrument killing trespasser. 154

HORSE RACING. See also EVIDENCE, 4, 14; PLEADING, 5.

1. Grounds on which a public exhibition of horse racing is given, to which the public are invited, must be kept in a reasonably safe and suitable condition for the spectators. Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.) 492

2. Permitting a horse to run in a race knowing it to be dangerous and unsafe by reason of a vicious habit of track bolting, without warning a woman engaged to ride in the same race, of the character of the horse, of which she is ignorant, renders an agricultural society which is promoting, controlling, and conducting the race liable to her for injuries caused by the bolting of such horse during the race. Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (Minn.) 708.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Horse race; negligence in conduct of. 708

HOTEL. See INNKEEPERS.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also INFANTS.

Wrongfully depriving a wife of the affection, companionship, and society of her husband, gives her a right of action for damages, under Iowa Code, § 2311, which authorizes a wife to maintain actions "for the preservation and protection of her rights and property as if unmarried." Price v. Price (Iowa) 150

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; action for alienation of affection. 150

Support of children after divorce. 678

IMPROVEMENTS. See also COTENANTS, 8.

1. A coparcener allowed for improvements may be charged by way of set-off for use and occupation. Ward v. Ward (W. Va.) 449

2. Permanent improvements made by one coparcener are chargeable to the others personally or upon their shares in the land, only when made by their request or agreement. Id.

INDEX. See also REAL PROPERTY, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Index; as part of records. 775

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

1. The parts of a book which are obscene, indecent, and impure, when the whole book is not so, must be described or referred to in an indictment so specifically that they can be identified by the evidence, if they are not set out according to their tenor because unfit to appear on the record. Com. v. McCance, (Mass.) 61

2. An information charging that defendant purposely killed a person named is not insufficient because there was no intent to kill any particular person, but merely to kill any one who might attempt to enter a certain building, under a statute requiring the fact to be stated, but making an information sufficient against such an attack unless the defendant could be misled to his injury. State v. Barr (Wash.) 154

3. Exclusive ownership of a label need not be alleged in an information under a statute making it a misdemeanor to vend or keep for sale goods upon which any forged, imitation, or counterfeit label shall be placed to represent the goods as those of some other person, association, or union of workmen. State v. Bishop (Mo.) 200

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; setting out obscene language. 61

INFANTS. See also NEGLIGENCE, 1; TRIAL, 4, 5.

A woman cannot recover from her former husband for necessities furnished their children, of whom she was given the custody in a decree of divorce based on her fault, without any order respecting their maintenance, unless he has promised to pay for such necessities or requested that they be furnished. Fulton v. Fulton (Ohio) 678

INFORMERS.

One who did not contribute to the construction or maintenance of a sidewalk which he has a right to use may be an informer for unlawfully riding a bicycle on the sidewalk, the penalty for which is for the use of a school district. Com. v. Forrest (Pa.) 365

INJUNCTION. See also WATERS, 6.

1. A court of equity will never lend its aid, by injunction, to restrain the libeling or slandering of title to property, where there is no breach of trust or contract right involved. Reyes v. Middleton (Fla.) 68

2. Injunctions which are in substance mandatory—that is, requiring some act to be done—may be granted by the courts in proper cases. Central Trust Co. v. Moran (Minn.) 212

3. Opportunity to acquire the easement of an abutting owner by agreement or condemnation may be given before making an injunction mandatory against an unauthorized approach of a bridge which is in daily use by a large number of electric cars, wagons, and foot passengers. Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 88

4. A temporary injunction mandatory in substance, although it may be granted in a proper case under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 68, tit. 11, ought not to be granted, except under peculiar circumstances, and where it is clear that plaintiff will have a final decree and the court can impose such conditions that defendant shall sustain no detriment. Central Trust Co. v. Moran (Minn.) 212

5. An injunction will not lie at the suit of an abutting owner who does not own the fee to restrain the laying of a street railway in the street, as the damages which he may suffer are merely consequential. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (Ill.) 485

6. An injunction against constructing a trolley road across a steam-railroad track at grade, the effect of which will be dangerous to passengers, cannot be defeated on the ground that it will be simply an injunction against trespassers or involves simply a claim for damages. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 367

7. A consumer may enjoin a city which has undertaken to furnish water to its inhabitants from shutting off his supply for the purpose of coercing payment of an old claim against him, after it has accepted the rates and furnished water for subsequent periods. Wood v. Auburn (Me.) 376

8. The use of the words "U. S. Dental Rooms" and of the letters "U. S." upon the windows of a dental office may be enjoined at the suit of one who has adopted them as a trade-name against another who by their use is plainly attempting to convey the idea that he is carrying on a branch of the former's business, and so profit from his advertising and business reputation. Cady v. Schultz (R. I.) 524

9. An injunction to restrain a levy on part of the property of a railroad may be granted in favor of mortgagees of the whole property, under Minn. Gen. Laws 1868, chap. 56, §§ 1-8, which make all the property of the company an entirety as to mortgagees. Central Trust Co. v. Moran (Minn.) 212

10. A grantee of a part of a tract of land, who is told by the grantor that a well on the boundary line, partially on the land un conveyed, will go with the part sold, is not entitled to an injunction against covering such well with a building, where he has never used it since his purchase, and it has been covered with a flagstone all that time, and pipes connecting it with his buildings are entirely on his land. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 582

11. A decree enjoining the erection of any building on defendant's property "so near as to exclude the light" from plaintiff's dwelling house is bad for indefiniteness. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; against taxes. 507
Against structure in street. 89

INNKEEPERS.

A hotel keeper is not liable for the theft by his night clerk, from the hotel safe, of money of a regular boarder who has lived in the house for some months, if ordinary care and diligence were used in the employment of the clerk. Taylor v. Downey (Mich.) 92

INSOLVENCY. See also BANKS, 4-6; PARTNERSHIP.

1. The right of a state or municipality, if any exists, to priority or preference of payment from an insolvent's estate, cannot be asserted after a general assignment for creditors, which passes the title. State v. Foster (Wyo.) 226

2. A statute providing for the release of a claim in full by a creditor who accepts a dividend under an assignment cannot apply to the state or a municipality, under a constitutional provision that such liability can be extinguished only by payment into the proper treasury. Id.

3. A deed of trust by an insolvent corporation is not void as matter of law from the fact that the directors vote themselves preferences in payment of debt. Schufeldt v. Smith (Mo.) 890

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also PARTNERSHIP.

Insolvency; extraterritorial effect of. 164

Priority of state or United States in payment from assets of a debtor:—(I.) scope of note generally; (II.) priority of United States: (a) upon what based; (b) constitutionality of provisions for; (c) superiority over state laws; 29 L. R. A.

(d) construction and scope of: (1) generally; (2) who are debtors of the United States; (3) what debts are within the statute; (4) what constitutes insolvency; (5) sufficiency of assignment to confer priority; (6) sufficiency of attachment to confer priority; (e) when and to what it attaches; (f) nature and extent; (g) marshaling assets; (h) liability of assignee or representative; (i) subrogation of sureties; (j) what amounts to a divestiture of the right; (k) how asserted; (III.) priority of the states: (a) upon what based; (b) constitutionality of provisions for; (c) nature and extent; (d) to what indebtedness it applies; (e) subrogation of surety making payment; (f) when it attaches and how divested; (IV.) priority of claims for taxes. 226

INSURANCE. See also CONFLICT of LAWS, 8.

1. The failure of an insurance company of another state to comply with the statutory prerequisites to the right to do business does not prevent such company from enforcing a claim for premiums due for insurance, although the corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a penalty by reason of the insurance. State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brinkley State & H. Co. (Ark.) 712

2. The right to recover unearned premiums on the termination of insurance in a mutual company does not exist until the dues or liabilities which the insured may be liable to pay under the charter and by-laws of the organization can be ascertained and deducted, where the charter provides for withdrawal by notice and "paying all dues and liabilities." Id.

3. Smoked meats taken from a smokehouse to a storage-room as fast as they are cured are contents of the smokehouse within the meaning of a policy in separate sums upon a butcher-shop and its contents, and the smokehouse and its contents, where it was the understanding of the parties that the smoked meats taken out of the smokehouse for storage were properly insured as contents of the smokehouse; and recovery may be had therefor when burned with the butcher-shop, although the smokehouse is not burned. Graybill v. Penn Twp. Mut. F. Ins. Assn. (Pa.) 55

4. A policy of insurance on a building and various articles of personal property therein, separately valued, is not forfeited as to the personal property by virtue of a lack of title to the land, under a provision that the entire policy shall be void if the "subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple," since the building is not alone the subject of insurance. Bills v. Hibernia Ins. Co. (Tex.) 706

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; by foreign corporation. 712
Construction of policy. 55

INTEREST.

1. The allowance of interest upon the value of property destroyed by negligence must be left to the discretion of the jury under Cal. Civ. Code, § 3238. King v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 755

2. A provision for the payment semi-annually of interest on municipal bonds at a certain per cent is unlawful, where the notice of election which the law requires to state the rate of interest names such per cent payable annually. Skinner v. Santa Rosa (Cal.) 512

8. The rate of compound interest paid by an executor on funds retained in his hands, which is more than banks would pay for a part of the time, and which has made double the income that could have been obtained by investing the money as directed by the will, will not be increased to the maximum rates at which there is evidence that money could have been loaned, with no allowance for expenses, delays, and failures.—especially where the executor has disbursed more than $50,000 during a long term of years and his accounts for the whole estate have been found correct in every item and there is no delinquency or suspicion of fraud on his part. Re Bicker's Estate (Mont.) 622

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Interest; lawfulness of taking in advance:—(I.) in discounts: (a) in general; (b) by persons other than banks; (c) on instruments other than bills and notes; (II.) in periodical payments; (III.) for what length of time allowed. 761

Liability of executors, trustees, etc., for compound interest: (I.) origin, growth, and general statement of the doctrine; (II.) principle of the allowance; (III.) option to take interest or profits; (IV.) grounds for allowance: (a) generally; (b) misconduct or gross delinquency generally; (c) use and admixture of trust fund; (d) failure or refusal to account; (e) neglect to invest; (f) improper investment; (g) unnecessarily calling in investment; (h) neglect in winding up or paying over; (i) nonperformance of trusts for accumulation; (j) neglect or violation of duty imposed by statute; (k) interest or profits made; (l) interest or profits which might have been made; (V.) who are chargeable; (VI.) jurisdiction to allow; (VII.) how computed: (a) method of computing generally; (b) upon what computed; (c) when allowance should commence; (d) rate per cent and length of rests; (e) termination of allowance; (VIII.) what sufficient to release from accountability; (IX.) effect of allowance on compensation; (X.) effect of allowance on costs. 622

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. See MORTGAGE, 6, 7.

IRRIGATION. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 1-8.

JUDGMENT. See also APPEAL AND ERROR; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20; MORTGAGE, 6, 7, 11; SET-OFF, ETC.

1. A judgment payable in United States gold coin is not within the rule that debt will not lie on any obligation except for the payment of a sum specifically certain, as calling for the payment of an unliquidated amount to be determined by the fluctuations of the gold market, but is an obligation to pay in money, or an agreement to deliver a certain weight of standard gold ascertainable by count of coins made legal tender by statute. Belford v. Woodward (Ill.) 598

29 L. R. A.

2. A default judgment ordering payment of the amount adjudged in gold coin is void as to such provision, where the complaint showed no promise to pay in coin, but is not invalid as a whole. Id.

3. A judgment of another state adjudicating a matter not presented by the pleadings or within the issues may be held invalid as to such adjudication, but valid as to other matter which the judgment record shows upon its face to be easily and naturally separable and within the issues. Id.

4. A judgment of revival in scire facias to revive a judgment, based upon notice by mail as well as by publication to a resident of the state, is prima facie valid in a collateral proceeding. Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 783

5. An affidavit in which the affiant "on oath states," but which the certificate of the notary merely states, to have been "subscribed," without saying that it was sworn to before him, on which a scire facias to revive a judgment is based, is not so defective as to defeat the judgment of revival in a collateral proceeding, where this recites that it was made on due proof. Id.

6. A judgment for a special assessment against a lot to pay for an improvement is not conclusive against the owner of the lot, who did not appear or defend in the proceeding for such judgment, so as to preclude an action by him for damages to the lot caused by removing the lateral support, and illegally cutting down the grade of the street in front of it in making the improvement for which the assessment was made. Farrell v. St. Paul (Minn.) 778

7. A judgment against a railroad company becomes a lien on its real property owned at the time of its recovery in the county where it was rendered, including lands acquired for roadway, right of way, depots, and other railroad purposes. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 438

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; form of judgment and procedure in case of liability to make payment in coin:—(I.) form of judgment: (a) on contract to pay coin; (b) on contracts for coin or equivalent; (c) for coin converted or misapplied; (d) for damages in other cases; (e) for obligations created by law; (f) for costs; (II.) pleadings and procedure. 543

Conclusiveness of. 779

Enforcement in other states. 165

JUDICIAL NOTICE. See EVIDENCE.

JUDICIAL SALE.

1. The sale of the freight house and a portion of the right of way and tracks of a railroad, although at its terminus, cannot be sustained as a mode of collecting an assessment for local improvements. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 195

2. A judgment creditor may cause the sale of all the property of a railroad company to satisfy his lien, in a proceeding in equity to which all persons interested are made parties and in which the proceeds may be properly applied, although he cannot have a sale on execution of the property to which the lien attaches, if that is part only of the corporate property and necessary in connection with the balance of the property to enable the company to discharge its public duties, or when the sale would materially impair the uses and value of the balance of the property. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 438

3. An intent to divest a tax lien is not shown by a decree for the sale of property free from mechanics', laborers', materialmen's, and other liens or encumbrances of any kind whatsoever. Bloham v. Consumers' E. L. & Street R. Co. (Fla.) 507

4. A tax lien cannot be divested by a judicial sale of property free from liens by order of the court in an action to which the state is not a party, so as to compel the state to look to the proceeds of the sale rather than the property itself for payment of the taxes. Id.

JURISDICTION. See APPEAL AND ERROR; COURTS.

JURY. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 4; EVIDENCE, 5.

LABEL. See INDICTMENT, ETC., 3; TRADE-MARK, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LABOR UNION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16, 19, 26, 27; INDICTMENT, ETC., 8; TRADE-MARK, 1-3.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. A covenant in a lease of railroad property used for warehouse purposes, relieving the company from liability for loss by fire, does not bind an agent of the lessee in charge of the property, a stranger to the lease, who stores his own property in the warehouse. King v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 755

2. The occupancy of a part of a schoolhouse as a residence by a teacher for the purpose of enabling him the better to perform his contract to teach does not make him a tenant of the school district employing him, but his occupation is that of the district. Alpine Twp. School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche (Mich.) 576

3. A person lawfully in possession of land, who holds over without right, becomes a tenant at sufferance if the owner permits him to remain a sufficient length of time to imply an intentional acquiescence in the occupancy, although his previous holding was not that of a tenant; and a consent to the occupancy, either express or presumed from lapse of time, is not essential to create that relation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord and tenant; negligence of, in respect to gas. 858

Estoppel of tenant as to title. 576

Use and occupation; school district as landlord. 577

LEASE. See CONTRACTS, 8.

LEAVE. See QUO WARRANTO, 1.

29 L. R. A.

LEGISLATURE. See OFFICERS, 2.

LEVY AND SEIZURE. See EXECUTION; INJUNCTION, 9; MORTGAGE, 13.

LIBEL. See also INJUNCTION, 1; PLEADING, 13.

1. Falsely to publish of a person that he "would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay" is libelous. Lewis v. Daily News Co. (Md.) 59

2. Where it appears from a complaint in an action for libel based on an allegation in a pleading in another action, that the defamatory allegation was wholly gratuitous, irrelevant, and immaterial, that it was well known by defendant to be false and untrue, and that it was published without cause or justification and with express malice,—it is not privileged. Sherwood v. Powell (Minn.) 153

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel; what constitutes. 59

By pleading. 153

LIBRARY. See COLLEGES.

LICENSE. See also BROKERS, 3; COMMERCE, 2, 8; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 25; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6, 7; PATENTS; PEDDLERS; STATUTES, 16.

1. An ordinance for the licensing of transient merchants is not to be regarded as discriminating against nonresidents merely because there may not be any resident merchants who are compelled to pay the license. Ottumwa v. Zekind (Iowa) 784

2. A license fee of $250 per month, or $25 per day for shorter periods, exacted from transient merchants by an ordinance, is excessive and invalid, amounting to an exercise of the taxing power rather than a police measure. Id.

3. A privilege tax on a street-car company is not within Colo. Const. art. 10, § 8, requiring "all taxes" to be uniform on the same class of subjects. Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (Colo.) 606

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also COMMERCE.

License; for business in a city; as a tax. 609

Use of funds received from. 799

Reasonableness of fee. 734

LIENS. See JUDGMENT, 7; TAXES, 17-19; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 8.

LIGHT. See EASEMENTS, 2; INJUNCTION, 11.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. A foreign contract between nonresidents may constitute a cause of action within the meaning of a statute providing that if any person liable to an action shall be absent from the state when it accrues he shall have no benefit of the statute of limitations while such absence continues. Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. (Md.) 278

2. A nonresident of the state whose obligation is sought to be enforced by another nonresident through garnishment of funds in the hands of a resident is within the provisions of a statute that any person liable to an action who is absent from the state when it accrues shall have no benefit of the statute of limitations while the absence continues. Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. (Md.) 273

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Running of statute against commonwealth. 170

As to nonresidents. 273

LIS PENDENS.

1. Actions and judgments in the courts of the United States are not affected by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5056, providing that a certified copy of a judgment must be recorded in the county in which property is situated before third persons in that county will be charged with notice of an action or judgment in another county affecting the property. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 438

2. A suit in a federal court to foreclose a railroad mortgage is constructive notice throughout the district, so that the decree will bind all persons acquiring an interest in or lien on any part of the property during the pendency of the suit. Id.

LOBSTERS. See CARRIERS, 10.

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus to compel officers to turn over funds can be granted only to the extent of the funds that are in the treasury, although they may have improperly disposed of a part of the funds which they should have turned over. Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 416

2. Mandamus may issue to county commissioners to turn over road funds in the county treasury by issuing a warrant for that purpose, when the law makes it their duty to turn over the funds, and the money can only be drawn on a warrant issued pursuant to their order. Id.

3. An order directing a railroad company to restore and operate a passenger train as before is not final or conclusive under the Kansas statute, and cannot be specifically enforced in the courts by mandamus. State, Kellogg, v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Kan.) 444

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; to compel acts by corporations. 444

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. See INJUNCTION, 2-4.

MARKET. See TAXES, 3.

MARSHALING.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Marshaling; of assets as affecting priority of state or United States. 238
29 L. R. A.

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CARRIERS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10, 12, 15, 16, 18, 19, 24, 27; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1; STATUTES, 8.

1. A statute providing that no female shall be employed in any factory or workshop more than eight hours in any one day, or forty-eight hours in any one week, prohibits both the employer and the employé from entering into a contract of employment for a greater time and restricts their right to contract with each other with reference to the hours of labor. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

2. A railroad employé is not bound to report to the company facts which it already knows. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (Ind.) 104

3. A railroad company which requires a train crew to be on duty nineteen hours each day, without time for rest or food, is liable for an injury to a track hand, caused by the attempt of some of the crew to operate the train while others have temporarily left it to procure food. Id.

4. It is not negligence for a conductor and engineer of a train to leave it to procure food after thirteen hours of consecutive service, with no provision made by the company for a food supply. Id.

5. A railroad company is liable for injuries to a track hand, which are caused by its attempt to operate a train with only a fireman and a brakeman. Id.

6. A section boss, knowing the custom of a portion of a train's crew to leave it at a certain time for food, is not charged with the duty of ascertaining that they have not left it before attempting to put his car on a track which the train has passed, for fear the train may back on him without warning. Id.

7. The effort of a section boss to save a hand car in his charge from injury by a train backing towards it is not negligence as matter of law, although in trying to get away after ascertaining that the car cannot be saved he falls under it and is injured, if he acts naturally, and not recklessly, although by acting differently he might have escaped. Id.

8. A section man is not a fellow servant of a fireman or one employed to load tenders with coal. Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson (Neb.) 137

9. Consociation in the same department of duty or line of employment is necessary to make fellow servants. Id.

10. Minn. Gen. Laws 1887, chap. 13, making railroad companies liable for injuries sustained by the negligence of fellow servants, is not applicable to street railways, although operated by cable. Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.) 208

11. The boss or foreman of a gang of men unloading and leveling dirt on a railroad, who is under the immediate control of a railroad official who is often present, sometimes daily, directing the work, is a fellow servant of a member of the gang who is injured by the foreman's failure to give notice that the train is about to move, whether he had authority to hire and discharge the men under him, or not. Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (Mich.) 321

12. One engaged in repairing a house is not relieved from liability for injury thereto by fire through the negligence of his workmen, because he furnished proper appliances and competent workmen. Shafer v. Lacock (Pa.) 254

18. A mine foreman is personally liable for his negligence causing injury to a workman in the mine, either under Pa. Act of 1891 permitting only certified foremen to be employed and regulating their duties, or without regard to such statute. Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. (Pa.) 808

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BAILMENT.

Who are fellow servants. 188
Foreman as fellow servant. 821
Negligence of second servant causing explosion. 858
Assumption of risks in service. 105

MAXIMS.

1. A grantor cannot be allowed to derogate from his own grant. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 582
2. A grantor is presumed to convey, so far as it is in his possession, whatever is necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the thing conveyed. Id.
3. Res ipsa loquitur. Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.) 492; Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.) 718
4. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas. Brim v. Jones (Utah) 97
5. Stare decisis. Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (Colo.) 608
6. Volenti non fit injuria. Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.) 718

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Loss between innocent parties. 607

MINES. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 18.

MONEY. See BONDS, 5; CONTRACTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; JUDGMENT, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MORTGAGE. See also BONDS, 4; COSTS AND FEES, 8; PLEADING, 10, 11; REAL PROPERTY; SUBROGATION; TAXES, 17, 19.

1. The transfer of a note secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage also. Parke v. Randolph (S. D.) 83
2. Bona fide purchasers for value before maturity of genuine notes accompanied by forged copy of a recorded mortgage securing them, which the purchasers took on the faith of the records, are entitled to the security of the mortgage as against persons to whom the assignor had previously sold forged copies of the notes accompanied by an assignment and delivery of the genuine mortgage. Kernohan v. Mans (Ohio) 817
3. That commissioners appointed to make partition of a decedent's estate refused to recognize any value in second-mortgage bonds taken for property sold to a corporation will have no bearing upon the question whether or 29 L. R. A.

not such bonds shall be given priority over the first-mortgage bonds, which were issued to promoters, because of their fraud in procuring their preference. Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.) 263

4. A stipulation in second-mortgage bonds of a corporation that they shall not be enforced against the individual estate of stockholders, will not prevent equity from refusing to enforce a first mortgage held by such stockholders until they have paid for their stock. Id.

5. First mortgagees will not be permitted by equity to assert their lien against the property in preference to a grantor's lien for unpaid purchase money, a waiver of which they procured by a fraudulent device so as to let in their mortgage as a first lien, although the grantors agreed to take a second mortgage as security, which on its face declares that it is subject to the lien of the first. Id.

6. The interest of a prior mortgagee cannot be displaced by the lien of a judgment for damages in consequence of the sale of intoxicating liquors, under the Illinois Dramshop Act, § 10, providing that if any person shall rent or lease to another any building to be used for the sale of such liquors, or knowingly permit it to be so used or occupied, it may be sold to pay any such judgment against any occupant. Bell v. Cassem (Ill.) 571

7. The provision of the Illinois Dramshop Act, § 10, making the building and premises where intoxicating liquors are sold with permission of the owner liable to sale under a judgment against the occupant for damages from the sale of such liquors, applies only to owners or those having a rentable interest in the property, and not to a contingent interest, such as that of a mortgagee. Id.

8. A grantee of mortgaged property is personally liable to the owner of the mortgage under his assumption of the payment of the mortgage debt as part of the consideration of the conveyance to him, without reference to whether his immediate grantor is liable or not. Hare v. Murphy (Neb.) 851

9. The purchaser of a mortgage obtains no rights as against a prior mortgagee by the wrongful act of his own agent in discharging the prior mortgage, which remained in his possession after the transfer of a note which was secured by it. Parker v. Randolph (S. D.) 83

10. A purchaser of railroad property on foreclosure takes it discharged from all liens and interests acquired pending the suit by persons charged with constructive notice thereof, although they were not made parties to the suit, and the latter must seek satisfaction from the proceeds of the sale. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 489

11. A judgment recovered in a state court against a railroad company before commencement of a foreclosure suit, by a creditor who was not made a party on foreclosure, is unaffected by the decree and sale. Id.

12. The proceeds of a resale of railroad property on behalf of a judgment creditor, after sale in a foreclosure suit to which he was not made a party, must first be applied to the satisfaction of encumbrances superior to his lien, if there be any, including those set up in the foreclosure suit. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 488

13. The lien of a chattel mortgage upon property exempt from execution is not waived by obtaining judgment upon the notes secured by the mortgage and levying upon the mortgaged property under execution thereon, although the exempt property is set off to the debtor as such; but such lien may be enforced under the terms of the mortgage in a jurisdiction where the mortgage creates only a lien and does not transfer the legal title, as there is no such inconsistency between remedies as there would be where the levy asserted title in the mortgagor while the enforcement of the mortgage claimed title in the mortgagee. Barchard v. Kohn (Ill.) 808

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; as incident to note secured by it.	818
Priority as to judgment.	572
Assumption of, by grantee.	851
Chattel, how enforced.	804

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also BONDS, 5, 6; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1; CONTRACTS, 6, 7; COUNTIES, 1; ESTOPPEL, 1, 2; GAS, 4; INSOLVENCY, 1; LICENSE, 1; SALE, 1-3; STATUTES, 16; TELEGRAPHS; WATERS, 5.

1. The right of a municipal corporation to exercise the authority, powers, and functions of an incorporated city, can be questioned only in a direct proceeding prosecuted by the proper public officers, and not by private action for an injunction against taxes. Kuhn v. Port Townsend (Wash.) 445

2. Mere irregularities and informalities not affecting jurisdiction afford no ground for collateral attack on proceedings to annex territory to a city. Id.

3. The mayor cannot adjourn either of the two branches of the general council alone, under authority of a charter providing that if they cannot agree on an adjournment he "shall adjourn them to a day not beyond the regular time of meeting." Tillman v. Otter (Ky.) 110

4. The mayor of a city has no power to adjourn the general council to a time beyond that at which it is directed by statute to elect a certain city official, for the purpose of depriving it of power to make such election and permitting it to be done by the alternative electing body provided by the statute in case of the council's failure to elect. Id.

5. The majority of one branch of the general council of a city cannot, by refusing to consent to fix a time for the election of a city official whom a statute requires the council to elect, and by remaining away from the meeting, prevent the remaining members of the general council, who constitute a majority of both branches, from making a valid election. Id.

6. A city whose charter provides therefor may collect a license imposed by it on street cars by enforcing a penalty for failure to pay for the license. Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (Colo.) 606

29 L. R. A.

7. A city has power to pass an ordinance requiring a license to hawk and peddle therein, under Burns's (Ind.) Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3541, empowering cities to "restrain" hawking and peddling. South Bend v. Martin (Ind.) 531

8. A corporation composed of private individuals, not restrained by law from conducting its business for private benefit, which does not report to and is not inspected by any state official, which elects its own managers without the state's approval, and by law owes the state no duty,—is a private corporation within the provisions of the Illinois Constitution prohibiting municipalities from making donations to private corporations. Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (Ill.) 798

9. A city having the power to pave streets and pay therefor from its treasury is liable for the cost of paving under a contract providing that assessments shall be accepted by the contractor in payment, and that the city shall not be otherwise liable under the contract, whether the assessments are collectible or not, where the statute under which they are made is held invalid and the assessments are therefore without authority, as the contract contemplates valid charges on the property, and failure to make the required assessments renders the city in default upon the contract. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Harrisburg (C. C. App. 3d C.) 401

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; validity of annexation to.	446
Legislative control over funds of.	799
Power to regulate gas business and prices.	398
Contracts by officer personally interested.	463
Liability to contractor for public improvement.	401
Liability for acts of officers.	903

NAME. See TRADE-MARK, 6.

NATURAL GAS. See GAS.

NAVIGATION. See DAMAGES, 8; NUISANCES, 3, 4.

NEGLIGENCE. See also AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES; CONTRACTS, 8; EVIDENCE, 13-17; EXPLOSION, 2; GAS, 1-3; HORSE RACING; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1; MASTER AND SERVANT; PLEADING, 5-9; TRIAL, 4-9.

1. A child nine years of age is not guilty of negligence if he exercises that degree of care which under like circumstances would reasonably be expected from one of his years and intelligence. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (Ohio) 757

2. A railroad company is not liable for injuries to a licensee by the alighting of a bank along the top of which was a footpath which he was using, in consequence of the removal of a boulder to prevent its falling on the tracks, unless the person doing the work knew that such removal left the path unsafe, and failed to use reasonable precautions to avoid injury to persons likely to use it, or to notify them of the danger. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wheeler (Va.) 825

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONTRACTS; EXPLOSION; GAS.

Of infants.	757
What constitutes.	188
Injury to licensees.	825

NITRO-GLYCERINE. See EVIDENCE, 16; EXPLOSION, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NONRESIDENT. See ATTACHMENT, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; LICENSE, 1; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

NOTICE. See also TAXES, 16.

1. The principal is not chargeable with the knowledge of the agent in relation to a fraud which he perpetrates in collusion with the other party. Hickman v. Green (Mo.) 89

2. Notice to a special agent employed to make a certain exchange of property, without any authority to pass upon the title, of matters connected with the title to the property obtained in the exchange, is not imputed to the principal,—especially when the agent was acting for the other party also, and his concealment of the facts was a fraud on his principal. Id.

3. Possession of premises by a woman who furnishes to her vendee as evidence of her title a quitclaim deed to herself, with an abstract showing a perfect record title in her grantor, does not charge her vendee with notice of a prior unrecorded warranty deed from the same grantor to her and the heirs of her body. Id.

NUISANCES. See also EVIDENCE, 12; HEALTH.

1. Property which is itself a nuisance endangering the public health or safety may be destroyed by the municipal authorities without compensation to the owner, under a provision of the charter conferring the power to abate such nuisances, where it is first condemned as a nuisance by appropriate proceedings, or its destruction is really necessary to the public health or safety, and an emergency exists. Savannah v. Mulligan (Ga.) 803

2. A private action for a public nuisance may be maintained by one who is not the sole or even a peculiar sufferer, if his grievance is not common to the whole public, but is a common misfortune of a number or even a class of persons. Farmers Co-Op. Mfg. Co. v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 700

3. The fact that a boat was doing business as a common carrier, as well as for the manufacturers who owned it, does not preclude a private right of action by the owner for obstruction of navigation. Id.

4. The owner of a boat, whether licensed or not, and whether other individuals own boats similarly engaged in navigating a river or not, may have a private action for an obstruction to a navigable river, where his boat was engaged in transporting material for manufacture. 29 L. R. A.

ing purposes from a point below the obstruction to a point above it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisance; private right of action for.	700
Abatement by destroying property.	808
Provision by board of health.	574

OATH. See JUDGMENT, 5; REAL PROPERTY, 8.

OBSCENITY. See INDICTMENT, ETC., 1.

OFFICERS. See also APPROPRIATIONS, 1; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; CONTRACTS, 6; 7; EVIDENCE, 7; MANDAMUS, 1, 2; STATUTES, 10.

1. A certificate of qualification from a judge, obtained after election as county court clerk, but before the term of office began, is sufficient in this respect under Ky. Const. § 100, providing that no person shall be "eligible to the office" unless he has procured such certificate, while it expressly makes the eligibility for certain offices, so far as age and residence are concerned, depend on the time of the election. Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield (Ky.) 708

2. The general assembly may appoint to all offices existing and not otherwise provided for at the time of the adoption of the Indiana constitution, by virtue of art. 15, § 1, authorizing their choice "in such manner as now is or hereafter may be prescribed by law," and other clauses of the constitution referring to offices "the appointment to which is vested in the general assembly." French v. State, Harley (Ind.) 118

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Officers; qualifications for.	708
Appointment of; nature of power.	118

PARENT AND CHILD. See INFANTS.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3-5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Adjournment of body; quorum.	110
------------------------------	-----

PARTIES. See ACTION OR SUIT.

PARTITION.

In dividing the proceeds of property which was unsuceptible of partition, a coparcener who has made repairs and permanent improvements upon the property, for which he could not compel contribution, may be allowed from such proceeds to the amount by which the property at the date of the sale remains enhanced in value from the improvements, but not for their original cost. Ward v. Ward (W. Va.) 449

PARTNERSHIP. See also ATTACHMENT, 8; ATTORNEYS, 1; TAXES, 18, 20.

1. Members of a company which falls in an attempt to acquire corporate existence must be given the advantages as well as the liabilities of a partnership. Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. (Colo.) 143

2. The giving of firm paper for individual debts of the partners for money borrowed and contributed by them individually to the firm capital cannot be declared fraudulent merely because the firm was at the time insolvent, or was made so by the act of making the notes. Re Edwards & W.'s Estate (Mo.) 681

8. Individual debts of partners may, in the absence of fraud, be converted into firm debts which will share equally with other firm debts in case of dissolution, by an agreement between the partners to that effect and the execution of firm paper for them. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; assumption by a partnership of individual debts of the partners:—(I.) the general rule; (II.) the question of insolvency; (III.) the question of fraud; (IV.) assumption held sufficient; (V.) insufficient assumption; (VI.) by mortgage of firm property; (VII.) by new firm of debts of old firm; (VIII.) assumption of debt originally incurred for firm benefit. 681

PATENTS.

A state statute requiring a license for the sale of patent rights is in violation of the rights of the patentee under federal law. Com. v. Petty (Ky.) 786

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Patents; power of state to restrict and regulate the sale or enjoyment of patent rights:—(I.) as to sales: (a) sales of patent rights; (b) sales of patented articles; (II.) police regulations of other business in which patents are used; (III.) restricting right of action for infringement; (IV.) taxation of patent rights. 786

PEDDLERS. See also COMMERCE, 8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7.

One engaged in going personally from house to house, and selling chairs and delivering them at the time of the sale, is a peddler within an ordinance requiring peddlers to obtain a license. South Bend v. Martin (Ind.) 531

PENALTY. See also FERRIES, 5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Penalties; compulsory evidence against one's self in case of. 818

PIG PEN. See HEALTH.

PLEADING. See also EVIDENCE, 17; LIBEL, 2.

1. An objection that a suit should have been brought at law, instead of in equity, cannot be taken by demurrer. Bibbins v. Clark (Iowa) 278

2. That a purchaser was not able to fulfill his contract so as entitle the broker to commissions on the sale is not shown by an allegation that an extension of time for payment after the first draft was due was requested because the purchaser was not able to pay it "at that time." Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (S. C.) 215

3. A prayer of a complaint for damages for 29 L. R. A.

breach of a contract, and one for specific performance of the same, based upon the same facts, do not render the complaint obnoxious to the objection that it joins several causes of action without separately stating them. San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.) 839

4. Averments that notice of dishonor was received in due time by the acceptor and at once delivered to the drawer and indorser by him are mere conclusions of the pleader and do not sufficiently state due diligence. Seabree Deposit Bank v. Moreland (Ky.) 305

5. A declaration does not sufficiently allege negligence of the person conducting a public exhibition of horse racing by stating an invitation to the public and that a spectator, while in the place set apart for such persons and without fault on his part, was struck and injured by a runaway horse, without further allegations as to the place of the injury or defendant's control over the immediate cause of it. Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.) 492

6. A complaint charging a gas company with negligence in failing to cut off the supply of gas from a building in which there was a defective pipe, and denying that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, is insufficient to show that the negligence of such company was the efficient cause of an injury to plaintiff from an explosion, as this would be impossible without some agency acting upon the leaking gas. McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 355

7. Striking from the complaint in an action to recover damages for negligent injuries the allegation that defendant was a common carrier of passengers is not error, unless other allegations show that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between plaintiff and defendant. Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.) 297

8. A cause of action is stated by a complaint which alleges that the railroad company moved a train without signals or guards, or any one except a fireman in charge of it, back upon and injured a track hand free from fault. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (Ind.) 104

9. Allegations of negligence of a railroad company in unlawfully stopping a freight train more than five minutes across a public highway, and wrongfully and negligently backing it while a person was attempting to cross between the cars, are not separable in the sense that only one would be the proximate cause of the injury, but together constitute a sufficient allegation of negligence as against a general demurrer. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (Ohio) 757

10. A prayer for payment of stock subscriptions cannot properly be inserted in a crossbill filed by second mortgagees on corporate property in a suit to foreclose a first mortgage held by stockholders of the corporation, the priority of which over the second mortgage is attacked on the ground of fraud. Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.) 263

11. A crossbill by second mortgagees is not so far foreign to a bill filed to foreclose the first mortgage as to be improper, where the matter alleged is the same as set out in the answer, and attacks the priority of the first mortgage, seeking to establish that of the second, and the question of priority cannot be adjusted without the aid of the crossbill. Id.

19. A plea in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation, alleging that respondent has fully performed all its duties arising out of its charter by providing a system of waterworks of sufficient capacity and power to furnish the city an abundant supply of water, does not deny an allegation in the petition that respondent failed to supply the city and its inhabitants with such water. Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.) 743

18. Defining alleged libelous terms in a paraphrastic way, and pointing out that they were intended to apply to the plaintiff, is strictly within the office of an innuendo. Lewis v. Daily News Co. (Md.) 59

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading; averment as to particulars of personal injury. 287

Allegation of libel. 59

Use of crossbill. 263

POLICE POWER. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18-16.

POLL TAX. See also HIGHWAYS, 6.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Poll taxes:—(I.) what are poll taxes; (II.) power to impose; (III.) restrictions and limitations; (IV.) the restriction and equation of the North Carolina constitution; (V.) upon what imposed; (VI.) place of taxation; (VII.) the levy and collection; (VIII.) disposition; (IX.) payment of poll taxes as a qualification of electors. 404

PRESUMPTIONS. See EVIDENCE.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See BROKERS; CONTRACTS, 7; MORTGAGE, 9; NOTICE, 1, 2; SALE, 1.

PRIVATE ACTIONS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1; NUISANCES, 2, 3.

PROFANITY. See CARRIERS, 2, 3.

PROMOTERS. See CORPORATIONS, 3-6; RECEIVERS, 4.

PROXIES. See CORPORATIONS, 10, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. Requiring a train crew to be on duty nineteen hours each day, without time for food, is the proximate cause of an injury to a track haul by the train's backing on him without warning while the fireman is the only member of the crew on board, the brakeman being off to operate a switch and the others in search of food. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (Ind.) 104

2. The negligence of a bandman in walking close to an electric-railway track while playing his instrument cannot, as a matter of law, be said to be the proximate cause of his injury 29 L. R. A.

by a car overtaking him, where the evidence would justify a finding that the motorman was guilty of reckless and wanton conduct as to the speed with which he approached the band. Montgomery v. Lansing City Elec. R. Co. (Mich.) 287

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS. See also JUDGMENT, 6; JUDICIAL SALE, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9.

A tax on a railroad "in lieu of all other taxes" does not exempt it from assessments for local improvements. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 195

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; exemption from assessments for; charge on railroad property. 196

PUBLIC MONEYS. See BANKS, 5.

QUITCLAIM. See DEEDS; NOTICE, 3; REAL PROPERTY, NOTES AND BRIEFS; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1, 2.

QUO WARRANTO. See also CORPORATIONS, 1; COSTS AND FEES, 1, 2; PLEADING, 12.

1. The relator in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation need not obtain leave or an order of court to institute and prosecute such proceedings. Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.) 743

2. A proceeding in the nature of quo warranto for the dissolution of a corporation need not be commenced by summons and complaint under Ala. Code, §§ 2651, 2652, requiring all "civil actions," except as otherwise provided, to be so commenced. Id.

3. An action in the nature of quo warranto may be maintained in the name of the state by the attorney-general to oust the Board of Regents of the University of Kansas from the exercise of corporate powers in excess of those conferred on it by law. State, Little, v. Regents of University (Kan.) 378

4. The assumption by the Board of Regents of the State University of the power to collect fees from students for use of the library, and to exclude students from the library for nonpayment thereof, is an unwarranted assumption of corporate powers from the exercise of which they will be ousted by suit brought in the name of the state by the attorney-general. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Quo warranto; against corporation. 743

RAILROADS. See also CARRIERS, 6, 11; COMMERCE, 2; CONTRACTS, 4, 8; COSTS AND FEES, 8; EMINENT DOMAIN, 12, 14; EVIDENCE, 11; EXECUTION; FERRIES, 1, 6; HIGHWAYS, 5; INJUNCTION, 6, 9; JUDGMENT, 7; JUDICIAL SALE, 2; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1; MANDAMUS, 8; MASTER AND SERVANT; MORTGAGE, 10; NEGLIGENCE, 2; PLEADING, 7-9; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1; STATUTES, 14; TAXES, 7, 13, 14; TRIAL, 4-7.

1. The fact that a railroad is not fenced, in the absence of a statutory requirement, does not make a railroad company liable for injuries to a person who was driving along a highway parallel to the track. Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 695

2. Compensation to a railroad company for the inconvenience to it is not a necessary condition to the crossing of its tracks at grade by an electric street railway under legislative authority. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 867
See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 9-14.

3. The duty to give warning signals of the approach of a train at a crossing, imposed by Dak. Comp. Laws 1887, § 8016, does not extend to a person driving along a highway parallel to the railroad, who has not lately used and does not intend to use any crossing, although he expects a signal to be given at a private crossing near by. Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 695

4. The term "any other road," in Dak. Comp. Stat. 1887, § 8016, providing for railroad signals at crossings of other roads, refers only to public highways, and not to a private crossing. Id.

5. A person driving along a highway 10 or 12 feet distant from and parallel to a railroad track, with a buffalo coat turned up against his ears, while the wind is blowing so that he does not hear a train coming behind him, but who does not look behind him to see the train, or drive with tight reins so as to prevent his horse, which is gentle, from drawing him against the train as it passes, is guilty of such negligence as will prevent recovery for injuries thereby received. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EMINENT DOMAIN.

Railroads; signals at crossings. 695

Rights as to grade crossings. 868

Negligence causing injury at crossings. 757

REAL PROPERTY. See also DEEDS; NOTICE, 8; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1, 2.

1. Failure of the officer to index a mortgage is not fatal to its validity, in the absence of any statute making the indexing a part of the recording. Armstrong v. Austin (S. C.) 773

2. A mortgage covering both real and personal property was properly recorded in a lien and mortgage book, under S. C. Rev. Stat. 1872, p. 422, chap. 82, § 2, requiring a real-estate mortgage to be recorded in the register's office, without specifying in what book the record should be made. Id.

3. Failure of a subscribing witness to a mortgage to sign an affidavit made by him does not invalidate the affidavit so as to prevent the record of the mortgage in the absence of a statute or rule of court requiring such signing. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; the effect of a quitclaim deed in an otherwise perfect record title:—as to latent equities; purchaser with notice; other rulings; distinction between conveyance of land and of mere interest; doctrine of United States Supreme Court; where not protected; 29 L. R. A.

where entitled to protection; the Iowa doctrine; necessity of care; remote quitclaim in chain of title. 33

RECEIPT. See EVIDENCE, 20, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

RECEIVERS. See also ATTORNEYS, 2; BANKS, 4; BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 9, 11; TRUSTS, 2.

1. A receiver appointed by the courts of one state cannot sue in another state to recover property belonging to the estate, which has never been in his possession. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.) 164

2. The receiver in insolvency of a building association is the proper person to ascertain the amount of losses of the association, and make an assessment on the members to meet the same. Everemann v. Schmitt (Ohio) 184

3. Vested liens upon the property of individuals and private corporations cannot be displaced by means of receivers' certificates. Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.) 263

4. Receivers' certificates issued to a promoter of a corporation for money advanced to pay for improvements put on the corporate property will not be given priority over the rights of the seller of the property, who waived his lien upon the fraudulent guaranty by another promoter at the time of the sale that money was in his possession which would be applied to pay for such improvements. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receivers; extraterritorial powers. 164

RECITAL. See EVIDENCE, 19.

RECORDS. See REAL PROPERTY, NOTES AND BRIEFS; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 2.

REFERENCE.

1. An exception to the report of a commissioner, which is not made within ten days, is not sufficient under W. Va. Code, chap. 129, § 7, to permit any new evidence which would reopen the report, but is effectual only to support a motion for a recommitment of the report, or a claim for a rehearing. Ward v. Ward (W. Va.) 449

2. A point as to variance in the clerk's signature to the certificate of record and to the affidavit attached to a mortgage, not raised before a master or passed upon by him, or raised by any exception to his report, cannot be considered by the court in passing upon such report, for the purpose of invalidating the mortgage. Armstrong v. Austin (S. C.) 773

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

1. The administrative duties of the supreme body of a religious organization may be delegated. Krecker v. Shirey (Pa.) 476

2. The duty to fix a time and place for holding the general conference of a religious organization is administrative when the laws of the organization provide for the holding of such conferences at regular intervals, and name the bodies which shall fix the day and place at which they shall be held. Id.

8. The appointment of the place of meeting of the next general conference of a religious organization, and giving notice thereof to the annual conferences in time for them to select delegates to represent them in the general conference, by a standing board of the general conference, to which the duty was delegated by the conference, is a fixing of such place according to laws of the organization which place the duty upon the general conference, so as to prevent action by the oldest annual conference, upon which the duty is devolved in case the general conference fails to act. Id.

4. The laws of an ecclesiastical body will be recognized and enforced by the civil courts when not in conflict with the constitution and laws of the state. Id.

5. An exposition by the supreme judicial tribunal of a religious association, of a provision of the discipline to the effect that under it a second trial after one acquittal upon substantially the same charges is illegal, is binding upon the members of the association and must be respected by the civil courts. Id.

6. Decisions of ecclesiastical courts which plainly violate the law they profess to administer, or are in conflict with the laws of the land, will not be followed by the civil courts. Id.

7. The question of the regularity and legal effect of the organization of an annual conference of a religious organization, after forcibly intercepting the entrance of the bishop appointed to preside over it because of his alleged suspension from his office under the discipline of the organization, raises an ecclesiastical question upon which the decision of the highest tribunal of the order is binding on the civil courts. Id.

8. Appointments of preachers by an annual conference of a religious organization, which has been pronounced by the highest tribunal of the order to have been illegally organized, confer no rights and impose no duties in respect to members or congregations still holding their allegiance to the old organization. Id.

9. An annual conference of the Evangelical Association, organized by a bishop with less than a quorum of those entitled to sit as members in the conference, is, under the discipline of that denomination, irregular and illegal; and its appointment of preachers will confer no authority and impose no duty on the churches. Id.

10. Congregations or parts of congregations of a religious body which has adopted as part of its polity the itinerant plan for pastoral supply of the churches, who refuse to accept the supply sent by authority of the regular ecclesiastical agencies acting in accord with the general conference,—cease to adhere to the organization. Id.

11. Adherents to a general conference of a religious organization, held at a time and place designated by an annual conference without authority after another time and place had been regularly designated under the laws of the organization, place themselves outside of the organization, and, although in the majority, have no title to the property of the organization as against persons claiming under the regularly appointed general conference. Id.

12. Ecclesiastical standing, and not numbers, determines the title to and the right of control over property held for the use of a religious denomination. Id.

13. The minority members of the annual conference of a religious denomination, when confronted with a revolt from the association of a majority of the members of the conference, for which condition the discipline makes no provision, may provide temporarily for the religious care of those adhering to the minority, which action may subsequently be ratified by the highest tribunal of the denomination; but neither alone nor both combined can give the action of the minority regularity which will make it binding upon the revolting members. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious societies; constitutional law of; secession by majority of. 477

RESUME.

For résumé of contents of book, see p. 965

RIVERS. See BOUNDARIES.

SALE. See also ESTOPPEL, 3.

1. A city upon discovering that its agent was paid a commission upon a sale to it may either repudiate or ratify and affirm the contract, as it elects. Findlay v. Pertz (C. C. App. 6th C.) 188

2. The right of a city to rescind a sale to it because a commission was paid to its officer through whom it was made is not affected by the fact that the seller did not know that the city was ignorant of the double relation of such officer and supposed that he would give the city credit for the commission. Id.

3. Ratification of a sale to a city notwithstanding a commission paid to its agent by the seller confirms it subject to the warranties made; and the city may, when sued for the purchase price, recoup to the extent of any damage sustained by the breach of any warranty. Id.

4. Fraud in the purchase of goods is waived by the seller's entering into a compromise agreement with the purchaser, by which the latter returns a portion of the goods and agrees to pay for the balance on terms satisfactory to the seller. Munser v. Stern (Mich.) 859

5. Sellers of goods to one who purchased with intent to defraud, who have been induced to leave a portion in possession of the buyer under a compromise agreement entered into by the latter with the intent to defraud, may rescind the agreement and retake the goods. Id.

6. A tender back of what he obtained by the compromise is not necessary to justify its rescission, where one from whom goods were fraudulently purchased regained a portion of them under a compromise agreement which left the remainder in the buyer's possession, but which was entered into by the buyer with intent to defraud the seller of the property. Munser v. Stern (Mich.) 859

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; bona fide purchaser. 807

SCHOOLS. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2; TAXES, 4.

1. A statute authorizing school authorities to make vaccination a condition of the privilege of attending public schools is essentially a police regulation, and does not violate the constitutional guaranties of due process of law or equal protection of the law. Bissell v. Davison (Conn.) 251

2. The existence of smallpox in a town, or an indication that an epidemic of that disease is likely to present itself, is not necessary to permit school committees to require vaccination of pupils before attending public schools, under Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 2187, 2197. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Schools; regulation as to attendance. 253

SCIRE FACIAS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20; JUDGMENT, 4.

SEARCH. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Searches; to compel one to furnish evidence against himself. 818

SEIZURE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

To obtain evidence. 818

SERVITUDE. See EASEMENTS.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

The right to set off independent judgments rendered in different suits growing out of different causes of action is subject to attorneys' liens or claims for services. Roberts v. Mitchell (Tenn.) 705

SHIPPING. See COMMERCE, 1; DAMAGES, 3; FIRES.

SLANDER OF TITLE. See INJUNCTION, 1.

SLEEPING CAR. See CARRIERS, 9.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See FERRIES, 2.

STATE. See also BOUNDARIES, 1; INSOLVENCY, 1; PATENTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also PATENTS.

State; priority in respect to payment from assets of debtor. 226

29 L. R. A.

STATE INSTITUTION. See also AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES; COLLEGES; CORPORATIONS, 1; QUO WARRANTO, 3, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nature of incorporated institutions belonging to the state:—(I.) in general: (a) banks; (b) educational institutions; (c) other state institutions; (II.) liabilities of such institutions; (III.) directors, trustees, and officers: (a) in general; (b.) personal liability. 878

Public nature of. 706

STATUTES. See also APPROPRIATIONS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 26; CONTRACTS, 10.

Title.

1. So long as the generality of the subject expressed in the title of a statute is not employed as a guise to conceal the real object of the law, or some provision therein, it will not be objectionable. Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 416

2. Surreptitious legislation, and not comprehensive titles, is prohibited by Neb. Const. art. 8, § 11, providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title. Paxton & H. Irrig. Co. & L. Co. v. Farmers & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (Neb.) 853

3. A provision for the acquirement, by irrigation companies, of the right of way for canals and ditches, is within the title of Neb. Act March 27, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for water rights and irrigation and to regulate the use of water for agricultural and manufacturing purposes." Id.

4. A provision in a statute for the application of part of a county road tax to streets in cities and towns is within the general subject of the title of the act when that is the laying out and maintaining of public roads of the counties. Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 416

5. A provision for recovery of damages occasioned by neglect to provide fire screens for vessels as required by statute is sufficiently expressed in the title, "An act to compel steam vessels . . . to provide fire screens, . . . and to provide a penalty for its violation." Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

6. The mere omission of the word "steam" before the word "vessel," in a section of an act requiring fire screens, the title of which relates to steam vessels, does not render the act repugnant in its terms, as the provisions apply only to steam vessels. Id.

7. A statute containing two distinct subjects, both of which are expressed in the title, is wholly void under Ill. Const. art. 4, § 13, declaring that no act shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title; but if any subject be embraced which is not expressed in the title, the act is void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed. Ritchie v. People (Ill.) 79

8. A statute entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles," etc., and providing in its body that no female shall be employed in any factory or workshop more than eight hours a day, will embrace only employment in the manufacture of articles of the same kind as those expressly enumerated. Id.

9. The title of Ill. Act June 17, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles in this state, and to provide for the appointment of state inspectors to enforce the same, and to make an appropriation therefor," does not express two subjects because the appropriation for salaries of the factory inspectors provided for is a separate subject, as the words "appropriation therefor" do not necessarily imply that the appropriation is for such salaries, but may be for the payment of their expenses. Id.

10. The appropriation in Ill. Act June 17, 1898, § 10, for the salaries of factory inspectors, is a subject not expressed in the title, "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles in this state, and to provide for the appointment of state inspectors to enforce the same, and to make an appropriation therefor," and is void under Ill. Const. art. 4, § 18, declaring that if a subject shall be embraced in an act which is not expressed in the title the act shall be void as to so much thereof as is not expressed. Id.

Construction.

11. A word occurring in a statute, which is evidently an interpolation, and has no relation to the body of the statute, and is without sensible meaning, will be disregarded in giving effect to its provisions. Paxton & H. Irrig. Co. & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (Neb.) 853

12. Great deference and respect should be paid by the court to the long-prevailing construction of a statute made by the executive department of the state government. Bloxham v. Consumers' E. L. & Street R. Co. (Fla.) 507

13. The meaning judicially given to words in a statute will be taken as that intended when used in a subsequent similar statute. Anderson v. Bell (Ind.) 541

Repeal.

14. A special act permitting a grade crossing by an electric railway over the track of a steam railroad, which is made subject to general laws "except as otherwise herein expressly provided," is not affected by a general law previously passed, but which does not take effect until subsequently, which prohibits such grade crossings "except upon approval by the railroad commissioners." New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 367

15. The Dakota Compiled Laws relating to the assessment of damages in laying out town roads are not repealed by S. D. Act 1891, chap. 94, providing for the assessment of damages for property taken by municipal or other corporations, as the corporations contemplated are those referred to in S. D. Const. art. 17, § 18, and do not include townships organized under the laws of the state. Dell Rapids v. Irving (S. D.) 861

16. A statute requiring a county and city to pay a percentage of liquor license fees to a certain home is repealed, but not retrospectively repealed, by a constitutional provision prohibiting municipalities from making donations to a private corporation. Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (Ill.) 798

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; expressing purposes in title. 80
Implied repeal of. 868
Construction of. 378

STOCKHOLDERS. See CORPORATIONS.

STREET RAILWAYS. See also CARRIERS, 1-3; EMINENT DOMAIN, 11-14; INJUNCTION, 5, 6; LICENSE, 8; MASTER AND SERVANT, 10; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2; RAILROADS, 2; STATUTES, 14; TRIAL, 8, 9.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EMINENT DOMAIN.

Street railway; as a railroad. 309

SUBROGATION.

The purchaser on foreclosure may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, in a proceeding for that purpose, if necessary for his protection, to the extent of the purchase money paid. Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) 438

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Subrogation; of sureties as affected by priority of United States or of state. 240, 248
Of person paying tax. 282

SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE. See CRIMINAL LAW.

TAXES. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 8; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 21; COUNTIES, 2; HIGHWAYS, 6; JUDICIAL SALE, 8, 4; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

1. The exemption of property from taxation is beyond the power of a town in the absence of constitutional legislative authority. Mc Twiggan v. Hunter (R. I.) 526

2. Land covered by water held back by a dam for furnishing power is assessable for taxation at its enhanced value, in the town in which it lies, under a statute making real estate taxable where situated, although the power is used in another town. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Concord (N. H.) 57

3. The constitutional exemption from taxation of public property used exclusively for any public purpose does not extend to real property owned and leased by a private party, although it is by contract with public authorities used as a public market house or place with an agreement that it shall be exempt from taxation. State, Realty Co. v. Cooley (Minn.) 777

4. A school is not a purely public charity so that the property used for it is exempt from taxation, when conducted by a master as a business enterprise under a contract by which he pays one eighth of the gross receipts from tuition to the corporation owning the property, and receives tuition for all pupils, although the corporation, which was organized to conduct a school for the rich at reasonable rates and for the poor gratuitously, itself pays the tuition of a small part of the pupils out of income received from endowments and legacies. Philadelphia v. Overseers of Public Schools (Pa.) 600

5. Stock which a corporation issues in payment for property is not a debt incurred by it which can be deducted in determining the amount invested in such property, for the purpose of taxation. People, Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co. v. Barker (N. Y.) 898

6. The sum invested in the state, on which a foreign corporation can be taxed under N. Y. Laws 1855, chap. 87, when it has purchased property in the state and paid for it only in part, is the sum paid, and cannot include the indebtedness for the unpaid part of the purchase money. Id.

7. A bridge owned by a bridge company but used exclusively for railroad purposes and leased forever to a railroad company, subject to termination of the lease for default of the lessee to perform its terms and conditions, is not railroad property which can be assessed as such with the railroad track by the Illinois state board of equalization, instead of the local assessor. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Windmiller (Ill.) 69

8. The value of a franchise for the purpose of taxation is the benefit derived from its possession. Com. v. Henderson Bridge Co. (Ky.) 78

9. Debts of a corporation cannot be deducted in finding the value of its franchise as the difference between the values of its capital stock and tangible property, where the constitution requires the property of corporations to be taxed like that of individuals, and debts of the latter are not deducted from their property for taxation. Id.

10. The "capital stock" of a corporation, within the meaning of Ky. Stat. § 4079, from which the value of its tangible property is to be deducted in order to find the value of its corporate franchise for the purpose of taxation, means the entire property, real and personal, tangible and intangible, including assets and franchise. Id.

11. The right of the state to tax the franchise of a bridge corporation created by it is not defeated by the fact that the company had obtained from another state the privilege of extending its bridge from the boundary of that state at low-water mark of the river to the high lands, and had acquired from congress the privilege of maintaining the bridge across a navigable river and the designation of the bridge as a post road. Id.

12. Interstate business is not taxed by taxing the franchise of a bridge company which maintains a toll bridge between states. Id.

13. The special exemption of a railroad from taxation by its charter does not extend to lines which it operates under a lease and which were organized under the general laws of the state. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 195

14. A street railroad is a "railroad" within the meaning of Fla. Acts 1898, chap. 4115, 29 L. R. A.

§§ 48, 49, providing for the taxation of railroad property and the sale thereof as an entirety for delinquent taxes thereon. Blozham v. Consumers' B. L. & Street R. Co. (Fla.) 507

15. The omission by assessors to include property in an assessment, solely by reason of their mistake as to the binding effect of an agreement for an exemption, and not by any intentional disregard of law or other wrongful or fraudulent purpose,—will not make their assessment void. McTwiggan v. Hunter (R. I.) 526

16. The only notice to taxpayers of an assessment required by R. I. Pub. Stat. chap. 48, is that required by § 6 in respect to the time and place of meeting, at which each taxable person is directed to bring in an account; and no subsequent notice of a time to hear objections is required. Id.

17. A statute simply making personal property taxes a lien on the real estate of the owner does not give them priority over mortgage liens existing at the time they attach. Bibbins v. Clark (Iowa) 278

18. Individual real estate of a partner is subject to the lien of a tax assessment upon the personal property of the partnership under a statute making taxes due from any person a lien upon any property owned by him. Id.

19. A mortgagor who permits his personal property taxes to become a lien on the mortgaged land can be compelled to reimburse the mortgagee who is compelled to pay them to protect his own interests. Id.

20. Members of a partnership the personal taxes of which have been levied on the real estate of their copartner cannot be compelled to reimburse a mortgagee of such real estate, who, to protect his own interests, has been compelled to pay the taxes. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also POLL TAXES.

Jurisdiction as to taxation of bridge over river forming boundary of a state or its divisions:—general rule; statutory rule; effect on commerce; capital stock. 69

On land under dam. 57

Priority of claims for taxes against the assets of a debtor:—(I.) scope of note; (II.) upon what based; (III.) constitutionality and construction of provisions for; (IV.) what is included in the right: (a) taxes generally; (b) claims against collectors; (V.) nature and extent of priority; (VI.) subrogation of person paying the tax; (VII.) what amounts to a divestiture of the right; (VIII.) enforcement of the right. 278

On corporate investments in state. 394

Exemption of. 526, 777

Notice to taxpayer. 526

TELEGRAPHS.

A city ordinance exacting a specified sum as rent from a telegraph company for the entry upon and occupation of the streets with its poles is void under Miss. Laws 1886, p. 93, § 1, authorizing companies to operate telegraph lines on and along all streets, without providing for compensation to the cities. Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Miss.) 770

TENDER. See SALE, 6.

TICKET. See CARRIERS, 4.

TOWN. See STATUTES, 15; TAXES, 1.

TRADE-MARK. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 28.

1. A labor union may be protected by appropriate state legislation in the use of a label for the designation of articles manufactured by its members, and use of the label prohibited to persons other than members of the union or persons who employ such members. State v. Bishop (Mo.) 200

2. Labels, symbols, or advertisements adopted by any association or union of workingmen as a trade-mark to distinguish articles manufactured by their members from those manufactured by other persons, are protected by Mo. Laws 1898, p. 260, when they are adopted in accordance with its provisions. Id.

3. Proof of guilty knowledge is necessary to sustain a conviction under Mo. Act 1898, p. 260, making it a misdemeanor to have for sale goods bearing counterfeit labels representing that they were made by a certain person, association, or union of workingmen. Id.

4. No exclusive right can be acquired to the use of the words "scientific dentistry at moderate prices." Cady v. Schults (R. I.) 524

5. There can be no property right in the shape, size, color, or arrangement of signs without regard to the letters which they bear. Id.

6. Names which are not trade-marks strictly speaking may be protected as property if they are taken by others with fraudulent intention and are so used as to be likely to effect such intention. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Protection of trade-union labels or trade-marks:—(I.) in general; (II.) contents of label; (III.) effect of statutes. 200 TRADE-NAME. See also INJUNCTION, 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trade-name; protection of. 524

TRADE UNIONS. See TRADE-MARKS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

TREES.

A land owner may cut from a tree, the trunk of which stands on the boundary line, all the roots and branches on his side up to the trunk. Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 583

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trees; on boundary; rights in. 583

TRESPASS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability for killing or injuring trespassers by means of spring guns, traps, and other dangers. L. R. A.

gerous instruments:—(I.) the general doctrine of liability; (II.) liable as for homicide; (III.) when considered as a nuisance; (IV.) the property owner's or the trespasser's act; (V.) the question of notice; (VI.) the act held legal; (VII.) English cases. 154

TRIAL. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 4; HOMICIDE; INTEREST, 1; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2.

1. The testimony of a witness, admitted without objection, cannot be excluded because the other party to the transaction was dead. Hickman v. Green (Mo.) 89

2. The use by a city of gas separators sold to it, for two months after discovering that its agent was paid a commission upon the sale, is not so conclusive of ratification of the sale as to take that question from the jury. Findlay v. Perts (C. C. App. 6th C.) 188

3. It is for the jury to determine which of various screens described by witnesses would comply with the requirements of a statute; and therefore an instruction that there could be no liability for a fire alleged to have been caused by want of a screen, if one of the screens described in the testimony would not have prevented the fire, is erroneous. Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.) 468

4. Negligence of a child nine years old in attempting to pass between cars at a railroad crossing when the train had stood longer than the law allowed is a question for the jury. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (Ohio) 757

5. Whether or not a child nine years of age is a trespasser in attempting to cross a railroad track by climbing over a car coupling is a question for the jury. Id.

6. Negligence in moving a train after it has stood longer than the statutory period of five minutes across a public street, without giving timely warning of an intention to do so, is a question for the jury. Id.

7. Negligence of a railroad company in loading a tender with coal so that a large piece fell off and injured a section man is a question for the jury. Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson (Neb.) 17

8. Negligence of a street-railway company in not avoiding the deflection of a car from the main track to a branch track so as to strike a person waiting to take it is a question for the jury. Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.) 297

9. Whether or not a motorman used due care is a question for the jury, where, with his lever in next to the fastest notch until within a few feet of it, he overtook a band playing while parading the streets, knowing that some of the men were in close proximity to the track. Montgomery v. Lansing City Elec. R. Co. (Mich.) 287

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; right to jury as affected by compulsory evidence as against one's self. 819

Duty to instruct peremptorily. 105

Question for jury as to negligence. 757

TRUSTS. See also ACTION OR SUIT; BANKS, 5, 6; EVIDENCE, 9.

1. A trust in land bought by an executor for himself is not established in favor of the heirs by the fact that part of the purchase price was paid from funds of the estate, where he has long since accounted for such funds, with interest, and his accounts have been annually approved; and the fact of such payment cannot be overcome by a claim that a higher rate of interest ought to have been charged against him, which would make him still indebted to the estate. Re Ricker's Estate (Mont.) 622

2. Consignors cannot impress funds of the consignees in the hands of a receiver with a trust lien for the proceeds of goods sold, if the consignees dissipated such proceeds in paying current expenses of their business, although the claims against the funds in the receiver's hands were thereby diminished. Ferchen v. Arndt (Or.) 664

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liability of trustees for compound interest. 622

Trust; tracing into proceeds. 664

TURNPIKES. See BICYCLES, 2, 3.

UNITED STATES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Priority in respect to payment from assets of debtor. 226

UNIVERSITY. See COLLEGES; CORPORATIONS, 1; QUO WARRANTO, 8, 4.

USURY. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

1. Usury forming part of the face of a renewable note discounted in the regular course of business, at the legal rate, without notice and before maturity, is not an available defense under a statute changing the law making usurious contracts "void" so that they shall "be deemed to be for an illegal consideration" as to the interest. Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. Scott (Va.) 827

2. Taking interest in advance on a negotiable note at the highest rate allowed by the constitution is not usury. Bank of Newport v. Cook (Ark.) 761

3. The fact that a note is payable twelve months after its date does not take it out of the rule which permits the highest rate of lawful interest to be taken in advance. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Usury; effect on bona fide holders of notes. 827

VACCINATION. See SCHOOLS.

VARIANCE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 15.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See also DEEDS; NOTICE, 8; MORTGAGE, 8.

1. A grantee in a quitclaim deed cannot be a bona fide purchaser,—at least where the grantor, who had full knowledge of the equities affecting the title, was the agent of the grantee in the purchase of a note and mortgage for the surrender of which the deed was given. Parker v. Randolph (S. D.) 39

But see next case.

2. A quitclaim deed to a vendor who is in possession of the premises, from one who has the record title, is sufficient to give the vendee the right to claim the protection of the recording laws against a prior unrecorded deed by which such grantee was given a life estate only. Hickman v. Green (Mo.) 39

3. Equity will relieve against the waiver of a vendor's lien, procured by a fraudulent guaranty on the part of the vendee. Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.) 262

VIADUCT. See HIGHWAYS, 2.

VOTE. See CORPORATIONS, 10.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS. See also EVIDENCE, 8.

1. A statute requiring the use of an official ballot may properly be deemed necessary by the legislature in order to secure to the voters a full and fair election and an accurate and honest count, and does not impair the constitutional rights of the voters. Cole v. Tucker (Mass.) 668

2. A statute making an official ballot compulsory in the election of city officers, but optional in the election of town officers, is not void as partial and unequal in its operation upon the rights of voters. Id.

3. Ballots will not be vitiated, in the absence of fraud, by the fact that the official stamp required by statute to be placed on them was not so placed until they were returned by the electors to be placed in the box, having gone into the possession of the electors unstamped. Moyer v. Van de Vanter (Wash.) 670

4. A law forbidding the counting of ballots upon which the election officers have not placed their initials cannot be sustained where the constitution provides that persons possessing certain qualifications "shall be entitled to vote at all elections." Id.

5. Failure of election officers to provide booths which comply with the law is a mere irregularity which will not render void the votes cast in that precinct. Id.

6. The opening of the polls an hour later than the time prescribed by statute, and the removal of the ballot box from the polls in violation of Cal. Pol. Code, §§ 1160, 1162, invalidates the election in the precinct, although the misconduct is prompted merely by ignorance and lack of appreciation by the election officers of the responsibility of their positions. Tebbe v. Smith (Cal.) 673

7. An initial in a space left in a ballot for the insertion of the name of a candidate, although made with the intention of writing a name, which was abandoned, is a distinguishing mark making the ballot void. Id.

8. A cross in the marginal space at the right of the name of a candidate and outside of the square is not a distinguishing mark within Cal. Pol. Code, § 1215, as the Code does not expressly require the mark to be placed within such square, although it requires the clerk in printing the ticket to place upon it the words, "To vote for a person, stamp a cross (X) in the square at the right of the name." Id.

9. The ballots cast at a precinct will be excluded from the count where all of them bear in the same writing the name of a person followed by the name of a party, and there was but one person in the precinct lawfully assisted in the marking of his ballot as provided by Cal. Pol. Code, § 1208, where it does not appear who did the writing or whether it was upon the tickets when they were put into the voters' hands, under § 1211, providing that any ballot which is not made as provided in the act shall be void, and shall not be counted. Id.

10. A blurred spot plainly made on a ballot, which might have been made for identification, or a cross not opposite the name of any candidate, or a number of crosses in a bunch, or a mark which is not a cross, or the use of a blue lead pencil,—is ground for rejecting the ballot under the Nevada Ballot Law, §§ 20, 26, providing that the ballot shall be marked with a cross after the names of the persons for whom the elector votes, in black pencil, and that any marks except as provided in the act shall invalidate the ballot. Dennis v. Caughlin (Nev.) 731

11. A slightly blurred spot or erasure on a ballot, made to correct a mistake, and not indicating an intention to identify the ballot, or a slight pencil mark made by mistake, or a tobacco stain, will not avoid the ballot under the Nevada Ballot Law, § 26, providing that any ballot on which appear marks written or printed, except as provided, shall not be counted. Id.

12. A ballot law which permits the name of a candidate to appear on the official ballot but once, although he may be nominated by different parties, is not unconstitutional although some voters may be unable to vote, as voters of other parties can, for all the candidates of their party without marking the ballot more than once, or to have all the candidates of their party appear on the party ballot. Todd v. Board of Election Comrs. (Mich.) 380

13. A statute requiring a person nominated for the same office by different parties at the same election to notify the election commissioners, within a limited time, upon the column of which party his name shall appear, and forbidding its appearance in more than one place, will not apply to cases in which the specified time has elapsed before the act takes effect. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Voters and elections; payment of poll taxes as a qualification of electors.	414
Construction of ballot law.	670
Validity of ballot law.	330, 668
Distinguishing marks on ballots.	674

WATERS. See also BOUNDARIES; CORPORATIONS, 15, 16; EMINENT DOMAIN, 1, 2; INJUNCTION, 7; NUISANCES, 3, 4.

1. The low-water mark, which in Vermont defines the limit of private ownership of land abutting upon a navigable lake, is the ordinary low-water mark, and not the point to which the water recedes in an exceptionally dry season. McBurney v. Young (Vt.) 539

29 L. R. A.

2. One irrigating company has no right to connect with the ditches of another or take water therefrom without the latter's consent, under the Nebraska Irrigation Law of 1889. Paxton & H. Irrig. Co. & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (Neb.) 853

3. A provision in the contract of a waterworks company, that if any "unforeseen or inevitable accident" shall happen to any part of its system of works the company shall have a reasonable time to repair injuries resulting from the accident, and that such accident shall not be construed to be a breach of the contract, does not apply to an insufficiency of water during a drought, caused by the failure of the company to bore wells necessary to an adequate supply in such seasons. Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.) 743

4. A waterworks company whose charter makes it its absolute duty to supply pure, wholesome deep-well water, is not justified in failing to supply such water by the fact that extra expense would be required in digging the necessary deeper wells, for which the city would not have to pay if it should ever elect to purchase such works, which it has the right to do. Id.

5. A city which has undertaken to furnish its inhabitants with water cannot, after accepting the rates and furnishing water to a consumer for a period beyond that for which a disputed unpaid claim against him exists, shut off the supply for the purpose of coercing payment of such claim. Wood v. Auburn (Me.) 376

6. The question of the validity of an old claim against a water consumer will not be investigated in an injunction proceeding by him against the city to prevent its shutting off his supply after it has accepted the rates and furnished water for periods subsequent to that covered by the disputed claim. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Water; cutting off supply to enforce payment of rates. 376

WELL. See also INJUNCTION, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Well; as appurtenant. 584

WITNESSES. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 8.

A witness may be properly asked on cross-examination how a private crossing came to be put in over a railroad, where he has testified in chief that he knew who put it in and when it was put in. Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 695

WOMEN. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10, 15, 24; MASTER AND SERVANT, 1; STATUTES, 8.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

The objection that an affidavit for substituted service was in the disjunctive in stating that defendant was concealed within the state, or had gone out of the state so that process could not be served upon him, is not well taken where the material fact of the impossibility of finding his whereabouts is alleged. Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.) 783

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES

SHOWING WHERE THE CASES IN THIS VOLUME HAVE BEEN AP-PLIED, DEVELOPED, STRENGTHENED, LIMITED, OR IN ANY WAY AFFECTED BY LATER DECISIONS THAT HAVE CITED THESE CASES AS PRECEDENTS WITH HOLDINGS OF CITING CASES, ALSO REFERENCES TO LATER AS-NOTATIONS CITING
CASES OR NOTES

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 29 L. R. A.

29 L. R. A. 33, PARKER v. RANDOLPH, 5 S. D. 549, 59 N. W. 722.

Notice of prior lien or conveyance affecting title.

Cited in Hill v. Alliance Bldg. Co. 6 S. D. 178, 55 Am. St. Rep. 819, 60 N. W. 752, denying that failure to file verified statement of lien is available to one taking quitclaim deed with notice of lien.

Cited in footnote to Wilhelm v. Wilken, 32 L. R. A. 370, which allows holder of recorded quitclaim deed, rights of bona fide purchaser.

Criticized in Schott v. Dosh, 49 Neb. 192, 59 Am. St. Rep. 531, 68 N. W. 346, holding that grantee under quitclaim deed purchasing without notice of prior unrecorded conveyance takes superior title.

Priority of title.

Distinguished in Citizens' Bank v. Shaw, 14 S. D. 203, 84 N. W. 779, holding rights of assignee of discharged mortgage inferior to rights of grantees under warranty deed from one taking deed with special warranty.

Validity of second chattel mortgage.

Cited in Rosenbaum v. Foss, 7 S. D. 93, 63 N. W. 538 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding second chattel mortgage, which covers mortgagor's right title, and interest to same property, given to different mortgagee.

29 L. R. A. 39, HICKMAN v. GREEN, 123 Mo. 165, 22 S. W. 455, 27 S. W. 440.

Objection to incompetent evidence.

Cited in Boggs v. Pacific Steam Laundry Co. 86 Mo. App. 624, and State v. Crab, 121 Mo. 564, 26 S. W. 548, holding objection as to competency of witness, made on motion for new trial, too late; Nichols v. Nichols, 147 Mo. 403, 48 S. W. 947; Hume v. Hopkins, 140 Mo. 76, 41 S. W. 784, holding that cross-examination as to new matter waives incompetency of evidence; State v. Marcks, 140 Mo. 669, 41 S. W. 973, holding motion to exclude incompetent matter, delayed until close of evidence, properly denied; State v. Foley, 144 Mo. 618, 46 S. W. 733, denying that omission to object to question apparently competent bars exclusion when answered; State v. Lehman, 175 Mo. 625, 75 S. W. 139, holding that after witness has testified for state and has been cross-examined, it is too late to object as to competency on ground that communications were privileged.

Necessity of showing purport of evidence.

Cited in State v. Martin, 124 Mo. 524, 28 S. W. 12, holding mere refusal to admit answer when purport not shown, no error; Lowman v. Maney, 65 Mo. App. 623, and St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Flanagan, 129 Mo. 201, 31 S. W. 773, holding exclusion of evidence for failure to show its purport, no error; Kischman v. Scott, 166 Mo. 226, 65 S. W. 1031, holding that failure to show purpose of swearing wife as witness in action to which husband party justifies exclusion of evidence; Caskey v. La Belle, 101 Mo. App. 598, 74 S. W. 113, holding that appellate court will not review action of trial court in excluding stenographic notes of absent witnesses' testimony, where party failed to show purport of such evidence.

Power of husband to bind wife's estate.

Cited in McCollum v. Boughton, 132 Mo. 623, 35 L. R. A. 488, 34 S. W. 490, denying husband's authority to stipulate with sureties on his note that wife's deed of trust of her separate estate will be used to exonerate sureties.

Imputing agent's knowledge or acts to principal.

Cited in Butler v. Montgomery Grain Co. 85 Mo. App. 56, denying that agent's knowledge of independent transactions is imputable to principal; Kenneth Inv. Co. v. National Bank, 96 Mo. App. 143, 70 S. W. 173, denying that agent's knowledge of forgery is imputed to principal, when part of scheme to defraud employee; Traber v. Hicks, 131 Mo. 192, 32 S. W. 1145, denying that principal is chargeable with notice of fraud perpetrated by agent in collusion with other party; Stanford v. Coram, 26 Mont. 297, 67 Pac. 1005, denying that principal is bound by cashier's misappropriation of proceeds of collateral note in transaction antagonistic to principal; Alpha Mills v. Watertown Steam Engine Co. 116 N. C. 802, 21 S. E. 917, holding principal bound by act of agent in substituting inferior engine for one purchased; Richardson v. Penny, 6 Okla. 342, 50 Pac. 231, holding service of notice to quit, upon agent of tenant, sufficient.

Cited in footnote to Henry v. Allen, 36 L. R. A. 658, which holds notice of agreement by bank with person depositing another's money, that cashier's checks given shall be returned without delivery, not imputable to principal.

Distinguished in Smith v. Farrell, 66 Mo. App. 12, holding that knowledge of dual agency binds both principals so far as affecting either.

Effect of subsequent deed on prior unrecorded deed.

Cited in Elliott v. Buffington, 149 Mo. 676, 51 S. W. 408, holding that grantee under quitclaim deed without notice acquires title superior to grantee under prior unrecorded warranty deed.

Criticized in Morrison v. Juden, 145 Mo. 301, 46 S. W. 994, holding that grantee of unrecorded deed holds title inferior to grantee of deed subsequently executed and recorded.

What establishes relation of attorney and client.

Cited in West v. Freeman, 69 Mo. App. 688, holding that attorney's acceptance of client's offer establishes relation of attorney and client.

Privileged communications.

Cited in State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 595, 75 S. W. 116, holding that statute relating to privileged communications does not make attorney incompetent to testify as to communications relating to conspiracy to bribe councilmen.

29 L. R. A. 52, LAKE SHORE & M. S. R. CO. v. PLATT, 53 Ohio St 254, 41 N. E. 243.

Grant of land situated upon stream.

Cited in Head v. Chesbrough, 13 Ohio C. C. 357, Affirming 4 Ohio N. P. 75. holding that conveyance of platted lots on bank of stream, no part of bed being platted, includes grantor's rights to center of stream.

29 L. R. A. 55, GRAYBILL v. PENN TWP. MUT. F. INS. ASSO. 170 Pa. 75, 50 Am. St. Rep. 747, 32 Atl. 632.

Location of movable property as affecting policy.

Cited in McKeesport Mach. Co. v. Ben Franklin Ins. Co. 173 Pa. 57, 34 Atl. 16. construing policy to include patterns burned while in use, though not located in building described in policy.

Cited in footnotes to British America Assur. Co. v. Miller, 39 L. R. A. 545, which holds that insurance on personal property while contained in certain building does not cover property while in other place where family are temporarily staying, in accordance with known habit; L'Anse v. Fire Asso. 43 L. R. A. 838. which holds that insurance on fire engine, etc., while in engine-house does not cover property while being used in extinguishing fire; Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 55 L. R. A. 825, which authorizes recovery of insured chattels destroyed at place to which removed with insurer's consent, notwithstanding previous removal without consent.

29 L. R. A. 57, AMOSKEAG MFG. CO. v. CONCORD, 66 N. H. 562, 34 Atl. 241.

29 L. R. A. 59, LEWIS v. DAILY NEWS CO. 81 Md. 466, 32 Atl. 246.

Defamatory words and their justification.

Cited in Coffin v. Brown, 94 Md. 193, 55 L. R. A. 734, 89 Am. St. Rep. 422, 50 Atl. 567, holding charge of willingness "to perpetrate any crime in politics that would pay" not justified by proof of attempt to bribe voter subsequent to libel; Kilgour v. Evening Star Newspaper Co. 96 Md. 23, 53 Atl. 716, holding publication that state's attorney wilfully prevented proper inquiry as to cause of death of infant not actionable per se; Shepherd v. Baer, 96 Md. 154, 53 Atl. 790, holding that charge criticizing management of schools justifies publication of letter alleging that critic had formerly praised board, but had changed because he had failed to receive appointment, and that he lacked mental rectitude.

Cited in footnote to Hollenbeck v. Hall, 39 L. R. A. 734, which holds publication that trader was dishonest in pleading statute of limitations not libelous.

29 L. R. A. 61, COM. v. McCANCE, 164 Mass. 162, 41 N. E. 133.

Sufficiency of indictment.

Cited in Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 37, 40 L. ed. 608, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434, holding indictment omitting indecent matter charged, yet described with reasonable definiteness, sufficient.

29 L. R. A. 63, ST. JOHNS MFG. CO. v. MUNGER, 106 Mich. 90, 58 Am. St. Rep. 468, 64 N. W. 3.

Corporation's ratification of promoter's acts.

Followed in Rapid Hook & Eye Co. v. DeRuyter, 117 Mich. 549, 76 N. W. 76, holding that promoter's testimony that corporation ratified his acts in securing subscribers is not evidence of ratification.

Liability of contributors to corporation about to be formed.

Cited in Esper v. Miller, 131 Mich. 339, 91 N. W. 613, holding persons contributing funds to corporation about to be organized, for purchase of land, not personally liable, after formation of corporation, on contract between corporation and real estate agent.

Rescission of subscription contract for fraud.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 725) on rescission for fraud or misrepresentation in procuring subscription to stock.

29 L. R. A. 66, REYES v. MIDDLETON, 36 Fla. 99, 51 Am. St. Rep. 17, 17 So. 937.

Adverse possession affecting validity of deed.

Cited in footnote to Ft. Jefferson Improv. Co. v. Dupoyster, 48 L. R. A. 537, which holds adverse possession of land conveyed no ground for complaint to subsequent purchaser after outstanding title has been bought in.

29 L. R. A. 69, CHICAGO & A. R. CO. v. PEOPLE, 153 Ill. 409, 38 N. E. 1075.

Taxation of railroad and bridge companies.

Cited in footnotes to Com. v. Henderson Bridge Co. 29 L. R. A. 73, which sustains city's power to tax franchise for bridge over interstate river; State v. Virginia & T. R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 759, which holds earning capacity of railroad the main consideration in determining taxable value.

Distinguished in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Grant, 167 Ill. 496, 47 N. E. 750, holding that right of way may be assessed as "railroad track," although not actually owned by company.

Taxation of corporate franchise.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 48) on taxation of corporate franchise in United States.

29 L. R. A. 73, COM. v. HENDERSON BRIDGE CO. 99 Ky. 623, 31 S. W. 486.

Corporate taxation.

Followed in Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Com. 104 Ky. 735, 47 S. W. 877, sustaining act requiring bridge and ferry companies to file statement of property to aid assessment of taxes.

Cited in Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Com. 106 Ky. 168, 57 L. R. A. 36, 49 S. W. 1069, holding private trading corporations not required to report for franchise taxes; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Bellevue, 105 Ky. 292, 57 L. R. A. 60, 49 S. W. 23, holding ad valorem tax upon franchise of street railroad company required by Constitution; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Norman, 77 Fed. 26, holding taxation on intangible property of corporation valid; First Nat. Bank v. Stone, 88 Fed. 411, sustaining act taxing national banks on basis of value of shares of capital stock; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 395, holding that judgment that statute exempts certain banks from taxation prevents direct tax on bank's property; Ridpath v. Spokane County, 23 Wash. 439, 63 Pac. 261, holding shares of stock of domestic corporation not assessable against shareholders personally; Southern R. Co. v. Coulter, 113 Ky. 668, 68 S. W. 873, and Paducah Street R. Co. v. McCracken County, 105 Ky. 476, 49 S. W. 178, sustaining act providing for taxation of corporate franchises.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 54, 56, 79, 80, 94, 103, 104) on taxation of corporate franchise in United States; (58 L. R. A. 514, 529, 558, 559, 577) on taxation of capital stock of corporations in United States; (60 L. R. A. 351) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation; (60 L. R. A. 675) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause.

— Deduction of debts and value of other franchise.

Cited in State v. Duluth Gas & Water Co. 76 Minn. 105, 57 L. R. A. 71, 78 N. W. 1032, and State ex rel. Shriver v. Karr, 64 Neb. 529, 90 N. W. 298, declaring unconstitutional, provision for deducting indebtedness of corporation from value of stock for purposes of assessment; Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Com. 108 Ky. 723, 57 S. W. 624, holding that value of additional franchise granted in another state need not be deducted in assessing value of franchise in state where corporation domiciled and where latter franchise was granted.

Action for taxes as res judicata.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Covington, 129 Fed. 800, holding judgment in action for taxes for one year not bar to subsequent suit between same parties under same law for another year's tax.

Right and duties of toll bridge proprietors.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 168) on rights and duties of toll bridge proprietors.

29 L. R. A. 79, RITCHIE v. PEOPLE, 155 Ill. 98, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454.

Validity of statute or ordinance interfering with contract, business, or immunities.

Cited in Carrollton v. Bazette, 159 Ill. 294, 31 L. R. A. 526, 42 N. E. 837, holding license fee of $10 per day, imposed upon itinerant merchants, unreasonable; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 305, 32 L. R. A. 663, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, 43 N. E. 1108, declaring void, statute prohibiting barbers from doing business on Sunday; State v. Sopher, 25 Utah, 324, 60 L. R. A. 471, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, 71 Pac. 482, sustaining statute forbidding barber to exercise his trade on Sunday; Re Day, 181 Ill. 80, 50 L. R. A. 522, 54 N. E. 646, holding void, statute discriminating with respect to admission of attorneys who began study of law prior to certain date; Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 190, 39 L. R. A. 123, 48 N. E. 108, denying that property of expert witness is taken without compensation by requiring opinion upon payment of ordinary fees; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 142, 49 L. R. A. 186, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41, declaring unconstitutional, law forbidding use of likeness of national flag on trademark or label; Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 48, 50 L. R. A. 763, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 708, sustaining law prohibiting grain-option contracts under penalty; Bailey v. People, 190 Ill. 33, 54 L. R. A. 840, footnote p. 839, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98, holding void, restriction on number which lodging-house keepers may permit to occupy one room; Price v. People, 193 Ill. 118, 55 L. R. A. 590, 86 Am. St. Rep. 306, 61 N. E. 844, sustaining act taxing private employment agencies; Bessette v. People, 193 Ill. 345, 56 L. R. A. 562, footnote p. 558, 62 N. E. 215, holding void, requirement that horseshoers practise for four years, submit to examination, and pay license fee; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 520, 59 L. R. A. 644, 65 N. E. 451, upholding city's power to regulate street car fares and transfers; State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 452, 33 L. R. A. 319, 44 N. E. 469, sustaining act regulating sale of intoxicating liquors; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 401, 63 L. R. A. 78, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241, 67 N. E. 28, holding statute establishing free employment agencies to be maintained at public expense, and forbidding information to be given to persons whose employees are on strike, void, as interfering with freedom of contract; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 535, 58 L. R. A. 751, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098, and Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 183, 52 L. R. A. 286, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176, 58 N. E. 1007, declaring void, statute forbidding, under penalty, employers to discharge employees for connection with unions; State v. Julow (Omitted from official report in 129 Mo. 163), 29 L. R. A. 259, upholding statute restricting right to discharge laborers for membership in unions; Fiske v. People, 188 Ill. 210, 52 L. R. A. 292, 58 N. E. 985, declaring unconstitutional, ordinance requiring employment of union labor only, upon public buildings; Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 447, 56 L. R. A. 322, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, sustaining act requiring employers to pay money at face value of orders issued for wages; State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 160, 47 L. R. A. 374, 59 Pac. 340, holding invalid, act forbidding payment of wages except in money, check, or draft; State v. Foster, 22 R. I. 175, 50 L. R. A. 344, 46 Atl. 833, sustaining act requiring itinerant merchants to procure license and leave special deposit; Opinion of Justices, 163 Mass. 591, 40 N. E. 713, discussing validity and effect of statutes regulating time of payment of wages; Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 347, 30 L. R. A. 494, 42 N. E. 386 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining restriction to designated class of right to recover attorney's fees in suits for wages; State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 285, 69 Pac. 199 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining statute prohibiting making of anti-competitive trade agreements.

Cited in footnotes to Harding v. People, 32 L. R. A. 445, which holds act requiring weighing of coal hoisted from mines whose product is shipped by rail or water, invalid; Re Preston, 52 L. R. A. 523, which holds void, statute against screening coal before weighing and crediting to miner; State v. Wilson, 47 L. R. A. 71, which sustains statute against screening coal mined at quantity rates, before weighing and crediting to employees.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 344) on validity and effect of statutes regulating time of payment of wages.

— As to hours of employment.

Cited in State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 606, 59 L. R. A. 344, footnote p. 342, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930, 70 Pac. 52, sustaining prohibition against employment of women more than ten hours daily in certain establishments; State v. Holden, 14 Utah, 92, 37 L. R. A. 107, footnote p. 103, 46 Pac. 756, and State v. Cantwell, 179 Mo. 263, 78 S. W. 569, sustaining act prohibiting employment in mines more than eight hours daily; Re Morgan, 26 Colo. 444, 47 L. R. A. 64, footnote p. 52, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, declaring void, eight-hour law applying to smelters; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 19, sustaining act regulating hours of employment of minors and women in certain establishments; Re Ten-Hour Law, 24 R. I. 611, 61 L. R. A. 615, footnote p. 612, 54 Atl. 602, which sustains limitation to ten hours a day of work of street railway employees.

Cited in footnotes to State v. McNally, 36 L. R. A. 533, which denies power of city council to make violation of ordinance fixing hours of labor on public works a misdemeanor; Short v. Bullion, B. & C. Min. Co. 45 L. R. A. 603, which sustains eight-hour law for miners, smelters, and refiners; Re Dalton, 47 L. R. A. 380, which sustains eight-hour law applicable only to employees of state, municipality, or subdivision of state; Fiske v. People, 52 L. R. A. 291, which holds void, restriction of hours of labor on city contracts to eight hours per day; Wenham v. State, 58 L. R. A. 825, which sustains statute limiting hours of work of women in certain employments; Cleveland v. Clements Bros. Constr. Co. 59 L. R. A. 775, which holds void, act limiting work of laborers on public contract to eight hours a day.

Stipulation for employment of union men only.

Cited in Adams v. Brenan, 177 Ill. 200, 42 L. R. A. 720, 69 Am. St. Rep. 222, 52 N. E. 314, holding stipulation in contract for construction of school building by union men only, illegal.

Restrictions as to hours of labor as preventing bidding.

Cited in Glover v. People, 201 Ill. 548, 66 N. E. 820, holding objection, on application for sale, that specifications for local improvement restricted employment of labor to eight hours a day, or forfeit contract, thereby restricting bidding, prima facie sufficient to defeat application.

Injunction against interference by strikers.

Cited in Temple Iron Co. v. Carmanoskie, 10 Kulp, 39, 7 Northampton Co. Rep. 260, sustaining injunction restraining strikers from intimidating employees; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 98, 35 L. R. A. 723, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077, sustaining injunction against patrol of strikers in front of factory.

Title of act as affecting its constitutionality.

Cited in Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 83, 49 N. E. 985, holding provision that testator's marriage revokes will properly embraced in title "Act in Regard to Descent of Property;" Bobel v. People, 173 Ill. 25, 64 Am. St. Rep. 64, 50 N. E. 322, holding "slot machine" act not unconstitutional on ground that subject not expressed in title; Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 156, 48 L. R. A. 577, 54 N. E. 973, holding act entitled "Act to Make Appropriations for Expenses of Normal College and Equipment of Gymnasium" not void as expressing more than one subject in title; Cook v. Marshall County, 119 Iowa, 399, 93 N. W. 372, holding provision for assessment of tax against one dealing in cigarettes, and on real property whereon they are sold, expressed in title "An Act to Revise and Amend Statutes in Relation to Crimes and Their Punishment."

Priority of mechanic's lien over mortgage.

Cited in Vilas v. McDonough Mfg. Co. 91 Wis. 618, 30 L. R. A. 782, 51 Am. St. Rep. 925, 65 N. W. 488 (dissenting opinion), majority holding mechanic's lien for machinery superior to prior mortgage.

29 L. R. A. 88, WILLAMETTE IRON WORKS v. OREGON R. & NAV. CO. 26 Or. 224, 46 Am. St. Rep. 620, 37 Pac. 1016.

Additional servitudes.

Cited in Huddleston v. Eugene, 34 Or. 353, 43 L. R. A. 447, footnote p. 444, 55 Pac. 868, denying that change of county road to city street is additional servitude; Brand v. Multnomah County, 38 Or. 92, 50 L. R. A. 393, footnote p.

389, 84 Am. St. Rep. 772, 60 Pac. 390, holding bridge approach elevating surface of street to established grade not increased burden; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Milwaukee, R. & K. Electric R. Co. 95 Wis. 573, 37 L. R. A. 862, 60 Am. St. Rep. 136, 70 N. W. 678, holding that construction upon public street of electric railroad imposes additional servitude.

Cited in footnote to Boston & A. R. Co. v. Worcester, 55 L. R. A. 623, which holds use of part of railroad location outside of tracks for approach of highway bridge over tracks to abolish grade crossing not new easement on right of way.

Injunction against injury to easement in street.

Cited in footnote to First Nat. Bank v. Tyson, 59 L. R. A. 399, which sustains right of injunction against erection of pillars in street in front of adjoining lot obstructing light and air from street.

Validity of assessment, regardless of benefits.

Cited in Lathrop v. Racine, 119 Wis. 473, 97 N. W. 192, holding provision empowering council to compel riparian owners to build docks along navigable harbor, and, in case of their failure, to award contracts and assess cost upon abutting property, regardless of benefits, void, as taking property without compensation.

29 L. R. A. 92, TAYLOR v. DOWNEY, 104 Mich. 532, 53 Am. St. Rep. 472, 62 N. W. 716.

Innkeeper's lien and liability.

Approved in Elliott v. Martin, 105 Mich. 507, 55 Am. St. Rep. 461, 63 N. W. 525, holding no innkeeper's lien acquired for board of horse under express agreement with one not a guest.

Cited in footnotes to Cunningham v. Buckey, 35 L. R. A. 850, which holds innkeeper liable for theft of servants from guests while asleep; Bradley Livery Co. v. Snook, 55 L. R. A. 208, which denies innkeeper's liability for team tied under shed without his attention being called to fact.

Care in keeping special deposit.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 776) on care required of bank in keeping special deposit.

29 L. R. A. 97, BRIM v. JONES, 11 Utah, 200, 39 Pac. 825.

Affirmed in 165 U. S. 180, 41 L. ed. 677, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282.

Reconsideration of question on second appeal refused in 13 Utah, 442, 45 Pac. 46.

29 L. R. A. 100, EATON v. ROBINSON, 19 R. I. 146, 31 Atl. 1058, 32 Atl. 339.
Corporate officers' right to compensation.

Cited in footnotes to Huffaker v. Germania Safety Vault & T. Co. 46 L. R. A. 384, which holds directors entitled to compensation for extraordinary services performed without contract, by which company was saved from bankruptcy; Bassett v. Fairchild, 52 L. R. A. 611, which sustains director's right, without direct contract, to compensation for services not connected with office.

Right of action for misappropriation of corporate funds.

Cited in Schoening v. Schwenk, 112 Iowa, 735, 84 N. W. 916, upholding stock holder's right to maintain suit against officers and directors for misappropriation of corporate funds.

29 L. R. A. 103, AMERICAN NAT. BANK v. AMERICAN WOOD PAPER CO. 19 R. I. 149, 61 Am. St. Rep. 746, 32 Atl. 305.

29 L. R. A. 104, PENNSYLVANIA CO. v. McCAFFREY, 139 Ind. 430, 38 N. E. 67.

Duty of master as to care and employment of servant.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Martin, 13 Ind. App. 494, 41 N. E. 1051, holding proof of invitation a condition to recovery for injuries to employee while going to another part of premises to eat dinner; Dillon v. Iowa C. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 651, 92 N. W. 855, holding railroad company not liable to engineer who left engine to urinate, and was injured while between cars; Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Ohler, 161 Ind. 406, 68 N. E. 901, holding evidence that servant had been required to perform heavy work continuously for forty eight hours competent in action for personal injuries.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 393) on duty of master as to employment of servants.

Impulsive act as contributory negligence.

Cited in Indiana R. Co. v. Maurer, 160 Ind. 28, 66 N. E. 156, holding infirm person not guilty of contributory negligence in impulsively grabbing hold of running board of car, to prevent fall due to premature starting of car.

29 L. R. A. 110, TILLMAN v. OTTER, 93 Ky. 600, 20 S. W. 1036.

Validity of acts of less than majority.

Cited in Re Schuylkill Haven Nominations, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 420, denying power of two members of committee of twelve to change place of meeting.

Compelling attendance of absent trustee.

Cited in footnote to Wampler v. State, 38 L. R. A. 829, which authorizes mandamus to compel township trustee to meet with others in order to obtain quorum.

29 L. R. A. 113, FRENCH v. STATE, 141 Ind. 618, 41 N. E. 2.

Constitutional power of appointment.

Cited in footnote to Johanson v. State, 38 L. R. A. 373, which holds statute depriving governor of power to appoint judges of inferior court by changing its name, void.

Long acquiescence as affecting construction of statute or Constitution.

Cited in State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 458, 33 L. R. A. 321, 44 N. E. 469, holding that practice of legislature, unquestioned for forty years, will control construction of constitutional provision applicable to amendments of statutes; Terre Haute v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 149 Ind. 186, 37 L. R. A. 194, 46 N. E. 77, holding that acquiescence for forty years in legislative construction of Constitution becomes conclusive; Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 147, 41 L. R. A. 341, 47 N. E. 525, and Smith v. Indianapolis Street R. Co. 158 Ind. 435, 63 N. E. 849, holding acquiescence for forty-five years in legislature's power to regulate corporations, influential in determining constitutional provision as to creating corporations by special acts; Wilcoxon v. Bluffton, 153 Ind. 279, 54 N. E. 110, holding town officials' acquiescence in judiciary's treatment of school bonds as town debts may be entitled to great weight in construing statute.

Judicial exercise of legislative powers.

Cited in Terre Haute v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 149 Ind. 184, 37 L. R. A. 194, 46 N. E. 77, sustaining act conferring upon circuit court judges power to appoint city commissioners.

Cited in footnotes to Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 39 L. R. A. 794, which holds approval and adoption or modification of plan for street railway not judicial power; Zanesville v. Zanesville Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 52 L. R. A. 150, which sustains statute empowering probate court to direct mode of constructing telegraph or telephone line in street; Re Davies, 56 L. R. A. 855, which holds that supreme court justice may be empowered to appoint referee to take testimony to aid in suppressing monopoly.

Member of school board as ministerial officer.

Cited in State v. Loechner, 65 Neb. 825, 59 L. R. A. 919, 91 N. W. 874, holding member of board of education in city, ministerial officer.

Duty of one denying validity of statute.

Cited in Overshiner v. State, 156 Ind. 188, 51 L. R. A. 749, 83 Am. St. Rep. 187, 59 N. E. 468, holding that one assailing validity of act must specify particular constitutional provision violated.

29 L. R. A. 120, SOUTHERN BLDG. & L. ASSO. v. ANNISTON LOAN & T. CO. 101 Ala. 582, 46 Am. St. Rep. 138, 15 So. 123.

Application of payments on loan association contracts.

Cited in Gwin v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 121 Ala. 574, 25 So. 843, holding one executing mortgage to loan association as security not entitled to credit for payments before maturity; Capital City Ins. Co. v. Jones, 128 Ala. 364, 86 Am. St. Rep. 152, 30 So. 674, upholding modification of original agreement by application of payments to mortgage debt, instead of on stock subscription; Hayes v. Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. 124 Ala. 670, 82 Am. St. Rep. 216, 26 So. 527, holding payments made on stock retransferred to loan association as security for loan not credits on loan; Caston v. Stafford, 92 Mo. App. 191, denying that monthly dues on stock in loan association constitute payments on loan; Coltrane v. Blake, 51 C. C. A. 463, 113 Fed. 796, holding borrowing stockholder in loan association entitled to pro rata share in distribution of assets, without credit on loan for payments on stock; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 121 Mich. 355, 80 N. W. 120, holding payments on unmatured stock not applicable to mortgage debt, on insolvency of association; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Cannon, 96 Tenn. 605, 33 L. R. A. 114, footnote p. 112, 54 Am. St. Rep. 858, 36 S. W. 336, denying right to credit for forfeited payments on lapsed shares of loan association; Hale v. Gullick, 13 S. D. 647, 84 N. W. 196 (dissenting opinion), majority holding credit of dues on stock or loan immaterial in winding up affairs of insolvent association; Wilson v. Martinez, 47 C. C. A. 593, 108 Fed. 707; Manorita v. Fidelity Trust & Loan Co. 101 Fed. 10, denying loan association's right to hold mortgage as security for further instalments after mortgage debt extinguished.

Cited in footnotes to Strauss v. Carolina Interstate Bldg. & Loan Asso. 30 L. R. A. 693, which holds all money paid by borrowing members of loan association to be credits on amounts borrowed; Post v. Mechanics' Bldg. & L. Asso. 34 L. R. A. 201, which denies right to credit, on usurious loans, payment of dues on loan association stock; Hale v. Cairns, 44 L. R. A. 261, which denies right to apply dues, paid on stock, on mortgage to insolvent loan association; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhillamy, 59 L. R. A. 743, which holds that when insolvent loan association goes into voluntary liquidation prematurely, borrowing member cannot be credited with full amount of dues paid on stock.

Distinguished in Pioneer Sav. & Loan Co. v. Nonnemacher, 127 Ala. 548, 30 So. 79, holding borrower entitled to have withdrawal value of stock, retransferred to loan association as collateral security, indorsed on mortgage debt at time of forfeiture.

Criticized in Randall v. National Bldg. Loan & Protective Union, 43 Neb. 878, 29 L. R. A. 137, 62 N. W. 252, refusing to enforce agreement as to forfeiture of stock in loan association, pledged as collateral security, without allowing credit on loan.

Relation between loan association and subscriber.

Cited in Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Nonnemacher, 127 Ala. 545, 30 So. 79, holding that one subscribing to stock of loan association, and retransferring it as collateral security for loan, occupies relation of shareholder and borrower.

Amount recoverable on loan association mortgage.

Cited in footnote to Roberts v. American Bldg. & L. Asso. 33 L. R. A. 744, which holds amount recoverable on loan association mortgage is amount of interest, dues, and fines, and present value of anticipated payment.

Liability of member of loan association for assessments.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 177) on liability of advanced member of building and loan association to assessment for losses.

Usury as to building and loan association contracts.

Cited in Johnson v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 125 Ala. 481, 82 Am. St. Rep. 257, 28 So. 2, holding building and loan association contracts not within statute applicable to usury; Sheldon v. Birmingham Bldg. & L. Asso. 121 Ala. 283, 25 So. 820; Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Brown, 128 Ala. 469, 29 So. 656; Farmers Sav. & Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Kent, 131 Ala. 255, 30 So. 874,—holding charge of premium and interest on loan is not usury; Barrett v. Central Bldg. & L. Asso. 130 Ala. 298, 30 So. 347, holding bill alleging intention of parties to make loan usurious, demurrable; Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Casa Grande Stable Co. 128 Ala. 629, 29 So. 654, raising, without deciding, question of usury as to building and loan association contracts.

29 L. R. A. 127, BUIST v. BRYAN, 44 S. C. 121, 51 Am. St. Rep. 787, 21 S. E. 537.

Effect of dissolution or insolvency on contracts of loan associations.

Approved in Sumter Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Winn, 45 S. C. 386, 23 S. E. 29, holding that premature dissolution of loan association forfeits right to foreclose mortgage against defaulting borrower; Clarke v. Olson, 9 N. D. 373, 83 N. W. 519, and Meares v. Finlayson, 63 S. C. 540, 41 S. E. 779, holding that appointment of receiver terminates borrower's contract and entitles him to credit payments on loan.

Cited in Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 311, and Interstate

Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Edgefield Hotel Co. 120 Fed. 427, holding stockholder chargeable with loan and interest and entitled to credit for premiums when association insolvent; Armstrong v. United States Bldg. & L. Asso. 15 App. D. C. 18, holding borrowing member entitled to release upon dissolution of association by payment of present value of aggregate instalments unpaid; Leahy v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 100 Wis. 568, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945, 76 N. W. 625, and Curtis v. Granite State Provident Asso. 69 Conn. 11, 61 Am. St. Rep. 17, 36 Atl. 1023, holding that mortgage debts become due upon dissolution of loan association; Manorita v. Fidelity Trust & Loan Co. 101 Fed. 12, holding borrowing stockholder required to contribute pro rata share to association's losses.

Application of payments on loan association contracts.

Cited in People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhilamy, 81 Miss. 79, 59 L. R. A. 744, 95 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 So. 1001, holding that borrowing member cannot be credited with full amount of dues paid on stock when insolvent loan association goes into voluntary liquidation prematurely; Carpenter v. Lewis, 65 S. C. 405, 43 S. E. 881, denying right of receiver of loan association to collect costs or interest on usurious contract, but all dues and interest paid by borrower must be credited on loan; Pollock v. Carolina Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. 51 S. C. 424, 64 Am. St. Rep. 683, 29 S. E. 77, holding that all money paid on stock in loan association must be credited on debt; Hale v. Thomas, 20 Utah, 432, 59 Pac. 241; Hale v. Stenger, 22 Wash. 520, 61 Pac. 156; Hale v. Barker, 129 Cal. 425, 62 Pac. 168,—applying on mortgage, given to secure loan, monthly payment—made on stock, when association insolvent; Hale v. Cairns, 8 N. D. 150, 44 L. R. A. 262, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010, denying right of defaulting borrower to apply on mortgage debt, premiums paid on stock assigned as security.

Cited in footnote to Post v. Mechanics' Bldg. & L. Asso. 34 L. R. A. 201, which denies right to credit on usurious loans, payment of dues on loan association stock.

Disapproved in Price v. Kendall, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 31, 36 S. W. 810, and Curtis v. Granite State Provident Asso. 69 Conn. 14, 61 Am. St. Rep. 17, 36 Atl. 1023, holding that dues paid by borrowing member on stock should not be credited on debt.

Usury as affecting contracts of loan association.

Cited in Turner v. Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. 47 S. C. 404, 25 S. E. 278, holding stipulation that amount received by association shall not exceed loan and interest not usurious; Carpenter v. Lewis, 60 S. C. 40, 38 S. E. 244, applying remedy in force in forum for collection of usurious interest by nonresident on contract executed in another state; Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Alexander, 96 Fed. 872, holding that usury laws of District of Columbia govern loan association contract made there, affecting property in South Carolina.

Excessive collection by loan association.

Cited in Pollock v. Carolina Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. 48 S. C. 78, 59 Am. St. Rep. 695, 25 S. E. 977, holding excessive collection shown by complaint in action against loan association, stating that after certain payments had been made on bond, the property was burned and insurance money deposited in bank, from which association drew more than sufficient to pay balance due on bond.

Relation between loan association and borrower.

Cited in Meares v. Finlayson, 55 S. C. 117, 32 S. E. 986, holding that assignment of stock to association as security for loan established relation of lender and borrower.

Borrower's liability for payments.

Distinguished in Buist v. Fitzsimmons, 44 S. C. 141, 21 S. E. 610, holding borrower from loan association who gave bond requiring monthly payments until assets should pay $200 per share not relieved from liability because required sum has been paid, but wasted by directors, and because of action to appoint receiver.

When rehearing will be denied.

Followed in Buist v. Salvo, 44 S. C. 145, 21 S. E. 615, dismissing petition for rehearing when no material fact overlooked.

29 L. R. A. 133, RANDALL v. NATIONAL BLDG. LOAN & PROTECTIVE UNION, 42 Neb. 809, 60 N. W. 1019.

Rehearing denied in 43 Neb. 877, 62 N. W. 252.

Application of payments on loan association contracts.

Followed, without discussion, in Stearns v. National Bldg. Loan & Protective Union, 42 Neb. 817, 60 N. W. 1022.

Cited in People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Gilmore, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 183, 90 N. W. 108, upholding right of defaulting borrower from loan association to have credit for present value of his stock applied on mortgage debt; Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 311, holding stockholder chargeable with loan and interest and credited with payments and interest when association insolvent; Sawtelle v. North American Sav. L. & Bldg. Co. 14 Utah, 449, 48 Pac. 211, decreeing that sum paid as dues on stock in loan association must be applied in reduction of loan; Western Sav. Co. v. Houston, 38 Or. 331, 65 Pac. 611; People's Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. v. Fowble, 17 Utah, 129, 53 Pac. 999; Hale v. Stenger, 22 Wash. 520, 61 Pac. 156,—holding that all sums paid to association must be credited on mortgage debt; Armstrong v. United States Bldg. & L. Asso. 15 App. D. C. 18, holding borrowing member entitled to release upon dissolution of association by payment of present money value of aggregate instalments unpaid; Buist v. Bryan, 44 S. C. 129, 29 L. R. A. 133, 51 Am. St. Rep. 787, 21 S. E. 597, holding that monthly payments on stock should be credited on mortgage when association is in hands of receiver.

Cited in footnote to Post v. Mechanics' Bldg. & L. Asso. 34 L. R. A. 201, which denies right to credit, on usurious loans, payment of dues on loan association stock.

Distinguished in Hale v. Cairns, 8 N. D. 150, 44 L. R. A. 202, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010, denying right of defaulting borrower to apply on debt, premiums paid on stock assigned as security; Anselme v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 63 Neb. 529, 88 N. W. 665, denying borrower's right to credit upon loan for money paid as dues when association insolvent.

Usury in loan association contract.

Cited in National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Keeney, 57 Neb. 98, 77 N. W. 442, denying right of loan association to recover interest on principal, where contract provided for payments in such manner as to allow association to collect more than legal rate.

Relation between loan association and member.

Cited in Livingston Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Drummond, 49 Neb. 206, 68 N. W. 375, holding that advancement of funds upon assignment of stock to loan association as security establishes relation of lender and borrower.

Surrender of stock as affecting liability for dues.

Cited in Kear v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 2 Herdman (Neb.) 899, 90 N. W. 643, holding borrower who assigned his stock to loan association as collateral security for advancement not liable for payment of dues on such stock, since he has no interest in its accumulations.

29 L. R. A. 137, UNION P. R. CO. v. ERICKSON, 41 Neb. 1, 59 N. W. 347.

Liability for injury by things thrown from train.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry, 152 Ind. 619, 46 L. R. A. 57. 53 N. E. 415, denying that injury to trackwalker from collision with iron pin thrown from passing engine proves negligence on part of railroad company.

Cited in footnote to Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Martin, 55 L. R. A. 361, which denies duty of railroad company to use care to prevent piece of broken brake shoe flying from car and injuring one using track for his own affairs.

Duty of railroad company to give signals.

Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Metcalf, 44 Neb. 860, 28 L. R. A. 827. 63 N. W. 51, holding one transferring coal from car to wagon to be within protection of statute requiring sounding of signal by approaching train.

Who are fellow servants.

Followed in Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 48 Neb. 555, 67 N. W. 447, holding foreman of section crew and engineer in charge of train not connected with former's work not fellow servants.

Cited in Union P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 50 Neb. 557, 70 N. W. 43, holding section-man working under boss not fellow servant of foreman of gravel train; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 131, 74 N. W. 454, holding station agent charged with duty of setting brakes on cars sidetracked not fellow servant of car inspector; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lyons, 54 Neb. 641, 75 N. W. 13, holding members of two switching crews, engaged in same yard and under same yard master, fellow servants; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Furry, 52 C. C. A. 523. 114 Fed. 903, holding fireman injured through failure of operator to deliver orders not fellow servant of latter.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 446, 447, 458) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes, where no question as to vice principalship arises.

Vice principalship as determined by act causing injury.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 47) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Contributory negligence as question for jury.

Cited in footnote to Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co. 64 L. R. A. 146, which holds contributory negligence of employee in using defective ladder to adjust belt, after complaining to manager and being told that it was all right, question for jury.

29 L. R. A. 143, JONES v. ASPEN HARDWARE CO. 21 Colo. 263, 52 Am. St. Rep. 220, 40 Pac. 457.

Creation, powers, and liabilities of de facto and de jure corporations.

Cited in Miller v. Williams, 27 Colo. 38. 59 Pac. 740, holding that foreign corporation may take under trust deed executed before, and delivered after, filing certificate; Maryland Tube & Iron Works v. West End Improv. Co. 87 Md. 217, 39 L. R. A. 814, 39 Atl. 620, holding failure to pay bonus tax, good defense to action by corporation for specific performance of contract; Card v. Moore, 68 App. Div. 335, 74 N. Y. Supp. 18, holding filing of certificate in office of town clerk only insufficient to complete organization; Gilkey v. Hbw, 105 Wis. 46, 49 L. R. A. 485, 81 N. W. 120, holding that defective organization of town under valid law creates de facto town; Gastonia Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Wells Co. 128 Fed. 375, 63 C. C. A. 117, holding corporation not created with power to bring action in Federal court, where no capital stock was paid in or certificates issued.

Cited in footnote to Slocum v. Head, 50 L. R. A. 324, which holds persons attempting to incorporate by filing original articles, instead of copies, entitled to all rights of corporation as to persons dealing with them as such.

Title of act.

Cited in Cardillo v. People, 26 Colo. 361, 58 Pac. 678, holding provision imposing penalty for opening bars on Sunday germane to title of act "To Regulate Saloons, and Imposing Penalties for Violations."

29 L. R. A. 145, CARPENTER'S APPEAL, 170 Pa. 203, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765, 32 Atl. 637.

Right to take or administer property as affected by murder.

Cited in Re Fleming, 16 Misc. 444, 38 N. Y. Supp. 611, holding that indictment of remainderman for murder of life tenant prevents distribution until charge disposed of; Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 45, 51 L. R. A. 144, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800, holding that murder of assured by beneficiary forfeits rights under certificate; Lanier v. Box (Tenn.) 64 L. R. A. 463, footnote p. 458, 79 S. W. 1042, which sustains right of wife's distributees to proceeds of policy on husband's life, payable to wife if she survived husband, although latter murdered her and afterwards took his own life.

Cited in footnotes to Holdom v. Ancient Order, U. W. 31 L. R. A. 67, which holds policy not forfeited by killing of insured by insane beneficiary; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 44 L. R. A. 305, which holds only assignee's interest in policy forfeited by his murder of insured.

— By pendency of divorce proceedings.

Cited in Topham's Estate, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 376, holding wife's right to administer husband's estate not forfeited by pendency of divorce proceedings at time of his death.

— By detention under commitment proceedings.

Cited in Reilly's Estate, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 544, holding widow not deprived of her exemptions at husband's death, because absent against her will under commitment proceedings instituted by husband.

Statutes and public policy.

Cited in Com. ex rel. Luden v. Kutz, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 574, holding statute requiring L. R. A. Av.—Vol. III.—71.

ing auctioneer to procure license not contrary to public policy; Reinhold v. Reinhold, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 566, denying wife's right, under statute, to sue husband for her separate property during continuance of family relation; Northern C. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. 215, 44 Atl. 253, upholding contract of purchase, under statute, of stock of one railroad company by another, when roads not competing lines.

29 L. R. A. 150, PRICE v. PRICE, 91 Iowa, 693, 51 Am. St. Rep. 360, 60 N. W. 202.

Offer to provide home as defense to suit for alienation of affections.

Cited in Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Iowa, 604, 63 N. W. 341, holding father's offer to provide home for son and wife admissible in wife's suit against him for alienation of husband's affections.

Wife's right of action for alienation of husband's affections.

Cited in footnote to Betser v. Betser, 52 L. R. A. 630, which sustains wife's right of action for alienation of husband's affections.

— By another woman.

Cited in Wolf v. Frank, 92 Md. 143, 52 L. R. A. 105, footnote p. 102, 48 Atl. 132, and Humphrey v. Pope, 122 Cal. 258, 54 Pac. 847, affirming wife's right to sue in her own name for alienation of husband's affections by another woman.

Cited in footnotes to Houghton v. Rice, 47 L. R. A. 310, which denies right of action against other woman for alienating husband's affections, when unaccompanied by adultery; Dietzman v. Mullin, 50 L. R. A. 808, which sustains wife's right of action for alienating husband's affections.

Distinguished in Kroessin v. Keller, 60 Minn. 375, 27 L. R. A. 686, 51 Am. St. Rep. 533, 62 N. W. 438, denying wife's right to maintain action against another woman in nature of criminal conversation.

— By parents.

Cited in Gerner v. Gerner, 185 Pa. 236, 40 L. R. A. 550, 42 W. N. C. 51, 64 Am. St. Rep. 646, 39 Atl. 884, and Lockwood v. Lockwood, 67 Minn. 484, 70 N. W. 784, sustaining wife's right to recover for alienation of husband's affections by his parents; Lonstorf v. Lonstorf, 118 Wis. 167, 95 N. W. 961 (dissenting opinion), majority denying wife's right to maintain action against mother-in-law for alienation of husband's affections, under statute giving her right of action for "injury to her person or character."

Cited in footnotes to Hodgkinson v. Hodgkinson, 27 L. R. A. 120, which sustains action by wife against husband's parents inducing abandonment, for damages from his desertion; Tucker v. Tucker, 32 L. R. A. 623, which holds parent not liable for advising son to separate from wife; Brown v. Brown, 38 L. R. A. 242, which sustains right of action in own name by abandoned wife against husband's father who caused abandonment.

29 L. R. A. 153, SHERWOOD v. POWELL, 61 Minn. 479, 52 Am. St. Rep. 614, 63 N. W. 1103.

Defamatory words in legal proceedings or in record.

Cited in Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 28 C. C. A. 97, 48 U. S. App. 575, 83 Fed. 804, holding answer of insurance company averring that plaintiff alleged insured's death to defraud company, libelous; McGehee v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 50 C. C. A. 551, 112 Fed. 854, holding allegation in answer of insurance company imputing charge of arson, privileged.

Cited in footnotes to Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 50 L. R. A. 129, which holds information given to detectives as to larceny, with reason for suspecting certain person as thief, privileged; Jones v. Brownlee, 53 L. R. A. 445, which holds naming person with whom adultery committed, in cross-bill for divorce, absolutely privileged; Grant v. Hayne, 54 L. R. A. 930, which holds libelous words in pleading not privileged when foreign to issues; Kubricht v. State, 58 L. R. A. 959, which holds clergyman entering on baptismal record, as reputed father of bastard child, name of person known to have been acquitted, guilty of libel; Cooley v. Galyon, 60 L. R. A. 139, which holds words maliciously spoken by witness in judicial proceeding of stranger, absolutely privileged, if pertinent and responsive; Crockett v. McLanahan, 61 L. R. A. 914, which holds defamatory matter as to stranger in pleading, absolutely privileged, if pertinent and relative to issue.

29 L. R. A. 164, STATE v. BARR, 11 Wash. 481, 48 Am. St. Rep. 890, 39 Pac. 1080.

Liability for negligently injuring trespasser.

Cited in Grant v. Hass, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 691, 75 S. W. 342, sustaining innocent trespasser's right to recover for injuries inflicted by spring gun set to protect melon patch.

Cited in footnote to Magar v. Hammond, 59 L. R. A. 315, which denies right of one fishing unlawfully, to recover for wound unintentionally inflicted by gun negligently fired by watchman.

Variance between pleading and proof.

Cited in State v. Williams, 122 Iowa, 124, 97 N. W. 992, holding there was no variance between allegations (which were not stated) and proof in murder case.

Weight given evidence of good character.

Cited in footnote to Daniels v. State, 54 L. R. A. 286, which requires evidence of good character to be weighed by jury according to weight of testimony by which supported.

29 L. R. A. 164, COMMERCIAL NAT. BANK v. MATHERWELL IRON & STEEL CO. 95 Tenn. 172, 31 S. W. 1002.

Extraterritorial effect of insolvency laws.

Cited in Toof v. Miller, 73 Miss. 771, 19 So. 577, upholding sale in one state of insolvent's personal property in other state; Zacher v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. 45 C. C. A. 483, 106 Fed. 595, denying receiver's right to recover corporate property in another state as against attaching creditor.

Cited in footnotes to Castleman v. Templeman, 41 L. R. A. 367, which denies receiver's power to consent to decree in other state for payment of assessments by stockholders to creditors; Linville v. Hadden, 43 L. R. A. 222, which holds nonresident creditor of foreign corporation in hands of receiver entitled to same protection as resident creditors against receiver's claim to property; Ward v. Connecticut Pipe Mfg. Co. 42 L. R. A. 706, which requires attachment creditor to account for fair value of goods at time of attachment, before sharing in benefit of receivership in other state; Segnitz v. Garden City Bkg. & T. Co. 50

L. R. A. 327, which holds money on deposit in bank of other state applicable to notes of assignor for creditors held by bank after their maturity.

29 L. R. A. 169, BROWNELL v. OLD COLONY R. CO. 164 Mass. 29, 49 Am. St. Rep. 442, 41 N. E. 107.

Regulation of elevated railroad and ferry companies.

Cited in People ex rel. Linton v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 69 App. Div. 538. 75 N. Y. Supp. 202, denying mandamus to compel elevated railroad company to run trains in designated manner.

Cited in footnote to Nixon v. Reid, 32 L. R. A. 315, which sustains right to grant exclusive ferry license.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 546) on establishment, regulation, and protection of ferries.

Action for penalty in name of state.

Cited in State v. Messner, 9 N. D. 188, 82 N. W. 757, holding action for penalty for failure to destroy noxious weeds not maintainable in name of state.

29 L. R. A. 173, ELLSWORTH v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. 95 Iowa, 98, 63 N. W. 584.

Liability for ejection of passenger.

Cited in footnote to Atkinson v. Southern R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 223, which holds carrier liable for ejection of passenger because train does not stop at his station, as ticket seller had incorrectly told him it would.

— For defective ticket or transfer.

Cited in O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 103 Tenn. 132, 46 L. R. A. 616. 76 Am. St. Rep. 639, 52 S. W. 872, holding company liable for ejecting passenger offering transfer incorrectly punched by another conductor; Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Wilson, 161 Ind. 159, 100 Am. St. Rep. 261, 66 N. E. 950, holding company liable for conductor's ejecting passenger who tendered alleged defective transfer, explaining that he had asked for proper one.

Cited in footnotes to Northern P. R. Co. v. Pauson, 30 L. R. A. 730, which holds carrier liable for ejection of one tendering return coupon of round-trip ticket, improperly stamped; Southern R. Co. v. Wood, 55 L. R. A. 536, which holds carrier liable for ejection of passenger whose round-trip ticket was unstamped from inability to find agent; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Harper, 64 L. R. A. 283, which denies right to eject passenger presenting ticket not specifying route to place of destination, because of regulations requiring her to take another route.

Distinguished in Trezona v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 25, 43 L. R. A. 138, 77 N. W. 486, denying right to passage on limited ticket used year after date of sale; Hanlon v. Illinois C. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 141, 80 N. W. 223, and Rolfs v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 66 Kan. 282, 71 Pac. 526, denying that company is bound by representation of agent on day following sale of ticket, that ticket would be honored after expiration of first day, so as to render it liable for ejection of passenger.

Duty to pay fare wrongfully demanded.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 706) on duty of passenger to pay fare wrongfully demanded, in order to avoid expulsion and lessen damages.

29 L. R. A. 177, WOHLFORD v. CITIZENS' BLDG. L. & SAV. ASSO. 140 Ind. 662, 40 N. E. 694.

Sustaining demurrer to one paragraph of answer.

Cited in Kniss v. Holbrook, 16 Ind. App. 237, 44 N. E. 563, and Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 13 Ind. App. 637, 42 N. E. 286, holding it no error to sustain demurrer to one paragraph of answer when defense provable under another.

Application of payments, securities, and stock dues on loan association contracts.

Followed, without discussion, in Willis v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 140 Ind. 699, 40 N. E. 698; Wagner v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 140 Ind. 700, 40 N. E. 698; Kenower v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 141 Ind. 704, 40 N. E. 698; Lee v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 141 Ind. 705, 40 N. E. 749.

Cited in Huter v. Union Trust Co. 153 Ind. 212, 54 N. E. 755, holding borrowing member not entitled to credit dues on loan, but to share in residuum; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhilamy, 81 Miss. 88, 59 L. R. A. 748, 95 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 So. 1001, holding borrowing member of insolvent association entitled to credit on loan, balance of stock payments after payment of losses; Young v. Improvement L. & Bldg. Asso. 48 W. Va. 524, 38 S. E. 670, holding borrowing member not entitled to distributive share of dues paid on stock before winding up of association; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 121 Mich. 355, 80 N. W. 120, holding sums paid on unmatured stock not applicable to mortgage debt upon insolvency of association; Hale v. Cairns, 8 N. D. 151, 44 L. R. A. 263, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010, holding borrowing member of insolvent loan association not entitled to credit dues paid on stock in reduction of loan; Hale v. Phillips, 68 Ark. 390, 59 S. W. 35, holding present value of stock not offset in foreclosure action by association; Cummings v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 142 Ind. 603, 42 N. E. 213, raising, without deciding, question as to right to recover principal and interest upon proper complaint; Hale v. Gullick, 13 S. D. 647, 84 N. W. 196 (dissenting opinion), majority holding borrowing member chargeable with loan and credited with all payments upon dissolution of association.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 120) on right to apply payments made on stock in building and loan association on mortgage given for loan by same member.

Distinguished in International Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bratton, 24 Ind. App. 661, 56 N. E. 105, holding that payment of stipulated number of instalments extinguishes debt, although sum less than loan.

Relation between association and member.

Cited in Security Sav. & L. Asso. v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 202, 54 N. E. 753, holding that contracts between building and loan associations and members create relation of lender and borrower.

Rights of withdrawing member.

Cited in Hawley v. North Side Bldg. & L. Asso. 11 Colo. App. 99, 52 Pac. 408, holding that rights of withdrawing member of association date as of time of acceptance of resignation.

Member's liability for shortages.

Cited in footnote to Eversmann v. Schmitt, 29 L. R. A. 184, which holds assessments for shortages in assets after receiver appointed, covered by mortgage to loan association.

29 L. R. A. 184, EVERSMANN v. SCHMITT, 53 Ohio St. 174, 53 Am. St. Rep. 632, 41 N. E. 139.

Liability of members of loan association for losses.

Cited in Richter v. Main Street Bldg. & Loan Co. 4 Ohio N. P. 99, directing assessment by receiver upon mortgage members to cover losses of association; Hale v. Phillips, 68 Ark. 388, 59 S. W. 35, holding members bound in proportion to amount of stock for payment of losses of association; Leahy v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 100 Wis. 569, 69 Am. St. Rep. 945, 76 N. W. 625, denying that assignment of stock to association severs membership and relieves from liability to bear share of losses.

Credit for payments by borrowing member of loan association.

Cited in Home Bldg. Asso. Co. v. Tenney, 7 Ohio N. P. 131, holding borrowing member entitled to release when payments credited equal par value of stock; Wilcoxon v. Smith, 107 Iowa, 562, 70 Am. St. Rep. 220, 78 N. W. 217, holding members of insolvent association entitled to credit for actual value of share; Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 311, holding stockholders chargeable with loan and interest and entitled to credit for premiums when association insolvent; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhilamy, 81 Miss. 88, 59 L. R. A. 743, 95 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 So. 1001, holding borrowing member of insolvent association entitled to credit on loan, balance of stock payments after payment of losses; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 121 Mich. 355, 80 N. W. 120, holding sums paid on unmatured stock not applicable to mortgage debt upon insolvency of association; Young v. Improvement Loan & Bldg. Asso. 48 W. Va. 524, 38 S. E. 670, holding borrowing member not entitled to credit for distributive share of stock payments before winding up of association; Hale v. Cairns, 8 N. D. 151, 44 L. R. A. 263, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010, holding borrowing member of insolvent loan association not entitled to credit stock payments in reduction of loan; Hale v. Gullick, 13 S. D. 647, 84 N. W. 196 (dissenting opinion), majority holding borrowing member chargeable with loan and credited with all payments upon insolvency of association.

Distinguished in Hale v. Barker, 129 Cal. 425, 62 Pac. 168, holding that stock payments should be credited upon mortgage debt upon insolvency of association.

Liability to continue payments till maturity of stock.

Cited in Columbia Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Junquist, 111 Fed. 647, holding that borrowing member must continue payments till maturity of stock, although contract limits number of payments.

Validity of contract for maturity of stock at definite time.

Cited in Columbia Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lyttle, 16 Colo. App. 428, 66 Pac. 247, denying association's power to contract with member for maturity of stock at definite time.

Rights of withdrawing members.

Cited in Cook v. Emmet Perpetual & Mut. Bldg. Asso. 90 Md. 289, 44 Atl. 1022, holding withdrawing members not entitled to share with general creditors in distribution of assets of insolvent association; Hawley v. North Side Bldg. & L. Asso. 11 Colo. App. 99, 52 Pac. 408, holding that rights of withdrawing member date as of time of acceptance of resignation from association.

Who are stockholders of loan association.

Cited in Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 284, holding owners

Of full-paid stock in loan association, stockholders, not creditors; Ottawa Mut. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Merriman, 67 Kan. 785, 74 Pac. 256, holding one investing money in loan association, and receiving two certificates, one of deposit, another that he is a member owning stock, stockholder and not mere creditor.

Validity of mortgage of property held by entirety for husband's dues.

Cited in Harrison Bldg. & Deposit Co. v. Lackey, 149 Ind. 14, 48 N. E. 254, holding mortgage by husband and wife as tenants by entirety, to secure payments of husband's dues as member of association, void as to wife.

29 L. R. A. 188, FINDLAY v. PERTZ, 13 C. C. A. 559, 31 U. S. App. 340, 66 Fed. 427.

Validity of contracts involving conflict of interests.

Cited in Hayward v. Nordberg Mfg. Co. 29 C. C. A. 446, 54 U. S. App. 639, 85 Fed. 11, holding private solicitation of members of council in procuring contract for pumping engine, against public policy; Alger v. Keith, 44 C. C. A. 377, 105 Fed. 111, and Alger v. Anderson, 78 Fed. 738, holding that bribery of vendee's agent by real estate dealers entitles vendee to rescind sale; Continental Trust Co. v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 86 Fed. 945, holding agreement between promoter and president of company to divide profits of former's contract to reorganize, void; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Berlin, 33 C. C. A. 276, 62 U. S. App. 223, 90 Fed. 781, holding agent's agreement to extend premium note on condition that policy holder pay personal debt to agent, illegal; Smythe v. Evans, 209 Ill. 383, 70 N. E. 906, Reversing 108 Ill. App. 150, holding contract for erection of gas plant, effected through agent of both parties, void.

Cited in footnotes to Berka v. Woodward, 45 L. R. A. 420, which denies recovery to officer on implied contract with city for materials furnished it; Sylvester v. Webb, 52 L. R. A. 518, which sustains contract to erect school building by member of building committee and selectmen of town.

City's liability to councilman for defect in street.

Cited in footnote to Danville v. Robinson, 55 L. R. A. 162, which sustains right of member of city council to recover for injuries by defect in street.

Effect of ratification on fraudulent contract.

Cited in Findlay v. Pertz, 20 C. C. A. 663, 43 U. S. App. 383, 74 Fed. 682, holding that use of machines by city after discovery of fraud of agent in secretly acting for seller renders city liable for purchase price; State v. Engle, 111 Iowa, 250, 82 N. W. 763, holding that principal's acceptance of sale by agent of land to himself for grossly inadequate consideration, prevents prosecution of agent for embezzlement in retaining proceeds of resale.

29 L. R. A. 195, LAKE SHORE & M. S. R. CO. v. GRAND RAPIDS, 102 Mich. 374, 60 N. W. 767.

Liability and assessment for local improvements.

Cited in footnote to Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 49 L. R. A. 566, which denies right to assess entire cost of land taken for highway, on remaining land of same owner.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 40) on liability to local assessments for benefits of property exempt from general taxation.

— Of railroad company.

Followed in Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 14, 28 L. R. A. 794, 58 Am. St. Rep. 466, 63 N. W. 1007, holding that roadbed of railroad cannot be sold to pay assessment for municipal improvement.

Cited in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Ellson, 113 Mich. 33, 71 N. W. 324, holding coal stored in railroad shed subject to sale under tax warrant; Grand Rapids v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 130 Mich. 239, 97 Am. St. Rep. 473, 89 N. W. 932, holding void, statute requiring railroad companies personally to pay paving tax previously levied.

Cited in footnotes to Storrie v. Houston City Street R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 716, which holds street railway company required to pave between rails and 6 inches each side; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 51 L. R. A. 763, which denies liability of railroad running alongside of street for street paving assessment.

Railroad company's right to exemption from tax.

Cited in Manistee & G. R. Co. v. Auditor General, 115 Mich. 294, 73 N. W. 240, denying right of railroad company to exemption from tax, where railroad was only two thirds finished at passage of exemption act.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 76, 78) on corporate taxation in United States as affected by contract clause in Federal Constitution.

Right to sell section of railroad separate from franchise.

Cited in footnote to Connor v. Tennessee C. R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 687, which denies power to sell section of railroad separate from franchise to enforce contractor's lien.

29 L. R. A. 200, STATE v. BISHOP, 128 Mo. 373, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9.

Protection of trade labels.

Distinguished in Oakes v. St. Louis Candy Co. 146 Mo. 399, 48 S. W. 467, denying that mere designation of new confection as "what is it?" gives manufacturer exclusive use of term.

— Of unions.

Cited in Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 270, 39 L. R. A. 509, footnote p. 508, 49 N. E. 308, denying that fraudulent use of trade-union label before passage of act imposing penalty exempts wrongdoer.

Cited in footnotes to Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 39 L. R. A. 211, which holds voluntary unincorporated labor organizations entitled to protection of labels adopted by them; Perkins v. Heert, 43 L. R. A. 858, which sustains statute authorizing labor union to adopt distinguishing label; Schmalz v. Woolley, 43 L. R. A. 86, which sustains right of labor unions to trade-mark used on goods not owned by them.

Sufficiency of pleading.

Cited in Parker v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Mo. App. 559, holding averment "that company neglected to transmit or deliver message promptly." sufficient.

Distinguished in State v. Thierauf, 167 Mo. 442, 67 S. W. 292, holding allegation of imitation of label, stated in general terms of statute, insufficient.

29 L. R. A. 208, FUNK v. ST. PAUL CITY R. CO. 61 Minn. 435, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099.

Street railways as "railroads" or common carriers.

Cited in Lundquist v. Duluth Street R. Co. 65 Minn. 389, 67 N. W. 1006, holding that statute authorizing recovery for injury by fellow servant on railroads has no application to injury to one repairing street car track, through motor-man's negligence; State v. Duluth Gas & Water Co. 76 Minn. 107, 57 L. R. A. 74, 78 N. W. 1032, holding street railway company not railroad company within tax statute; Stillwater v. Lowry, 83 Minn. 278, 86 N. W. 103, denying that statute authorizing villages to contract with railroad companies confers power to authorize construction of street railways; Fidelity Loan & T. Co. v. Douglas, 104 Iowa, 536, 73 N. W. 1030, and Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Hamilton, 32 C. C. A. 54, 59 U. S. App. 403, 88 Fed. 596, denying that statute making judgment against "any railway corporation" for personal injuries, lien prior to mortgage, includes street railroads; Railroad Comrs. v. Market Street R. Co. 132 Cal. 683, 64 Pac. 1065, holding street railway not transportation company; Lincoln Street R. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Neb. 676, 69 Am. St. Rep. 736, 74 N. W. 1074, holding that street railways are common carriers liable to passengers for injuries resulting from negligence; Hannah v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 81 Mo. App. 82, holding electric railway operated between cities, within statute making "railroad corporations" liable for injury to stock resulting from neglect to maintain fences; Savannah, T. & I. of H. R. Co. v. Williams, 117 Ga. 417, 61 L. R. A. 250, footnote p. 249, 43 S. E. 751, which holds chartered street railroad a railroad company within statute as to liability for negligence of fellow servant; Sams v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 174 Mo. 74, 61 L. R. A. 480, 73 S. W. 686, holding that street railroad company is not within statute making corporations operating railroads liable for injuries by fellow servant.

Cited in footnotes to Vail v. Broadway R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 626, which holds passenger on street-car platform not passenger on "any railroad," so as to assume risk of injury; Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co. 63 L. R. A. 637, which holds electric railway operated between two cities in different states, a trunk railway within prohibition against granting franchise except to highest bidder.

Private logging railway as a "railroad."

Cited in Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. 85 Minn. 452, 89 N. W. 68, holding that private logging railway company is railroad company, liable to servant for injury through negligence of coservant.

Right to use street for street railroad.

Cited in Rische v. Texas Transp. Co. 27 Tex. Civ. App. 37, 66 S. W. 324, sustaining right of electric street railway company to use street for transportation of freight, after payment of compensation to abutters.

When new trial required.

Cited in Grover v. Bach, 82 Minn. 301, 84 N. W. 909, holding that error in submitting question to jury requires new trial; Schmitt v. Murray, 87 Minn. 253, 91 N. W. 1116, denying new trial when verdict sustained by evidence.

29 L. R. A. 212, CENTRAL TRUST CO. v. MORAN, 56 Minn. 188, 57 N. W. 471.

Right to injunction.

Cited in footnote to Bass v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. 39 L. R. A.

711, which authorizes injunction to compel restoration by railroad company of part of building removed without making compensation.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 104, 135) on injunction against execution sales or other proceedings under final process.

29 L. R. A. 215, FAIRLY v. WAPPOO MILLS, 44 S. C. 227, 22 S. E. 103.

Custom; admissibility of evidence of.

Cited in Turpin v. Sudduth, 53 S. C. 306, 31 S. E. 245, holding evidence of master's custom to date conveyances on day of sale inadmissible.

— Reasonableness of.

Cited in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Naive (Tenn.) 64 L. R. A. 447, footnote p. 443, 79 S. W. 124, which upholds custom of carrier not to deliver perishable freight on July 4th.

— As affecting contract.

Cited in footnote to Harris v. Sharples, 53 L. R. A. 214, which denies right under contract to add lithographer's name for advertising purposes to lithographed cover design, although it is customary to do so.

Burden of proof.

Cited in Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 520, 23 S. E. 417, holding that proof by broker of principal's acceptance of purchaser imposes burden upon principal of showing vendee's inability to perform.

Cited in footnote to Tucker v. State, 46 L. R. A. 181, which holds that person wrongfully killing another with deadly weapon has burden of proving justification or legal excuse in action for damages.

Attachment of liquors.

Cited in Lanahan v. Bailey, 53 S. C. 494, 42 L. R. A. 299, 69 Am. St. Rep. 884, 31 S. E. 332, holding attachment of intoxicating liquors shipped into state for unlawful purpose invalid under dispensary law, making any sale of such liquors unlawful.

Violation of rule or failure to procure license, as affecting contract or recovery for services.

Cited in Hanesley v. Monroe, 103 Ga. 280, 29 S. E. 928, holding admission of proof of rule against commissions, in action by agent for services in procuring loan from insurance company, error.

Cited in footnotes to Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Hoffman, 37 L. R. A. 509, which holds loan of money without license valid, though misdemeanor under statute; Randall v. Tuell, 38 L. R. A. 143, which denies right of unlicensed innholder to recover for board and lodging; Smith v. Robertson, 45 L. R. A. 510, which denies right of recovery on contract for services of unlicensed stallion; Denning v. Yount, 50 L. R. A. 103, which denies right of unlicensed brokers to recover commissions; Black v. Security Mut. Life Asso. 54 L. R. A. 939, which denies right to commissions of one securing applications for insurance before license, which is granted before policies issued; Citizens' State Bank v. Nore, 60 L. R. A. 737, which authorizes recovery by bona fide purchaser of note for medical services by unlicensed practitioner.

Validity of mortgage.

Cited in Brown v. Newell, 64 S. C. 74, 41 S. E. 835 (distinguished in dissenting opinion), majority holding execution of note and mortgage in favor of one who assigned them before delivery and without consideration, and which purported to be executed on same day as prior mortgage, but in fact year later, consideration of second being satisfaction of first, valid and enforceable in equity.

29 L. R. A. 226, STATE v. FOSTER, 5 Wyo. 199, 38 Pac. 926.

Attachment of assigned property.

Cited in Swofford Bros. Dry-Goods Co. v. Mills, 86 Fed. 558, denying motion to dissolve attachment levied on property of insolvent partnership in hands of assignee.

Priority of tax claims.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 278) on priority of claims for taxes against assets of debtor.

Liability for loss of public funds.

Cited in State v. Gramm, 7 Wyo. 377, 40 L. R. A. 696, 52 Pac. 533, denying sureties' liability on bond of treasurer for loss of public funds by failure of bank.

Cited in footnote to Maloy v. Bernalillo County, 52 L. R. A. 126, which denies defaulting county treasurer's liability to county for interest paid to him by bank, in which public money was deposited, after he had paid county.

Right to follow trust funds.

Cited in Independent District v. Beard, 83 Fed. 12, holding special trust established by proof showing augmentation of estate by trust fund; Hanna v. McLaughlin, 158 Ind. 296, 63 N. E. 475, holding that partner's use of partnership funds to pay mortgage debt against land owned by himself and wife subjects such land to trust in favor of copartner; State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 729, 75 N. W. 28, holding county entitled to funds left in insolvent bank, which had used public funds to pay depositors.

Cited in footnotes to Marquette v. Wilkinson, 43 L. R. A. 840, which holds that city funds redeposited in other bank under arrangement for sharing deposits are held in trust for city as against original banker's assignee for creditors; Central Stock & Grain Exchange v. Bendinger, 56 L. R. A. 875, which holds broker liable to refund to principal, money illegally taken from agent as margin on gambling transaction.

29 L. R. A. 251, BISSELL v. DAVISON, 65 Conn. 183, 32 Atl. 348.

Exercise of police power.

Cited in State v. Main, 69 Conn. 137, 36 L. R. A. 628, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30, 37 Atl. 80, holding statute requiring destruction of peach trees attacked by "yellows" within police power; New York v. Chelsea Jute Mills, 43 Misc. 273, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1085, sustaining statute forbidding employment of child under fourteen years of age during time when schools of his district are in session; Board of Education v. Purse, 101 Ga. 439, 41 L. R. A. 606, 65 Am. St. Rep. 312, 28 S. E. 896, holding that board of education may suspend children of parent who enters school room and insults teacher in presence of scholars.

— Compulsory vaccination.

Approved in Gerhard v. Packer Twp. School District, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 341, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 721, denying mandamus to require board of education to admit pupil who fails to furnish certificate of vaccination.

Cited in Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 800, 42 L. R. A. 180, footnote p. 175, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850, sustaining compulsory vaccination within city limits, where smallpox is prevalent; State ex rel. Cox v. Board of Education, 21 Utah, 416, 60 Pac. 1013, upholding rule of board of education excluding unvaccinated pupils during prevalence of smallpox; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 137, 50 L. R. A. 71, footnote p. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89, holding exclusion of unvaccinated pupils from public schools during smallpox epidemic justified only as public emergency; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 246, 66 N. E. 719, sustaining statute empowering board of health of city or town to require vaccination of inhabitants, and imposing fine for violations; Osborn v. Russell, 64 Kan. 509, 68 Pac. 60, holding that statute forbidding pupils infected with contagious disease to attend school does not authorize board of education to require vaccination when disease not prevalent; French v. Davidson, 143 Cal. 661, 77 Pac. 663, and Viemeister v. White, 88 App. Div. 51, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, holding statute prohibiting children from attending public schools unless they have been vaccinated valid.

Cited in footnotes to Mathews v. Board of Education, 54 L. R. A. 736, which denies power to make vaccination condition of admission to schools, in absence of epidemic; State ex rel. Freeman v. Zimmerman, 58 L. R. A. 78, which sustains regulation, in cases of emergency, for vaccination as condition of admission to school.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 402, 37 L. R. A. 161, footnote p. 157, 60 Am. St. Rep. 123, 70 N. W. 347, holding void, rule of board of education excluding unvaccinated children from school when smallpox epidemic not probable; Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 78, 39 L. R. A. 156, footnote p. 152, 59 Am. St. Rep. 262, 47 N. E. 81, denying power to compel students to be vaccinated as condition of attending school.

Injunction against construction of electric railway.

Cited in Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co. 69 Conn. 152, 36 Atl. 1107, upholding abutter's right to enjoin construction of electric railway over route deviating from prescribed line.

29 L. R. A. 254, SHAFFER v. LACOCK, 168 Pa. 497, 32 Atl. 44.

Admissibility of declarations as part of res gestæ.

Cited in Sample v. Consolidated Light & R. Co. 50 W. Va. 479, 57 L. R. A. 190, 40 S. E. 597, holding declaration by motorman while car on child that "I saw child; thought I could pass it," admissible as part of res gestæ; Pierce v. Van Dusen, 24 C. C. A. 293, 47 U. S. App. 339, 78 Fed. 707, holding conductor's statement as to cause of injury, made immediately afterwards, admissible as part of res gestæ; Hupfer v. National Distilling Co. 119 Wis. 422, 96 N. W. 809, holding declaration of employee whose duty it was to sell slops from distillery vat, that he knew hoops on vat were defective, admissible as part of res gestæ in action for personal injuries resulting from bursting of vat.

Presumption of negligence.

Cited in Fisher v. Ruch, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 247, holding that implication of negligence arises from use of explosives in blasting; Matthews v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 17, holding absence of spark arrester prima facie evidence of negligence in action for loss by fire; Alexander v. Pennsylvania Water Co. 201 Pa. 257, 50 Atl. 991, denying that infliction of injury resulting from defective condition of pump creates presumption of negligence; Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 668, 39 L. R. A. 502, 64 Am. St. Rep. 922, 23 S. E. 733, holding existence of broken electric wire in street prima facie evidence of negligence.

Cited in footnote to Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 43 L. R. A. 435, which holds bursting of water main three times under ordinary pressure, evidence of negligence.

Distinguished in Kepner v. Harrisburg Traction Co. 183 Pa. 31, 38 Atl. 410, holding that fright of horse, due to breaking of trolley wire, creates presumption of negligence; Zahniser v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co. 190 Pa. 353, 42 Atl. 707, Affirming 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 623, holding that explosion of torpedo 200 feet above bottom of well raises no presumption of negligence in shooting.

29 L. R. A. 257. STATE v. JULOW, 129 Mo. 163, 50 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 S. W. 781.

Freedom of contract and press.

Cited in Watson Seminary v. County Court, 149 Mo. 73, 45 L. R. A. 681, 50 S. W. 880, holding that statute giving seminary fines collected by county may be repealed by subsequent act; Re Flukes, 157 Mo. 131, 51 L. R. A. 178, 80 Am. St. Rep. 619, 57 S. W. 545, holding statute prohibiting creditors sending chases in action out of state for collection against wages of resident, void; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 456, 51 L. R. A. 166, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91, holding courts without power to compel associated press to admit newspaper company as member; Marx & H. Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 146, 56 L. R. A. 957, 90 Am. St. Rep. 440, 67 S. W. 391, refusing to enjoin publication of circular letter urging merchants not to deal with boycotted firm; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 534, 58 L. R. A. 751, footnote p. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098, declaring unconstitutional, statute prohibiting discharge of employee for membership in union; Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 183, 52 L. R. A. 286, footnote p. 283, 58 N. E. 1007, declaring unconstitutional, act making it criminal offense to discharge employee for membership in union; Re Morgan, 26 Colo. 449, 47 L. R. A. 66, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, holding unlawful, statute regulating hours of employment in mines and smelting works; State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 161, 47 L. R. A. 375, 59 Pac. 340, declaring void, statute requiring wages to be paid in cash, by check or draft; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 938, holding void, statute prohibiting railroad companies from requiring employees to agree to waive right to damages for personal injuries; Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co. 160 Ind. 346, 61 L. R. A. 160, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325, 66 N. E. 895, holding statute requiring municipal corporations to pay more for common labor employed on public improvements than it is worth in market, void, as interfering with freedom of contract.

Cited in footnotes to Adams v. Brennan, 42 L. R. A. 718, which holds invalid, public contract providing that only union labor shall be employed; Curran v. Galen, 37 L. R. A. 802, which holds agreement that all members of employers' association shall be members of labor association illegal.

Special statutes and due process of law.

Cited in St. Louis v. Karr, 85 Mo. App. 614, holding ordinance allowing superintendent of workhouse to confine prisoner beyond maximum term prescribed by charter, void; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 405, 35 L. R. A. 233, 37 S. W. 1112, holding statute prohibiting pool selling except within limits of race course void as special law; State v. Thomas, 138 Mo. 102, 39 S. W. 481, holding act prohibiting betting on contests outside of state, exempting, by implication, contests within state, void; State v. Buchardt, 144 Mo. 84, 46 S. W. 150, holding it unlawful to inflict different species of punishment in different parts of state for same offense; State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook, 154 Mo. 394, 48 L. R. A. 271, 77 Am. St. Rep. 765, 55 S. W. 627, declaring unconstitutional, act fixing tax for each class of goods sold by merchants employing more than fifteen persons; Hunt v. Searcy, 167 Mo. 179, 67 S. W. 206, holding judgment of insanity, without notice to person adjudged insane, void; Henderson v. Koenig, 168 Mo. 374, 57 L. R. A. 663, 68 S. W. 72, holding act allowing fees to judges in certain districts and giving salaries to those in others void; Schmalz v. Wooley, 56 N. J. Eq. 655, 39 Atl. 539, holding void, statute protecting trade label of hat makers' union; Owen v. Baer, 154 Mo. 470, 55 S. W. 644 (dissenting opinion), majority holding act allowing certain cities to issue special tax bills in payment of sewers, when two thirds of voters consent, void.

Distinguished in State v. Gregory, 170 Mo. 605, 71 S. W. 170, upholding statute providing that contractors purchasing materials on credit, representing that they will be used in certain building, and who shall, without authority, use them in another building with intent to defraud material man, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

Validity of beer inspection act.

Cited in State ex rel. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Eby, 170 Mo. 525, 71 S. W. 52, holding act requiring fee to be paid to state by manufacturers for inspection of beer, void, as it amounts to a tax.

Priority of liens.

Cited in Vilas v. McDonough Mfg. Co. 91 Wis. 618, 30 L. R. A. 782, 51 Am. St. Rep. 925, 65 N. W. 488 (dissenting opinion), majority holding mechanic's lien for machinery placed in unfinished mill superior to prior mortgage.

29 L. R. A. 260, STATE v. CROOK, 115 N. C. 760, 20 S. E. 513.

Suspension and satisfaction of sentence.

Cited in State v. Griffiths, 117 N. C. 710, 23 S. E. 164, holding that suspension of sentence upon payment of costs, by justice of peace without defendant's consent, entitles him to appeal for trial de novo; State v. Whitt, 117 N. C. 807, 23 S. E. 452, holding that court may enforce judgment for failure to pay costs after suspension at preceding term; Neal v. State, 104 Ga. 513, 42 L. R. A. 192, footnote p. 190, 69 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858, holding void, attempt to suspend execution of sentence after pronouncing it; People ex rel. Roenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 296, 63 L. R. A. 85, footnote p. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23, which denies court's power to indefinitely suspend sentence after conviction; Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 103, 56 L. R. A. 102, footnote p. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 194, which denies defendant's right to relief for failure to execute mittimus under judgment sentencing to imprisonment on failure to pay fine, until lapse of time of imprisonment.

Cited in footnote to Weber v. State, 41 L. R. A. 472, which sustains power of court to suspend sentence and set aside suspension at any time during term.

Indeterminate sentence.

Cited in footnote to Miller v. State, 40 L. R. A. 109, which upholds statute for indeterminate sentence of criminals.

Imprisonment for debt.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 656) on constitutionality of imprisonment for debt.

29 L. R. A. 262, HOOPER v. CENTRAL TRUST CO. 81 Md. 559, 32 Atl. 505.

Cross-bill in equity.

Cited in Chappell v. Chappell, 86 Md. 545, 39 Atl. 984, holding cross-bill in equity not new suit, but defense.

Receiver's debts as prior lien.

Cited in Diamond Match Co. v. Taylor, 83 Md. 406, 34 Atl. 1015, holding vendors' claims for goods sold to receiver continuing business of insolvent corporation, prior to claims of creditors; Hanna v. State Trust Co. 30 L. R. A. 204, 16 C. C. A. 590, 36 U. S. App. 61, 70 Fed. 6, holding that court cannot empower receiver at suit of second mortgagee, to borrow money to continue business on certificates made paramount liens; Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Alderson, 32 C. C. A. 548, 61 U. S. App. 636, 90 Fed. 148, denying court's power to make receiver's certificates for wages prior to creditor's liens; United States Invest. Corp. v. Portland Hospital, 40 Or. 534, 56 L. R. A. 630, 67 Pac. 194, holding that receiver cannot, without consent of lienors, make debts incurred by continuing business take precedence over prior mortgage.

Priority of claim for wages.

Cited in footnote to Drennen & Co. v. Mercantile Trust & D. Co. 39 L. R. A. 623, which holds employee of manufacturing or mining company entitled to priority for wages earned within six months before receiver appointed.

Promoters right to compensation or profits.

Cited in Tompkins v. Sperry, Jones & Co. 96 Md. 582, 54 Atl. 254, holding that promoters who own most of stock of corporation not bound to account for profits.

Cited in footnote to Hayward v. Leeson, 49 L. R. A. 725, which denies right of corporate promoters to remuneration for services, unless voted to them, or full statement incorporated in prospectus.

Cancellation of corporate stock.

Cited in footnote to Yeiser v. United States Board & Paper Co. 52 L. R. A. 724, which sustains right of corporation to secure cancellation of stock paid for out of secret profits by subscribers from sale of property to corporation.

29 L. R. A. 273, MASON v. UNION MILLS PAPER MFG. CO. 81 Md. 446, 48 Am. St. Rep. 524, 32 Atl. 311.

Attachment by nonresident of assets of foreign corporation.

Cited in Hodgson v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. 91 Md. 447, 46 Atl. 971, and Linville v. Hadden, 88 Md. 598, 43 L. R. A. 224, 41 Atl. 1097, holding that non-resident creditors of foreign corporation in hands of receiver may attach property in this state.

Absence from state as affecting statute of limitations.

Cited in McConnell v. Spicker, 15 S. D. 101, 87 N. W. 574, holding that statute of limitations does not run against note executed outside of state by one who afterwards removed to state during time elapsing after note was due and before maker moved into state; Van Schuyver v. Hartman, 1 Alaska, 435, holding that statute of limitations of territory begins to run from time of debtor's removal to such territory.

Cited in footnotes to Hogg v. Hartley, 54 L. R. A. 215, which holds personal judgment against one previously leaving state not excused, by absence, from statute of limitations; George v. Butler, 57 L. R. A. 396, which sustains right of grantee of mortgaged premises to plead limitations against foreclosure, though debt not barred as to mortgagor because of absence from state.

29 L. R. A. 278, BIBBINS v. CLARK, 90 Iowa, 230, 57 N. W. 884, 59 N. W. 290.

Priority of claims for taxes.

Followed in Bibbins v. Polk County, 100 Iowa, 495, 69 N. W. 1007, holding personal property tax inferior to prior mortgage.

Cited in Smith v. Skow, 97 Iowa, 641, 66 N. W. 893, holding mortgage lien superior to liquor tax; Re Ott, 95 Fed. 279, holding liquor license tax not superior to claims of creditors of bankrupt; Des Moines Brick Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 108 Iowa, 309, 79 N. W. 77, holding street-curbings certificates superior to lien for street paving; Minnesota v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 217, 94 Fed. 247, holding lien of taxes on personal property, assessed after receipt of tax books, superior to prior or subsequent private lien; Lobban v. State, 9 Wyo. 380, 64 Pac. 82, and Gifford v. Callaway, 8 Colo. App. 366, 46 Pac. 626, holding personal property taxes not superior to prior real estate mortgage; Harrington v. Valley Sav. Bank, 119 Iowa, 314, 93 N. W. 347, holding that purchaser of land sold for general taxes takes title superior to lien of special assessment; Larson v. Hamilton County, 123 Iowa, 486, 99 N. W. 133, holding tax lien not defeated by sale of stock of goods in bulk after assessment and before levy.

Cited in notes (29 L. R. A. 249) on priority of state or United States in payment from assets of debtor; (35 L. R. A. 373, 377) on superiority of lien of local assessment over prior lien.

Distinguished in California Loan & T. Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 494, 50 Pac. 697, holding title of purchaser under sale for personal property tax paramount to lien of prior mortgage.

Subrogation to claim for taxes.

Cited in footnotes to Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hart, 35 L. R. A. 352, which denies right of county treasurer paying cash for taxes, for which checks are received, to be subrogated to rights of state or city in the taxes paid; Allen v. Perine, 41 L. R. A. 351, which denies sheriff's claim of subrogation to lien of tax which he accounted for, but failed to collect, as against prior mortgagee; Walters v. Charleston Mills, 48 L. R. A. 503, which holds purchaser on foreclosure voluntarily paying claim for taxes before sale affirmed, subrogated to claim for valid part of taxes.

Annotation in 29 L. R. A. 278, referred to particularly in Sperry v. Butler, 75 Conn. 374, 53 Atl. 899, holding that, in absence of statute, private persons should not be subrogated, by judicial intervention, to rights of municipality in foreclosure of tax lien.

Objections raised for first time on appeal.

Cited in Des Moines Sav. Bank v. Morgan Jewelry Co. 123 Iowa, 435, 99 N. W.

121, holding that objection as to form of proceedings cannot be raised on appeal for first time.

Distinguished in Smith v. McQuiston, 108 Iowa, 367, 79 N. W. 130, holding that objection to failure to present to board claim for overpaid taxes cannot be raised on appeal for first time.

Demurrer to suit in equity instead of at law.

Cited in McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Markert, 107 Iowa, 342, 78 N. W. 33, overruling demurrer that suit should have been brought at law instead of in equity.

Contents of tax certificate.

Cited in Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Chapin, 113 Iowa, 416, 85 N. W. 791, holding delinquent tax certificate, failing to show treasurer's authority to issue, defective.

Recovery of taxes illegally collected.

Cited in Carton v. Uinta County, 10 Wyo. 438, 69 Pac. 1013, denying taxpayer's right to recover taxes alleged to be illegally collected, where county has received no more than it was equitably entitled to.

29 L. R. A. 287, MONTGOMERY v. LANSING CITY ELECTRIC R. CO. 103 Mich. 46, 61 N. W. 543.

Liability for injury by street car or locomotive.

Cited in McClellan v. Ft. Wayne & B. I. R. Co. 105 Mich. 103, 62 N. W. 1025, affirming recovery for motorman's negligence in not stopping car upon seeing fright of horse; Bedell v. Detroit, Y. & A. R. Co. 131 Mich. 670, 92 N. W. 349, sustaining right to recover for motorman's negligence in failing to stop car upon seeing bicyclist dismount on tracks, apparently without hearing signals; Buckley v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 119 Mich. 587, 78 N. W. 655, holding evidence of engineer and fireman that they ought to have seen plaintiff, if upon track, but did not, not proof of gross negligence; Lyons v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 115 Mich. 117, 73 N. W. 139 (dissenting opinion), majority holding act of fellow workmen in trying to push decedent from track with broom insufficient to apprise motorman of former's deafness, so as to require him to stop car to avoid collision.

Cited in footnote to Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 350, which sustains motorman's right to assume that bicyclist in front of car will get out of danger.

Contributory negligence on street car track.

Cited in Manor v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 118 Mich. 6, 76 N. W. 139, holding it not contributory negligence to drive close to car tracks when road narrow; Ryan v. La Crosse City R. Co. 108 Wis. 136, 83 N. W. 770, holding it contributory negligence for eight-year-old boy to cross car tracks without looking for approaching cars; Graff v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 109 Mich. 86, 67 N. W. 815, denying recovery to one injured while attempting to cross electric railway in front of rapidly moving car; Tunison v. Weadock, 130 Mich. 159, 89 N. W. 703 (dissenting opinion), majority holding it question for jury whether one is guilty of contributory negligence in driving close to street car tracks without taking notice whether there is sufficient room for car to pass.

Distinguished in Fritz v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 105 Mich. 54, 62 N. W. 1007, holding it contributory negligence to turn suddenly upon street car tracks in middle of block, without looking back; Laufer v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 491, 37 L. R. A. 539, 37 Atl. 379, holding one driving on car tracks on left side of bridge not guilty of negligence in crossing before approaching car, when left space too narrow.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in footnotes to Rider v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 125, which holds proximate cause to be that which, in natural sequence, unbroken by new cause, produced event; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 58 L. R. A. 399, which holds placing of heavy doors on platform, which are blown on track by severe gale, not proximate cause of derailment of engine.

Proof of special injury without specific allegation.

Followed in Beath v. Rapid R. Co. 119 Mich. 518, 78 N. W. 537, holding that allegation of injury to hip renders evidence of resulting disease to sciatic nerve admissible; Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 280, 71 N. W. 475, holding evidence of result of injuries admissible under declaration for personal injuries.

Cited in Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 503, 65 N. W. 616, holding that averment that plaintiff has become confirmed invalid allows recovery for loss of ability to follow vocation; McKormick v. West Bay City, 110 Mich. 268, 68 N. W. 148, holding proof of pain in head within allegation of injury to back and spine; Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 681, 80 N. W. 797, holding evidence of resulting epilepsy admissible under averment of permanent injury; Samuels v. California Street Cable R. Co. 124 Cal. 296, 56 Pac. 1115, holding that uterine trouble may be shown under allegation of permanent bodily injury; Croco v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 18 Utah, 319, 44 L. R. A. 288, 54 Pac. 985, denying that plaintiff is required to plead all physical injuries sustained or aggravated by company's negligence; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 90, 41 C. C. A. 42, 100 Fed. 758, holding damages for aggravation of other injuries, due to collision, recoverable without special allegation.

29 L. R. A. 292, IRVIN v. IRVIN, 169 Pa. 529, 32 Atl. 445.

Effect of illegal consideration on contract.

Cited in Rodenbaugh v. Rodenbaugh, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 621, Affirming 31 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 286, 7 Northampton Co. Rep. 391, denying that wife's agreement to withhold evidence in divorce suit will defeat action for money due under separation contract; Barnhart v. Goldstein, 27 Ind. App. 104, 59 N. E. 1067, denying vendor's right to recover on note given for slot machine sold for gambling purposes.

Parol evidence to vary writing.

Cited in Harness v. Eastern Oil Co. 49 W. Va. 248, 38 S. E. 662, holding oral agreement not to assign lease inadmissible to vary terms of instrument; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Board of Education, 49 W. Va. 377, 38 S. E. 679, holding verbal agreement waiving right to rebuild or repair after fire inadmissible to contradict express terms of policy.

29 L. R. A. 297, DONOVAN v. HARTFORD STREET R. CO. 65 Conn. 201, 32 Atl. 350.

When one becomes a passenger.

Cited in Exton v. Central R. Co. 62 N. J. L. 13, 56 L. R. A. 511, 42 Atl. 486.

holding one going to baggage room after purchase of ticket entitled to protection, as passenger, from injury by cabmen; Keator v. Scranton Traction Co. 191 Pa. 108, 71 Am. St. Rep. 758, 43 Atl. 86, holding one given transfer, a passenger while walking block to second car.

Recovery as affected by proof of facts not pleaded.

Cited in Whiting v. Koepke, 71 Conn. 80, 40 Atl. 1053, holding that failure to plead consent to accept materials defeats foreclosure of mechanic's lien; Stein v. Coleman, 73 Conn. 530, 48 Atl. 206, denying right to recover where complaint contains no allegation that defendant threw water by artificial means upon adjoining land, and evidence shows water conducted there through spouts.

Negligence, question for jury.

Cited in Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 354, 37 L. R. A. 641, 36 Atl. 791, holding it question for jury whether company's schedule adequate to prevent collision between irregular trains; Wood v. Danbury, 72 Conn. 73, 43 Atl. 554, holding decision of jury as to absence of contributory negligence, final.

Presumption of negligence.

Cited in footnote to Springer v. Ford, 52 L. R. A. 930, which sustains presumption of negligence from injury to passenger by unexplained breaking of elevator appliance.

29 L. R. A. 303, SAVANNAH v. MULLIGAN, 95 Ga. 323, 51 Am. St. Rep. 86, 22 S. E. 621.

Municipal power to abate nuisance or prevent public injury.

Cited in Schoen v. Atlanta, 97 Ga. 701, 33 L. R. A. 805, 25 S. E. 380, upholding city's power to require removal of carcass as nuisance per se.

Cited in footnotes to Chicago v. Union Stockyards & T. Co. 35 L. R. A. 281, which denies right of city to remove railroad tracks of stockyards company, though nuisance created by mode of use; Wallace v. Richmond, 36 L. R. A. 554, which denies power of city council to order destruction of all intoxicating liquor in city in anticipation of riot, and pledge city's faith to pay for same; Aitken v. Wells River, 41 L. R. A. 566, which denies liability of village for trustees' destruction of property to avert imminent public injury.

Cited in notes (38 L. R. A. 161) on municipal power over buildings and other structures as nuisances; (36 L. R. A. 595, 606) on power of municipal corporations to define, prevent, and abate nuisances.

Distinguished in Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 549, 54 L. R. A. 301, 38 S. E. 996, enjoining city's removal of depot floor for failure to give notice to company to abate nuisance.

29 L. R. A. 305, SEBREE DEPOSIT BANK v. MORELAND, 96 Ky. 150, 28 S. W. 153.

29 L. R. A. 317, KERNOHAN v. MANSS, 53 Ohio St. 118, 41 N. E. 258.

Priority of payment.

Cited in Wohlgemuth v. Standard Drug Co. 14 Ohio C. C. 320, holding oral agreement as to order of payment of notes secured by mortgage not binding on assignees without notice; Lee v. Kellogg, 108 Mich. 537, 66 N. W. 380, holding that purchaser of forged notes and mortgage acquires no rights as against prior assignee of genuine instruments, although unrecorded; Southern Commercial Sav. Bank v. Slattery, 166 Mo. 638, 66 S. W. 1066, denying that possession of mortgage and notes entitles holder to security as against pledgee of like notes previously negotiated.

Provisions in mortgage as affecting note.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 536) on negotiability of note secured by mortgage as affected by provisions in mortgage.

29 L. R. A. 321, SCHROEDER v. FLINT & P. M. R. CO. 103 Mich. 213, 50 Am. St. Rep. 354, 61 N. W. 663.

Recovery for negligence of fellow servant.

Cited in Petaja v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 106 Mich. 468, 32 L. R. A. 438, 58 Am. St. Rep. 505, 64 N. W. 335, denying trammer's right to recover for shift boss's failure to notify timberman to timber open space in mine; Findlay v. Russel Wheel & Foundry Co. 108 Mich. 290, 66 N. W. 50, holding foreman who works with men, fellow servant of one injured by former's working drum improperly; Thomas v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 114 Mich. 63, 72 N. W. 40, holding that foreman represents master in selection of rope in distant warehouse; Andre v. Winslow Bros. Elevator Co. 117 Mich. 563, 76 N. W. 86, denying right to recover for foreman's negligence in failing to stop elevator; Frazee v. Stott, 120 Mich. 628, 79 N. W. 896, denying master's liability for employees' misplacement of guide board to rollers; Anderson v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 Mich. 605, 65 N. W. 585 (dissenting opinion), majority holding company liable to brakeman for section men's failure to repair track; Mikolajczak v. North American Chemical Co. 129 Mich. 82, 88 N. W. 75, denying right to recover for injuries to servant, resulting from failure of foreman to give warning of fall of salt in mine, where latter had authority to discharge and hire, but was subject to superintendent's orders; Wellihan v. National Wheel Co. 128 Mich. 10, 87 N. W. 75, holding operator of spoke lathe entitled to recover for injuries resulting from foreman's starting machine while former was oiling it, if latter started it to see whether it worked properly rather than to determine whether it was safe.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Morch v. Toledo, S. & M. R. Co. 113 Mich. 157, 71 N. W. 464, holding section foreman sent in place of road master to distribute ties, fellow servant of one throwing ties back from track; Lepan v. Hall, 128 Mich. 526, 87 N. W. 619, holding foreman of sawmill doing considerable manual labor, though having power to discharge and hire, fellow servant of sawyer.

Master's duty to provide safe place.

Cited in Balhoff v. Michigan C. R. Co. 106 Mich. 613, 65 N. W. 592, affirming brakeman's recovery for injuries from derailment of car, caused by formation of ice in depression in track.

Vice principalship with reference to rank of servant.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 520, 521, 524, 526, 563, 613) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

— With reference to act causing injury.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 39, 42) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

29 L. R. A. 327, SAN BERNARDINO v. SOUTHERN P. CO. 107 Cal. 524, 40 Pac. 796.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 92) on taxation of corporate franchise in United States; (60 L. R. A. 685) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause.

29 L. R. A. 330, TODD v. ELECTION COMRS. 104 Mich. 474, 62 N. W. 564, 64 N. W. 496.

Use of candidate's name on ballot.

Cited in Stephenson v. Election Comrs. 118 Mich. 417, 42 L. R. A. 222, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402, 76 N. W. 914, holding tickets nominated by rival factions entitled to place on official ballot in adjoining columns; State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 533, 42 L. R. A. 243, footnote p. 239, 76 N. W. 482, and State ex rel. Bateman v. Bode, 55 Ohio St. 233, 34 L. R. A. 500, 60 Am. St. Rep. 696, 45 N. E. 195, sustaining statute prohibiting use of candidate's name on ballot more than once; Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 481, 59 L. R. A. 98, footnote p. 97, 70 Pac. 461, which holds void, statute requiring nominee of more than one party to choose on which ticket name shall be printed.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Blydenburgh v. Burdick, 34 L. R. A. 845, which denies right to have name of candidate for elector of president appear on ballot more than once.

Validity of statute requiring official stamp on ballots.

Cited in Slaymaker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 498, 47 L. R. A. 858, 42 Pac. 1049 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining requirement of indorsement of initials of judge of election on ballots.

Retroactive statute.

Cited in Re Beecher, 113 Mich. 671, 72 N. W. 11, denying that statute as to purchase of premises leased by decedent, to settle estate, affects legatee's vested rights.

29 L. R. A. 337, OHIO GAS FUEL CO. v. ANDREWS, 50 Ohio St. 695, 35 N. E. 1059.

Liability for escape or explosion of dangerous agencies.

Cited in Bradford Glycerine Co. v. St. Mary's Woolen Mfg. Co. 60 Ohio St. 567, 45 L. R. A. 659, 71 Am. St. Rep. 740, 54 N. E. 528, affirming liability for damage caused by explosion of nitroglycerin, regardless of negligence; Langaugh v. Anderson, 68 Ohio St. 143, 62 L. R. A. 952, 67 N. E. 286, holding lessor of oil land not liable for damages caused by oil escaping from tanks, thence down hill into creek, where it came into contact with fire which followed back trail of oil and burned building.

Cited in footnotes to Ryan v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. 32 L. R. A. 524, which holds negligence shown by explosion of generator of refrigerating machine while inexperienced employee is attempting to stop leak; Hatcher v. Dunn, 36 L. R. A. 689, which holds inspector of oil not absolutely liable for explosion due to incorrectly branding it; Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 51 L. R. A. 881, which holds that use of barrels formerly containing explosive substance, for shipping iron, does not render employer liable for injury to employee by explosion; Tyler v. Moody, 54 L. R. A. 417, which denies necessity of alleging knowledge of falsity of warranty of safety of acetylene gas machine in action for breach; Vieth v. Hope Salt & Coal Co. 57 L. R. A. 410, which denies liability for injury to neighbor by explosion of steam boiler operated on one's own premises with care and skill.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 718) on negligence in manufacture and storage of gunpowder, nitroglycerin, dynamite, and other explosives.

— Gas.

Cited in Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Perrego, 144 Ind. 359, 32 L. R. A. 149, footnote p. 146, 43 N. E. 306, affirming liability for explosion caused by escape of gas from main, reaching building by penetrating soil; Anderson v. Standard Gaslight Co. 17 Misc. 627, 40 N. Y. Supp. 671, holding company liable for failure to discover leak in meter, gas from which became ignited causing fire; German-American Ins. Co. v. Standard Gaslight Co. 34 Misc. 595, 70 N. Y. Supp. 384, holding company liable for fire resulting from servant's applying lighted match to locate leak in gas pipe.

Cited in footnotes to Evans v. Keystone Gas Co. 30 L. R. A. 651, which holds company liable for injury to shade trees by negligent escape of natural gas from street main; Schmeer v. Gaslight Co. 30 L. R. A. 653, which holds gas company, before turning on gas in apartment house, must see that pipes are safe; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker, 31 L. R. A. 785, which holds failure of gas company to exercise care to discover and remedy leak, negligence; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 33 L. R. A. 366, which requires gas company with notice of break in pipes, to take precautions against injury; Richmond Gas Co. v. Baker, 36 L. R. A. 683, which holds gas company liable for escape of gas from cracked elbow in pipe, repair of which has been unsuccessfully attempted; Dow v. Winnepesaukee Gas & Electric Co. 42 L. R. A. 569, which holds proprietor of gas plant liable for damage to greenhouse plants by escaping gas; Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co. 44 L. R. A. 92, which holds gas company liable for furnishing natural gas at so great a pressure as to set building on fire; McKenna v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 47 L. R. A. 790, which denies gas company's liability for explosion due to blundering act of employee of other company.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 342) on liability for negligence in escape and explosion of gas.

Municipal power over nuisances.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 657) on municipal power over nuisances relating to trade or business.

29 L. R. A. 342, LEBANON LIGHT, HEAT & POWER CO. v. LEAP, 139 Ind. 443, 39 N. E. 57.

Liability for escape of gas and other explosives.

Cited in Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. McMath, 26 Ind. App. 156, 57 N. E. 593, affirming right to recover for injuries due to explosion of gas escaping from pipes laid on surface of highway; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Perrego, 144 Ind. 359, 32 L. R. A. 149, 43 N. E. 306, affirming right to recover for explosion caused by escape of gas from main 80 feet distant; Lebanon Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 477, 39 N. E. 62, holding gas company negligent in leaving gas pipe loose in street, poorly jointed and subject to high pressure of gas, which was escaping and burning several feet high.

Cited in footnote to Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 51 L. R. A. 881, which holds that use of barrels formerly containing explosive substance, for shipping iron, does not render employer liable for injury to employee by explosion.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 718) on negligence in manufacture and storage of gunpowder, nitroglycerin, dynamite, and other explosives.

Municipal power over nuisances.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 657) on municipal power over nuisances relating to trade or business.

29 L. R. A. 355, McGAHAN v. INDIANAPOLIS NATURAL GAS CO. 140 Ind. 335, 49 Am. St. Rep. 199, 37 N. E. 601.

Negligence as to use of match to locate gas leak.

Cited in People's Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Amphlett, 93 Ill. App. 202, holding it not contributory negligence per se to use lighted match in locating source of escaping gas.

Liability for injury from explosives.

Cited in Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Perrego, 144 Ind. 359, 32 L. R. A. 149, 43 N. E. 306, affirming liability for explosion caused by escape of gas from main 80 feet away.

Cited in footnote to Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 51 L. R. A. 881, which holds that use of barrels formerly containing explosive substance, for shipping iron, does not render employer liable for injury to employee by explosion.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 718) on negligence in manufacture and storage of gunpowder, nitroglycerin, dynamite, and other explosives.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Wilson, 11 Ind. App. 504, 38 N. E. 343, holding open switch proximate cause of fireman's death by collision with cars on side track; Alexandria Min. & Exploring Co. v. Irish, 16 Ind. App. 540, 44 N. E. 680, holding death caused by explosion of gas, proximate result of defective pipes; Enochs v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 145 Ind. 638, 44 N. E. 658, holding obstruction of street by train not proximate cause of injury to one tripping over stone in passing around train; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Perriguy, 138 Ind. 428, 37 N. E. 976, holding failure to obey orders and take siding, and not defective condition of head light, proximate cause of injury resulting from collision which might have been avoided if head light not defective.

Sufficiency of notice.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 274) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

Municipal power over nuisances.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 657) on municipal power over nuisances relating to trade or business.

29 L. R. A. 360, KOUNTZE v. KENNEDY, 147 N. Y. 124, 2 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 327, 69 N. Y. S. R. 388, 49 Am. St. Rep. 651, 41 N. E. 414.

Fraudulent representations.

Cited in Dayton v. American Steel Barge Co. 76 App. Div. 462, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1130, Affirming 36 Misc. 230, 73 N. Y. Supp. 316, holding agent's agreement to reduce commissions, prompted by innocent misstatement of vendee's agent as to sale, void; Parfitt v. Ferguson, 3 App. Div. 186, 38 N. Y. Supp. 466, holding burden of showing is fraud upon him alleging it; L. D. Garrett Co. v. Astor, 67 App. Div. 597, 73 N. Y. Supp. 966, holding complaint failing to allege knowledge of false statements insufficient; Walsh v. Hyatt, 74 App. Div. 23, 77 N. Y. Supp. 8, holding evidence of false representations as to power of dredge properly rejected in absence of allegation of fraud; Lovelace v. Suter, 93 Mo. App. 438, 67 S. W. 737, denying bank's liability for cashier's deceit as to safety of investment, made under belief of truth; Boddy v. Henry, 113 Iowa, 468, 53 L. R. A. 772, footnote p. 769, 85 N. W. 771, denying that landowner's making of false representations as to quantity, under belief of their truth, constitutes deceit; Nolan v. Harned, 13 App. Div. 161, 43 N. Y. Supp. 329 (dissenting opinion), majority holding mistake, not amounting to fraudulent representation, as to encroachment of house on lot sold, sufficient to avoid contract of sale.

Cited in footnotes to James v. Crosthwait, 36 L. R. A. 631, which holds banker not necessarily relieved from liability for loss incurred on credit falsely entered on customer's pass book, though originally intended to mislead; Williams Transp. Line v. Darius Cole Transp. Co. 56 L. R. A. 939, which denies right to rely on false representations as to speed of steamboat, if warranty as to speed inserted in contract.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 432, 435) on expression of opinion as fraud.

— Intentional or actual fraud.

Cited in Forster v. Wilshusen, 14 Misc. 521, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1083, rescinding contract for purchase of real property for false statements of amount of rentals; Enright v. Fellheimer, 25 Misc. 665, 56 N. Y. Supp. 366, holding proof of actual fraud as to solvency necessary to support replevin action; Second Nat. Bank v. Curtiss, 2 App. Div. 512, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1028, affirming liability for attesting forged signature to assignment of stock certificate; Mendenhall v. Stewart, 18 Ind. App. 267, 47 N. E. 943, affirming right to recover for false attestation of signature to letter of credit; Talmadge v. Sanitary Security Co. 31 App. Div. 501, 52 N. Y. Supp. 139, holding that equity will rescind subscription induced by false representation as to amount of stock already subscribed; Taylor v. Commercial Bank, 68 App. Div. 462, 73 N. Y. Supp. 924, holding representations as to solvency of debtor of bank to induce credit, made by cashier without knowledge of facts, to enable banks to collect debt, actionable; Arnold v. Richardson, 74 App. Div. 584, 77 N. Y. Supp. 763, holding that vendor relying upon treasurer's statement made to financial agency, which omitted liabilities on accommodation notes, may rescind sale; Hadcock v. Osmer, 153 N. Y. 608, 47 N. E. 923, Affirming 4 App. Div. 437, 38 N. Y. Supp. 618, holding that false representation of solvency, made without knowledge of financial condition, constitutes actual fraud; Summers v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 90 Mo. App. 700, holding proof of intentional misrepresentation in application for insurance necessary to defeat action; Hindman v. First Nat. Bank, 57 L. R. A. 119, 50 C. C. A. 636, 112 Fed. 944, holding bank falsely certifying to deposit of capital stock to induce issue of license to insurance company liable to purchasers of stock relying thereon; Worthington v. Herrmann, 89 App. Div. 628, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1151, holding actual fraud necessary to support action for fraudulent representations; Spier v. Hyde, 92 App. Div. 482, 87 N. Y. Supp. 285, holding contract avoided by misrepresentations as to terms of existing contract for disposal of corporate stock, and as to number of shares that would be put in pool; Warfield v. Clark, 118 Iowa, 75, 91 N. W. 833, holding that negligent misstatement as to financial condition of insurance company, required to be filed, will not support action for intentional fraud by one purchasing stock; Benedict v. Guardian Trust Co. 91 App. Div. 107, 86 N. Y. Supp. 370, upholding right to recover for fraudulent statements in prospectus as to earnings of mining company.

Cited in footnote to James v. Crosthwait, 36 L. R. A. 631, which holds bank liable for loss incurred in reliance on false entry of credit on bank book, induced by conduct authorizing belief that credit is genuine.

29 L. R. A. 365, COM. v. FORREST, 170 Pa. 40, 32 Atl. 652.

Bicycle law.

Cited in Ordway v. Cornelius, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 282, holding ordinance prohibiting use of bicycles on certain streets, except by those giving bond, unreasonable; Richardson v. Danvers, 176 Mass. 414, 50 L. R. A. 127, 79 Am. St. Rep. 320, 57 N. E. 688, holding bicycle not a carriage; State ex rel. Bettis v. Missouri P. R. Co. 71 Mo. App. 391, holding that carrier may refuse to carry bicycles as ordinary baggage.

Cited in footnotes to Myers v. Hinds, 33 L. R. A. 356, which holds bicyclist liable for running into pedestrian in narrow path; Davis v. Petrinovich, 36 L. R. A. 615, which holds license tax on bicycles used for pleasure unauthorized; Moore v. District of Columbia, 41 L. R. A. 208, which holds reasonableness of ordinance prohibiting riding bicycle with handle bars more than 4 inches below saddle, a question of fact; Wheeler v. Boone, 44 L. R. A. 821, which holds riding tricycle on sidewalk not within ordinance prohibiting bicycles.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 296, 297) on bicycle law.

29 L. R. A. 367, NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. CO. v. BRIDGEPORT TRACTION CO. 65 Conn. 410, 32 Atl. 953.

Right to intersect tracks or right of way.

Cited in footnote to Chester Traction Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 269, which holds imperious necessity for additional street railway crossing over railroad not shown by increase of traffic, preventing quick movement of cars.

— Right to compensation.

Approved in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steel, 47 Neb. 743, 66 N. W. 830, holding railroad company having permanent easement in street not entitled to compensation as condition to crossing of tracks by trolley company.

Cited in New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 70 Conn. 616, 40 Atl. 607, holding that trolley company must compensate railroad company as condition of crossing parcel of land acquired by latter by deed and condemnation; Consolidated Traction Co. v. South Orange & M. Traction Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 584, 40 Atl. 15, denying street car company's right to compensation for construction of crossing over tracks by another company.

Cited in footnote to Southern R. Co. v. Atlanta R. & Power Co. 51 L. R. A. 125, which sustains right of street railway to cross steam railroad tracks without compensation.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 485) on right of railroad company to compensation for laying street railway across railroad track on street crossing.

Injunction against construction of street railway.

Cited in footnote to General Electric Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 231, which sustains right of railroad company to injunction against construction, under invalid ordinance, of street railway which would specially injure former company's access to its freight house.

Legislative control over city streets.

Cited in Central R. & Electric Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 209, 35 Atl. 32, holding that legislature may give street railway company right to use street without consent of municipality.

General act as affecting special.

Cited in Shea v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 66 Conn. 271, 33 Atl. 918, denying that passage of general act relating to appeals affects provision of city charter as to same subject.

29 L. R. A. 376, WOOD v. AUBURN, 87 Me. 287, 32 Atl. 906.

Compulsory service by public service corporations.

Cited in footnotes to Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. State, 57 L. R. A. 761, which denies right of natural gas company to discriminate against single consumer by enforcing meter rate, instead of flat rate, against him; Gardner v. Providence Teleph. Co. 55 L. R. A. 113, which sustains right to deprive customer of telephone service on refusal to discontinue use of extension instruments not furnished by it.

Distinguished in Rushville Co-op. Teleph. Co. v. Irvin, 27 Ind. App. 67, 59 N. E. 327, sustaining company's right to discontinue telephone service for non-payment of dues; Mackin v. Portland Gas Co. 38 Or. 127, 49 L. R. A. 599, 61 Pac. 134, upholding rule against supply of gas at one set of premises till payment for supply at another.

— By water company.

Cited in Kelsey v. Fire & Water Comrs. 113 Mich. 221, 37 L. R. A. 678, footnote p. 675, 71 N. W. 589, denying owner's right to require supply of water to each tenant as separate consumer; McGregor v. Case, 80 Minn. 216, 83 N. W. 140, refusing to enjoin cutting off consumer's water supply for nonpayment of excessive rate; Crumley v. Watauga Water Co. 99 Tenn. 427, 41 S. W. 1038, holding that water company cannot refuse to supply consumer because of non-payment of note taken for rates; Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 335, 40 L. R. A. 660, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634, holding rule of water company against turning on water until payment of bills of previous tenants, void; Jones v. Nashville, 109 Tenn. 567, 72 S. W. 985, sustaining ordinance forbidding city employees from providing water to consumers until past indebtedness is paid.

Cited in footnotes to American Waterworks Co. v. State, 30 L. R. A. 447, which sustains power to compel private water company to furnish water to patrons without discrimination; State ex rel. Milsted v. Butte City Water Co. 32 L. R. A. 697, which denies right of water company to refuse to supply water to tenant; Bienville Water-Supply Co. v. Mobile, 33 L. R. A. 59, which authorizes injunction against water company shutting off supply of water for public purposes; Ladd v. Boston, 40 L. R. A. 171, which upholds removal of water meter though fixtures so arranged as to cost consumer, after removal, twenty times as much as others pay.

Establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 118) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

29 L. R. A. 378, STATE ex rel. LITTLE v. UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS, 55 Kan. 389, 40 Pac. 656.

Powers and liabilities of public institutions.

Cited in footnotes to Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 29 L. R. A. 798, which holds corporation composed of private individuals not restricted from conducting business for private benefit, private corporation within prohibition of donations by municipalities; Smith v. Cornelius, 30 L. R. A. 747, which holds lease for ninety-nine years by public corporation of state property to private person, ultra vires; Gross v. Kentucky Board of Managers, 43 L. R. A. 703, which sustains right to sue state board of managers of World's Fair Exposition without consent of state; Maia v. Eastern State Hospital, 47 L. R. A. 577, which denies liability of state hospital for injuries to inmate from negligence or misconduct of persons in charge; Moody v. State's Prison, 53 L. R. A. 855, which denies liability of state to prison guard for injuries by defective ladder; Trevett v. Prison Asso. 50 L. R. A. 564, which holds prison association, not controlled by state, liable for its torts; Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 29 L. R. A. 708, which denies exemption from liability for negligence of state agricultural society as public corporation; Overholser v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 62 L. R. A. 936, which holds national home for disabled soldiers a part of United States government not subject to action sounding in tort.

— Universities.

Cited in People ex rel. Jerome v. State University, 24 Colo. 179, 49 Pac. 286, denying regents' power to change location of department of state university; Re Royer, 123 Cal. 623, 44 L. R. A. 369, footnote p. 364, 56 Pac. 461, sustaining power of state university to take bequest.

Cited in footnote to Oklahoma Agri. & M. College v. Willis, 40 L. R. A. 677, which denies power to sue agricultural and mechanical college created by, and existing under, statute.

Legislative power over educational corporations.

Cited in footnotes to Sterling v. University of Michigan, 34 L. R. A. 150, which denies legislative power to designate where department of state university shall be located; Watson Seminary v. County Court, 45 L. R. A. 675, which holds charter provisions of educational corporation changeable at will of legislature.

Creation of de facto corporation.

Cited in Marion Bond Co. v. Mexican Coffee & Rubber Co. 160 Ind. 561, 65 N. E. 748, holding de facto corporation created by organization under particular statute, and including powers which such statute does not authorize.

Quo warranto against corporations.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 761, 764) on quo warranto against corporations for making illegal charges in course of authorized business.

29 L. R. A. 386, HOCKING VALLEY COAL CO. v. ROSSER, 53 Ohio St. 12, 53 Am. St. Rep. 622, 41 N. E. 263.

Special legislation.

Cited in Mykrantz v. Globe Bldg. & L. Asso. 19 Ohio C. C. 57, holding void, statute exempting building and loan associations from operation of usury laws; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 338, 30 L. R. A. 224, 41 N. E. 579, holding void, tax upon inheritances exceeding $20,000; Palmer v. Tingle, 55 Ohio St. 445, 45 N. E. 313, declaring unconstitutional, statute giving to subcontractors, laborers, and material men lien on owner's property; Williams v. Donough, 65 Ohio St. 506, 56 L. R. A. 769, 63 N. E. 84, declaring invalid, statute protecting insurance benefits from attachment; O'Connell v. Menominee Bay Shore Lumber Co. 113 Mich. 126, 71 N. W. 449, holding void, statute authorizing service of process in adjoining counties in certain cases; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. 127 Cal. 15, 47 L. R. A. 343, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17, 59 Pac. 304, holding statute giving employees of corporation lien for wages, void; Mahoney v. Kinney, 5 Ohio N. P. 338, holding statute relating to chattel mortgages not void for want of uniformity, when it is not limited to any locality, but operates upon all alike.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 322) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

Distinguished in Snell v. Cincinnati Street R. Co. 60 Ohio St. 269, 54 N. E. 270, Reversing 16 Ohio C. C. 707, holding statute giving change of venue in suit by or against corporation in county where more than fifty stockholders reside, valid.

— Allowance for attorney's fee.

Cited in Permanent Sav. & L. Co. v. Sennt, 4 Ohio N. P. 347, denying right of purchaser at tax sale to recover attorney's fees for filing cross petition; Dell v. Marvin, 41 Fla. 227, 45 L. R. A. 202, footnote p. 201, 79 Am. St. Rep. 171, 26 So. 188, sustaining statute giving to successful plaintiff attorney's fees in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, but not to defendant; Los Angeles Gold Mine Co. v. Campbell, 13 Colo. App. 7, 56 Pac. 246, and Davidson v. Jennings, 27 Colo. 195, 48 L. R. A. 343, 83 Am. St. Rep. 49, 60 Pac. 354, declaring unconstitutional, act giving attorney's fees in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien; Openshaw v. Halfin, 24 Utah, 430, 91 Am. St. Rep. 796, 68 Pac. 138, holding statute providing for attorney's fee in suit to compel mortgagee to execute release, void; Atchison. T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 116, 43 L. ed. 917, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609, sustaining act giving attorney's fee in action against railroad company for damage by fire; Gano v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 114 Iowa. 716, 55 L. R. A. 265, footnote p. 263, 89 Am. St. Rep. 393, 87 N. W. 714, sustaining requirement for payment of attorney's fee on successful appeal by land owner from award in eminent domain; Dodge v. Morrow, 14 Ind. App. 537, 41 N. E. 967, refusing to consider statute allowing attorney's fee, as involving constitutional question; Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 347, 30 L. R. A. 494, footnote p. 491, 42 N. E. 386 (dissenting opinion), majority sustaining statute allowing attorney's fees in suits for wages.

Cited in footnotes to Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 L. R. A. 553.

which holds valid, act allowing attorneys' fees in actions against railroad companies for taking land without making compensation; Turner v. Boger, 49 L. R. A. 590, which holds provision for attorneys' fees in trust deed void; Atkinson v. Woodmansee, 64 L. R. A. 325, which holds void, provision for recovery of attorney's fee by successful plaintiff in action to enforce laborer's or artisan's lien.

29 L. R. A. 390, STATE v. HAUG, 95 Iowa, 413, 64 N. W. 398.

Rights of fishery.

Cited in notes (39 L. R. A. 582) on governmental control over right of fishery; (60 L. R. A. 504) on right to fish.

29 L. R. A. 393, PEOPLE ex rel. HECKER-JONES-JEWELL MILL CO. v. BARKER, 147 N. Y. 31, 69 N. Y. S. R. 337, 41 N. E. 435.

Taxation of nonresidents.

Cited in People ex rel. Barney v. Barker, 16 App. Div. 267, 44 N. Y. Supp. 718, requiring nonresident to show indebtedness to residents in excess of value of other than taxable property, to obtain statutory exemption; People ex rel. Yellow Pine Co. v. Barker, 23 App. Div. 526, 48 N. Y. Supp. 553, holding foreign corporations taxable upon credits and bills receivable for goods sold in state; Re King, 71 App. Div. 583, 76 N. Y. Supp. 220, holding firm having manufacturing plant in state, and sales department elsewhere, resulting in excess of indebtedness over assets in state, not subject to transfer tax.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in People ex rel. Hyde v. Miller, 90 App. Div. 600, 85 N. Y. Supp. 522, holding corporation not entitled to deduct liabilities and assets employed out of state for purpose of franchise tax assessment.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 577) on taxation of capital stock of corporations in United States.

Construction of court's decisions.

Cited in Irvine v. F. H. Palmer Mfg. Co. 3 App. Div. 388, 39 N. Y. Supp. 245, holding that language of decisions must be construed with reference to facts of each case.

29 L. R. A. 398, Re PRYOR, 55 Kan. 724, 49 Am. St. Rep. 280, 41 Pac. 958.

Regulation of rates, tolls, and prices.

Cited in Wabaska Electric Co. v. Wymore, 60 Neb. 202, 82 N. W. 626, holding city of second class without implied authority to regulate electric light rates.

Cited in footnotes to Louisville Gas Co. v. Dulaney, 36 L. R. A. 125, which denies right to charge meter rent to small consumers of gas in addition to maximum charge; Muncie Natural Gas Co. v. Muncie, 60 L. R. A. 822, which sustains city's power to stipulate as to maximum rates for gas.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 181) on legislative power to fix tolls, rates, or prices.

29 L. R. A. 401, BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO. v. HARRISBURG, 12 C. C. A. 100, 28 U. S. App. 108, 64 Fed. 283.

Liability of city for failure to make assessment to pay contractor.

Cited in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Denver, 19 C. C. A. 143, 36 U. S. App.

499, 72 Fed. 339, holding municipal corporation primarily liable for improvements which it contracts that street railway companies shall pay by assessment; Ft. Dodge Electric Light & Power Co. v. Ft. Dodge, 115 Iowa, 575, 89 N. W. 7, holding city liable to contractor for amount of certificates illegally assessed against street railway company; Gable v. Altoona, 200 Pa. 19, 49 Atl. 367, denying that illegality of assessment provided for payment of bonds relieves city from liability; Heller v. Garden City, 58 Kan. 267, 48 Pac. 841, holding city liable generally, after refusal to make assessment according to contract to pay for local improvements.

Cited in footnotes to German American Sav. Bank v. Spokane, 38 L. R. A. 259, which denies city's liability to action on street-grade warrants because of officer's delay in providing fund; Weston v. Syracuse, 43 L. R. A. 678, which holds city liable for wrongful refusal to accept contract as completed and make assessments to pay contractor; Pontiac v. Talbot Paving Co. 48 L. R. A. 326, which denies city's liability to contractor for refusal to make new special assessment after original assessment set aside; Louisville v. Bitzer, 61 L. R. A. 434, which sustains city's liability to contractor for street improvement, notwithstanding agreement to look only to abutting property.

Invalidity of contract as affecting recovery.

Distinguished in Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. v. Canyon County, 85 Fed. 398, denying right to recover for bridge constructed under void contract.

29 L. R. A. 404, SHORT v. STATE, 80 Md. 392, 31 Atl. 322.

Poll taxes.

Cited in Galloway v. Tavares, 37 Fla. 62, 19 So. 170, holding council without power to pass ordinance requiring male residents to work on roads.

Cited in footnotes to Ratliff v. Beale, 34 L. R. A. 472, which denies right to sell nontaxable property to pay poll tax; Kansas City v. Whipple, 35 L. R. A. 747, which holds requirement to compel tax from all male residents, except those voting at general city election, void; Russell v. Ayer, 37 L. R. A. 246, which holds constitutional provision for levying capitation tax equal to tax on property valued at $300, not self-executing.

29 L. R. A. 416, DUVAL COUNTY v. JACKSONVILLE, 36 Fla. 196, 18 So. 339.

Highway taxation.

Cited in footnotes to Simon v. Northup, 30 L. R. A. 171, which upholds legislative power to require city to incur debt for bridges and ferries; Byram v. Marion County, 33 L. R. A. 476, which authorizes taxation of city property for free gravel roads or turnpikes within county.

Tax on county property to support troops.

Cited in State ex rel. Milton v. Dickenson, 44 Fla. 638, 60 L. R. A. 545, 33 So. 514 (dissenting opinion), majority holding statute requiring counties to levy tax to provide armories for state soldiers void.

Character of title to act.

Cited in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Burns, 38 Fla. 387, 21 So. 290, holding that title to act must give synopsis of its provisions.

29 L. R. A. 423, BALD EAGLE VALLEY R. CO. v. NITTANY VALLEY R. CO.
171 Pa. 284, 50 Am. St. Rep. 807, 33 Atl. 239.

Covenants running with land.

Cited in Kelly v. Nypano R. Co. 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 179, holding that equity will compel railroad company to maintain fence under deed containing covenant to erect fences; Landell v. Hamilton, 175 Pa. 337, 34 L. R. A. 230, 38 W. N. C. 244, 34 Atl. 663, denying that change in use of premises from residence to business purposes affects building restriction; Electric City Land & Improv. Co. v. West Ridge Coal Co. 187 Pa. 512, 41 Atl. 458, enjoining grantor's assignee from conducting mining operations contrary to condition in deed.

Cited in footnote to Doty v. Chattanooga U. R. Co. 48 L. R. A. 160, which holds covenant for running certain trains binding on subsequent purchaser of railroad.

Validity of contracts for traffic and purchase of stock.

Cited in Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Gettysburg & H. R. Co. 177 Pa. 562, 39 W. N. C. 81, 35 Atl. 952, decreeing specific performance of contract between connecting railroad companies relating to through tickets and interchange of traffic and cars; Northern C. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. 215, 44 Atl. 253, holding contract for purchase by railroad company of stock of another not against public policy when lines not competing; Bangor & P. R. R. Co. v. American Bangor Slate Co. 203 Pa. 8, 52 Atl. 40, Affirming 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 146, holding contract between railroad president and president of slate company, to ship all of latter's products over former's road, void.

Cited in footnote to Jacobson v. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 389, which sustains making of joint rates for through shipments over connecting railroads.

Powers of electric light company as to rates.

Cited in Mercur v. Media Electric Light, Heat & Power Co. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 525, 8 Del. Co. Rep. 386, upholding right of electric light company to classify customers as to rate, on basis of location and amount of power used.

Sufficiency of consideration.

Cited in Erie Forge Co. v. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 555, holding resumption of business relations between two parties sufficient consideration to support contract to "mark off" disputed account.

Judgment upon demurrer.

Cited in Graeff v. Felix, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 667, granting final decree upon overruling demurrers as unfounded.

Distinguished in Corbet v. Oil City Fuel Supply Co. 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 20, 40 W. N. C. 482, allowing defendant to answer upon overruling demurrer which was not interposed to cause delay.

29 L. R. A. 429, IRELAND v. GLOBE MILL. & REDUCTION CO. 19 R. I. 180, 61 Am. St. Rep. 756, 32 Atl. 921.

Attachment or levy upon stock in foreign corporation.

Approved in Pinney v. Nevills, 86 Fed. 97, denying right to attach stock of foreign corporation owned by nonresident, in absence of statute.

Cited in Simpson v. Jersey City Contracting Co. 165 N. Y. 203, 55 L. R. A.

809, 58 N. E. 896 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding right to attach interest in stock of foreign corporation pledged by nonresident to resident; Caffery v. Choctaw Coal & Min. Co. 95 Mo. App. 185, 68 S. W. 1049, holding execution issued from territorial court against shares of stock of foreign corporation void.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 803) on attachment of shares of stock in foreign corporation.

Restrictions on transfer of stock.

Later appeals in 20 R. I. 190, 38 L. R. A. 299, 38 Atl. 116, holding contract by proposed stockholder to offer stock to corporation before others not binding; and 21 R. I. 10, 79 Am. St. Rep. 769, 41 Atl. 258, denying that assignee is bound by by-law assented to by assignor, relating to sale of stock.

Cited in Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Bloede, 84 Md. 142, 33 L. R. A. 109, 57 Am. St. Rep. 373, 34 Atl. 1127, holding by-law restricting right to transfer shares of stock, invalid.

Cited in footnotes to Craig v. Hesperia Land & Water Co. 35 L. R. A. 306, which holds refusal to transfer stock on books not justified by existence of unpaid assessment; Carter v. Producers' Oil Co. 39 L. R. A. 100, which holds right of member of limited partnership to purchase additional shares limited by rule requiring re-election to membership as to such shares; Spurgeon v. Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Co. 39 L. R. A. 701, which holds purchaser at sale of delinquent stock for assessments not affected by by-law restricting transfers.

29 L. R. A. 431, SANDERS v. POTTITZERS BROS. FRUIT CO. 144 N. Y. 209, 63 N. Y. S. R. 76, 43 Am. St. Rep. 757, 39 N. E. 75.

Sufficiency of negotiations to support contract.

Cited in Zeltner v. Irwin, 21 Misc. 14, 46 N. Y. Supp. 852, holding that mailing letter of acceptance completes contract when proposition sent by mail; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Schultz, 25 C. C. A. 459, 42 U. S. App. 483, 80 Fed. 337, denying that contract is completed by mailing indefinite letter of acceptance; William Wicke Co. v. Kaldenberg Mfg. Co. 21 Misc. 80, 46 N. Y. Supp. 937, and Wilbur v. Collin, 4 App. Div. 419, 38 N. Y. Supp. 848, enforcing oral agreement as to lease, when nothing left except to reduce contract to writing; People v. St. Nicholas Bank, 3 App. Div. 549, 38 N. Y. Supp. 379, holding that instrument reciting terms of lease and agreement to exchange leases constitutes valid lease; Nicholls v. Granger, 7 App. Div. 116, 40 N. Y. Supp. 99, refusing to enforce formal agreement, when minds of parties fail to meet on all terms; Arnold v. Rothschild's Sons Co. 37 App. Div. 570, 56 N. Y. Supp. 161, denying that negotiations had through broker establishes completed lease; Day v. Dow, 46 App. Div. 150, 61 N. Y. Supp. 793, holding agreement providing it shall be "put in legal form upon demand of either party" definite; Franke v. Hewitt, 56 App. Div. 501, 68 N. Y. Supp. 968, denying that oral negotiations constitute lease, where parties contemplated reduction to writing; Disken v. Herter, 73 App. Div. 455, 77 N. Y. Supp. 300, holding agreement as to services, determined upon orally, not unenforceable when nothing left except to reduce to writing; Boysen v. Van Dorn Iron Works Co. 94 App. Div. 96, 87 N. Y. Supp. 995, holding proposal and acceptance of offer to furnish materials for public improvement sufficient to constitute contract, although formal instrument was to be executed later; Brauer v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 343, 70 N. E. 863, holding telegraphic correspondence partly confirming oral agreement relating to cattle space in steamer, but lacking certain important parts of contract, insufficient; Post v. Davis, 7 Kan. App. 221, 52 Pac. 903, holding that letters and telegrams may constitute enforceable agreement when nothing remains but execution of formal instrument; American Lighting Co. v. McCuen, 92 Md. 706, 48 Atl. 352, holding enforceable contract formed by acceptance of bid for lighting streets.

Formal instrument as curing defective preliminary contract.

Cited in Gough v. Loomis, 123 Iowa, 648, 99 N. W. 295, holding uncertainty of description in preliminary contract for sale of land cured by execution of correct formal instrument.

Date of transfer of chose in action.

Cited in Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 484, 79 N. W. 1049, holding that transfer of account dates as of time of oral agreement to assign.

Telegrams as writings within statute of frauds.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 247, 248) on telegrams as writings to make contract within statute of frauds.

What laws govern.

Cited in Wilson v. Lewiston Mill Co. 150 N. Y. 322, 55 Am. St. Rep. 680, 44 N. E. 959, construing contract for sale of cotton by broker in state to manufacturer in another state as governed by latter's statute of frauds.

29 L. R. A. 438, STEWART v. WHEELING & L. E. R. CO. 53 Ohio St. 151, 41 N. E. 247.

Subrogation to rights under mortgage.

Cited in Columbus, S. & H. R. Co.'s Appeal, 48 C. C. A. 305, 109 Fed. 207, denying junior mortgagee's right to be subrogated to rights of senior lienors after purchase upon foreclosure sale by reorganized company.

Cited in footnote to Dorrah v. Hill, 32 L. R. A. 631, which sustains right of one loaning money on invalid deed of trust to be subrogated to prior valid deed paid off with money loaned.

Sale or assessment of portion of railroad property.

Cited in footnotes to Central Trust Co. v. Moran, 29 L. R. A. 212, which denies right to enforce judgment against railroad by levy on only part of its property; Connor v. Tennessee C. R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 687, which denies power to sell section of railroad separate from franchise, to enforce contractor's lien.

Assessments for local improvements.

Cited in footnote to Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 49 L. R. A. 566, which denies right to assess entire cost of land taken for highway, on remaining land of same owner.

29 L. R. A. 444, STATE ex rel. KELLOG v. MISSOURI P. R. CO. 55 Kan. 708, 29 Am. St. Rep. 278, 41 Pac. 964.

Mandamus to compel operation of railroad.

Cited in footnotes to Southern R. Co. v. Franklin & P. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 297, which authorizes mandatory injunction to compel continued operation of leased railroad; State ex rel. Bridgeton v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 45 L. R. A.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—73.

837, which holds street railway company's duty to operate road enforceable by mandamus.

29 L. R. A. 445, KUHN v. PORT TOWNSEND, 12 Wash. 605, 50 Am. St. Rep. 911, 41 Pac. 923.

Annexation of territory.

Cited in Frace v. Tacoma, 16 Wash. 70, 47 Pac. 219, holding that private owner cannot question validity of annexation of territory to city in action to restrain collection of taxes.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Childs v. Crow Wing County, 35 L. R. A. 745, which authorizes quo warranto to oust county from adjoining territory illegally annexed.

Effect of acquiescence in annexation.

Cited in State ex rel. Brown v. Pierre, 15 S. D. 569, 90 N. W. 1047, holding that signing petition for annexation and payment of taxes for three years bars action to vacate annexation proceedings.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. West v. Des Moines, 31 L. R. A. 186, which refuses to disturb jurisdiction of city over territory annexed under void statute, after undisputed exercise of authority for several years.

Collateral attack on proceedings of council.

Cited in Shank v. Ravenswood, 43 W. Va. 246, 27 S. E. 223, holding record showing facts conferring jurisdiction on council not open to collateral attack.

Cited in footnote to Forsyth v. Hammond, 30 L. R. A. 576, which authorizes collateral attack on annexation by city council to city by proceedings in which no jurisdiction acquired.

Recovery of money paid to de facto city.

Cited in Providence v. Shackelford, 106 Ky. 383, 50 S. W. 542, denying right to recover money paid for liquor license to city of certain class, although statute placing such city in that class was subsequently declared void.

29 L. R. A. 449, WARD v. WARD, 40 W. Va. 611, 52 Am. St. Rep. 911, 2 S. E. 746.

Rights and liabilities of partners or cotenants.

Cited in Childers v. Neely, 47 W. Va. 75, 49 L. R. A. 470, 81 Am. St. Rep. 777, 34 S. E. 828, holding partner personally liable for loss caused by his negligence; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 589, 38 L. R. A. 706, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 410, holding cotenant accountable for taking petroleum from land; Cecil v. Clark, 47 W. Va. 406, 81 Am. St. Rep. 802, 35 S. E. 11, holding tenant accountable to cotenant for extraction of coal; Cain v. Cain, 53 S. C. 355, 69 Am. St. Rep. 863, 31 S. E. 278, holding cotenant in possession chargeable for excess of his share of rental value; Carson v. Broady, 56 Neb. 654, 71 Am. St. Rep. 691, 77 N. W. 80, allowing cotenant for permanent improvements made while in exclusive possession; Booth v. Booth, 114 Iowa, 80, 86 N. W. 51, refusing allowance for improvements by cotenant in nature of repairs; Gjerstadengen v. Hartzell, 9 N. D. 277, 81 Am. St. Rep. 575, 83 N. W. 230, denying cotenant's right to compensation for improvements by remote grantor; Danforth v. Moore, 55 N. J. Eq. 131, 35 Atl. 410, denying cotenant's right to contribution for repairs on property enjoyed in common; Solomon v. Rogers, 18 Pa. Supr. Ct. 73, denying liability for rent of cotenant in possession; Pulse v. Osborn, 30 Ind. App. 636, 64 N. E. 59, raising, without deciding, question as to cotenant's right on partition sale to compensation for improvements, and referring particularly to annotation in 29 L. R. A. 449.

Cited in footnotes to Cosgriff v. Foss, 36 L. R. A. 753, which denies allowance on partition for improvements made by one tenant in common; Paul v. Cragnas, 47 L. R. A. 540, which sustains right of lessee of undivided interest in mine to recover from other owners for exclusion from mine.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 829) on liability of cotenants to account for use and occupation and rents and profits.

Exceptions to commissioners' report.

Cited in McKendree v. Shelton, 51 W. Va. 517, 41 S. E. 909, refusing to consider depositions not properly incorporated into bill of exceptions; Martin v. Kester, 49 W. Va. 660, 39 S. E. 599, and Righter v. Riley, 42 W. Va. 635, 26 S. E. 357, accepting as true, facts not excepted to in commissioners' report.

Order of reference solely for depositions.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Parsons, 42 W. Va. 146, 24 S. E. 554, holding that order of reference should not be granted solely to enable parties to take depositions.

29 L. R. A. 463, CAPITAL GAS CO. v. YOUNG, 109 Cal. 140, 41 Pac. 869.

Public officer's right to recover on contract with public he represents.

Cited in footnotes to Berka v. Woodward, 45 L. R. A. 420, which denies right of recovery to officer on implied contract with city for materials furnished it; Sylvester v. Webb, 52 L. R. A. 518, which sustains contract to erect school building by member of building committee and selectmen of town.

— For injury by defect in street.

Cited in footnote to Danville v. Robinson, 55 L. R. A. 162, which sustains right of member of city council to recover for injuries by defect in street.

Mutuality in contracts.

Cited in Gallagher v. Equitable Gaslight Co. 141 Cal. 706, 75 Pac. 329, holding agreement to discontinue use of electricity in lighting hotel, and use gas, not void for lack of mutuality because time during which gas is to be used not stated, since expense was incurred in purchasing gas fixtures and piping hotel.

29 L. R. A. 465, ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO. v. HENRY, 55 Kan. 715, 41 Pac. 952.

Master's liability for false arrest.

Cited in West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Luleich, 85 Ill. App. 652, affirming right of passenger to recover for wrongful arrest by conductor for alleged passing of counterfeit coin to him.

Cited in footnotes to Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 L. R. A. 702, which holds carrier liable for false imprisonment procured by railroad detective; Palmer v. Maine C. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 673, which holds passenger's unreasonable refusal to tell whether name on mileage ticket is his own, no justification for procuring his arrest; Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Ponder, 60 L. R. A. 714, which denies carrier's liability for failure to prevent illegal arrest by officers, or for stopping train to permit removal; Markley v. Snow, 64 L. R. A. 685, which denies liability of employer for act of employee in causing arrest, long after commission of the crime, of one suspected of having set fire to building of employer.

— For assault.

Cited in Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. 130 Mich. 455, 90 N. W. 274, holding railroad company liable for conductor's assault upon passenger while ejecting him for tendering alleged void ticket, and refusing to pay fare.

Cited in footnote to Kohner v. Capital Traction Co. 62 L. R. A. 875, which requires carrier, when peaceable passenger on street car is unlawfully assaulted by conductor, to show that injury was result of unavoidable accident.

29 L. R. A. 468, BURROWS v. DELTA TRANSP. CO. 106 Mich. 582, 64 N. W. 501.

Proof of due care as affecting presumption of negligence.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Marbury Lumber Co. 125 Ala. 257, 50 L. R. A. 626, 28 So. 438, holding presumption of negligence from fire set by sparks from locomotive insufficient to take case to jury when proof shows due care.

Restriction of time and place of selling liquors.

Cited in State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 451, 33 L. R. A. 319, 44 N. E. 469, sustaining act restricting time and place of selling intoxicating liquors.

Erroneous instruction to jury.

Cited in De Gray v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 68 N. J. L. 457, 53 Atl. 200, holding instruction in proceedings to determine value of land condemned, that jury are not bound to adopt opinions of witnesses, but may rely on their own experience, error.

29 L. R. A. 476, KRECKER v. SHIREY, 163 Pa. 534, 30 Atl. 440.

Powers and liabilities of religious organizations.

Followed in Bliem v. Schultz, 170 Pa. 566, 37 W. N. C. 170, 33 Atl. 337, holding church corporation liable for costs in unsuccessful suit.

Cited in Wanner v. Emanuel's Church, 174 Pa. 469, 37 Atl. 188, holding notes signed by de facto trustees of religious corporation valid; Long v. Harvey, 177 Pa. 479, 34 L. R. A. 171, 39 W. N. C. 124, 55 Am. St. Rep. 733, 35 Atl. 869, holding that majority of independent congregation cannot act with members of another congregation in removing officers; St. Paul's Reformed Church v. Hower, 191 Pa. 312, 43 Atl. 221, holding orthodox portion of congregation estopped from ejecting dissenters ten years after erection by latter of costly church; First Presby. Church v. Myers, 5 Okla. 824, 38 L. R. A. 693, 50 Pac. 70, holding that refusal of presbytery to sanction "call" terminates civil contract between congregation and minister-elect.

Cited in footnote to Franke v. Mann, 48 L. R. A. 856, which denies right of majority of church members to employ pastor whose teachings are inconsistent with those of sect to which local church belongs.

Distinguished in Zion Church v. Light, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 230, 42 W. N. C. 252, holding that de facto trustees may maintain trespass for negligent burning of church.

— Relating to property.

Cited in Bose v. Christ, 193 Pa. 19, 44 Atl. 240, holding title to property of divided congregation in faction, though in minority, adhering to regular organization; Trinity M. E. Church v. Harris, 73 Conn. 225, 50 L. R. A. 640, 47 Atl. 116, holding that trust property held by unincorporated society may be claimed by trustees after consolidation with other societies.

Cited in footnotes to Smith v. Pedigo, 32 L. R. A. 838, which denies right of majority of church abandoning its religious faith, to hold church property; Park v. Champlin, 31 L. R. A. 141, which sustains right of minority of religious society to prevent transfer of property by majority.

Distinguished in Fredericks v. Huber, 180 Pa. 577, 40 W. N. C. 125, 37 Atl. 90, dispossessing one faction of church property conveyed to other faction by grantor after re-entry for condition broken.

Decisions of corporate tribunals.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 388, 398, 399) on conclusiveness of decisions of tribunals of associations or corporations.

Annulment of constitution of benefit society.

Cited in footnote to Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. La Malta, 30 L. R. A. 838, which holds all prior constitutions annulled by adoption and promulgation of constitution by proper body of benefit society.

29 L. R. A. 485, CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. v. WEST CHICAGO STREET R. CO.
156 Ill. 255, 40 N. E. 1008.

Compensation for, or removal of, added burden to street — Electric poles and wires.

Cited in Goddard v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Ill. App. 532, holding transmission of electric heat, light, and power on poles in street, additional servitude requiring compensation; Carpenter v. Capital Electric Co. 178 Ill. 35, 43 L. R. A. 647, 69 Am. St. Rep. 286, 52 N. E. 973, denying right of electric light company to string wires in private alley without compensation; La Crosse City R. Co. v. Higbee, 107 Wis. 402, 51 L. R. A. 929, 83 N. W. 701, holding trolley-wire pole not added burden to street; Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 53 Neb. 658, 39 L. R. A. 760, 74 N. W. 67, holding that erection of trolley poles, interfering with access to premises, entitles abutter to damages; Snyder v. Ft. Madison Street R. Co. 105 Iowa, 287, 41 L. R. A. 347, 75 N. W. 179, compelling removal of trolley pole unnecessarily placed in front of dwelling.

— Railways.

Cited in Chicago Office Building v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 87 Ill. App. 600, holding that construction of elevated road, impairing access to office building, entitles abutter to damages; Bond v. Pennsylvania Co. 171 Ill. 513, 49 N. E. 545, Reversing 69 Ill. App. 512, holding that abutter may enjoin construction of steam road in street when no compensation has been provided; Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 119 Ala. 143, 43 L. R. A. 235, 24 So. 502; Ranken v. St. Louis & B. Suburban R. Co. 98 Fed. 482; Placke v. Union Depot R. Co. 140 Mo. 638, 41 S. W. 915,—holding electric street railway laid to grade not additional burden; Blodgett v. Northwestern Elev. R. Co. 26 C. C. A. 22, 53 U. S. App. 284, 80 Fed. 608, and Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 165 Ill. 517, 36 L. R. A. 102, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 46 N. E. 520, denying injunction to private owner against construction of elevated railroad; Peck v. Schenectady R. Co. 170 N. Y. 312, 63 N. E. 357 (dissenting opinion), majority holding use of street by trolley company an added burden.

Approach to bridge as new easement.

Cited in footnote to Boston & A. R. Co. v. Worcester, 55 L. R. A. 623, which holds use of part of railroad location outside of tracks for approach of highway bridge over tracks, to abolish grade crossing, not new easement on right of way.

Right of railway company to cross another's tracks, and duties connected therewith.

Followed in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 386, 40 N. E. 1014, denying compensation to railroad company for crossing tracks by street railway company.

Cited in General Electric R. Co. v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 184 Ill. 596, 56 N. E. 963, Affirming 79 Ill. App. 575, denying injunction to steam railroad company against street railway company crossing tracks at street crossing; General Electric R. Co. v. Chicago City R. Co. 66 Ill. App. 370, holding that street car company has no exclusive right to maintain tracks in street as against another company; Detroit, Ft. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Railroad Comrs. 127 Mich. 230, 62 L. R. A. 154, footnote p. 149, 86 N. W. 842, requiring street car company crossing railroad tracks, to pay portion of expense for safety appliances, necessitated solely by railroad company; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowling Green R. Co. 110 Ky. 796, 63 S. W. 4; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. General Electric R. Co. 50 C. C. A. 426, 112 Fed. 691; Southern R. Co. v. Atlanta R. & Power Co. 111 Ga. 688, 51 L. R. A. 128, footnote p. 125, 36 S. E. 873,—sustaining right of street railway to cross tracks of steam railroad; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steel, 47 Neb. 745, 66 N. W. 830, holding railroad company having permanent easement in street not entitled to compensation as condition to trolley company's crossing tracks; Consolidated Traction Co. v. South Orange & M. Traction Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 584, 40 Atl. 15, denying street car company's right to compensation for construction of crossing over tracks of another; Central Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 95 Md. 443, 52 Atl. 752, holding that street railway company crossing railroad tracks must maintain crossing.

Cited in footnotes to New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 20 L. R. A. 367, which sustains right to make grade crossing at intersection of steam and street railroads; Northern C. R. Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Electric R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 572, which denies street railway company's right to cross railroad at points other than street crossings; Chester Traction Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 269, which holds that street railway crossing of steam railroad at grade should not be permitted when overhead crossing reasonably practicable; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Greensburg, J. & P. Street R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 839, which holds railroad company over whose tracks highway is carried on bridge not entitled to contest, as abutting owner, street car company's right to place tracks on bridge.

Negligence in crossing tracks.

Cited in footnote to Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Murray, 30 L. R. A. 508, which holds it negligence to run street car across railroad track without employee seeing that way is clear.

City's authority to regulate street car fare.

Cited in Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L. R. A. 645, 65 N. E. 451, sustaining city's power to regulate amount of street car fares and transfer tickets.

29 L. R. A. 492, HART v. WASHINGTON PARK CLUB, 157 Ill. 9, 48 Am. St. Rep. 298, 41 N. E. 620.

Presumption of negligence.

Cited in Cook v. Piper, 79 Ill. App. 294, holding that fall of cake of ice from rear of wagon upon child raises presumption of carelessness; Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. v. McDonough, 87 Ill. App. 40, holding fall of bolt, injuring pedestrian underneath elevated railroad structure, prima facie negligence; Bjornson v. Saccone, 88 Ill. App. 11, holding res ipsa loquitur has no application to injury of subcontractor by collapse of building; Armour v. Golkowska, 95 Ill. App. 495, holding that fall of barrel from platform above servant, causing injury, raises presumption of negligence; Chicago City R. Co. v. Rood, 163 Ill. 484, 54 Am. St. Rep. 478, 45 N. E. 238, holding that injury to passenger by being hit by wagon while on street car creates no presumption of company's negligence; Chicago City R. Co. v. Eick, 111 Ill. App. 454, and Chicago City R. Co. v. Barker, 209 Ill. 326, 70 N. E. 624, holding that presumption as to street car company's negligence arises from collision between wagon and car which was running with no one attending it; Holliday v. Gardner, 27 Ind. App. 243, 61 N. E. 16 (dissenting opinion), majority holding statement of driver of runaway team that "he was glad he struck horse" insufficient to show negligence.

Sufficiency of allegations of negligence.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 275) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

Liability for injury to spectator at, or on way to, public exhibition.

Cited in Hallyburton v. Burke County Fair Asso. 119 N. C. 529, 38 L. R. A. 157, footnote p. 156, 26 S. E. 114, denying right of action against fair association which was free from negligence, for injury to bystander by bolting of vicious horse from race track; Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Dawson, 31 Ind. App. 608, 68 N. E. 909, holding street car company liable for conspiracy among its employees to assault colored people at exhibition given in company's park, where company, having knowledge of such conspiracy, transported colored people without warning them; Thornton v. Maine State Agri. Soc. 97 Me. 114, 94 Am. St. Rep. 488, 53 Atl. 979, holding agricultural society liable for death of one killed by stray bullet fired in shooting gallery on fair grounds.

Cited in footnotes to Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore, 37 L. R. A. 258, which holds street car company owning park liable for killing of boy by fall of pole used in balloon ascension; Thompson v. Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 345, which holds street railway company liable for injury to spectator at free exhibition of marksmanship given by independent contractor on company's grounds Smith v. Benick, 42 L. R. A. 277, which denies liability of proprietor of public resort for negligence of balloonist, who was an independent contractor; Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volksfest Verein, 50 L. R. A. 199, which denies proprietor's liability for injury to spectator by explosion of bomb in hands of skilled person at exhibition; Mastad v. Swedish Brethren, 53 L. R. A. 803, which holds proprietor of place of amusement required to use reasonable care to protect patrons from assaults by one rendered disorderly by liquor sold there; Clark v. Northern P. R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 508, which denies liability of railroad company permitting circus on its vacant land adjoining switch yard, for injury to person crossing yard to reach circus.

Duty to licensees.

Cited in Southern R. Co. v. Drake, 107 Ill. App. 16, holding employees of railroad contractor working on passage track on right of way, licensees while leaving dirt train to cross main track, toward whom railroad company owes duty of reasonable care; Sullivan v. Morrice, 109 Ill. App. 653, holding (arguendo) that contractors building house must not have premises in such condition as to injure licensee.

29 L. R. A. 496, DAVIS v. DODSON, 95 Ga. 718, 51 Am. St. Rep. 108, 22 S. E. 645.

29 L. R. A. 498, PULLMAN'S PALACE CAR CO. v. MARTIN, 95 Ga. 314, 22 S. E. 700.

Petition for rehearing denied in 95 Ga. 320, 22 S. E. 702.

Liability to sleeping car passengers.

Cited in footnotes to Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Hall, 44 L. R. A. 790, which denies liability for theft of passenger's valise from sleeping car through window; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Adams, 45 L. R. A. 767, which holds sleeping car company liable for theft of passenger's property, where porter went to sleep while on watch; Cooney v. Pullman Palace-Car Co. 53 L. R. A. 690, which holds sleeping car company liable for loss of passenger's valise intrusted to employees of company; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Hunter, 47 L. R. A. 286, which sustains liability for theft of diamond rings from woman while asleep in sleeping car.

Clerk's right to costs.

Cited in Waldrop v. Wolff, 114 Ga. 622, 40 S. E. 830, holding clerk not entitled to costs for transmitting unnecessary portions of record to appellate court.

29 L. R. A. 500, WHITTENTON MFG. CO. v. STAPLES, 164 Mass. 319, 41 N. E. 441.

Covenants running with land.

Cited in Lincoln v. Burrage, 177 Mass. 379, 52 L. R. A. 111, 59 N. E. 67, denying that covenant to pay part of expense of party wall runs with land; Clay v. Hart, 25 Misc. 114, 55 N. Y. Supp. 43, holding that no covenant runs with land to repair highway over mill race appurtenant to lands and extending across adjoining highway.

Grant of mill as including water rights.

Cited in Horne v. Hutchins, 71 N. H. 122, 51 Atl. 645, holding that conveyance of mill privileges carries right to reasonable use of power from reservoir upon which mills depend.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 490) on how far grant of mill includes water rights.

Easement by prescription.

Cited in footnotes to Kray v. Muggli, 45 L. R. A. 218, which denies prescriptive right of riparian owners to maintenance of dam after proprietor chooses to abandon it; Boyce v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 442, which sustains conclusive presumption of prescriptive right by lost grant from adverse user of easement for statutory periods.

Right to benefit under grantee's covenant.

Cited in Pearson v. Bailey, 177 Mass. 319, 58 N. E. 1028, holding that grantee of part of mortgaged premises cannot compel grantee of balance to pay mortgage which he assumed; Trudeau v. Field, 69 Vt. 452, 38 Atl. 162, denying that covenant by subsequent grantee to rebuild dam inures to benefit of prior grantee of easement therein.

Negative easement.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 71 N. H. 550, 53 Atl. 1017, holding negative easement created by mutual covenant by owners of contiguous parts of building not to change front without other's consent.

Admissibility of practical construction of deed.

Cited in O'Connell v. Cox, 179 Mass. 254, 60 N. E. 580, holding evidence of parties treating fence as boundary admissible as to location of line; Richardson v. Watts, 94 Me. 484, 48 Atl. 180, holding practical construction by parties admissible to interpret doubtful conveyance.

Creation of estate in fee by will.

Cited in Roberts v. Crume, 173 Mo. 580, 73 S. W. 662, holding that will giving estate to daughter "and her heirs" transfers fee, and sale by daughter conveys title.

29 L. R. A. 507, BLOXHAM v. CONSUMERS' ELECTRIC LIGHT & STREET R. CO. 36 Fla. 519, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44, 18 So. 444.

Street railways as "railroads."

Cited in Railroad Comrs. v. Market Street R. Co. 132 Cal. 683, 64 Pac. 1065, holding street railway company not "transportation company;" Lincoln Street R. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Neb. 676, 69 Am. St. Rep. 736, 74 N. W. 1074, denying that statute imposing liability upon railroad companies for personal injuries applies to street railways; Massachusetts Loan & T. Co. v. Hamilton, 32 C. C. A. 48, 59 U. S. App. 403, 88 Fed. 590, denying that statute making judgment against railway corporation for personal injuries first lien includes street railways; Goddard v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Ill. App. 536, holding that statutory authority to consent to construction of horse, dummy, or street railroads does not include railroads carrying passengers, freight, mail, and express; Sams v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 174 Mo. 86, 61 L. R. A. 484, 73 S. W. 686, holding street railway not within provisions of statute making corporations owning or operating railroads liable to servant for injuries by co-servant.

Cited in footnotes to Vail v. Broadway R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 626, which holds passenger on street car platform not passenger on "any railroad" so as to assume risk of injury; Savannah, T. & I. of H. R. Co. v. Williams, 61 L. R. A. 249, which holds chartered street railway a railroad company within statute as to liability for negligence of fellow servant; Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co. 63 L. R. A. 637, which holds electric railway operated between two cities in different states, a trunk railway within prohibition against granting franchise except to highest bidder.

Injunction against collection of taxes.

Cited in footnote to Philadelphia Mortg. & T. Co. v. Omaha, 57 L. R. A. 150, which denies right to restrain city from enforcing tax against property on which money loaned in reliance on treasurer's mistaken marking of taxes as paid.

Sheriff's right to sell perishable property.

Cited in State ex rel. Merchants Nat. Bank v. Hull, 37 Fla. 585, 20 So. 762, holding that sheriff may sell perishable property remaining after dismissal of attachment.

29 L. R. A. 512, SKINNER v. SANTA ROSA, 107 Cal. 464, 40 Pac. 742.

Medium of payment.

Cited in footnotes to Hendry v. Benlisa, 34 L. R. A. 283, which holds payment of debt in Confederate money during Rebellion, valid; Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 57 L. R. A. 726, which holds void, statute taking protection from claims of subcontractors from owner contracting for payment with something other than money.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 593) on form of judgment and procedure in case of liability to make payment in coin.

— Gold coin.

Cited in Burnett v. Maloney, 97 Tenn. 715, 34 L. R. A. 546, footnote p. 541, 37 S. W. 689, denying right of county to issue bonds payable in gold coin.

Cited in footnotes to Murphy v. San Luis Obispo, 39 L. R. A. 444, which sustains power of city to issue bonds payable in gold coin only; Packwood v. Kittitas County, 33 L. R. A. 673, which holds authority to make county bonds payable in gold coin implied in authority to issue bonds; Dennis v. Moses, 41 L. R. A. 302, which denies power to take away right to contract for payment in gold coin; Blanck v. Sadlier, 40 L. R. A. 666, which holds undisclosed gold clause in mortgage on land, sold subject to mortgage, not defect authorizing cancellation of purchase.

When deposit is special.

Cited in footnote to Anderson v. Pacific Bank, 32 L. R. A. 479, which holds special deposit, requiring return on insolvency of bank, shown by depositing gold coin in pledge to secure bail bond obligation.

29 L. R. A. 524, CADY v. SCHULTZ, 19 R. I. 193, 61 Am. St. Rep. 763, 32 Atl. 915.

Right to exclusive use of trade-name.

Cited in Samuels v. Spitzer, 177 Mass. 228, 58 N. E. 693, holding "Manufacturers' Outlet Company" may enjoin another's use of "T. Outlet Company" as trade-name; Sapp v. New York Dental Parlors, 4 Lack. Legal News, 121, enjoining use of name "New York Dental Parlors" by another in same city; Continental Ins. Co. v. Continental Fire Asso. 96 Fed. 849, denying that insurance company is entitled to exclusive use of word "continental;" Shaver v. Heller & M. Co. 65 L. R. A. 884, 48 C. C. A. 58, 108 Fed. 830, holding that manufacturer of article termed "American Wash Blue" may enjoin use of word "American" applied to similar goods of others; Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co. 121 Fed. 369, holding that transferee of Bissell Chilled Plow Works may enjoin use of word "Bissell" by Bissell Plow Company.

29 L. R. A. 526, McTWIGGAN v. HUNTER, 19 R. I. 265, 33 Atl. 5.

Power of municipal corporation — As to streets.

Cited in Smith v. Westerly, 19 R. I. 446, 35 Atl. 526, denying council's power to grant water company exclusive right to use streets for pipes.

— To exempt from taxation.

Cited in Crafts v. Ray, 22 R. I. 182, 49 L. R. A. 607, footnote p. 604, 46 Atl. 1043, sustaining exemption of manufacturing companies from taxation for term of years.

Cited in footnotes to Maine Water Co. v. Waterville, 49 L. R. A. 204, which sustains agreement by city to pay, for term of years, taxes assessed against water company supplying city; Auditor General v. Sage Land & Improv. Co. 56 L. R. A. 105, which holds tax on other land in township not rendered illegal by exemption of large tract deeded to state for nonpayment of taxes.

29 L. R. A. 530, ROBINSON v. ROCKLAND, T. & C. STREET R. CO. 87 Me. 387, 32 Atl. 994.

Carrier's right to refuse to carry lunatic.

Cited in Owens v. Macon & B. R. Co. 119 Ga. 233, 63 L. R. A. 948, 46 S. E. 87, holding that common carriers cannot absolutely refuse to transport person who is insane, but are entitled to reasonable notice and may insist that lunatic shall be attended.

29 L. R. A. 531, SOUTH BEND v. MARTIN, 142 Ind. 31, 41 N. E. 315.

License and interstate commerce.

Cited in Huntington v. Mahan, 142 Ind. 697, 51 Am. St. Rep. 200, 42 N. E. 463, holding ordinance prohibiting peddling without license unlawful as to agent of nonresident publisher distributing books to fill orders previously taken; Koepke v. Hill, 157 Ind. 179, 87 Am. St. Rep. 161, 60 N. E. 1039, holding ordinance imposing tax upon branch stores not within interstate commerce act; St. Paul v. Briggs, 85 Minn. 292, 89 Am. St. Rep. 554, 88 N. W. 984, holding wholesale agent delivering goods to dealers only, not peddler; Levy v. State, 161 Ind. App. 259, 68 N. E. 172, holding statute imposing license tax on transient merchants not void as interference with interstate commerce; Re Pringle, 67 Kan. 368, 72 Pac. 864, holding one taking orders from samples for stereoscopic views, to be shipped into state, not engaged in interstate commerce, when orders are not sent to other state, but are filled from goods, not in original packages, but sent him in bulk C. O. D.

Cited in footnotes to Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 35 L. R. A. 497, which sustains state statute requiring every company selling sewing machines in state to pay license tax; State v. Coop, 41 L. R. A. 501, which holds purchase of frame for portrait in accordance with option included in order for making portrait in other state not within statute against peddling; State v. Wells, 48 L. R. A. 99, which holds one soliciting orders for goods and carrying goods to fill previous sales not a peddler; Re Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 417, which holds void, as applied to sale of original packages, territorial statute requiring license for sale of coal oil; Brownback v. North Wales, 49 L. R. A. 446, which holds valid as to residents, ordinance requiring license for sale of goods on street, or by soliciting orders from house to house; Racine Iron Co. v. McCommons, 51 L. R. A. 134, which holds traveling agent taking orders and distributing contents of original package among customers not engaged in interstate commerce; Rosenbloom v. State, 57 L. R. A. 923, which sustains license tax on peddlers, though vendors of own products exempt.

Jurisdiction of appellate court.

Cited in Greensburg v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 23 Ind. App. 145, 55 N. E. 46 (dissenting opinion), majority denying appellate court's jurisdiction of cases involving less than $50.

29 L. R. A. 539, McBURNEY v. YOUNG, 67 Vt. 574, 32 Atl. 492.

29 L. R. A. 541, ANDERSON v. BELL, 140 Ind. 375, 39 N. E. 735.

Distribution among kindred of half blood.

Cited in footnote to Ector v. Grant, 53 L. R. A. 723, which holds first cousin of half blood on maternal side entitled to whole estate as against second cousin of whole blood.

29 L. R. A. 568, CHICAGO v. BURCKY, 158 Ill. 103, 48 Am. St. Rep. 142, 42 N. E. 178.

Damages for, or injunction against, injury to easement.

Cited in Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. v. Goll, 100 Ill. App. 332, holding necessary noise of passing of elevated trains not element of damage to abutter.

— By closing street.

Cited in Chicago v. Webb, 102 Ill. App. 236, holding owner entitled to recover for special damages caused by practically closing alley; Bloomington v. Winslow, 71 Ill. App. 341, and Winnetka v. Clifford, 201 Ill. 478, 66 N. E. 384, affirming owner's right to recover for damages occasioned by closing street; Chicago v. Baker, 30 C. C. A. 366, 58 U. S. App. 569, 86 Fed. 755, and Chicago v. Baker, 39 C. C. A. 320, 98 Fed. 833, holding owner entitled to damages for closing street where crossed by railroad track; Cram v. Laconia, 71 N. H. 44, 57 L. R. A. 284, footnote p. 282, 51 Atl. 635, denying right to recover for injury to abutting property, due to vacation of street.

Cited in footnotes to Mahler v. Brumder, 31 L. R. A. 695, which denies right of private action to enjoin obstruction of public cul-de-sac; Dantzer v. Indianapolis Union R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 769, which denies right to recover for vacation of part of street at some distance from property.

Judgment establishing highway boundary as res judicata.

Cited in footnote to Long v. Wilson, 60 L. R. A. 720, which holds judgment establishing boundary of highway in suit against owner on one side not conclusive on opposite owner.

Forfeiture of land for highway.

Cited in Huff v. Hastings Exp. Co. 195 Ill. 260, 63 N. E. 105, denying that city's use of plat of railroad land for viaduct amounts to dedication of strip for purpose of highway.

29 L. R. A. 571, BELL v. CASSEM, 158 Ill. 45, 41 N. E. 1089.

Bill in equity to collect money lost in gaming.

Cited in Gaby v. Hankins, 86 Ill. App. 534, expressing opinion that bill in equity is maintainable to subject property used for gambling to payment of judgment.

29 L. R. A. 573, STATE v. SPEYER, 67 Vt. 502, 48 Am. St. Rep. 832, 32 Atl. 476.

Reasonableness of quarantine regulations.

Cited in State v. Kirby, 120 Iowa, 27, 94 N. W. 254, holding reasonableness of state regulations as to quarantine of infectious diseases for court to determine.

29 L. R. A. 576, ALPINE TWP. SCHOOL DIST. NO. 11 v. BATSCHE, 106 Mich. 330, 64 N. W. 196.

Occupancy by employee.

Cited in Davis v. Williams, 130 Ala. 534, 54 L. R. A. 750, 89 Am. St. Rep. 55, 30 So. 488, denying that agent's occupancy of principal's house as part of contract establishes relation of landlord and tenant.

29 L. R. A. 578, SPENCE v. NORFOLK & W. R. CO. 92 Va. 102, 22 S. E. 815.

Effect on title of delivery to carrier.

Distinguished in Northern P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 89 Ill. App. 33, holding vendor's right to stop goods in transitu in case of vendee's insolvency, insufficient interest to enable former to sue carrier for damage to them.

29 L. R. A. 582, ROBINSON v. CLAPP, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939.

Property rights in, and care of, trees on boundary.

Followed without special discussion in Robinson v. Clapp, 67 Conn. 540, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298, 35 Atl. 504.

Cited in footnote to Kinney v. Kinney, 40 L. R. A. 626, which holds one planting hedge fence on boundary line not required to prevent its growing out over adjoining owner's land.

Title under quitclaim deed.

Cited in Schroeder v. Tomlinson, 70 Conn. 355, 39 Atl. 484, holding title of grantee under quitclaim deed, recorded during execution proceedings, good as against creditor.

Cited in footnote to Johnson v. Johnson, 59 L. R. A. 748, which holds grantee in quitclaim deed vested with title acquired by one giving warranty deed to his grantor after delivery of latter deed.

Implied easement.

Cited in footnote to Irvine v. McCreary, 49 L. R. A. 417, which holds that sale of building creates easement in alley across rear of adjacent lot belonging to grantor.

Damages for loss of light and air.

Cited in footnote to Townsend v. Epstein, 52 L. R. A. 409, which sustains abutter's right to relief against diminution of light and air by bridge over street.

29 L. R. A. 593, BELFORD v. WOODWARD, 158 Ill. 122, 41 N. E. 1097.

Payment from particular fund or in coin.

Cited in East St. Louis v. Canty, 65 Ill. App. 326, rejecting as surplusage, portion of judgment limiting payment to certain funds; Cicero v. People, 105 Ill. App. 408, affirming order directing town to pay costs of improvements from tax surplus in treasury; Rae v. Homestead Loan & G. Co. 76 Ill. App. 549, sustaining bond payable in gold; Dorr v. Hunter, 183 Ill. 435, 56 N. E. 159, holding mortgage calling for payment in gold, valid.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 517) on special contracts and obligations to make payment in gold or silver.

29 L. R. A. 600, PHILADELPHIA v. PUBLIC SCHOOLS, 170 Pa. 257, 32 Atl. 1033.

Exemption of educational and charitable institutions from taxation.

Cited in Kittanning Academy v. Kittanning, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 299, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 604, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 88, holding academy not exempt from taxes where master receives tuition fees and expenses are paid from endowment fund; Hartman v. Mitzel, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 30, holding dwelling house leased for school purposes not exempt from taxation; New England Theosophical Corp. v. Boston, 172 Mass. 63, 42 L. R. A. 283, 51 N. E. 456, holding theosophical corporation subject to taxation.

Cited in footnotes to Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 40 L. R. A. 119, which holds school for free education of female orphans exempt from taxation; Yale University v. New Haven, 43 L. R. A. 490, which holds college dormitories and dining halls exempt from taxation; Harvard College v. Assessors, 48 L. R. A. 547, which holds exempt from taxation, houses occupied by college presidents and professors, and dormitories and dining halls for students.

What constitutes charitable gift or institution.

Cited in footnotes to Alden v. St. Peter's Parish, 30 L. R. A. 232, which holds gift to rector, etc., of unincorporated religious society for church purposes, for a charitable use; People ex rel. New York Inst. for the Blind v. Fitch, 38 L. R. A. 591, which holds incorporated institution for blind, largely supported by state, subject to visitations and rules of board of charities.

29 L. R. A. 607, O'CONNOR v. CLARK, 170 Pa. 318, 32 Atl. 1029.

Estoppel to assert title.

Cited in City Bank v. Easton Boot & Shoe Co. 6 Northampton Co. Rep. 249, 42 W. N. C. 409, and City Bank v. Easton Boot & Shoe Co. 6 Northampton Co. Rep. 33, protecting bona fide purchaser of goods as against mortgagee of unfiled mortgage; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Levy, 75 Ill. App. 58, denying that owner permitting debtor to use and control horse and wagon is estopped from claiming same against attaching creditor.

Fraud or loss as between two innocent parties.

Cited in Bair's Assigned Estate, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 88, holding daughter executing release to mother so that she could convey good title has no claim in land as against mortgagee who loaned money to mother three years after execution of release, which she had recorded; Vanderslice v. Royal Ins. Co. 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 461, denying company's liability for premiums fraudulently collected by broker whom owners intrusted with policies; Howie v. Lewis, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 242, holding maker guilty of negligence by leaving space for payee to fill in larger amount, so that he must bear the loss rather than innocent purchaser.

29 L. R. A. 608, DENVER CITY R. CO. v. DENVER, 21 Colo. 350, 52 Am. St. Rep. 239, 41 Pac. 826.

Exercise of taxing power.

Cited in Walsh v. Denver, 10 Colo. App. 411, 53 Pac. 458, holding butcher's license of $50 not excessive; Ogden City v. Crossman, 17 Utah, 79, 53 Pac. 985, sustaining license fee of $5 upon each telephone maintained within city; Phoenix Carpet Co. v. State, 118 Ala. 151, 72 Am. St. Rep. 143, 22 So. 627, sustaining statute imposing occupation tax upon corporations; State ex rel. School Dist. v. Boyd, 63 Neb. 832, 58 L. R. A. 110, 89 N. W. 417, construing as tax, money collected under ordinance adopted to raise revenue; Rosenbloom v. State, 64 Neb. 346, 57 L. R. A. 924, 89 N. W. 1053, holding law imposing license tax on peddlers is within city's taxing power.

Uniformity in license tax.

Cited in Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 77, 51 L. R. A. 895, 62 Pac. 451, sustaining ordinance providing different auctioneer's license tax for sale of different goods.

Cited in footnotes to Banta v. Chicago, 40 L. R. A. 611, which requires uniformity of license taxes on occupations, only as to class on which it operates; Knisely v. Cotterel, 50 L. R. A. 86, which sustains statute fixing different rates of license for retailers, wholesalers, and sellers on board of trade; Harrodsburg v. Renfro, 51 L. R. A. 897, which holds void, ordinance imposing greater license fee for sale of liquors on main street of town than elsewhere; State v. Garbroski, 56 L. R. A. 570, which holds void, statute exempting veterans from requirement for peddling license; Com. use of Titusville v. Clark, 57 L. R. A. 348, which holds void, exemption from license tax of contractors and real estate dealers, but not others, whose business is less than $1,000.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 334) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

29 L. R. A. 612, PETERSON v. RUSSELL, 62 Minn. 220, 54 Am. St. Rep. 634, 64 N. W. 555.

Parol evidence as to indorsement.

Cited in Bowler v. Braun, 63 Minn. 36, 56 Am. St. Rep. 449, 65 N. W. 124, holding parol evidence inadmissible to vary legal effect of indorsement on note.

29 L. R. A. 616, PATTILLO v. ALEXANDER, 96 Ga. 60, 22 S. E. 646.

Presumption as to law of another state.

Cited in Massachusetts Ben. Life Asso. v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 277, 42 L. R. A. 271, 30 S. E. 918, upholding presumption of similarity of common law of another state as to incontestable clause in policy.

Cited in footnotes to First Nat. Bank v. National Broadway Bank, 42 L. R. A. 139, which denies presumption that statutory restrictions on alienation of interests of cestui que trust are law of other state; Aslanian v. Dostumian, 47 L. R. A. 495, which denies presumption that law merchant as to protest of draft prevails in Asiatic Turkey.

Notice of dishonor.

Cited in footnotes to Leonard v. Olson, 35 L. R. A. 381, which requires notice to indorser of inability to make demand because of maker's removal from state; Williams v. Parks, 56 L. R. A. 759, which sustains notary's liability on bond for neglecting to give notice of dishonor; Oakley v. Carr, 60 L. R. A. 431, which holds notice of dishonor sufficient if sent to last indorser, who is agent for collection only, by first mail of day following dishonor.

Contract of indorsement.

Cited in Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. Carmichael, 116 Ga. 763, 42 S. E. 1002, construing as indorsement, contract added to note and signed by payee that he "guarantees it as free from certain defenses, and guarantees payment when due."

29 L. R. A. 622, Re RICKER, 14 Mont. 153, 35 Pac. 960.

Executor's right to commissions.

Cited in footnote to Re Rutledge, 47 L. R. A. 721, which sustains surrogate's discretion in withholding commissions from executor neglecting duties.

29 L. R. A. 664, FERCHEN v. ARNDT, 26 Or. 121, 46 Am. St. Rep. 603, 37 Pac. 161.

Following trust funds.

Followed in Sharpe v. Hartman, 26 Or. 132, 40 Pac. 230, without discussion; Muhlenberg v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. 26 Or. 143, 29 L. R. A. 667, footnote p. 667, 38 Pac. 932, denying equitable lien in funds in receiver's hands in favor of special depositor who permitted bank to use money; Rockwell v. Portland Sav. Bank, 31 Or. 436, 50 Pac. 566, denying that money not called for under order of distribution passes to subsequent receiver of bank as particular funds; Re Bank of Oregon, 32 Or. 89, 51 Pac. 87, holding that assignee for creditors cannot use other funds than those collected to pay collection.

Cited in Shute v. Hinman, 34 Or. 581, 47 L. R. A. 266, 56 Pac. 412, holding that general deposit by administrator of estate's funds in bank destroys its identity; Dunham v. Siglin, 39 Or. 299, 64 Pac. 661, holding that cestui que trust may recover funds deposited in separate depository by deceased trustee; Drovers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Roller, 85 Md. 500, 36 L. R. A. 769, 60 Am. St. Rep. 344, 37 Atl. 30, denying that general assets of insolvent commission merchant are chargeable with lien in favor of owner, when proceeds from sales are dissipated; Bromley v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Wis. 569, 79 N. W. 741, holding that trust ceases when trust money is so mixed with individual funds as not to be traceable; Re Mulligan, 116 Fed. 718, holding that owner cannot establish lien on balance of account, including moneys from sales of property intrusted to bankrupt; Bank Comrs. v. Security Trust Co. 70 N. H. 548, 49 Atl. 113, holding beneficial owner of trust fund not entitled to preference unless money traceable to specific property.

Distinguished in York v. York Market Co. 68 N. H. 420, 37 Atl. 1038, holding that treasurer's deposit of money with another corporation under his control impresses fund with equitable lien, upon latter's insolvency.

29 L. R. A. 667, MUHLBERG v. NORTHWEST LOAN & T. CO. 26 Or. 132, 38 Pac. 932.

Equitable lien on trust funds.

Followed in Rockwell v. Portland Sav. Bank, 31 Or. 436, 50 Pac. 566, denying that money not called for under order of distribution passes to subsequent receiver of bank as particular fund; Re Bank of Oregon, 32 Or. 89, 51 Pac. 87, denying power of assignee for creditors to use other funds than those collected to pay collection.

Cited in Dunham v. Siglin, 39 Or. 299, 64 Pac. 661, holding cestui que trust entitled to funds deposited in separate depository by deceased trustee; Hallam v. Tillinghast, 19 Wash. 27, 52 Pac. 329, denying that collection of draft by bank impresses proceeds with trust; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Campbell Commission Co. 77 Fed. 711, denying existence of equitable lien upon funds misappropriated by one holding them in trust, where they have lost their identity.

Cited in footnote to Ferchen v. Arndt, 29 L. R. A. 664, which denies power of consignors to impress with trust lien, funds of consignees in hands of receiver.

29 L. R. A. 668, COLE v. TUCKER, 164 Mass. 486, 41 N. E. 681.

Use of names on official ballot and voting lists.

Cited in Com. v. Rogers, 181 Mass. 187, 63 N. E. 421, holding statute requiring voting lists to be used as check lists in balloting at caucuses, valid; State ex rel. Crow v. Hostetter, 137 Mo. 645, 38 L. R. A. 216, 59 Am. St. Rep. 515, 39 S. W. 270, holding electors not restricted to names on official ballot.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. McCarthy v. Moore, 59 L. R. A. 447, which sustains prohibition against placing on official ballot, name of unsuccessful candidate for party nomination at primary election.

Effect of omission of official stamp.

Cited in footnote to Moyer v. Van De Vanter, 29 L. R. A. 670, which authorizes counting of ballots cast in good faith, with official stamp or election officers' initials omitted.

Uniform application of statute.

Cited in Com. v. Danziger, 176 Mass. 291, 57 N. E. 461, sustaining act requiring pawnbrokers in cities or towns of 10,000 or more inhabitants to pay license.

29 L. R. A. 670, MOYER v. VAN DE VANTER, 12 Wash. 377, 50 Am. St. Rep. 900, 41 Pac. 60.

Marks on ballots.

Cited in State ex rel. Orr v. Fawcett, 17 Wash. 206, 49 Pac. 346, holding ballots marked "no" or "yes," valid; Kirkpatrick v. Deegans, 53 W. Va. 289, 44 S. E. 465, sustaining statute requiring identification of ballots cast by signature of poll clerks, although causing rejection of few ballots honestly cast; Horning v. Board of Canvassers, 119 Mich. 56, 77 N. W. 446, holding ballots inadvertently indorsed in lower right-hand corner, valid; Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 438, 30 L. R. A. 357, 41 Pac. 762, denying that unintentional omission to remove number strips invalidates ballots.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 807) on marking official ballot.

Distinguished in Orr v. Bailey, 59 Neb. 138, 80 N. W. 495, and Slaymaker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 481, 47 L. R. A. 852, 42 Pac. 1049 (approved in dissenting opinion), sustaining constitutionality of statute making void, ballots not properly indorsed.

Criticized in Miller v. Schallern, 8 N. D. 401, 79 N. W. 865, rejecting ballots cast without official stamp.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—74.

Effect of premature choice of officer.

Cited in Com. v. Rogers, 181 Mass. 192, 63 N. E. 421, denying that election of temporary warden a few minutes before hour named to fill vacancy renders caucus illegal.

Count of undersized ballots.

Cited in Conaty v. Gardner, 75 Conn. 53, 52 Atl. 416, authorizing count of ballots slightly under size.

Designation of office.

Cited in footnote to Page v. Kuykendall, 32 L. R. A. 656, which holds words "long term" after one of two names on ballot sufficient designation of office.

29 L. R. A. 673, TEBBE v. SMITH, 108 Cal. 101, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68, 41 Pac. 454.

Ballots as evidence.

Cited in DeLong v. Brown, 113 Iowa, 372, 85 N. W. 624, and Windes v. Nelson, 159 Mo. 67, 60 S. W. 129, holding ballots admissible in election contest after proof that they have been kept intact.

Distinguishing marks on ballots.

Cited in Lauer v. Estes, 120 Cal. 653, 53 Pac. 262, holding ballot containing heavy mark 2 inches below names, void; San Luis Obispo v. Fitzgerald, 126 Cal. 283, 58 Pac. 699, holding that printing by authorities of "yes" upon ballot vitiates election; Farnham v. Boland, 134 Cal. 153, 66 Pac. 200, holding that cross placed in square, with no name opposite, invalidates ballot; Moody v. Davis, 13 S. D. 92, 82 N. W. 410, holding that placing mark in circle at head of two different tickets invalidates ballot; Nicholls v. Barrick, 27 Colo. 441, 62 Pac. 202, holding ballots not invalidated by addition of word "fusion;" Parker v. Hughes, 64 Kan. 241, 56 L. R. A. 279, 91 Am. St. Rep. 216, 67 Pac. 637, denying that surplage of marks in squares opposite name of candidate appearing upon two tickets invalidates ballots; Maddux v. Walthall, 141 Cal. 414, 74 Pac. 1026, holding ballots stamped after words "no nomination" void.

Cited in footnote to Dennis v. Caughlin, 29 L. R. A. 731, which holds that blurred spot or erasure on ballot, made with intent to correct mistake, does not defeat ballot.

Distinguished in Jennings v. Brown, 114 Cal. 309, 34 L. R. A. 45, footnote p. 45, 46 Pac. 77, holding validity of ballot not destroyed by addition of party name after candidate's.

Effect of innocent irregularities in election.

Cited in Hayes v. Kirkwood, 136 Cal. 402, 69 Pac. 30, denying that innocent irregularities of election board defeat election; Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 273, 74 Pac. 841, holding election not invalidated by delay in opening polls, where officers acted in good faith, and where only one failed to vote, which vote could not have changed result.

Distinguished in Davis v. Grunig, 143 Cal. 339, 76 Pac. 1102, authorizing count of ballots in election honestly conducted, although election officers failed to return tally lists.

Marking official ballots.

Cited in footnote to Parker v. Orr, 30 L. R. A. 227, which holds provision as to marking ballot with cross not mandatory.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 823, 828, 841) on marking official ballot.

29 L. R. A. 678, FULTON v. FULTON, 52 Ohio St. 229, 49 Am. St. Rep. 720, 39 N. E. 729.

Obligation of parent to support child.

Cited in Wing v. Hibbert, 7 Ohio N. P. 126, holding mother liable for support of minor children after father's death.

— After divorce.

Followed without discussion in Douglas v. Douglas, 64 Ohio St. 606, 61 N. E. 1142.

Cited in Zilley v. Dunwiddie, 98 Wis. 435, 40 L. R. A. 583, footnote p. 579, 67 Am. St. Rep. 820, 74 N. W. 126, holding father liable to mother after divorce, for keeping of child awarded to father under decree; McCloskey v. McCloskey, 93 Mo. App. 400, 67 S. W. 669, holding father liable to mother for necessary disbursements for minor children after divorce.

Cited in footnotes to Brown v. Smith, 30 L. R. A. 680, which denies divorced wife's right to hold husband's estate liable for board of minor children awarded to her; Foss v. Hartwell, 37 L. R. A. 589, which denies divorced father's liability to subsequent husband of wife for support of child surreptitiously taken by mother; Keller v. St. Louis, 47 L. R. A. 391, which holds that duty of supporting child, which by divorce decree is given to mother, is still on father, if decree makes no provision.

29 L. R. A. 681, Re EDWARDS, 122 Mo. 426, 25 S. W. 904.

Sales by insolvent partnership.

Cited in McDonald v. Cash, 57 Mo. App. 549, denying that mere technical insolvency of partnership in active business makes sale to purchasing partner fraudulent; Kelly-Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Vail Bros. 84 Mo. App. 99, upholding cash sale of goods purchased with knowledge of vendor's insolvency.

Validity of firm mortgage.

Cited in Noyes v. Ross, 23 Mont. 438, 47 L. R. A. 405, 75 Am. St. Rep. 543, 59 Pac. 367, upholding firm mortgage as security for previous loan used in purchase of stock.

Application of firm assets.

Cited in Freedman v. Holberg, 89 Mo. App. 345, upholding partner's right to use firm assets to discharge partnership debts before individual debts; Thayer v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 293, 30 L. R. A. 555, footnote p. 549, 51 Am. St. Rep. 887, 64 N. W. 1007, holding that creditors of old and new firm may prove claims pari passu in preference to individual creditors of new firm; Bedford v. McDonald, 102 Tenn. 365, 52 S. W. 157, holding that firm creditor may follow note belonging to firm, sold by partner after fraudulent diversion of assets.

Cited in footnote to Vietor v. Glover, 40 L. R. A. 297, which denies right of subsequent creditors of insolvent firm to complain that note was given to withdrawing member for his share of assets.

— To individual debts.

Cited in Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Randell, 69 Mo. App. 345, sustaining mortgage executed by remaining partner to secure individual debt; Lester ex rel. Wright v. Givens, 74 Mo. App. 399, holding that individual creditor may sell partnership property subject to rights of firm creditors; A. G. Edwards & Son Brokerage Co. v. Rosenheim, 74 Mo. App. 626, upholding garnishment of partnership debtors by individual creditor in absence of statement of claims of firm creditors; Sevier v. Allen, 80 Mo. App. 190, upholding bankrupt partner's transfer of stock in payment of purchase price notes; Rock Island Implement Co. v. Sloan, 83 Mo. App. 441, holding appropriation of firm property to pay individual debt, without partner's consent, void; Hutchinson v. Morris Bros. 86 Mo. App. 45, denying partner's right to encumber firm effects to satisfy copartner's liability for bail money, without latter's consent; Redenbaugh v. Kelton, 130 Mo. 570, 32 S. W. 67, holding partner's note, given to reimburse copartner for advancement to partnership, not firm note; Mansur-Tebbetts Implement Co. v. Ritchie, 159 Mo. 225, 60 S. W. 87, holding that assignee of trust deed executed by member of insolvent partnership to another as security for individual debt has no rights as against firm creditors.

Cited in footnotes to Standish v. Babcock, 30 L. R. A. 604, which authorizes retention of firm money received from one partner by creditor to satisfy debt from such partner; Jackson Bank v. Durfey, 31 L. R. A. 470, which denies right of insolvent members of insolvent firm to pay individual debts with firm property; Kincaid v. National Wall Paper Co. 54 L. R. A. 412, which sustains right of partners to appropriate, with other partners' consent, interest in firm to pay individual, in preference to firm, debts.

— Right to exemptions.

Cited in footnote to Re Spitz Bros. 34 L. R. A. 604, which denies right of members of firm to claim exemption out of firm property.

Transfers by insolvent.

Cited in Baker v. Harvey, 133 Mo. 662, 34 S. W. 853, holding insolvent's transfer of land in consideration that grantee discharge debts not fraudulent as to creditor not included.

Review on appeal.

Cited in Simmons Hardware Co. v. Greeley-Burnham Grocer Co. 64 Mo. App. 678, raising, without deciding, question as to review of evidence on appeal.

29 L. R. A. 695, REYNOLDS v. GREAT NORTHERN R. CO. 16 C. C. A. 435, 32 U. S. App. 577, 69 Fed. 808.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in McCain v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 101, 40 U. S. App. 181, 76 Fed. 127, denying recovery to employee injured by placing hand upon ragged edge of engine wheel; Gilbert v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 63 C. C. A. 30, 128 Fed. 532, holding brakeman's failure to use uncoupling lever on other car after one on first car failed to work, guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery from company for its negligence in failing to keep guard rails blocked, thereby causing brakeman to fall.

— At railroad crossing or on tracks.

Cited in Pyle v. Clark, 25 C. C. A. 192, 49 U. S. App. 260, 79 Fed. 747, and Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews, 130 Fed. 72, holding failure to look and listen before crossing track, contributory negligence; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Rossow, 54 C. C. A. 315, 117 Fed. 493, holding one driving over frozen road with collar above ears, negligent in failing to stop and listen for trains; St. Louis &

S. F. R. Co. v. Barker, 23 C. C. A. 479, 40 U. S. App. 739, 77 Fed. 814 (dissenting opinion), majority holding it question for jury as to driver's duty to stop and listen at point where view of track obstructed; Southern Electric R. Co. v. Hageman, 57 C. C. A. 359, 121 Fed. 273 (dissenting opinion), majority holding one driving on street car tracks in evening to avoid muddy place about two hundred feet long not guilty of contributory negligence so as to bar recovery for injuries resulting from collision with rapidly moving car.

Duty to give signals at crossing.

Cited in Coulter v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 N. D. 574, 67 N. W. 1046, raising, without deciding, question as to requirement to give signals at private highway crossing.

Cited in footnotes to Wragge v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 191, which holds company liable for failure to give crossing signal, contributing to collision; Czech v. Great Northern R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 302, which holds company liable for failure to give signals at particularly dangerous farm crossings, when required in exercise of reasonable care; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bodine, 56 L. R. A. 506, which requires signals at private crossing used by public, by peculiarly dangerous special train.

Failure to obey rules or statute as excuse for, or cause of, liability.

Cited in Williams v. Lyman, 31 C. C. A. 513, 60 U. S. App. 25, 88 Fed. 240, denying that collector's neglect to comply with rules by examining deputy's account relieves sureties for deputy's defalcations; Mankey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 14 S. D. 473, 85 N. W. 1013, holding proof of company's failure to give statutory signals as cause of injury necessary to recovery.

Cited in footnote to Rosse v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 37 L. R. A. 591, which holds railroad company liable for injury to young child from failure to keep track fenced, as required by law.

Direction of verdict.

Cited in Clark v. Zarniko, 45 C. C. A. 496, 106 Fed. 609; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. McElroy, 28 C. C. A. 375, 49 U. S. App. 548, 83 Fed. 641; Sipes v. Seymour, 22 C. C. A. 91, 40 U. S. App. 185, 76 Fed. 116; Motey v. Pickle Marble & Granite Co. 20 C. C. A. 368, 36 U. S. App. 682, 74 Fed. 157,—holding it duty of court to direct verdict for party clearly entitled to recover.

29 L. R. A. 700, FARMERS' CO-OP. MFG. CO. v. ALBEMARLE & R. R. CO. 117 N. C. 579, 53 Am. St. Rep. 606, 23 S. E. 43

Private remedy for public nuisance.

Cited in Reyburn v. Sawyer, 135 N. C. 336, 63 L. R. A. 935, footnote p. 931, 102 Am. St. Rep. 555, 47 S. E. 761, sustaining right of owner of island to maintain action to redress private injury resulting from interference with access to property, caused by fishing net stretched across navigable channel.

Cited in footnotes to South Carolina S. B. Co. v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 542, which denies steamboat owner's right of action for obstruction of navigation of river; Griffith v. Holman, 54 L. R. A. 178, which denies private individual's right to abate public nuisance consisting of fence across navigable stream.

What waters are navigable.

Cited in State v. Baum, 128 N. C. 605, 38 S. E. 900, holding use of cove as shorter and safer route proves its navigability.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 327) on what waters are navigable.

Right to obstruct navigation.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 66, 84) on right to obstruct or destroy navigation.

29 L. R. A. 703, KIRKPATRICK v. BROWNFIELD, 97 Ky. 558, 53 Am. St. Rep. 422, 31 S. W. 137.

Eligibility of elector.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Goodell v. McGeary, 44 L. R. A. 446, which holds that building and furnishing new house with intention of living in same does not make owner elector of ward while renting elsewhere.

29 L. R. A. 705, ROBERTS v. MITCHELL, 94 Tenn. 277, 29 S. W. 5.

Judgment as offset.

Cited in footnote to Cleveland v. McCanna, 41 L. R. A. 852, which denies right to set off judgment, where entire property of one debtor is less than statute exempts from seizure.

Attorney's fees and expenses.

Cited in McDougall v. Hazleton Tripod-Boiler Co. 31 C. C. A. 495, 60 U. S. App. 209, 88 Fed. 225, holding expenses included in rule giving attorney's lien for services.

Cited in footnote to Loofbourow v. Hicks, 55 L. R. A. 874, which holds lien for attorney's fees allowed by judgment of foreclosure enforceable against land bid in by mortgagee or assignee.

29 L. R. A. 706, BILLS v. HIBERNIA INS. CO. 87 Tex. 547, 47 Am. St. Rep. 121, 29 S. W. 1063.

Construction of insurance policies.

Followed in Delaware Ins. Co. v. Harris, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 547, 64 S. W. 867, holding policy covering various articles not void because of insured's failure to disclose encumbrance on one, which was unknown to him at time.

Cited in Brown v. Palatine Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 595, 35 S. W. 1060, denying that failure to record sales of day preceding fire, violation of covenant to record business transacted; British-America Assur. Co. v. Miller, 91 Tex. 419, 39 L. R. A. 547, 66 Am. St. Rep. 901, 44 S. W. 60, holding that insurance on personal property while contained in certain building does not cover property while in other place where family staying temporarily; Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg. Co. 92 Tex. 303, 49 S. W. 222, defining warranty as statement susceptible of no construction other than that parties intended that policy should not be binding unless true.

— Severability of policy.

Cited in German Ins. Co. v. Luckett, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 144, 34 S. W. 173, denying that failure to disclose mortgage upon one article vitiates policy as to rest; Roberts v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 13 Tex. Civ. App. 70, 35 S. W. 955, holding that breach of iron-safe clause forfeits insurance as to goods alone, when policy sev-erable; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. McKinley, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 37 S. W. 606, denying that violation of provision of policy relating to merchandise bars recovery for loss of building.

Cited in footnotes to Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 40 L. R. A. 358, which holds entirely void. policy for certain amount on furniture as a whole, for breach of condition as to part; Southern F. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 52 L. R. A. 70, which holds policy on different classes of property for premium payable in gross sum, indivisible.

Distinguished in Sullivan v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 667, 36 S. W. 73, holding that false swearing as to value of goods defeats recovery for loss on house; Curlee v. Texas Home F. Ins. Co. 31 Tex. Civ. App. 471, 73 S. W. 831, holding entire policy covering house and personal property avoided by existence of vendor's lien on land, antedating construction of house.

29 L. R. A. 708. LANE v. MINNESOTA STATE AGRI. SOC. 62 Minn. 175, 64 N. W. 382.

Liability for injury or death of persons at, or on way to, public entertainment.

Reaffirmed on second appeal in Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 67 Minn. 66, 69 N. W. 463, sustaining right to recover for entry of track bolter in race without informing rider of horse's habits; Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Dawson, 31 Ind. App. 608, 68 N. E. 900, holding street car company liable for conspiracy among its employees to assault colored people at exhibition given in company's park, where company had knowledge of such conspiracy but transported colored people without warning them; Thornton v. Maine State Agri. Soc. 97 Me. 114, 94 Am. St. Rep. 488, 53 Atl. 979, holding agricultural society liable for death of one killed by stray bullet fired in shooting gallery on fair grounds.

Cited in footnotes to Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore, 37 L. R. A. 258, which holds street car company owning park liable for killing of boy by fall of pole used in balloon ascension; Hallyburton v. Burke County Fair Asso. 38 L. R. A. 156, which denies right of action against fair association, which was free from negligence, for injury to bystander by bolting of vicious horse from race track; Thompson v. Lowell, I. & H. Street R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 345, which holds street railway company liable for injury to spectator at free exhibition of markmanship given by independent contractor on company's grounds; Smith v. Benick, 42 L. R. A. 277, which denies liability of proprietor of public resort for negligence of balloonist, who was independent contractor; Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volkstest Verein, 50 L. R. A. 199, which denies proprietor's liability for injury to spectator by explosion of bomb in hands of skilled person at exhibition; Mastad v. Swedish Brethren, 53 L. R. A. 803, which holds proprietor of place of amusement required to use reasonable care to protect patrons from assaults by one rendered disorderly by liquor sold there; Clark v. Northern P. R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 508, which denies liability of railroad company permitting circus on its vacant land adjoining switch yard, for injury to person crossing yard to reach circus.

Duty of master to warn servant.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 56) on duty of master to instruct and warn servants as to perils of employment.

Powers and liabilities of public institutions.

Cited in footnotes to Re Royer, 44 L. R. A. 364, which sustains power of state university to take bequest; Oklahoma Agri. & M. College v. Willis, 40 L. R. A. 677, which denies power to sue agricultural and mechanical college created by and existing under statute; Maia v. Eastern State Hospital, 47 L. R. A. 577, which denies liability of state hospital for injuries to inmate from negligence or misconduct of persons in charge; Trevett v. Prison Asso. 50 L. R. A. 564, which holds prison association, not controlled by state, liable for its torts; Moody v. State's Prison, 53 L. R. A. 855, which denies liability of state to prison guard for injury by defective ladder; Overholser v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 62 L. R. A. 930, which holds national home for disabled soldiers, a part of United States government, not subject to action sounding in tort.

— Legislative control of.

Cited in footnote to Watson Seminary v. County Court, 45 L. R. A. 675, which holds charter provisions of educational corporation changeable at will of legislature.

29 L. R. A. 712, STATE MUT. F. INS. CO. v. BRINKLEY STAVE & HEADING CO. 61 Ark. 1, 54 Am. St. Rep. 191, 31 S. W. 157.

Failure to comply with statute as affecting contract.

Cited in American Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Rainbolt, 48 Neb. 452, 67 N. W. 493, holding failure of foreign loan association to comply with statute not ground for rescinding contract; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Hoffman, 5 Idaho, 384, 37 L. R. A. 511, 95 Am. St. Rep. 186, 49 Pac. 314, holding loan of money without license valid, though misdemeanor.

— Of insurance.

Cited in Lumbermen's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 149 Mo. 178, 50 S. W. 281, holding that foreign insurance company will be subrogated to owner's rights against railroad for destruction of property, although no certificate obtained in state.

Cited in footnote to Swing v. Munson, 58 L. R. A. 223, which holds insurance contract, valid where made, not enforceable in state where property located, whose laws directly violated.

Conflict of laws as to insurance contracts.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 837, 852) on conflict of laws as to contracts of insurance.

What laws govern.

Cited in Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 300, 100 Am. St. Rep. 73, 73 S. W. 102, holding that contract of insurance, made in state and to be performed therein, is governed by its statutes relating to misrepresentations.

Cited in footnote to Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 53 L. R. A. 305, which holds life policies of foreign company, taking effect on delivery and collection of premium, governed by law of state of delivery, notwithstanding provision in policy.

29 L. R. A. 714, STATE v. SWETT, 87 Me. 99, 47 Am. St. Rep. 306, 32 Atl. 806.

Knowledge as element of crime.

Cited in State v. Rogers, 95 Me. 102, 85 Am. St. Rep. 395, 49 Atl. 564, holding knowledge of character of article not necessary to sustain conviction for sale of oleomargarine.

Game laws.

Cited in Dickhaut v. State, 85 Md. 464, 36 L. R. A. 767, 60 Am. St. Rep. 332, 37 Atl. 21, holding possession during close season of game killed in another state, lawful.

Cited in footnotes to Selkirk v. Stevens, 40 L. R. A. 759, which holds game killed by Indians on reservation, and sold to other Indian, subject to game laws of state after taken from reservation; State v. Schuman, 47 L. R. A. 153, which sustains statute prohibiting sale, or keeping for sale, of trout; People v. Buffalo Fish Co. 52 L. R. A. 803, which holds void, act prohibiting possession of certain fish during close season.

Cited in note (39 L. R. A. 590) on governmental control over right of fishery.

29 L. R. A. 718, JUDSON v. GIANT POWDER CO. 107 Cal. 549, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, 40 Pac. 1020.

Presumption of negligence.

Cited in McCurrie v. Southern P. Co. 122 Cal. 562, 55 Pac. 324, holding that sudden jerking of train, causing door to close on passenger's hand, raises presumption of negligence; Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento Transp. Co. 123 Cal. 183, 55 Pac. 780, holding that collision of barge with bridge creates presumption of carrier's negligence; Knott v. McGilvray, 124 Cal. 132, 56 Pac. 789, holding that fall of tool from building upon walk raises presumption of negligence; Bosqui v. Sutro R. Co. 131 Cal. 400, 63 Pac. 682, holding derailment of trolley car, injuring passenger, prima facie proof of negligence; Harrison v. Sutter Street R. Co. 134 Cal. 550, 55 L. R. A. 609, 66 Pac. 787, holding that mere fact of injury to passenger by collision of car with wagon raises no presumption of negligence against both; Rowe v. Such, 134 Cal. 574, 66 Pac. 862, holding that injury by collision with runaway creates no presumption of negligence; Vorbrich v. Geuder & P. Mfg. Co. 96 Wis. 281, 71 N. W. 434, holding unexpected revolution of machine, injuring operator, prima facie proof of negligence; Raney v. Lachance, 96 Mo. App. 484, 70 S. W. 376, holding that breaking of window caused by swinging of timbers raises no presumption as to negligence of one or both servants; Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co. 139 Cal. 344, 73 Pac. 164, holding that injury to goods, due to overflow of water from boiler on upper floor, caused by breaking of cap on water pipe projecting into fire box, creates prima facie case of negligence; Bradford Glycerine Co. v. Kizer, 51 C. C. A. 528, 113 Fed. 898, holding that spontaneous explosion of nitroglycerin creates presumption of impurity; Beall v. Seattle, 28 Wash. 604, 61 L. R. A. 593, 92 Am. St. Rep. 892, 69 Pac. 12, holding that explosion of boiler under walk, unexplained, raises presumption of negligence.

Cited in footnote to Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 43 L. R. A. 435, which holds bursting of water main three times under ordinary pressure, evidence of negligence.

Negligence or nuisance in respect to explosives.

Cited in Kinney v. Koopman, 116 Ala. 324, 37 L. R. A. 501, footnote p. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119, 22 So. 593, holding storing of explosives in wooden building in populous part of city, negligence.

Cited in footnotes to Ryan v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. 32 L. R. A. 524, which holds negligence shown by explosion of generator of refrigerator while inexperienced employees are attempting to stop leak; Fuchs v. St. Louis, 34 L. R. A. 118, which holds city liable for explosion of sewer with obstructed outlet, from formation of gases from oil poured into same during fire; Hatcher v. Dunn, 38 L. R. A. 689, which holds inspector of oil not absolutely liable for incorrectly branding it; Bradford Glycerine Co. v. St. Mary's Woolen Mfg. Co. 45 L. R. A. 658, which holds owner of nitroglycerin liable for injuries by explosion, though free from negligence.

Distinguished in Kleebauer v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co. 138 Cal. 502, 60 L. R. A. 381, 94 Am. St. Rep. 62, 71 Pac. 617, holding storage of gunpowder in quantities necessary for business not nuisance per se.

Municipal control over nuisance.

Cited in notes (38 L. R. A. 311) on municipal power over nuisances affecting safety, health, and personal comfort; (38 L. R. A. 642) on municipal power over nuisances relating to trade or business.

Burden of proof as to negligence.

Cited in Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 687, 77 Pac. 664, holding that in action for loss of goods by burning of warehouse, burden of proof to show freedom from negligence is upon warehouseman after proof of his negligence as to place and manner of storing property.

29 L. R. A. 729, GOODLOE v. MEMPHIS & C. R. CO. 107 Ala. 233, 54 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 So. 166.

Master's liability for acts of servant.

Cited in Steele v. May, 135 Ala. 489, 33 So. 30, holding master liable for injury to goods caused by servant's negligence in allowing bath tub to overflow.

— For assault.

Cited in Case v. Hulsebush, 122 Ala. 217, 26 So. 155, holding tax collector liable for assault by deputy while collecting taxes; Holler v. Ross, 68 N. J. L. 329, 59 L. R. A. 946, 96 Am. St. Rep. 546, 53 Atl. 472, denying liability for shooting trespasser who refused to leave, by one employed to watch.

Cited in footnotes to St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Jones, 39 L. R. A. 784, which holds carrier liable for conductor's unreasonably beating passenger who slapped his face; Haver v. Central R. Co. 43 L. R. A. 84, which holds carrier liable for malicious assault by employee on passenger; McDermott v. American Brewing Co. 52 L. R. A. 684, which denies master's liability for assault by servant to protect his own interests; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird, 54 L. R. A. 752, which holds carrier liable for conductor's assault on passenger; Kohner v. Capital Traction Co. 62 L. R. A. 875, which requires carrier, when peaceable passenger on street car is unlawfully assaulted by conductor, to show that injury was result of unavoidable accident.

29 L. R. A. 731, DENNIS v. CAUGHLIN, 22 Nev. 447, 58 Am. St. Rep. 761, 41 Pac. 768.

Tampering with ballots as affecting canvass.

Cited on second appeal in Dennis v. Caughlin, 23 Nev. 191, 44 Pac. 818, holding that rule that ballots control canvass does not apply when ballots are tampered with.

Distinguishing marks on ballots.

Cited in McMahon v. Polk, 10 S. D. 305, 47 L. R. A. 840, 73 N. W. 77, denying that blurred cross vitiates ballot; State ex rel. Orr v. Fawcett, 17 Wash. 208, 49 Pac. 346, holding ballots having cross at left instead of right of name, valid.

Cited in footnotes to Buckner v. Lynip, 30 L. R. A. 354, which holds that failure of inspectors to take number strips from ballot does not prevent counting same; Jennings v. Brown, 34 L. R. A. 45, which holds legality of ballot not destroyed by addition of party name after candidate's name.

Distinguished in Howser v. Pepper, 8 N. D. 497, 79 N. W. 1018, denying that cross in square and at head of column vitiates ballot.

Marking ballots.

Cited in footnote to Parker v. Orr, 30 L. R. A. 227, which holds provision as to marking ballot with cross not mandatory.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 816, 817, 820, 822, 825, 826, 833) on marking official ballot.

29 L. R. A. 734, OTTUMWA v. ZEKIND, 95 Iowa, 622, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447, 64 N. W. 646.

Uniformity of license tax or privileges.

Cited in Levy v. State, 161 Ind. 261, 68 N. E. 172, holding constitutional privilege as to uniformity of taxation not violated by statute exempting sheriffs, assignees, and receivers from payment of transient merchant license tax.

Cited in footnotes to Broadfoot v. Fayetteville, 39 L. R. A. 245, which sustains statute discriminating in favor of nonresidents of city as to allowing stock to run at large; Kniesly v. Cotterel, 50 L. R. A. 86, which sustains statute fixing different rates of license for retailers, wholesalers, and sellers on board of trade; Harrodsburg v. Renfro, 51 L. R. A. 897, which holds void, ordinance imposing greater license fee for sale of liquors on main street of town than elsewhere; State v. Garbroski, 56 L. R. A. 570, which holds void, statute exempting veterans from requirement of peddling license; Com. use of Titusville v. Clark, 57 L. R. A. 348, which holds void, exemption from license tax of contractors and real estate dealers, but not others, whose business is less than $1,000.

Reasonableness of license fee.

Cited in Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa, 405, 68 N. W. 795, holding annual license fee of $10 for each hack not unreasonable; Iowa City v. Newell, 115 Iowa, 58, 87 N. W. 739, holding transient merchant's license fee of $50 reasonable; Stull v. DeMattos, 23 Wash. 76, 51 L. R. A. 895, 62 Pac. 451, holding auctioneer's license fee of $25 per day valid exercise of taxing power; Easterly v. Irwin, 99 Iowa, 697, 68 N. W. 919, holding taxation for revenue not authorized under power to license, and tax for such purpose would be unreasonable; Springfield v. Jacobs, 101 Mo. App. 343, 73 S. W. 1097, holding ordinance imposing license tax of $50 per day on person conducting transient clothing or jewelry business, unreasonable.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 426, 431) on limit of amount of license fees.

License as to mortgage sale.

Cited in Iowa City v. Newell, 115 Iowa, 58, 87 N. W. 739, holding sale under mortgage, as agent, no excuse for failure to obtain license.

29 L. R. A. 737. ELLISON v. ALBRIGHT, 41 Neb. 93, 59 N. W. 703.

Certificate of tax sale as presumption of assessment.

Cited in Merrill v. Wright, 41 Neb. 355, 59 N. W. 787, holding that treasurer's certificate of tax sale raises no presumption of assessment of taxes.

Jury's determination of damages.

Cited in Ellison v. Brown, 43 Neb. 69, 61 N. W. 97, holding instruction that jury may determine general damages from malicious prosecution, when no special damages shown, proper.

29 L. R. A. 743, CAPITAL CITY WATER CO. v. STATE, 105 Ala. 406, 18 So. 62.

Forfeiture of charter for misuse.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Sheets v. Mt. Hope College Co. 52 L. R. A. 365, which authorizes dissolution of educational institution for sale of diplomas without regard to merit; State ex rel. Mylrea v. Janesville Water Power Co. 32 L. R. A. 391, which holds right to forfeit water company's franchise for overbonding wrongful issue of stock, lost by delay; Palestine Water & Power Co. v. Palestine, 40 L. R. A. 203, which holds flagrant disregard of duty to furnish wholesome water, ground for forfeiting water company's franchise.

Municipal regulation of water supply.

Cited in Weatherly v. Capital City Water Co. 115 Ala. 179, 22 So. 140, holding that city may compel continuance of water supply during pendency of dissolution proceedings.

Cited in footnote to Du Bois v. Du Bois City Waterworks Co. 34 L. R. A. 92, which holds cancelation of contract by city for water supply not justified by inadequacy of supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 87, 93) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Dissolution of municipal corporation.

Cited in West End v. State, 138 Ala. 361, 36 So. 423, holding information sufficient complaint on which to institute proceedings to dissolve municipal corporation unlawfully organized.

29 L. R. A. 751, STEPHENS v. SOUTHERN P. CO. 100 Cal. 86, 50 Am. St. Rep. 17, 41 Pac. 783.

Validity and effect of contracts against liability for negligence.

Cited in South Carolina & G. R. Co. v. Carolina, C. G. & C. Ry. Co. 93 Fed. 560, sustaining contract exempting from liability connecting railroad company operating receiver's road without direct compensation.

— For fires.

Cited in American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 74 Mo. App. 102, upholding contract releasing railroad company from damages by fire to elevator erected on right of way by lessee; Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 112 Ky. 605, 56 L. R. A. 479, footnote p. 477, 99 Am. St. Rep. 313, 66 S. W. 411, sustaining contract releasing company from liability for injury by fire to building permitted to occupy right of way; Ordelheide v. Wabash R. Co. 175 Mo. 346, 75 S. W. 149, sustaining contract indemnifying railroad company against loss by fire communicated by its locomotives to elevator constructed on right of way; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Carter, 95 Tex. 477, 68 S. W. 159, holding contract exempting railroad company from liability for damage by fires not prohibited by statute forbidding carrier to limit liability by contract.

Cited in footnotes to King v. Southern P. Co. 29 L. R. A. 755, which holds covenant in lease of railroad property against liability for loss by fire not binding on agent of lessee; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 193, which holds valid, stipulation against liability for negligence in setting fire to leased buildings erected on right of way.

29 L. R. A. 755, KING v. SOUTHERN P. CO. 109 Cal. 96, 41 Pac. 786.

Contracts against liability for negligence.

Cited in Walker Bros. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 473, affirming recovery for loss of goods of third person in building permitted to occupy right of way on condition that owner assume risk; Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 112 Ky. 605, 56 L. R. A. 479, footnote p. 477, 99 Am. St. Rep. 313, 66 S. W. 411, sustaining contract releasing company from liability for injury by fire to building permitted to occupy right of way.

Cited in footnotes to Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 193, which holds valid, stipulation against liability for negligence in setting fire to leased buildings erected on right of way; Northern P. R. Co. v. McClure, 47 L. R. A. 149, which holds covenant releasing railroad company from injury by fire to lessee of warehouse inures to transferee's benefit.

Action by tenant for failure to fence tracks.

Cited in Walther v. Sierra R. Co. 141 Cal. 289, 74 Pac. 840, sustaining tenant's right to maintain action against railroad company for killing mule "upon line of road which passes through or along property of owner," for failure to build fences.

Reversal for excessive damages.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. Times Pub. Co. 35 L. R. A. 819, which sustains statute authorizing reversal for excessive damages, though motion for new trial denied below.

29 L. R. A. 757, LAKE ERIE & W. R. CO. v. MACKKEY, 53 Ohio St. 370, 53 Am. St. Rep. 640, 41 N. E. 980.

Contributory negligence of children.

Cited in footnotes to Graney v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 633, which denies negligence per se of twelve-year-old boy in standing so near passing train as to be drawn under by current of air; Gleason v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 622, which denies liability for injury by collision with team, to twelve-year-old boy using street as playground.

Allegations as to negligence.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 212, 213, 228) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

29 L. R. A. 761, BANK OF NEWPORT v. COOK, 60 Ark. 288, 46 Am. St. Rep. 171, 30 S. W. 35.

Contracts infected with usury.

Cited in McCauley v. Workingman's Bldg. & Sav. Asso. 97 Tenn. 436, 35 L. R. A. 248, 56 Am. St. Rep. 813, 37 S. W. 212, holding loans made by association at uniform premium, without competitive bidding, infected with usury; Security Sav. & L. Asso. v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 202, 54 N. E. 753, holding building and loan contracts not usurious; Shannon v. Georgia State Bldg. & L. Asso. 78 Miss. 974, 57 L. R. A. 805, 84 Am. St. Rep. 657, 30 So. 51, and Sokoloski v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. 77 Miss. 165, 26 So. 361, holding contract stipulating for 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent as premiums, usurious; Union Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Dottenheim, 107 Ga. 614, 34 S. E. 217, holding monthly notes, comprising loan and interest for full period, usurious.

Effect of taking illegal interest.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 709) on forfeiture or other effect of taking or receiving illegal interest by national bank.

Carrier's discrimination between localities.

Cited in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 64 Ark. 296, 44 L. R. A. 362, 43 S. W. 150 (dissenting opinion), majority holding railroad company not liable for discrimination between materially different localities in facilities for transportation.

What law governs question of usury.

Cited in National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Brahan, 80 Miss. 425, 57 L. R. A. 797, 31 So. 840, holding local law governs loan by foreign association on mortgage covering land there, notes payable elsewhere.

29 L. R. A. 770, HODGES v. WESTERN U. TELEG. CO. 72 Miss. 910, 18 So. 84.

Right to lay pipes in street.

Cited in Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 122, 69 Pac. 973, holding ordinance requiring persons desirous of laying pipes in street to procure permit, void.

29 L. R. A. 772, ARMSTRONG v. AUSTIN, 45 S. C. 69, 22 S. E. 763.

Index of records.

Cited in Greenwood Loan & Guarantee Asso. v. Childs, 67 S. C. 256, 45 S. E. 167, holding deed written upon record to be properly recorded, although not indexed.

Cited in footnote to Hilpipe v. Claude, 46 L. R. A. 171, which holds indexing of adoptive instrument under child's original, and also under adopted, name sufficient.

Failure to docket case in time.

Distinguished in Steffens v. Bulwinkle, 48 S. C. 363, 26 S. E. 666, denying right to try case not docketed in time, although ordered on calendar by trial judge.

29 L. R. A. 777, STATE ex rel. REALTY CO. v. COOLEY, 62 Minn. 183, 64 N. W. 379.

Exemption from taxation.

Cited in State v. Bishop Seabury Mission, 90 Minn. 96, 95 N. W. 882, holding endowment fund exempt from taxation, under provisions of Constitution.

Cited in footnotes to Maine Water Co. v. Waterville, 49 L. R. A. 294, which sustains agreement by city to pay, for term of years, taxes assessed against water company supplying city; Gate City Gardens v. Atlanta, 54 L. R. A. 806, which denies exemption, as public property, to armory owned by volunteer military force.

Reduction for omission from tax lists.

Cited in State v. Lakeside Land Co. 71 Minn. 288, 73 N. W. 970, holding taxpayer entitled to no reduction because of omissions from tax lists.

29 L. R. A. 778, FARRELL v. ST. PAUL, 62 Minn. 271, 54 Am. St. Rep. 641, 64 N. W. 809.

29 L. R. A. 782, BICKERDIKE v. ALLEN, 157 Ill. 95, 41 N. E. 740.

Defense to revival of judgment.

Cited in Cassill v. Morrow, 13 S. D. 113, 82 N. W. 418, denying that failure to oppose application for revival of dormant judgment bars equitable defense to suit.

Findings as to jurisdiction.

Cited in Figge v. Rowlen, 185 Ill. 239, 57 N. E. 195, holding findings as to jurisdictional facts, necessary for service by publication, conclusive.

Presumption as to receipt of mail.

Cited in Hart Bros. v. West Chicago Park, 186 Ill. 475, 57 N. E. 1036, dissenting opinion by Magruder, J., who holds mailing notices properly addressed, prima facie evidence of receipt by sendees.

Sufficiency of service of process.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 582, 586, 588) on what service of process is sufficient to constitute due process of law.

Sufficiency of affidavit.

Cited in Reedy v. Camfield, 159 Ill. 261, 42 N. E. 833, holding decree of foreclosure not invalid because affidavit for publication failed to state that diligent inquiry was made, when decree recites that defendant could not be found; Iroquois Furnace Co. v. Wilkin Mfg. Co. 181 Ill. 592, 54 N. E. 987, holding statement of nonresidence of defendant sufficient in affidavit of attachment, although there is no averment of incorporation in state of residence; Turner v. St. John, 8 N. D. 281, 78 N. W. 340, and Cox v. Stern, 170 Ill. 447, 62 Am. St. Rep. 385, 48 N. E. 906, denying that failure of officer to sign jurat invalidates affidavit.

29 L. R. A. 786, COM. v. PETTY, 96 Ky. 452, 29 S. W. 291.

State regulations of patent rights and copyrights.

Cited in Rumbley v. Hall, 107 Ky. 351, 54 S. W. 4, and Bohon v. Brown, 101 Ky. 359, 38 L. R. A. 504, footnote p. 503, 72 Am. St. Rep. 420, 41 S. W. 273, upholding statute requiring endorsement of words "peddler's note," on notes given for articles sold by peddlers; State v. Cook, 107 Tenn. 508, 62 L. R. A. 177, footnote p. 174, 64 S. W. 720, sustaining statute requiring notes given for patent rights to so state on their faces.

Cited in footnote to Mason v. McLeod, 41 L. R. A. 548, which sustains statute requiring copy of patent to be filed with affidavit of validity, and that obligation of vendee shall contain words "given for a patent right."

— Taxation of.

Cited in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Halliday, 61 Ohio St. 380, 49 L. R. A. 434, footnote p. 427, 56 N. E. 118, holding patented article leased by patentee taxable at true value; People ex rel. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. Brooklyn, 156 N. Y. 421, 42 L. R. A. 292, footnote p. 290, 51 N. E. 269, holding patent rights not subject to state tax.

Cited in footnotes to People ex rel. Johnson Co. v. Roberts, 45 L. R. A. 126, which holds copyrights exempt from state taxation; Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. State, 53 L. R. A. 417, which denies right of corporation to have assessment of stock limited to value of property other than patents; State v. Cook, 62 L. R. A. 174, which holds statute requiring notes for patent rights to so state on their faces, within police power.

Police regulation of electric companies.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 804) on police regulation of electric companies.

29 L. R. A. 794, WATERLOO MILL CO. v. KUENSTER, 158 Ill. 259, 49 Am. St. Rep. 156, 41 N. E. 906.

Selection of collecting agent by bank.

Cited in Wilson v. Carlinville Nat. Bank, 187 Ill. 225, 52 L. R. A. 633, 58 N. E. 250, Affirming 78 Ill. App. 343, holding transmission of check by bank to reliable collecting bank makes latter drawee's agent for collection; Irwin v. Reeves Pulley Co. 20 Ind. App. 115, 48 N. E. 601, holding bank accepting for collection draft payable at distant bank bound to use ordinary diligence in selecting collector.

Cited in footnote to Second Nat. Bank v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 55 L. R. A. 273, which holds bank negligent in sending note for collection to bank whose cashier is treasurer of corporation maker, without hearing from similar note previously sent.

29 L. R. A. 798, WASHINGTONIAN HOME v. CHICAGO, 157 Ill. 414, 41 N. E. 893.

City's power to make donations.

Cited in Cain v. Wyoming, 104 Ill. App. 545, holding that city has no power to donate site for waterworks plant not owned by it.

State control of charitable institutions.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. New York Inst. for the Blind v. Fitch, 38 L. R. A. 591, which holds incorporated institution for blind, largely supported by state, subject to visitations and rules of board of charities.

Self-executing constitutional provisions.

Cited in Criswell v. Montana C. R. Co. 18 Mont. 173, 33 L. R. A. 556, footnote p. 554, 44 Pac. 525, holding act imposing liability on domestic railroad companies for fellow servant's negligence, abrogated by adoption of Constitution against special privileges to foreign corporations; Russell v. Ayer, 120 N. C. 196, 37 L. R. A. 251, 27 S. E. 133 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that constitutional provisions as to levy of capitation tax equal to tax on property of certain value does not overrule different ratio fixed by statute; Illinois C. R.

Co. v. Ihlenberg, 34 L. R. A. 397, footnote p. 393, 21 C. C. A. 552, 43 U. S. App. 726, 75 Fed. 870, holding constitutional provision that employee's knowledge of defect shall be no defense to action for injury, self-executing.

Cited in footnotes to Anderson v. Whatcom County, 33 L. R. A. 137, which holds constitutional provision for justices of peace receiving salary instead of fees, self-executing; State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which holds self-operating, constitutional amendment for criminal prosecution by indictment or information only.

29 L. R. A. 803, BARCHARD v. KOHN, 157 Ill. 579, 41 N. E. 902.

Right to levy on mortgaged chattels.

Cited in People use of Palmer v. Dickson, 65 Ill. App. 101, holding constable not liable for selling mortgaged property under execution before maturity of mortgage; Second Nat. Bank v. Gilbert, 174 Ill. 493, 66 Am. St. Rep. 306, 51 N. E. 584, holding sheriff liable for refusing to levy on mortgaged property in mortgagor's possession before maturity of mortgage.

Effect on mortgage of fraudulent certificate.

Cited in Fahndrich v. Hudson, 76 Ill. App. 644, holding that fraudulent certificate of acknowledgment vitiates chattel mortgage.

Nature and validity of chattel mortgage.

Cited in Hill v. Coats, 109 Ill. App. 268, holding that chattel mortgage is conditional sale of property only, title remaining in mortgagor till breach; Martin v. Sexton, 112 Ill. App. 212, holding agreement amounting to chattel mortgage, but which is not acknowledged or recorded, and which allows debtor to retain possession, valid as between parties, and as to third persons who have no prior lien.

Election of remedies.

Cited in Foster v. Van Ostern, 72 Ill. App. 312, denying that election to pursue remedy on note waives right to foreclose mortgage; First Nat. Bank v. George R. Barse Live Stock Commission Co. 198 Ill. 236, 64 N. E. 1097, Affirming 99 Ill. App. 202, holding dismissal of attachment by mortgagee, upon stipulation, no bar to other remedies to reach proceeds of sale of mortgaged cattle.

Cited in footnote to Lambert v. Nicklas, 44 L. R. A. 561, which holds agister's lien not lost by levying attachment on property.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 715) on waiver of lien by attachment or execution.

State court's jurisdiction of suit to foreclose lien on raft.

Cited in Knapp, S. & Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 645, 44 L. ed. 925, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, Affirming 178 Ill. 114, 69 Am. St. Rep. 290, 52 N. E. 898, Which Affirmed 74 Ill. App. 92, sustaining bill in state court to foreclose common-law lien on raft for towage charges.

29 L. R. A. 808, DURKIN v. KINGSTON COAL CO. 171 Pa. 193, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237.

Statutes for benefit of women and workers in mines.

Followed in Com. v. Jones, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 369, 40 W. N. C. 427, and Read v. Clearfield County, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 427, sustaining act providing for safety of bituminous coal miners.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—75.

Cited in Com. v. Brown, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 351, 43 W. N. C. 73, declaring void, act requiring weighing of bituminous coal before screening; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 20, holding act regulating hours of employment of women, valid.

Liability to servant of third person.

Cited in footnote to Lawton v. Chilton, 45 L. R. A. 616, which holds subcontractor for transporting mails liable in tort for negligent injury to postal employee.

Injury from negligence of boss employed under statute.

Cited in Szotak v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. 36 Misc. 105, 72 N. Y. Supp. 647, denying right of recovery to miner injured through negligence of foreman made fellow servant by statute; Williams v. Thacker Coal & C. Co. 44 W. Va. 604, 40 L. R. A. 815, footnote p. 812, 30 S. E. 107, holding employer not liable for negligence of competent mine boss employed under requirement of statute.

Cited in footnotes to Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 99, which holds miner intrusted with duties of mine boss not fellow servant of other miners; Schmalstieg v. Leavenworth Coal Co. 59 L. R. A. 707, which holds mine owner liable for injury to employee from negligence of fire boss whose employment required by statute.

Disapproved in National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 324, 58 L. R. A. 139, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369, expressing, obiter, belief in constitutionality of statute making employer liable for injury to workman by negligence of fellow servant.

Liability of railroad company for negligence of certain servants.

Cited in footnote to Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Houlihan, 54 L. R. A. 787, which sustains statute making railroad company liable to employees for injuries by negligence of specified servants.

Liability of municipality and abutter for defective walk.

Cited in Dutton v. Lansdowne, 198 Pa. 567, 53 L. R. A. 470, 8 Del. Co. Rep. 171, 82 Am. St. Rep. 814, 48 Atl. 494, Reversing 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 210, 44 W. N. C. 290, holding abutter primarily, municipality secondarily, liable for injuries resulting from defective walk.

29 L. R. A. 811, LEVY v. SUPERIOR COURT, 105 Cal. 600, 38 Pac. 965.

Protection against searches, seizures, and compulsory evidence.

Cited in Co-operative Bldg. & L. Asso. v. State, 156 Ind. 468, 60 N. E. 146, holding that mandamus will lie to permit assessor to examine books of loan association for assessment purposes.

Cited in footnotes to Newberry v. Carpenter, 31 L. R. A. 163, which holds taking boiler, engine, etc., as exhibits on prosecution for explosion of boiler, unreasonable seizure; State v. Griswold, 33 L. R. A. 227, which upholds use of envelope containing pictures only, as evidence against accused, although taken from house by trespasser; Williams v. State, 39 L. R. A. 269, which holds evidence obtained by forcibly entering and searching house and owner's person admissible to show possession of articles tending to establish guilt.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 465) on admissibility in evidence against accused of documents or other things taken from him.

Annotation in 29 L. R. A. 811, referred to particularly in Blum v. State, 94 Md. 385, 56 L. R. A. 327, 51 Atl. 26, holding account books of one charged with obtaining money under false pretenses inadmissible against him.

29 L. R. A. 825, NORFOLK & W. R. CO. v. WHEELER, 91 Va. 700, 22 S. E. 514.

Liability for injury to licensee.

Cited in footnote to Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Waller, 34 L. R. A. 459, which denies liability of railroad company for injury to seven-year-old boy running under freight car to get ball at request of employee.

29 L. R. A. 827, LYNCHBURG NAT. BANK v. SCOTT BROS. 91 Va. 652, 50 Am. St. Rep. 860, 22 S. E. 487.

Rights of purchaser of note affected with usury.

Cited in Bradshaw v. Van Valkenburg, 97 Tenn. 320, 37 S. W. 88, holding bona fide purchaser not affected by usury between original parties to note.

Application of payments tainted with usury.

Cited in Greer v. Hale, 95 Va. 535, 64 Am. St. Rep. 814, 28 S. E. 873, and Munford v. McVeigh, 92 Va. 465, 23 S. E. 857, holding that court will eliminate usury and apply payments to sum actually loaned.

29 L. R. A. 830, SCHUFELDT v. SMITH, 131 Mo. 280, 52 Am. St. Rep. 628, 31 S. W. 1039.

Preferences by insolvent corporation.

Cited in Schufeldt v. Smith, 139 Mo. 372, 40 S. W. 887, upholding, on second appeal, trust deed of insolvent corporation to secure loan to partnership which was converted into corporation; State ex rel. Schroeder v. Perkins, 90 Mo. App. 612, holding unauthorized deed of trust by president of insolvent corporation invalid as to attaching creditors; Calihan v. Powers, 133 Mo. 498, 34 S. W. 848, upholding execution of chattel mortgage and assignment of accounts in payment of bona fide debt made day before general assignment; Kingman v. Cornell-Tebbetts Mach. & Buggy Co. 150 Mo. 304, 51 S. W. 727, holding trust deed securing separate debts of creditors good as to those accepting before attachment; Shields v. Hobart, 172 Mo. 514, 95 Am. St. Rep. 529, 72 S. W. 669, sustaining right of going corporation to prefer creditors.

Cited in footnote to Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette, 31 L. R. A. 497, which denies right to prefer debt for money borrowed by corporation to purchase its own stock.

— To officers or stockholders.

Cited in Pitman v. Chicago Lead Co. 93 Mo. App. 597, 67 N. W. 946, holding proof of validity of debt and preference by quorum of directors insufficient to uphold preference to director; State ex rel. Grimm v. Manhattan Rubber Mfg. Co. 149 Mo. 207, 50 S. W. 321, holding trust deed in favor of directors presumptively fraudulent; Hall v. Goodnight, 138 Mo. 584, 37 S. W. 916, holding insolvent corporation's payment of debt of beneficial owner of entire stock, void; Butler v. Harrison Land & Min. Co. 139 Mo. 478, 61 Am. St. Rep. 464, 41 S. W. 234, upholding deeds of trust to directors of insolvent corporation to pay honest debts; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Ward, 55 L. R. A. 359, footnote p. 350, 49 C. C. A. 616, 111 Fed. 787, upholding chattel mortgage to secure just demands of directors of insolvent corporation; Levering v. Bimel, 146 Ind. 555, 45 N. E. 775, holding preference by insolvent corporation to director not fraudulent because voted on by such director; Nappanee Canning Co. v. Reid, 159 Ind. 625, 59 L. R. A. 202, footnote p. 199, 64 N. E. 870, sustaining right to prefer unsecured claims on which directors are liable; Corey v. Wadsworth, 118 Ala. 516, 44 L. R. A. 775, footnote p. 766, 25 So. 503, sustaining preference to stockholder, director, and president of insolvent corporation.

Cited in footnotes to Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell, 31 L. R. A. 265, which holds valid, securities given to directors by insolvent going concern to obtain money loaned at time securities given; National Wall Paper Co. v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 121, which denies right to prefer debt on which officers and directors are bound as sureties.

29 L. R. A. 834, PEOPLE ex rel. CHANDLER v. McDONALD, 5 Wyo. 526, 42 Pac. 15.

Ex post facto laws.

Cited in State v. Taylor, 184 Mo. 145, 35 S. W. 92, holding change in time allowed accused to challenge jurors, made after commission of crime, not ex post facto law; Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 450, 33 So. 226, holding statute relieving state of requirement of proving incorporation of corporation in criminal trials applicable to trial of offense alleged to have been committed before passage of act.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Richardson, 35 L. R. A. 238, which holds change in Constitution as to former jeopardy, favorable to prisoner, applicable to subsequent trial; State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which sustains statute authorizing prosecution by information of crimes already committed.

29 L. R. A. 839, SAN DIEGO WATER CO. v. SAN DIEGO FLUME CO. 108 Cal. 549, 41 Pac. 495.

Combinations or agreements to fix prices.

Cited in footnotes to National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 39 L. R. A. 299, which holds agreement by owner of patent with corporation organized by rival manufacturers, to sell no harrow for less than schedule price, invalid; Com. v. Grinstead, 56 L. R. A. 709, which holds agreement not to resell goods at less than specified price not within statute for suppression of conspiracies; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 62 L. R. A. 632, which sustains plan by which manufacturers of proprietary medicines shall sell at fixed prices, with rebate only to concerns which can be relied on to maintain price decided upon.

Contracts between corporations having common directors.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 790) on validity of contracts between corporations having common directors or officers.

Establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 75) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

29 L. R. A. 844, PEOPLE'S HOME SAV. BANK v. SUPERIOR COURT, 104 Cal. 649, 43 Am. St. Rep. 147, 38 Pac. 452.

Vote by proxy.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 309, which holds proxy for voting block of stock in accordance with desire of majority of purchasers, made by condition for voting same as majority determines.

Substitution of attorney.

Cited in Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 172, 68 Pac. 581, holding that client may change attorney although latter has advanced money for expenses and his fee is contingent upon success.

29 L. R. A. 851, HARE v. MURPHY, 45 Neb. 809, 64 N. W. 211.

Third person's right to enforce claim or contract.

Cited in Union P. R. Co. v. Metcalf, 50 Neb. 461, 69 N. W. 961, holding that consignor paying charges has no right of action against carrier for failure to deliver goods; Tecumseh Nat. Bank v. Best, 50 Neb. 520, 70 N. W. 41, holding creditor's petition, alleging that successor of insolvent bank had assumed latter's liabilities for consideration, sufficient; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 116 Wis. 522, 61 L. R. A. 511, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 93 N. W. 440, holding that where one makes contract with another for benefit of third person, latter may enforce it, regardless of his relation with first party.

Assumption of mortgage debt.

Later appeal in 60 Neb. 135, 82 N. W. 312, holding grantee in deed containing assumption clause not estopped to deny validity of such clause as against one purchasing mortgage in reliance on recitals in recorded instrument.

Cited in Gibson v. Hambleton, 52 Neb. 603, 72 N. W. 1033, and Martin v. Humphrey, 58 Neb. 417, 78 N. W. 715, holding grantee personally liable for mortgage debt assumed as part of purchase price; Morrill v. Skinner, 57 Neb. 171, 77 N. W. 375, holding that mortgagee may enforce grantee's promise to pay debt as part consideration for transfer; Graves v. Macfarland, 58 Neb. 804, 79 N. W. 707, holding purchaser of mortgaged premises who assumed debt, liable on deficiency judgment; Colchester Sav. Bank v. Brown, 75 Conn. 71, 52 Atl. 316, sustaining statute authorizing mortgagee to maintain action, in own name, against grantee of mortgaged premises who assumed and agreed to pay debt; McKay v. Ward, 20 Utah, 156, 46 L. R. A. 625, footnote p. 623, 57 Pac. 1024, and Enos v. Sanger, 96 Wis. 154, 37 L. R. A. 864, 65 Am. St. Rep. 38, 70 N. W. 1019, holding grantee assuming mortgage debt, personally liable for deficiency, although immediate grantor not liable; Stites v. Thompson, 98 Wis. 331, 73 N. W. 774, holding purchaser of mortgaged premises who assumes debt liable as principal, not as surety.

Cited in footnote to Knapp v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 40 L. R. A. 861, which upholds mortgagee's right to compel grantee of mortgagor by suit in equity to keep his agreement assuming the mortgage.

Retroactive statutes.

Cited in Thompson v. West, 59 Neb. 683, 49 L. R. A. 341, 82 N. W. 13, and Merrill v. Miller, 2 Herdman (Neb.) 632, 89 N. W. 606, denying that repeal of statute permitting deficiency judgments on foreclosure of mortgage affects actions pending.

29 L. R. A. 853, PAXTON & H. IRRIGATING CANAL & LAND CO. v. FARMERS' & M. IRRIG. & LAND CO. 45 Neb. 884, 50 Am. St. Rep. 585, 64 N. W. 343.

Title of act.

Cited in State ex rel. Churchill v. Bemis, 45 Neb. 735, 64 N. W. 348, holding authority to remove officers within title of act "defining, regulating, and prescribing powers of city governments;" State ex rel. Graham v. Tibbets, 52 Neb. 233, 66 Am. St. Rep. 492, 71 N. W. 990, holding act entitled "act to amend sections . . . " of prior act insufficient; Nebraska Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Perkins, 61 Neb. 258, 85 N. W. 67, holding that title of act "to enable associations of people to raise funds to be loaned for building homesteads" indicates subject of legislation; State v. Heldenbrand, 62 Neb. 142, 89 Am. St. Rep. 743, 87 N. W. 25, holding prohibition against transfer of mortgaged property germane to title of act "to prevent fraudulent transfer of personal property;" State ex rel. Green v. Power, 63 Neb. 500, 88 N. W. 769, holding that "act providing for better protection of earnings of servants" comprehends punishment of one attaching exempt wages.

Appropriation of property for public or other purposes.

Cited in Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 117, 45 L. R. A. 306, 50 S. W. 744, sustaining railroad company's right to condemn land for terminal purposes; State ex rel. Board of Transportation v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. 46 Neb. 698, 31 L. R. A. 53, 65 N. W. 766, holding act requiring carrier to haul freight over longer line, for same rate required of shorter line between same points, void, as illegal appropriation of property.

— Irrigation purposes.

Cited in Alfalfa Irrig. District v. Collins, 46 Neb. 415, 64 N. W. 1086, holding act authorizing issue of bonds by irrigation district constitutional; Cummings v. Hyatt, 54 Neb. 42, 74 N. W. 411, holding tax to pay interest on irrigation bonds valid; Perkins County v. Graff, 52 C. C. A. 247, 114 Fed. 445, holding validity of irrigation bonds not affected because water drawn from another state; Prescott Irrig. Co. v. Flathers, 20 Wash. 459, 55 Pac. 635, holding that irrigation corporation may condemn land for construction of ditches.

29 L. R. A. 859, MUNZER v. STERN, 105 Mich. 523, 55 Am. St. Rep. 463, 63 N. W. 513.

29 L. R. A. 861, DELL RAPIDS v. IRVING, 7 S. D. 310, 64 N. W. 149.

County or town as municipal corporation.

Cited in Western Town Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. D. 604, 65 N. W. 17, holding counties or towns not municipal corporations.

2

3 6105 063 244 003

